Frances VAN STRIEN, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.
Archie R. JONES, Executor of the Estate of Mary E. Ludwig, Deceased, Substituted, etc., Defendant and Respondent.
L. A. 23858.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.
June 28, 1956.
Rehearing Denied July 24, 1956.

Action by testator's daughter by a former marriage against executor of testator's widow to subject property received by widow under will to constructive trust in favor of daughter on ground that daughter was the pretermitted heir. The Superior Court, San Bernardino, County, Archie D. Mitchell, J., entered judgment for executor after sustaining demurrer to complaint without leave to amend, and daughter appealed. The Supreme Court, Shenk, J., held that, where will provided that, if any person who claimed under will or who, if testator had died intestate, would be entitled to share in his estate, should, in any manner whatsoever, contest the will, testator thereby bequeathed to such person the sum of one dollar only, testator's daughter, who was not otherwise mentioned in will, was not pretermitted heir.

Judgment affirmed.

Carter and Schauer, JJ., dissented as to affirmance of the judgment and as to denial of petition for rehearing.

Opinion, 287 P.2d 568, vacated.

1. Executors and Administrators 🔑315(4)

Where stepdaughter's complaint alleged that stepmother's petition for admission of will to probate and petition for decree of distribution falsely stated that stepmother was only heir of stepdaughter's father for purpose of preventing stepdaughter from participating in the probate proceedings, that stepdaughter did not know of the probate proceedings or of her father's death until over a year after the decree of distribution had been entered, was sufficient to entitle stepdaugher to relief from the decree of distribution if stepdaughter was a pretermitted heir. West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 90.

2. Descent and Distribution 🔑47(2)

Where testator's child is intentionally not made a beneficiary under the will or given $1 or any other sum under the will, Probate Code provision pertaining to omitted children is satisfied even though child is not mentioned by name, and use of terms such as "relatives" and "children" are sufficient to designate heirs who might otherwise be pretermitted, but such generalities as "anyone who may contest this will" or "any other person" do not include heirs otherwise pretermitted. West's Ann.Prob. Code, § 90.

3. Descent and Distribution 🔑47(2)

Where will provided that, if any person who claimed under will or who, if testator had died intestate, would be entitled to share in his estate, should, in any manner whatsoever, contest the will, testator thereby bequeathed to such person the sum of $1 only, testator's daughter, who was not otherwise mentioned in will, was not pretermitted heir. West's Ann.Prob. Code, § 90.

Bernice M. Coady and Joseph K. Coady, Bellflower, for appellant.

Herbert C. Naylor, Ontario, for respondent.

SHENK, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment for the defendant after a demurrer to the complaint had been sustained without leave to amend.

Henry Robert Ludwig died testate on July 23, 1952. Surviving him were the plaintiff, Frances Van Strien, a daughter by a former marriage, and the widow Mary E. Ludwig who was appointed executrix of the will of her deceased husband. The entire estate was distributed to the widow in accordance with the terms of the will and the decree of distribution became final. The present action was brought against the widow individually alleging that the plaintiff was a pretermitted heir of the deceased and that the defendant held property which came into her possession by way of a constructive trust in the plaintiff's favor. Since the commencement of the action the defendant Mary E. Ludwig died and Archie R. Jones was appointed executor of her will. References to the defendant will be deemed to be to Mary E. Ludwig.

In her complaint the plaintiff alleges that the defendant's petition for admission of the will to probate falsely stated that the defendant was the only heir of the deceased; that the defendant made such statement to prevent the plaintiff from knowing of or participating in the probate proceedings; that a similar false statement was made in the defendant's petition for the decree of distribution and the decree which followed was based thereon; that the plaintiff did not receive a notice of the probate proceedings, and that she did not know of her father's death until over a year after the decree of distribution was entered.

[1] The main question involved on the appeal is whether the plaintiff is a pretermitted heir under section 90 of the Probate Code. That section provides: "When a testator omits to provide in his will for any of his children, or for the issue of any deceased child, whether born before or after the making of the will or before or after the death of the testator, and such child or issue are unprovided for by any settlement, and have not had an equal proportion of the testator's property bestowed on them by way of advancement, unless it appears from the will that such omission was intentional, such child or such issue succeeds to the same share in the estate of the testator as if he had died intestate." If the plaintiff is a pretermitted heir it appears that her complaint alleges sufficient facts to entitle her to relief from the decree of distribution. See Federal Farm Mortgage Corp. v. Sandberg, 35 Cal.2d 1, 215 P.2d 721; Gale v. Witt, 31 Cal.2d 362, 188 P.2d 755; 20 Cal.Jur.2d, Executors and Administrators, p. 110.

The defendant claims that the deceased by a clause contained in his will disinherited the plaintiff in terms sufficient to satisfy section 90. That clause provides: "If any person who is, or claims under or through, a devisee, legatee, or beneficiary under this Will, or any person who if I died intestate would be entitled to share in my estate, shall, in any manner whatsoever, directly or indirectly contest this Will * * then I hereby bequeath to each such person the sum of One Dollar ($1.00) only * *"

[2] It is well settled that where in a will a testator's child is intentionally omitted or given $1 or any other sum, section 90 of the Probate Code is satisfied although the child is not mentioned by name. In re Estate of Minear, 180 Cal. 239, 180 P. 535; In re Estate of Lindsay, 176 Cal. 238, 168 P. 113; In re Estate of Hassell, 168 Cal. 287, 142 P. 838; In re Estate of Doell, 113 Cal.App.2d 37, 247 P.2d 580. The use of such terms as "relatives" and "children" have been held sufficient to designate heirs who might otherwise be pretermitted, In re

Estate of Trickett, 197 Cal. 20, 239 P. 406; Rhoton v. Blevin, 99 Cal. 645, 34 P. 513; Cf. In re Estate of Utz, 43 Cal. 200, but such generalities as "'anyone who may contest this will'" and "any other person" do not include heirs otherwise pretermitted, In re Estate of Price, 56 Cal.App.2d 335, 132 P.2d 485; In re Estate of Cochran, 116 Cal.App.2d 98, 253 P.2d 41.

[3] In the present case the will, in addition to providing generally for "any person" who claims under the will, also provides that if "any person who if I died intestate would be entitled to share in my estate" should contest the will he bequeaths to such person the sum of $1. In Re Estate of Kurtz, 190 Cal. 146, 210 P. 959, 960, the testator provided: "'I * * * disinherit each and all persons whatsoever claiming to be, and who may be, my heirs at law * * * and if any of such parties or such heirs, or any person whomsoever who, if I died intestate, would be entitled to any part of my estate * * * seek or establish or assert any claim to my estate * * * I hereby give and bequeath to said person or persons the sum of one ($1.00) dollar * * *.'" The portions of that will which have been emphasized are almost identical with the clause in the will in the present case. In Re Estate of Dixon, 28 Cal.App.2d 598, 83 P.2d 98, 99, the will also "contained a clause almost identical with the will of the decedent in" the Kurtz case. See also In re Estate of Lindsay, supra, 176 Cal. 238, 168 P. 113; In re Estate of Hassell, supra, 168 Cal. 287, 142 P. 838; In re Estate of Lombard, 16 Cal.App.2d 526, 60 P.2d 1000. In all of the foregoing cases it was held that children or grandchildren of the testator were not pretermitted where the wills referred to them only as "heirs not herein mentioned," or "persons claiming to be heirs," or as in the present case, "persons who if I died intestate would be entitled to any part of my estate." Such provisions in wills are guards against specific contests of the will, as distinguished from provisions whereby the testator bequeaths $1 or other sum to "'anyone who may contest this will.'" In re Estate of Cochran, supra, 116 Cal.App.2d 98, 253 P.2d 41. The wills in the Kurtz and other cases herein cited to like effect make definite and specific reference to persons who, by the laws of succession, would be entitled to participate in the testator's estate had he died intestate, or had he died testate but failed to mention them in his will or otherwise provide for them. Those cases support the conclusion of the trial court in sustaining the demurrer.

The judgment is affirmed.

CARTER, Justice.

I dissent.

The crucial clause in the will is nothing more than a "no contest" provision and does not purport to show a provision for or disinheritance of deceased's daughter; it does not show that deceased testator had her in mind.

Before it may be said that section 90 of the Probate Code has been satisfied it must appear from the will that the testator had his child in mind, and intentionally omitted her as a legatee from his will. This has been stated repeatedly in many cases. It is said in In re Salmon's Estate, 107 Cal. 614, 617, 40 P. 1030: "It is further contended, however, that the fact that the testator mentions the widows of his deceased sons, the mothers of the omitted grandchildren, is sufficient, of itself, to show, without resort to extrinsic facts, that the testator had his grandchildren in his mind, and rebuts the presumption that they were forgotten. This position is equally untenable with the first. While the authorities of other states are far from being uniform or harmonious upon the subject, it is well settled in this state that the mere fact that a testator mentions one closely related by blood, or intimately associated in family relations, with the omitted heir, does not show, as matter of construction, that the omitted one was in his mind, and that the omission was intentional. In re Estate of Utz, 43 Cal. 200; Bush v. Lindsey, 44 Cal. 121; In re Stevens' Estate, 83 Cal. 322, 23 P. 379. In Bush v. Lindsey, supra, the testator devised his property to the child of a deceased son, but did not mention children of the testator then living. It was held that this did not show that he had his children in mind and intended to omit them. In In re Stevens, supra, the testator failed to mention or provide for his daughter, but left a legacy to her child, the testator's grandson; and it was held that the fact that he mentioned his daughter's child did not necessarily imply that the daughter was in his mind, and she was permitted to take as a pretermitted heir." (Emphasis added.) In In re Stevens' Estate, 83 Cal. 322, 23 P. 379, the testator failed to mention or provide for his daughter but left her child, the testator's grandson, a legacy. It was held the daughter was pretermitted, the court stating, 83 Cal. at page 329, 23 P. at page 381: "[I]t [intentional omission] must appear on the face of the will, and it must there appear from words which indicate such intent directly, or by implication equally as strong. Any other rule would lead to guesses or to inferences merely conjectural, which would be too unsubstantial to base a judgment on. We do not think that we can say with any reasonable certainty that the words used in the will indicate that Mrs. Hubbard was in the mind of the testator when he wrote his will, and that he intentionally omitted to mention her. We think that the correct rule is that the words of the will must show, as above pointed out, that the testator had the person omitted in his mind, and, having her so in his mind, had omitted to make any mention of her. The rule here laid down is plain and simple, and we think in accordance with the statute, as interpreted in the Garraud Case [In re Garraud's Estate, 35 Cal. 336]. It is an easy matter to put the question beyond a doubt by naming the children or grandchildren in the will, with a nominal legacy or none at all, from which it will clearly appear that these persons are in the mind of the testator, and therefore the omission to leave them anything must have been intentional." (Emphasis added.) It is said in Re Estate of Eggleston, 129 Cal.App.2d 601, 607, 277 P.2d 469, 472: "Under the statute [section 90] an heir is intentionally omitted from a will if it appears from the will that the testator had the omitted person in mind, and having him in his mind, has omitted him from the provisions of the will. In re Estate of Trickett, 197 Cal. 20, 23, 239 P. 406; In re Estate of Talmage, 114 Cal.App.2d 18, 249 P.2d 345; In re Estate of Cochems, 112 Cal.App.2d 634, 637, 247 P.2d 131." (Emphasis added.) In Re Estate of La Brie, 130 Cal.App.2d 235, 237, 278 P.2d 760, 761, the court said: "Under the statute [section 90] it must appear from the will itself that the omission was intentional. The words of the will must show that the testator had the omitted persons in mind and, although having them in mind, has intentionally omitted to provide for them. In re Estate of Trickett, 197 Cal. 20, 239 P. 406; In re Estate of Talmage, 114 Cal.App.2d 18, 249 P.2d 345. It was said in Re Estate of Hassell, 168 Cal. 287, 142 P. 838, that in order to disinherit children 'the intent that they shall not so share must appear upon the face of the will strongly and convincingly.'" See In re Estate of Todd, 17 Cal.2d 270, 109 P.2d 913; In re Estate of Utz, 43 Cal. 200, 203–204. The ordinary "contest clause," that is, leaving a small amount or nothing to anyone who contests the will is not enough, although the language used, "anyone," is broad and inclusive. The court so held in Re Estate of Cochran, 116 Cal.App.2d 98, 100, 253 P.2d 41, 42, stating:

> "In the In re Estate of Price, supra, 56 Cal.App.2d 335, 132 P.2d 485, 486, the court had occasion to consider a clause reading as follows: 'I purposely refrain from leaving anything * * * to any other person or persons, and in the event that any other person or persons shall either directly or indirectly contest this my last will and testament I give to any such person or persons contesting said will the sum of $1 and no more, hereby declaring that I have only at this date two surviving children, to wit: my said two sons above named.' There the testatrix left surviving her not only the two sons mentioned in her will but two grandchildren, children of a previously deceased son of the testatrix. Upon the hearing of a petition filed on behalf of the grandchildren, the trial court held that they were pretermitted heirs of the deceased and entitled to their proportionate share of the estate. The District Court of Appeal, in affirming the decree, considered all of the authorities cited above and held them inapplicable by reason of the fact that the language of the will made mention only of 'persons' contesting the will and not to heirs. The court, after referring to the In re Estate of Lindsay, 176 Cal. 238, 168 P. 113, and observing that our Supreme Court therein 'discussed and distinguished' the case of Hargadine v. Pulte, 27 Mo. 423, proceeds as follows (56 Cal.App.2d at page 338, 132 P.2d at page 487):

" 'In that case (Hargadine v. Pulte) the excluding clause covered "all and every person or persons." Our Supreme Court said that from these words it was not apparent "upon the face of the will" that the testator intended to distinguish between his living children and his grandchildren.

" 'Turning to the will of Mrs. Price we find nothing which brings it within this rule. The grandchildren are not mentioned and nothing is contained therein which would indicate that the testatrix had them in mind when the will was executed. The language excluding "any other person or persons" is the same as that found in the Hargadine case which we have just referred to. The clause as a whole is the ordinary "no contest" clause which is designed to prevent a contest of a will which frequently brings to life the private life and conduct of the decedent. That this is what the testatrix had in mind when she referred to "any other person or persons" is made clear by the language following where she gave to "such person or persons contesting said will" the sum of one dollar. Now it is settled law that a pretermitted heir seeking his interest under this section of the code is not a contestant and does not contest the will. His rights vest absolutely upon the death of the testator and, so far as his particular interest is concerned, there is no will. (In re) Estate of Sankey, 199 Cal. 391, 405, 249 P. 517.'

"And at page 339 of 56 Cal.App.2d at page 487 of 132 P.2d the court continues as follows:

" 'The plain terms of the code section calling for a showing upon the face of the will that "such omission was intentional" preclude a holding that a general exclusion of all persons not mentioned is sufficient. If such a general exclusion clause were sufficient the next step would be one declaring "my wife my sole heir" which was held insufficient in Bradley v. Bradley, 24 Mo. 311, (at) page 320, and in which the Missouri court said: "And in reading the testator's will in this case, it is not in the power of the court, from the will alone, to say whether the testator had a child living or not, or whether he ever had one. As to the children of the testator the will is a mere blank." We could say the same here, and if we were to reverse the case, it would be necessary to indulge in judicial legislation, and to declare that the section of the code did not require the "intentional" omission of an heir to appear upon the face of the will.' "

In re Estate of Price, 56 Cal.App.2d 335, 132 P.2d 485, 486, is particularly in point. There the testator provided in his will that he refrained from leaving anything to " 'any other person' " and if " 'any other person' " contests the will he shall receive $1. It was held that there was no intentional omission of the child of a deceased child.

The clause in the instant will says that if any person who would be entitled to share in deceased's estate, if he died intestate, shall contest the will he shall receive $1 only. It is nothing more than a contest clause and the reference "any person" no more shows that he had his daughter in mind than the "any person" words in the Price and Cochran cases, supra. A case very similar to the instant one is In re Ray's Estate, 69 Nev. 204, 245 P.2d 990, at page 991, where the testator had a son born many years before he made his will in which he provided the same as in the instant case: "'If * * * any other person who, if I died wholly or partially intestate, would be entitled to share in my estate, shall, in any manner whatsoever, directly or indirectly, contest this Will or attack, oppose or in any manner seek to impair or invalidate any provision hereof, or shall, in any manner whatsoever * * or shall endeavor to succeed to any part of my estate, otherwise than through this Will, then in each of the above mentioned cases I hereby bequeath to such person or persons the sum of One Dollar ($1.00) only * * *.'" The court held this was insufficient to disinherit a son under a statute the same as ours, stating, 245 P.2d at page 992:

> "[T]wo questions are presented for our consideration: First: whether the will through paragraph tenth [above quoted] has 'provided' for Barringer. Second: if not, whether the will demonstrates that such omission to provide was intentional. If either question be answered in the affirmative, then Barringer has failed to establish himself as a pretermitted heir.
> "Upon these two questions authority is in a state of confusion far from helpful. * * * We cannot escape the conviction that the widespread split of authority is due in some part to the varying degrees to which the several courts may feel impelled to question the wisdom of the statutory theory and presumption of mistake under present day conditions; or may regard it as an infringement upon freedom of testation to be carefully hedged about with safeguards. * * * In the absence of apparent testamentary intent it is not within the judicial province to substitute therefor our own views as to the proprieties and needs of each individual case and to modify or exclude application of the statutory presumption accordingly.
> "The nature and weight of the presumption created by our own statute has already been carefully considered by this court In re Parrott's Estate, 45 Nev. 318, 330, 203 P. 258, 261. There it was held that failure to provide for a child 'raises the presumption that (the) omission from the will was unintentional.' * * * Later the Supreme Court of California, In re Stevens [Estate], 83 Cal. [322], 330, 23 P. 379, was quoted with approval as follows: 'We think that the correct rule is that the words of the will must show, * * * that the testator had the person omitted in his mind, and, having her so in his mind, had omitted to make any mention of her.' * * *
> "Since we are here dealing with a statutory presumption relative to testamentary intent, the intent to provide must be regarded as an essential element in any 'provision' contemplated by the statute. It should, then, appear that the testator had his child in mind and by the terms of the clause in question intended to provide for him. The language of paragraph tenth, however, shows upon its face that it was not included for dispositive purposes or for the purpose of making provision for those of any particular class. It was included for the purpose of protecting the will and the estate against attack. Its use of the language, 'I hereby bequeath to such person', does not alter its status in this regard. Before any person under that paragraph would be entitled to the 'bequest' there provided, he must first comply with the condition precedent of attacking the will or the estate. Such conditional and nominal 'bequest', included in the will for such obvious purpose and without any intent on the part of the testator to provide for any individual or class, cannot, we feel, be considered any 'provision' whatsoever. * * * We therefore conclude that there has been an omission to provide for Barringer within the meaning of § 9919, N.C.L. The remaining question is whether it appears that such omission was intentional.

"Appellant first contends that the language of paragraph tenth itself shows an intent to omit to provide for Barringer. * * * It is stated that Barringer is the only person to whom this language could apply and therefore the testator must have had Barringer in mind in so providing.

"This contention we must reject. Just as this paragraph shows lack of dispositive intent, so it shows lack of intent to disinherit any particular person or those of any class. If the testator had anything at all in mind here, it was that someone—anyone at all—might assert rights against the will or against the estate contrary to the provisions of the will; that the will and the estate should be protected against the assertion of any such rights. That Barringer falls within the scope of the protection thus afforded cannot, we feel, demonstrate that the testator had him personally in mind any more than that he had in mind every other person in the world against whose assertion of rights he had provided. * * *

"What we seek to find in the will is not the extent of protection or exclusion afforded, but rather an indication of testamentary intent to disinherit. The so-called exclusion clause in its ordinary limited form may be said reasonably to demonstrate such an intent, whether it be by nominal provision * * * or by expressed intent to disinherit * * *. In either case it may well be said that the expression used demonstrates that the testator had in mind the existence of members of the designated class. No such 'having in mind' can be assumed from the language of paragraph tenth. That paragraph is purely a general protective device as consistent with pretermission as with remembrance. The scope of the protection afforded reflects simply the degree of care used in preparation of the will, the clear intent being to protect against everyone. A general exclusion of "all persons not mentioned' is not sufficient to show that a specific omission was intentional. In re Price's Estate, 56 Cal.App.2d 335, 132 P.2d 485. So the testator here cannot be said to have had in mind the existence of members of any particular class against whom such protection was afforded. Certainly it cannot be said that the expression of testamentary intent to disinherit (if such may be found) is strong or plain enough to meet the requirements of In re Parrott's Estate, supra." (Emphasis added.)

Here the deceased testator did not show in his will that he had his child (appellant) in mind and intentionally omitted to provide for her. On the contrary it appears that he had forgotten her. As indicated in pretermission of a spouse, Prob.Code, § 70: "It being necessary for the testator to have 'in mind' a 'momentous' occasion such as marriage, it follows that merely naming or giving a legacy to a person by name, as was done in the case at bar, with no indication that she may be a prospective spouse, is not enough to prevent revocation. That indication must appear on the face of the will, and extrinsic evidence is not admissible to show the testator's intention, at least unless there is some ambiguity. As in the Duke case [In re Estate of Duke, 41 Cal.2d 509, 261 P.2d 235] a legacy to a named person alone, although the named person is later married to the testator, creates no ambiguity; it is merely 'noncommittal' as were the words 'heirs at law' in the Duke case." In re Estate of Poisl, 44 Cal.2d 147, 149, 280 P.2d 789, 792.

In re Estate of Kurtz, 190 Cal. 146, 210 P. 959, was overruled by In re Estate of Axcelrod, 23 Cal.2d 761, 147 P.2d 1. In re Estate of Dixon, 28 Cal.App.2d 598, 83 P.2d 98, is clearly wrong and out of harmony with the Price and Cochran cases, supra, and should be disapproved.

I would reverse the judgment.

Clarence G. EDMONDS, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY, a corporation, Defendant and Respondent.

No. 16685.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

June 26, 1956.

Hearing Denied Aug. 21, 1956.

Action under Federal Employers' Liability Act and Federal Safety Appliance Act of 1910. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Edward Molkenbuhr, J., entered judgment on verdict for defendant railroad and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that evidence was sufficient to show that defendant railroad was not guilty of negligence which was proximate cause of employee's injuries and that employee was guilty of contributory negligence which was proximate cause of accident.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Master and Servant 🔑146

Even if speed of gondola railroad car upon which employee was riding at time of his injury exceeded speed specified by rule of defendant railroad, violation of applicable rule would not of itself compel finding of negligence in action by employee under Federal Employers' Liability Act. Federal Employers' Liability Act, § 1, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51.

2. Master and Servant 🔑278(6, 7, 18), 281(2, 12)

In action under Federal Employers' Liability Act and Safety Appliance Act of 1910, evidence was sufficient to disclose that defendant railroad was not negligent in maintenance of track with unusually steep grade, in controlling car on which employee was riding at time of his injury, in loading poles on car on which employee was injured, or in failing to maintain brake on car in proper condition, and also to show that employee was negligent in placing his left hand on inside of car instead of grasping grab iron which was placed for his use on outside of car and that employee's negligence was sole and proximate cause of his injury. Safety Appliance Act of 1910, § 2, 45 U.S.C.A. § 11; Federal Employers' Liability Act, § 1, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51.

3. Trial 🔑191(10)

In action under Federal Employers' Liability Act and Safety Appliance Act of 1910, instruction which used words "if plaintiff was an experienced workman" was not erroneous on ground instruction assumed that plaintiff was such an experienced workman.

4. Trial 🔑194(19)

In action under Federal Employers' Liability Act and Safety Appliance Act, clauses of certain instructions given at trial, when taken in context in which the clauses severally appeared, were not invasion of fact-finding function of jury. Safety Appliance Act of 1910, § 2, 45 U.S.C.A. § 11; Federal Employers' Liability Act, § 1, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51.

5. Master and Servant 🔑295(1)

In action under Federal Employers' Liability Act, instructions to jury to effect that railroad was not an insurer and was not liable simply because there may have been some danger in connection with its normal and customary railroad operations, and that injury in course of such operation, did not, in absence of negligence on part of railroad, impose liability upon railroad under Federal Employers' Liability Act, did not inject defense of assumption of risk. Federal Employers' Liability Act, § 1, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51.

6. Trial 🔑191(10)

In action under Federal Employers' Liability Act, instruction to jury to effect that instructions given in respect to negligence on the part of the plaintiff do not mean that negligence on part of the plaintiff can never be a complete defense in an action of this sort, was not erroneous on ground such instruction assumed plaintiff was negligent.

7. Trial 🔑296(8)

In action under Federal Employers' Liability Act, instruction to jury to effect that if plaintiff was guilty of negligence and if that negligence was sole proximate cause of his injury, plaintiff's negligence was complete answer to the action, and it would be jury's duty to return verdict in favor of railroad, was not erroneous for failure to tell jury that finding of negligence on part of plaintiff must be based upon preponderance of evidence, where court adequately informed the jury on that subject by later instructions. Federal Employers' Liability Act, § 1, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51.

8. Master and Servant 🔑296(16)

In action under Federal Employers' Liability Act, failure of trial court to insert the words "if any", in instruction to effect that if plaintiff was guilty of negligence and if that negligence was sole and proximate cause of his injury, after second use of word negligence in instruction, was not error. Federal Employers' Liability Act, § 1, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51.

9. Trial 🔑296(3)

In action under Federal Employers' Liability Act and Safety Appliance Act of 1910, use of the word "proximate" in instruction to jury to effect that if plaintiff was found guilty of negligence and if that negligence was sole and proximate cause of his injury, his negligence was complete answer to action and it would be jury's duty to return verdict in favor of railroad, was not erroneous as suggesting immediate cause as opposed to remote and thus confusing jury in determining liability under Federal Safety Appliance Act, where such instruction was immediately followed by appropriate and adequate instruction on proximate cause. Safety Appliance Act of 1910, § 2, 45 U.S.C.A. § 11; Federal Employers' Liability Act, § 1, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51.

10. Trial 🔑295(6)

In action under Federal Employers' Liability Act, use of the word "immediate" in instruction on negligence to effect that intent is not an essential element of negligence, but rather it is sufficient if railroad did a negligent act from which plaintiff suffered an immediate injury, was not erroneous on ground court precluded jury from considering negligent conduct if it happened to be first act or an intermediate act instead of last act in chain of causation, when instructions given on subject of proximate cause were considered as a whole. Federal Employers' Liability Act, § 1, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51.

11. Trial 🔑295(6)

In action under Federal Employers' Liability Act and Safety Appliance Act of 1910, use of the word complaint in instruction to jury to effect that gravamen of complaint was negligence and negligence only, was not erroneous for telling jury that negligence was gravamen of plaintiff's complaint under Federal Safety Appliance Act as well as under Federal Employers' Liability Act, when instructions were considered as a whole. Safety Appliance Act of 1910, § 2, 45 U.S.C.A. § 11; Federal Employers' Liability Act, § 1, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51.

12. Master and Servant ⚷293(12)
Trial ⚷296(3)

In action under Federal Employers' Liability Act and Safety Appliance Act of 1910, use of the word "fault" in instruction to jury that "the gist and gravamen of plaintiff's action is fault: (1) negligence under the Federal Employers' Liability Act and (2) failure to equip a car with efficient brakes as provided for in the Federal Safety Appliance Act," was not error on ground that it denoted negligence in regard to Safety Appliance Act, in view of fact that use of the word negligence was specifically omitted when Safety Appliance Act was mentioned and also in view of other instructions which dealt specially with issues arising under both acts. Safety Appliance Act of 1910, § 2, 45 U.S.C.A. § 11; Federal Employers' Liability Act, § 1, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51.

Hildebrand, Bills & McLeod, D. W. Brobst, Oakland, for appellant.

A. B. Dunne, R. Mitchell S. Boyd, Dunne, Dunne & Phelps, San Francisco, for respondent.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

Plaintiff, a railroad switchman, was injured while working as a skateman in defendant's retarder yard at Roseville.[1] He was braking a gondola car loaded with poles. He brought this action for damages (1) under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51, alleging (a) that defendant so negligently maintained the track with an unusually steep grade and so carelessly controlled the car that the car moved at an unusually high rate of speed and (b) that defendant so negligently maintained, inspected and serviced the poles (in the car on which plaintiff was injured) that they were not properly secured; and (2) under the Federal Safety Appliance Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 11, alleging that the handbrake on the car was inefficient in that when plaintiff attempted to slow the movement of the car by means of operating the brake in the regular manner, the brake failed to operate in sufficient time to prevent a violent collision.

Verdict and judgment were given for the defendant. In support of his appeal plaintiff claims (1) the evidence is insufficient, that it shows liability as a matter of law, and (2) prejudicial error occurred in the giving of certain instructions to the jury.

The Sufficiency of the Evidence.

Plaintiff boarded a gondola car after it had passed the last retarder and had some 450 to 500 feet to go before coupling with the car ahead of it. He took his position on a platform on the outside of the lead end and began winding the handbrake to slow the car's movement. Instead of grasping a grab-iron on the outside of the car he placed his left hand over the edge and extending downward inside between the car's end and the load the car was carrying. The car's speed, 8 to 12 miles an hour, did not materially slacken. At the moment of coupling the load (creosoted poles laid lengthwise) shifted and pinned plaintiff's left hand against the car end, causing the injury.

[1] The retarder yard is used for the classification of cars. Incoming trains are broken up and cars are then spotted along separate tracks, grouped according to their destination. Tracks extend in an east-west direction. The west end of the yard is higher than the east end. The cars are brought in at the highest point and then started downhill easterly. An employee in a control tower controls their destination in the retarder yard. After the cars start downhill they pass through three sets of mechanical devices, called retarders, that slow the movement of the cars.

The retarders are controlled by a man in the tower. The tracks beyond the retarders are graded so that the cars, after they pass the last retarder, will keep moving without gaining or losing speed. The man in the tower has no control over the speed of the cars after they pass the last retarder. The speed of the cars as they come through the retarders depends upon the weather, their weight, and whether or not they have been standing or rolling before entering the retarder yard.

A skateman is a switchman assigned to the retarder yard to secure the cars on the tracks to which they have been directed by the man in the tower. He places metal wedges, called skates, in front of the car at the end of each track. He sets the brakes on cars and climbs aboard each moving car to slow it down before it couples with the car ahead of it.

[1, 2] As to the element of speed, there is evidence that 8 to 12 miles per hour is not unusual for a car after passing the last retarder. Plaintiff himself so testified; also that he had previously applied brakes to cars at that end of the yard at that speed. He invokes a rule of the defendant which specifies four miles per hour as a safe coupling speed. That by its terms does not necessarily apply to the speed of a car as it passes the last retarder. Also, it was designed for the protection of the cargo (including the most fragile type) and there was testimony that coupling at eight miles per hour would not be unsafe for the cargo here involved. Furthermore, even if there were a violation of an applicable rule of the defendant that of itself would not compel a finding of negligence. Davis v. Johnson, 128 Cal.App.2d 466, 472, 275 P.2d 563.

As to the loading, there is evidence that the car was properly loaded; certainly no basis for a reviewing court to hold as a matter of law that the car was negligently loaded and that such negligence was a proximate cause of the injury.

As to the handbrake, if inefficient, it would be a violation of the Federal Safety Appliance Act and a basis of liability with or without negligence upon the part of the defendant. That the brake was not efficient is demonstrated, plaintiff says, by the fact that he properly applied the brake and it did not work. But there is evidence that he did not properly apply it; i. e., he did not completely wind up the brake chain, which is necessary for the brake to take hold. Also, in a written report made shortly after the accident, plaintiff wrote, "Brake was not defective." There is testimony, too, that an inspection made of this brake 25 minutes after the accident showed that it was in good order. Even if the brake had not functioned efficiently, there would still be the question of proximate cause for the jury to decide.

Finally, we observe that the evidence furnishes a basis for an implied finding that plaintiff was negligent in placing his left hand on the inside of the car, instead of grasping the grab-iron which was placed for his use upon the outside of the car, and that such negligence was the sole cause of his injury.

One of defendant's "Safety Rules Governing Employees and Train Engine and Yard Service," provided as follows: "Never stand or place any part of your body between end of car and loads of lumber or other lading which might shift. Never ride any part of an open topped car equipped with sides, loaded with pipe or any other lading which might shift, with any part of the body inside the car or in any position where shifting of lading might cause injury." Plaintiff admitted he had received a copy of the safety rules and probably had read this one "because I answered it in my questionnaire," an examination he had taken to test his knowledge of the rules. He knew the grab-iron was there; said it was good to use in climbing up onto a car but that he did not use it when braking a car. One of plaintiff's witnesses testified that in coupling a car like this there is no custom or practice to keep one's hand down inside while the cars come together; that he would take his hand off there before making the coupling. Another of his witnesses testified it is the practice in this yard, when riding a gondola car loaded with logs or poles, to keep one's hands out of the end of the car; that the safety rules require one to take the safe course, which is to keep one's hands out. A third witness, called by the defendant, also testified it is the custom and practice in this yard to use the grab-iron, not to place a hand on the inside of the car.

In this state of the record a reviewing court can not say as a matter of law that the verdict was not supported by substantial evidence.

The Instructions

[3, 4] Plaintiff criticizes Instruction No. 23 for saying "* * * if the plaintiff was an experienced workman," contending it assumed that plaintiff was such a workman. We do not so interpret that instruction. He similarly criticizes similar "if" clauses of Instructions 25, 27 and 29. We find in those clauses, in the context in which they severally appear, no invasion of the fact-finding function of the jury.

[5] He says the court injected the defense of assumption of risk in portions of Instructions 16 and 27. These were to the effect that the defendant is not an insurer; is not liable simply because there may be some danger in connection with its normal and customary railroad operations; and that injury in the course of such operations does not, in the absence of negligence upon the part of the defendant, impose liability upon the latter under the Federal Liability Act. These closely resemble the instructions on this subject which were approved in Crowder v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 117 Cal.App.2d 568, 574–575, 256 P.2d 85. They differ significantly from the instructions disapproved in Perrett v. Southern Pacific Co., 73 Cal.App.2d 30, 34–38, 165 P.2d 751.

[6–9] Plaintiff claims that the first two sentences of Instruction No. 33[2] assumed plaintiff was negligent. We do not so read them. He questions the last sentence for its failure to tell the jury that a finding that plaintiff was negligent must be based upon a preponderance of the evidence, but the court adequately informed the jury on that subject by other instructions. He says, too, that the words, "if any" should have been inserted after "negligence" where the latter the second time occurs in the last sentence of No. 33. We perceive no error in that. He questions the use of the word "proximate" in the expression "sole proximate cause," as suggesting "immediate" as opposed to "remote" and thus confusing the jury particularly in determining liability under the Federal Safety Appliance Act. But this instruction was immediately followed by an appropriate and adequate instruction on "proximate cause," which among other things told the jury it is a cause which "sets in operation the factors that accomplished the injury" and "may operate directly or through intermediate agencies." In Carter v. Atlanta of St. Andrews Bay Ry. Co., 338 U.S. 430, 435, 70 S.Ct. 226, 230, 94 L.Ed. 236, the court said: "With proper explanations, the court could have advised the jury that if petitioner's own negligence was the sole proximate cause of his injury, the verdict must be for respondent * * *."

[10, 11] Plaintiff criticizes Instruction No. 13 in certain respects. It was an instruction on negligence. In the middle of it, this statement appears: "Moreover, it is not necessary that an intention to injure or violate the law or do the act or acts which cause an injury be proven; intent is not an essential element of negligence. It is sufficient if the defendant did a negligent act from which plaintiff suffered an immediate injury. It is not necessary for plaintiff, in proving his cause of action for negligence to prove that the defendant did anything wilfully or wantonly. The gravamen of the complaint is negligence and negligence only." Plaintiff says that by using the word "immediate" the court precluded the jury from considering negligent conduct if it happened to be the first act or an intermediate act instead of the last act in a chain of causation, and that the use of the word "complaint" in the last sentence above quoted told the jury that negligence was the gravamen of plaintiff's complaint under the Federal Safety Appliance Act as well as under the Federal Employers' Liability Act. This criticism, taking these words out of the context of the instructions as a whole, has seeming merit but when we consider the instructions given on the subject of proximate cause and on the issues under the Safety Appliance Act, we do not believe the jury was misled.

[2] No. 33 reads as follows: "You have been instructed with respect to negligence on the part of the plaintiff Edmonds. It does not mean that negligence on the part of the plaintiff Edmonds can never be a complete defense in an action of this sort. In some circumstances it can be. If you find that the plaintiff Edmonds was guilty of negligence and if that negligence was the sole proximate cause of his injury, his negligence is a complete answer to this action and it will be your duty to return your verdict in favor of defendant Southern Pacific Company."

[12] Plaintiff makes a similar criticism of Instruction No. 16, which starts with the words: "The gist and gravamen of plaintiff's action is fault: 1) negligence under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, and 2) failure to equip a car with efficient brakes as provided for in the Federal Safety Appliance Act. The plaintiff must prove by a preponderance of evidence fault on the part of the defendant and that such fault was a proximate cause of the injury * * *". He objects to the use of the word "fault," claiming it denotes negligence. In this he overlooks the use of the word "negligence" in relation to the Employers' Liability Act and its absence when the Safety Appliance Act is mentioned, and ignores a series of appropriate and adequate instructions dealing specially with the issues under the Employers' Liability Act and another series of instructions dealing specially with the issues under the Safety Appliance Act. The latter included the following statement: "The duty imposed upon the carrier by the Safety Appliance Act to equip its cars with efficient hand brakes and appliances provided for in the Act is an unqualified, continuous, absolute, and mandatory duty to maintain such brakes in an efficient condition, and regardless of the question of reasonable care on the part of the railroad company or its employees. The test of the observance of the duty imposed by the Safety Appliance Act is the performance of the appliance. A failure of the appliance to work efficiently when properly operated will sustain a charge that the act has been violated, and render the carrier liable for an injury which results from such failure. The question of negligence in the sense of want of care is not an issue under the Safety Appliance Act. Where an injury results from the inefficient operation of an appliance, whether or not such inefficiency was due to the negligence of the carrier or contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff is wholly immaterial. Therefore, if you find that it was a violation of the Federal Safety Appliance Act—efficient brake question—which contributed proximately to cause the accident here in question and the injuries resulting therefrom, you will have no occasion to consider contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff as that is no defense to a violation of the Federal Safety Appliance Act."

Viewed as a whole, the instructions were correct. We find no basis for assuming that the jury otherwise viewed them, particularly in the light of the care the trial court took in segregating and explaining the issues and its admonition to the jurymen that they were not "to single out any one sentence or any one instruction, and ignore the others, but you are to consider the instructions all together and as a whole, and harmonize them so far as you are able to do so" and that "[t]he order in which the instructions are given has no significance as to their relative importance."

The judgment is affirmed.

MOLYBDENUM CORPORATION OF AMERICA, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Allen J. WRIGHT and W. A. Kinney, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 5525.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

July 18, 1956.

Application for a writ of supersedeas. Defendants had appealed from an order denying a motion to transfer the cause from the Superior Court, San Bernardino County, to the Superior Court of Alameda County. The District Court of Appeal by the court held that the application should be granted.

An application to stay trial of a pending action until issue raised by defendants on their appeal was determined would be granted where a very substantial question was presented by the appeal and a pending case ought not to be tried until that question was decided.

Schultheis & Laybourne, Los Angeles, Lonergan & Jordan, San Bernardino, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This is an application for a writ of supersedeas. The defendants in the action have appealed from an order denying their motion to transfer the cause from the Superior Court of San Bernardino County to the Superior Court of Alameda County. By this proceeding they seek to stay a trial of the action until the issue raised on their appeal is determined. On the record now before us it would seem that a very substantial question is presented by the appeal, and that the case ought not to be tried until that question is decided. The possibility that the case might have to be tried twice, in the event of a reversal, should be avoided.

It is ordered that a writ issue as prayed for.

v.

Jessie Victoria ODISIO, John Doe, Doe Corporation, John William Nevarov, Richard Roe, Roe Corporation, Deanna Jennie Bissiri, Robert J. Bissiri and Blank Corporation, Defendants.

Jessie Victoria Odisio and John William Nevarov, Respondents.

Civ. 21404.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

July 2, 1956.

Rehearing Denied July 24, 1956.

Two actions arising out of four-automobile collision were consolidated for trial. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, George A. Dockweiler, J., rendered the judgment challenged by appeal. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., passing upon a question believed not theretofore to have been considered by reviewing courts, held that where marriage was invalid, and man's negligence contributed to woman's injuries, he could have no interest in her recovery from third party for such injuries, and his negligence would not be imputed to her.

1. Husband and Wife 🔑248

Where marriage was invalid, there is no community interest in property accumulated during marriage and respective claims of parties to property are only those which derive validity from principles of equity and justice, which do not permit one of parties to keep all of property that has been acquired through joint efforts of both, but require fair division.

2. Work and Labor ⚿6

Where marriage was invalid, man will not be permitted to unduly profit from services rendered by woman, and in an action brought by her she will be awarded compensation equal to value of her services in excess of what she received in way of support and maintenance.

3. Marriage ⚿54

Parties to invalid marriage do not have same rights in accumulated property as are enjoyed by parties to valid marriage; rights of the latter being statutory and, in some instances, inflexible, whereas respective claims of the former are recognized only to extent they are seen to be just and fair.

4. Negligence ⚿89(1)

Where marriage was invalid and man's negligence contributed to woman's injuries, he could have no interest in her recovery from third party for such injuries, and his negligence would not be imputed to her. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 162, 163, 687.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

The present litigation arose out of a collision on February 1, 1953, involving four automobiles. Irene Caldwell, plaintiff in the present action, was riding in a car operated by her husband Glenn E. Caldwell which came into collision with a car driven by Jessie Victoria Odisio; also involved was one operated by John William Nevarov and another operated by Deanna Jennie Bissiri. Mrs. Caldwell sued defendants Odisio, Nevarov and Bissiri and his wife, all of whom answered the complaint. The Nevarovs, John, Anna and infant son, sued Caldwell, and perhaps others. The two actions were consolidated for trial. We are concerned only with the appeal of Mrs. Caldwell from an adverse judgment in her action, which was entered April 25, 1955. It was a jury trial in which the defendants pleaded the defense of contributory negligence of Glenn E. Caldwell and alleged that at the time of the accident he and plaintiff were husband and wife. Plaintiff offered in evidence an agreement entered into December 23, 1953 by herself and Caldwell by which each waived and relinquished any claim to an interest in any recovery of damages by the other for injuries received in the accident and agreed that the same should be the separate property of the one who gained a recovery. She also offered in evidence a decree of a California court granted November 26, 1954, which annulled her marriage to Caldwell. The decree made no mention of property rights. She offered to prove that Caldwell had remarried. Objections to these several offers were sustained. At the request of the defendants the court instructed that the negligence of Caldwell, if any, would be imputed to plaintiff and if it contributed proximately to her injury, would bar a recovery by her.

The question on the appeal is whether these rulings and the instruction constituted prejudicial error. "All property of the wife, owned by her before marriage, and that acquired afterwards by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, with the rents, issues, and profits thereof, is her separate property." Civ.Code, § 162. The husband has a corresponding ownership. § 163. "Community property is property acquired by husband and wife, or either, during marriage, when not acquired as the separate property of either." § 687. Such has been the statutory law since 1872.

It has been held in numerous cases from McFadden v. Santa Ana, etc., Ry. Co., 87

Cal. 464, 25 P. 681, 11 L.R.A. 252, to the present time that sums recovered as damages by husband and wife for personal injuries constitute community property, as property acquired during the marriage otherwise than as separate property. This classification results from the interpretation the courts have given to the code definitions of separate and community property. Civ. Code §§ 162, 163, 687. The cases also hold that the negligence of one spouse, which proximately contributes to an injury to the other, is imputable to the latter in a suit for damages and, if proven, bars a recovery. The reason, and the only reason, for this rule is that to permit a recovery in which the negligent spouse would have a community interest would violate the rule that one may not profit through his own wrong. Kesler v. Pabst, 43 Cal.2d 254, 273 P.2d 257. These rules have been applied in cases of valid marriages where the interests of the parties are governed by the community property system. The respective rights of the parties are fixed by statute.

[1-4] So far as we are advised the reviewing courts have not had occasion to consider the crucial question presented by the present appeal, namely, whether in the case of a voidable marriage, duly dissolved, the rule of imputed negligence has application. It is a narrow question, namely, whether the husband has an interest in the recovery by the wife of damages for her personal injuries, when her injuries were proximately caused by his negligence.

The marriage being invalid, there is no community interest in property accumulated during the marriage. Coats v. Coats, 160 Cal. 671, 678, 118 P. 441, 36 L.R.A., N.S., 844; Schneider v. Schneider, 183 Cal. 335, 341, 191 P. 533, 11 A.L.R. 1386; Flanagan v. Capital Nat. Bank, 213 Cal. 664, 666, 3 P.2d 307; Feig v. Bank of Italy, etc., Ass'n, 218 Cal. 54, 56, 21 P.2d 421; Feig v. Bank of America, etc., Ass'n, 5 Cal. 2d 266, 273, 54 P.2d 3; Santos v. Santos, 32 Cal.App.2d 62, 65, 89 P.2d 164; Macchi v. La Rocca, 54 Cal.App. 98, 100, 201 P. 143; Baskett v. Crook, 86 Cal.App.2d 355, 359-360, 195 P.2d 39; In re Estate of Foy, 109 Cal.App.2d 329, 332, 240 P.2d 685.

The respective claims of the parties to property are only those which derive validity from principles of equity and justice. Those principles do not permit one of the parties to keep all the property that has been acquired through the joint efforts of both. There must be a fair division. Goff v. Goff, 52 Cal.App.2d 23, 125 P.2d 848; Sancha v. Arnold, 114 Cal.App.2d 772, 251 P.2d 67, 252 P.2d 55; Coats v. Coats, supra, 160 Cal. 671, 118 P. 441; Feig v. Bank of Italy, etc., Ass'n, supra, 218 Cal. 54, 21 P.2d 421; Sanguinetti v. Sanguinetti, 9 Cal.2d 95, 69 P.2d 845, 111 A.L.R. 342; Santos v. Santos, supra, 32 Cal.App.2d 62, 89 P.2d 164.

Likewise the man will not be permitted to unduly profit from the services rendered by the woman. In an action brought by her she will be awarded compensation equal to the value of her services in excess of what she has received in the way of support and maintenance. Coats v. Coats, supra, 160 Cal. 671, 118 P. 441; Sanguinetti v. Sanguinetti, supra, 9 Cal.2d 95, 100, 69 P.2d 845; Mixer v. Mixer, 2 Cal.App. 227, 83 P. 273; Marsh v. Marsh, 79 Cal. App. 560, 250 P. 411; Taylor v. Taylor, 66 Cal.App.2d 390, 398, 152 P.2d 480; Lazzarevich v. Lazzarevich, 88 Cal.App.2d 708, 200 P.2d 49.

As a general rule, in the division of property the courts have used as a fair basis the principles of the community property system and the property has been divided as in the cases of valid marriages. Coats v. Coats, supra, 160 Cal. 671, 118 P. 441; Schneider v. Schneider, supra, 183 Cal. 335, 191 P. 533; Macchi v. La Rocca, supra, 54 Cal.App. 98, 201 P. 143; Figoni v. Figoni, 211 Cal. 354, 357, 295 P. 339; Feig v. Bank of Italy, etc., Ass'n, supra, 218 Cal. 54, 58, 21 P.2d 421; Feig v. Bank of America, etc., Ass'n, supra, 5 Cal.2d 266, 273, 54 P.2d 3; Sanguinetti v. Sanguinetti, supra, 9 Cal.2d 95, 99, 69 P.2d 845; Marsh v. Marsh, supra, 79 Cal.App. 560, 250 P.

411; Santos v. Santos, supra, 32 Cal.App. 2d 62, 65, 89 P.2d 164; Goff v. Goff, supra, 52 Cal.App.2d 23, 30, 125 P.2d 848; Blache v. Blache, 69 Cal.App.2d 616, 624, 160 P. 2d 136; Blache v. Blache, 78 Cal.App.2d 168, 177 P.2d 345; In re Estate of Krone, 83 Cal.App.2d 766, 769, 189 P.2d 741; Lazzarevich v. Lazzarevich, supra, 88 Cal.App. 2d 708, 200 P.2d 49.

Without further discussion of these principles we need only say that while they are well established they merely lead up to the decisive question we have previously stated.

It is inherent in the arguments of respondents that the parties to an invalid marriage have the same rights in the accumulated property as are enjoyed by the parties to a valid marriage. In this they are mistaken. The latter are statutory and in some instances inflexible, whereas in the former, the respective claims are recognized only to the extent that they are seen to be just and fair.

Although it has been said that the woman, party to an invalid marriage, earns her interest by her wifely services and that the court will no more inquire into her contribution of money than it would under the community property laws, Macchi v. La Rocca, supra, 54 Cal.App. 98, 201 P. 143, this is merely an application of the rule that property acquired by the joint efforts of the parties will be equally divided.

We are not concerned with what would generally be a fair division, if any, between a man and a woman, parties to an invalid and dissolved marriage, of sums recovered by one or the other for personal injuries. Our concern is with the possible interest of a husband whose negligence contributed to the wife's injuries; and we say he can have none.

In the first place, although a recovery of damages is recognized by the cases as property acquired during the marriage, and, hence, within the statutory definition of community property, such a recovery is not property acquired through the joint efforts of the parties, which is the equitable feature the courts have recognized as usually calling for an equal division of property acquired by the parties to an invalid marriage.

In the second place, and as a conclusive answer to the argument in favor of the imputed negligence rule, is the fact that if the negligent husband were permitted to share in the wife's recovery to any extent he would be profiting through his own wrong. It is solely because of this principle that the spouse who has a statutory community interest in a recovery by the other will be barred therefrom if he has been guilty of negligence, even though the claims of the innocent wife will thereby be defeated. But where it would be unconscionable for a husband to share in a recovery by his wife for injuries caused by his negligence, there is no reason whatever for imputing his negligence to her. Equity decrees that the recovery, if any, will belong to her alone, since to require her to share it with her husband would be a gross injustice to her, as well as a forbidden windfall to him. The rule that the husband will not be permitted to profit through his own wrong has been deemed a controlling reason for use of the rule of imputed negligence where the recovery would be community property. It must likewise be controlling where the recovery belongs solely to the wife, not because she holds it under separate property title, but because she has a right to receive it and no duty to divide it with her husband.

In view of our conclusion that Mr. Caldwell could not share in any sum recovered by Mrs. Caldwell, his purported relinquishment was meaningless and we have had no occasion to consider it.

It was error to give the instruction on imputed negligence and to exclude from evidence the decree of annulment.

The judgment is reversed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

William Jackson GLANCY, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5520.

June 28, 1956.

Hearing Denied July 24, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of violating the Dangerous Weapons' Control Law. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Aubrey N. Irwin, J., entered judgment on a verdict of guilty and an order denying defendant's motion for new trial, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Wood, J., held that evidence sustained conviction.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Weapons 🔑17(4)

Evidence sustained conviction for violation of the Dangerous Weapons' Control Law. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 12000 et seq.

2. Arrest 🔑63(4), 71

Where prosecuting witness informed police officers that defendant's brother had warned her in telephone call that defendant was coming to get her with a loaded revolver, and she showed police officers a telegram which defendant's brother had sent her telling her to call him by telephone in reference to an important matter concerning the defendant, and defendant appeared at apartment of prosecuting witness where officers were waiting, the officers were justified in making an arrest, on ground that they had reasonable cause to believe that a felony was being committed, and arrest being lawful, search of defendant's automobile and suitcase, which contained a loaded revolver, was an incident to the arrest and was not illegal. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 12000 et seq.

3. Witnesses 🔑269(7)

In prosecution under the Dangerous Weapons' Control Law, wherein prosecuting witness testified that she had known defendant for 10 years and had been in certain city with him at different times, and that she was in that city with defendant when he threatened to shoot her, trial court did not err in refusing to permit defendant on cross-examination of prosecuting witness to ask her whether she had shared the same premises with defendant in that city. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 12000 et seq.

4. Criminal Law 🔑1170½(5)

In prosecution under the Dangerous Weapons' Control Law, refusal of trial court to permit defendant to ask prosecuting witness on cross-examination if she had filed a complaint with the city attorney's office, was not prejudicial error, where prosecuting witness testified later that she had made a complaint for battery against defendant in the city attorney's office. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 12000 et seq.

5. Criminal Law 🔑1170(4)

In prosecution under the Dangerous Weapons' Control Law, trial court did not commit reversible error in refusing to permit defendant to ask prosecuting witness, for purpose of showing bias on her part, whether she had received any compensation for working for defendant, whether she had any disagreement with him as a result of working for him, and when she first had any difficulty with him, where she had previously testified that she had received salary from defendant for three weeks, and she subsequently testified that they had arguments about partnership and money matters, and that he first threatened her over the telephone on certain date. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 12000 et seq.

6. Criminal Law 🔑448(3)

In prosecution under the Dangerous Weapons' Control Law, trial court properly sustained objection to question asked by defendant of prosecuting witness why defendant threatened her, since the question called for a conclusion. West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 12000 et seq.

7. Criminal Law 🔑448(1)

In prosecution under the Dangerous Weapons' Control Law, trial court properly sustained objection to question asked by defendant of prosecuting witness whether it was possible that there could have been other meetings, since the question called for speculation. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 12000 et seq.

8. Criminal Law 🔑1166½(12)

In prosecution under the Dangerous Weapons' Control Law, statement of trial court to defense counsel in presence of jury that court was going to hold defense counsel in contempt of court if he went through any more gyrations, was not prejudicial error, in view of circumstances, which preceded the remark, and in view of admonitions immediately given to jury after the remark. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 12000 et seq.

9. Criminal Law 🔑661

In prosecution under the Dangerous Weapons' Control Law, District Attorney was not required to secure the attendance of defendant's brother, who, according to prosecuting witness, had warned prosecuting witness that defendant was coming to get prosecuting witness with a loaded revolver. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 12000 et seq.

10. Criminal Law 🔑338(1)

In prosecution under the Dangerous Weapons' Control Law, trial court should have permitted defendant to ask the wife of defendant's brother where the brother was, for purpose of showing that defendant had attempted to obtain his brother as a witness and that the brother was evading service of subpoena. West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 12000 et seq.

11. Criminal Law 🔑1170(2)

In prosecution under the Dangerous Weapons' Control Law, error of trial court in refusing to permit defendant to inquire of wife of defendant's brother where the brother was, for purpose of showing that defendant had attempted to obtain his brother as a witness and that the brother was evading service of subpoena, was not prejudicial error, where defendant had already shown that he had tried to serve a subpoena on the brother and that the sheriff could not find the brother. Morris Lavine, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Rudolph Pacht, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Defendant was charged with violation of Dangerous Weapons' Control Law of 1923, West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 12000 et seq., in that he unlawfully had in his possession a .38 caliber revolver, he having been previously convicted of a felony (passing weapon into state penitentiary). He admitted allegations in the information that he had been convicted of three felonies (manslaughter, grand larceny, and issuing fraudulent check) and had served terms therefor in state prisons. In a trial by jury he was found guilty. He appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant's assignments of error are: insufficiency of the evidence; certain evidence was unlawfully obtained; erroneous rulings as to admissibility of evidence; undue limitation of cross-examination of prosecution witnesses; judge erred in threatening, in the presence of the jury, to hold defense counsel in contempt of court; and prejudice resulting to defendant by failure of prosecution to produce defendant's brother as a witness.

Miss Smith, a resident of Hollywood, had known defendant about 10 years. She was employed by defendant 3 weeks during parts of July and August, 1954. Thereafter they became partners in a business referred to as a horse racing information club. Some of the business was conducted at San Ysidro and at her apartment in Hollywood. In December, 1954, they had arguments about the partnership and money matters. She claimed that he owed money to her, and he claimed that she had improperly taken money from the business. She testified that about December 21, 1954, at her apartment in Hollywood, defendant nearly broke her nose, and threatened to kill her—he said he would shoot her between the eyes; he had threatened her in a similar manner a few weeks previously at San Ysidro; as a result of the injury to her nose she was treated by a physician; she had to stay away from her apartment to feel safe; she changed her telephone number to an unlisted number; about December 23, 1954, she made a complaint (for battery) against defendant at the city attorney's office; she was forced to dismiss the complaint because defendant called her about an hour before the time set for the hearing and told her that if she went through with it she would not live to see the rest of the day.

Defendant's brother, Leonard Glancy, resided in San Francisco and operated a bar there. Defendant was in San Francisco for several days preceding February 17, 1955, and during that time he saw and talked with his brother Leonard.

About February 16, 1955, Miss Smith received a telegram, as follows: "Ruby, call me immediately, Mission 76077. Very important. Concerning Bill. Your friend. Leonard." On direct examination she testified that she called that telephone number in San Francisco, had a conversation with Leonard Glancy, defendant's brother, and received information concerning the defendant; after that conversation she notified the police department of Los Angeles. On cross-examination defendant's counsel asked her if she went to the police department with the telegram. She replied that she did. He asked her if she was afraid when she went to the police. She replied that she was afraid because her life was threatened. He asked her what made her feel that her life was threatened. She replied, "I received a message from Mr. Leonard Glancy that Mr. Bill Glancy was on his way down to my apartment with a loaded revolver, to get me." He asked her how she received the message. She replied, "By telephone."

Miss Smith also said, on cross-examination, that on February 17, 1955, and before defendant was arrested on that day, she talked with defendant by telephone; she called him—the telephone supervisor having told her (on her unlisted telephone) that there was an emergency call for her from a certain person (a name unfamiliar to Miss Smith) to call a certain number immediately.

On February 17, 1955, about noon, 5 police officers of Los Angeles were "staked out" near the apartment of Miss Smith awaiting the arrival of defendant. Officer Weil, a police officer of Los Angeles, testified that, on information that he had concerning the commission of a felony, he arrested defendant at 2224-½ Cahuenga Boulevard; he (officer) saw defendant drive an automobile "into the address"; by the time he (officer) arrived at the "scene," from across the street, defendant was getting out of the car—one leg was in the car and the other leg was out; the revolver (Exhibit 2), when he first saw it, was in a small suitcase on the floor of the automobile beneath the dashboard; the revolver at that time (while it was in the suitcase) was wrapped in a dishtowel; the revolver had 5 "live cartridges" in it; he looked for fingerprints on the revolver, but he did not see any; he kept the revolver in his possession until he arrived at the police station; he made a report showing the serial number of the revolver; there was clothing in the suitcase; there were other suitcases and personal belongings of defendant in the rear seat of the car.

Mrs. Glancy, wife of Leonard Glancy, testified that defendant was at her home in San Francisco for approximately 3 weeks before February 16, 1955, and he slept there at nights during that time; about a week before February 16, she saw a gun in a drawer in a linen chest in her bedroom; the gun was similar to Exhibit 2 (a .38 revolver); she said to defendant, "I would rather you get this gun out of my house. I don't want it in here."; he took the gun out immediately. On cross-examination she said that her husband had had a gun about 8 years; he is permitted to carry the gun when he goes to his place of business; the last time she saw that gun was after she had seen a gun, similar to Exhibit 2, in the drawer of the linen chest; Exhibit 2 is not her husband's gun.

The alleged defense was that the revolver was not defendant's, he did not know it was in the suitcase, and that defendant's brother and Miss Smith conspired for the purpose of planning the arrest of defendant in order that they might get control of the business operated by defendant and Miss Smith, and that they might thwart defendant in his efforts to collect money which the brother owed to defendant. Counsel for defendant argued to the jury that defendant's brother planted the "rider" (an unknown person hereinafter referred to) in defendant's car, and planted the gun in the rider's suitcase.

Defendant testified that the several suitcases or bags which were in the courtroom were in his car when he last saw them; one of the bags (Exhibit A) did not belong to him; he first saw that bag in San Francisco in the possession of a man, whose name defendant did not know; the first time defendant saw the gun was when Officer Weil took the gun out of the suitcase; he had a telephone conversation with Miss Smith on February 17, before he was arrested, and she asked him to come to her apartment at twelve o'clock, and he agreed to go there at that time; he drove to her apartment, got out of his car, and walked toward the apartment; at that time 5 or 6 officers arrested him.

Appellant testified further that he was in San Francisco about 4 days preceding February 16; he went there to collect $1,625 that his brother Leonard owed him; he did not think that he slept at his brother's home during that time; he had no conversation with Mrs. Leonard Glancy concerning a gun; he could not say how much money Miss Smith owes him, but he would say she took $1,300 that belonged to him; on the morning of February 16 he and his brother had a violent quarrel about the money that his brother owed him, and as a result thereof defendant sought legal counsel regarding collection of the money; also on the morning of February 16 defendant was in his brother's bar talking to an employee of the bar by the name of Bob, and defendant said that he (defendant) was leaving in the afternoon to go to Los Angeles; a man, who was a stranger and was sitting next to them, asked defendant if he could go to Los Angeles with him; defendant said that Bob and the man could go with him; they replied that they would go; defendant does not know the name of the man; defendant, after telling them he would pick them up about four o'clock, left the bar; a few minutes after four o'clock he drove his automobile to the front of the bar and asked his brother where Bob was; the brother said that he did not know where Bob was, but the other fellow had gone to the bus station; defendant went to the station, saw the man standing in line to get on a bus, and asked the man if he wanted to go with him to Los Angeles; then the man left the line, got a refund on his ticket, put his bag (Exhibit A) in the front part of defendant's car, and they (defendant and the man) headed for Los Angeles; the man was in the front seat next to defendant, who was driving; the suitcase was against the front seat and the man had his legs over the top of it; they stopped at Gilroy and had dinner; the man had been drinking wine on the way from San Francisco; after leaving Gilroy they went about 20 miles and stopped at the side of the road and slept; about 10 p. m. an officer knocked on the window of the car and awakened them; the man started mumbling, and defendant told him to be quiet or get out; the man got out and left the suitcase (Exhibit A) in the car; defendant did not notice where the man went; the officer went away; defendant drove to Los Angeles alone, arriving there about 9 a. m. on February 17; he never opened the suitcase (Exhibit A).

Defendant also testified regarding business transactions he had with Miss Smith. He said that they had arguments, but he denied that he struck or hurt her. He testified that he had been convicted of passing a weapon into a state penitentiary, a felony, and he had been convicted of three other felonies as alleged in the information.

[1] Appellant's argument, regarding insufficiency of the evidence, is that there was no proof that the suitcase belonged to defendant or that he knew that the gun was in the suitcase. As above stated, the wife of defendant's brother said that the gun (Exhibit 2) was similar to the gun which defendant removed, upon her demand, from the linen chest at her home. Of course, the jury was not required to believe defendant's story to the effect that a mysterious stranger left the suitcase in defendant's automobile. The part of the charge that defendant had been convicted of a felony was admitted by him. The evidence was sufficient to support the judgment.

[2] A further contention of appellant is that the evidence was the product of an illegal search and seizure, in that, the officer did not have a search warrant or any warrant or reasonable cause to believe that a felony was being committed. Since the suitcase was introduced in evidence by defendant, it is to be assumed that appellant did not intend that his argument should apply to that part of the evidence. Appellant relies on the Cahan case. People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905, which was decided April 27, 1955. The trial of the present case was commenced May 17, 1955. Defendant did not object to the introduction of the revolver and cartridges in evidence. In People v. Kitchens, 46 Cal. 2d 260, 294 P.2d 17, it was held that in cases tried before the Cahan decision the question as to whether the evidence was obtained lawfully would be reviewed on appeal even though an objection to the introduction of the evidence was not made at the trial. As above indicated, the present case was tried after the Cahan decision was rendered (but before it became final). In the present case it does not appear whether or not the officers had a warrant for the arrest of defendant or for the search of the automobile or suitcase. Officer Weil testified that he had information concerning the commission of a felony, when he arrested the defendant. He did not state the facts or information which he regarded as reasonable cause for believing that a felony was being committed or had been committed. In People v. Boyles, 45 Cal.2d 652, at page 656, 290 P.2d 535 at page 537, it was said: "Since the court and not the officer must make the determination whether the officer's belief is based upon reasonable cause, the officer must testify to the facts or information known to him on which his belief is based." In Willson v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 291, 294 P.2d 36, at page 38 it was said: "[E]vidence must be presented to the court that would justify the conclusion that reliance on the information was reasonable." In People v. Boyles, supra, it was said at page 656 of 45 Cal.2d, at page 537 of 290 P.2d: "[R]easonable cause to justify an arrest may consist of information obtained from others and is not limited to evidence that would be admissible at the trial on the issue of guilt." In the present case, counsel for defendant, by objecting to the testimony of Miss Smith regarding her conversation with Leonard Glancy, prevented the prosecution from presenting evidence as to the information which she gave to the police. (She had just testified that pursuant "to talking to Leonard Glancy in San Francisco" she notified the police of Los Angeles.) When the deputy district attorney asked Miss Smith, on direct examination, what the information was that she received in the telephone conversation with Leonard Glancy, counsel for defendant objected "to conversation outside the presence of this defendant." The objection was sustained. The deputy district attorney said "[T]his is being offered as an exception to the hearsay rule under the Cahan case." After some further discussion, the judge said to counsel for defendant: "Your objection is based on the ground that this is hearsay? Mr. Hall [counsel for defendant]: That is right. I will stand on my objection. The Court: The objection is sustained. Conversation outside the presence of the defendant is hearsay. Mr. Galliano [deputy district attorney]: Even in spite of the new ruling? The Court: I don't know of any such new ruling. Mr. Hall: Neither do I. Mr. Galliano: Very well." Thereafter the deputy asked Miss Smith if she told the police department what she had heard from San Francisco. She answered, "Yes." Counsel for defendant objected on the ground that it was hearsay. The judge said that it was repetitious, and "She may not state what she told the police." Apparently it was the intention of the deputy district attorney, in asking those questions, to establish a part of the basis for the officer's belief that there was reasonable cause for the arrest and search; and also to present evidence as to the source of the information and the identity of the police informant, which would be material to the question whether "reliance [by the police] on the information was reasonable." In view of those objections and rulings (rulings that conversation outside the presence of the defendant is hearsay, and that she would not be permitted to state what she told the police), it is apparent that testimony by a police officer as to what she told him would also have been excluded. Officer Weil had not talked to Miss Smith—he said that Captain Jones and Lieutenant Economides had ordered him to go to "this stakeout." There were other officers in attendance at the trial, as witnesses, but they were not called to testify. (They were Officers Jackson and Hubka.) It is reasonable to conclude that defendant, by his objections, prevented the prosecution from presenting evidence as to the information received by the police department. In People v. Boyles, supra, it was said at page 656 of 45 Cal.2d, at page 537 of 290 P.2d (after holding, as above stated, that the officer must testify to the facts on which his belief is based): "Under the peculiar circumstances of this case, however, defendant is not in a position to challenge the failure of the record to establish the basis for the officer's belief. When the prosecuting attorney sought to establish that basis, defendant objected and the committing magistrate ruled that the matter should be gone into on cross-examination. At that time defendant limited the examination to a determination that the officer had not personally witnessed any activity of defendant with regard to narcotics. * * Thus in the present case it is entirely possible that the officer's belief that defendant had narcotics in her possession was fully justified by reliable information obtained by him from others in carrying out his duties. Since defendant successfully prevented the prosecution from presenting such evidence, if any, she cannot now contend that the evidence before the committing magistrate was necessarily illegally obtained and therefore insufficient to support the information." In Badillo v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 269, 294 P.2d 23, at page 25, it was said: "[T]he defendant makes a prima facie case when he establishes that an arrest was made without a warrant or that private premises were entered or a search made without a search warrant, and the burden then rests on the prosecution to show proper justification." As above indicated, it does not appear herein that the officers did not have a warrant for arrest or a search warrant. In People v. Citrino, 46 Cal.2d 284, 294 P.2d 32, at page 34, it was said: "The record, however, is silent as to whether the officers had a search warrant, and in the absence of any evidence showing the illegality of the search, we must presume that the officers regularly and lawfully performed their duties." In view of the record in the present case, it could be presumed that the officers, in arresting defendant and making the search, lawfully performed their duties. Furthermore, under all the evidence herein, it could reasonably be inferred that the officers had reasonable cause for believing that a felony was being committed. Officer Weil testified that he had information concerning the commission of a felony, when he arrested defendant. Miss Smith had taken the telegram, which she received from Leonard Glancy, to the police. Also, after she had telephoned Leonard, as requested in the telegram, and had been told by telephone that defendant was on his way to her apartment with a loaded revolver to get her, she notified the police. The fact that, on the day after she received the telephonic information, 5 police officers were stationed near her apartment for several hours awaiting the arrival of defendant indicates that the information upon which the officers were acting was, at least in part, the information she had received by telephone. In People v. Farrara, 46 Cal.2d 265, 294 P.2d 21, at page 22, it was said: "From the fact, however, that the officers had defendants and the apartment under observation, it may be inferred that they had some information indicating guilt * * *." After the telegram had been received by Miss Smith, defendant arrived at her apartment, when the officers were present, approximately within the time that is ordinarily required to travel from San Francisco to Los Angeles. The officers were justified in making the arrest. The arrest being lawful, the search of the automobile and suitcase was an incident to the arrest and was not illegal. In People v. Winston, 46 Cal. 2d 151, 293 P.2d 40, at page 46, it was said: "'It is well settled that a search without a warrant is valid where it is incident to a lawful arrest, if it is reasonable and made in good faith; and that a seizure, during such a search, of evidence related to the crime is permissible.'" It was also said therein, 46 Cal.2d at page 162, 293 P.2d at page 47: "'"The right without a search warrant contemporaneously to search persons lawfully arrested while committing crime, and to search the place where the arrest is made in order to find and seize things connected with the crime * * * is not to be doubted."'" The revolver and cartridges were admissible in evidence.

Appellant also contends that rulings as to admissibility of evidence were erroneous. Counsel for appellant states that "An examination of the record shows innumerable objections by the District Attorney, all of which were sustained by the court." That statement is not correct. Approximately 65 of the objections by the deputy district attorney were overruled. Approximately 135 of his objections were sustained.

[3] Appellant asserts that the court erred in sustaining an objection to his question, on cross-examination, whether Miss Smith shared the same premises with defendant in San Ysidro. His argument at the trial seemed to be that it was a material question because she had testified that he had threatened her and she was in fear. She had testified that she had known him 10 years and she had been in San Ysidro with him at different times. The question did not specify whether reference was made to a time before or after the threats. Later she testified that she was in San Ysidro with him when he threatened to shoot her. The ruling was not erroneous.

[4] Appellant asked Miss Smith if she had filed a complaint with the city attorney's office. An objection thereto was sustained. Appellant asserts that the question was for the purpose of showing bias on the part of the witness. The ruling was not prejudicial—she testified later (as above stated) that she made a complaint (for battery) against defendant at the city attorney's office.

[5] Three other questions, which appellant asked Miss Smith for the purpose of showing bias on her part, were: whether she received any compensation for working for defendant; whether she had any disagreement with him as a result of working for him; and when she first had any difficulty with him. Objections to those questions were sustained. She had testified that she was on salary for three weeks. Later she testified that they had arguments about partnership and money matters, and that he first threatened her, over the telephone, in December, 1954. The rulings were not prejudicial.

[6] Another question asked Miss Smith, for such purpose, was: "Why did the defendant threaten you?" Of course, the objection was properly sustained—the question called for a conclusion.

[7] Appellant quotes 10 pages of the reporter's transcript and then comments that, "Repeated questions were objected to as not proper cross-examination or objected to as immaterial and objections were sustained. In each of these rulings, which we have quoted in part, the court unduly limited the scope of cross-examination." Counsel for appellant did not point out and discuss any particular ruling in that long quotation. It would unduly extend this opinion if this court were to assume the burden of singling out and discussing the rulings therein which sustained objections to appellant's questions. The first question therein was: "Is it possible, Miss Smith, that there could have been other meetings?" Of course, it was proper to sustain the objection thereto on the ground that the question called for speculation. Other questions were: whether defendant was arrested in her apartment on January 28; whether she knew when "a man is arrested"; how many times she had called the police; whether defendant was in jail in January; how long was defendant in her apartment when he came for breakfast; whether they argued about a check when he was there for breakfast; whether the date when defendant was arrested was clear in her mind; whether defendant had her telephone number; whether she asked him to come over to her apartment; what time she talked (by telephone) to defendant on the day of his arrest. Some of those questions had been answered, and some of them were immaterial. There was no prejudicial error in any of the rulings included in that quotation from the transcript.

A further contention of appellant is that he was unduly limited in cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses. His points and argument with respect to this contention are substantially the same as those with respect to alleged erroneous rulings as to admissibility of evidence. This contention is not sustainable.

[8] Another contention of appellant is that the court erred when it told defense counsel, in the presence of the jury, as follows: "Mr. Hall, I am going to hold you in contempt of court if you go through any more gyrations like this." Counsel for appellant states in his brief: "At no time did the court instruct the jury to disregard them, and in his concluding instructions, he did not tell the jury to disregard any comments of either court or counsel." That statement of counsel for appellant is not correct. Immediately after said remark of the judge, the judge said to counsel for defendant: "You are admonished that you are to examine the witness on matters relevant, and relevant only." The judge then said: "Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, you are to disregard, insofar as your determination of this case is concerned, the remarks of counsel and the discussion of this Court with counsel." Counsel for defendant brought on the remark of the court about contempt by asking Mrs. Glancy, wife of defendant's brother, many questions that were irrelevant or not proper cross-examination. Just before the judge made said remark about contempt, Mrs. Glancy had stated her residence address. Then counsel for defendant said: "And you also have a business address of 2410 Mission Street, have you not?" The deputy district attorney objected on the ground that it was immaterial. The court overruled the objection. Mrs. Glancy answered, "Not any more." "Q. By Mr. Hall [counsel for defendant]: Well, you did recently? A. Yes. Q. Up until recently. Well, until your license was taken away? Mr. Galliano [deputy district attorney]: Now, just a moment. Your Honor please—." (The license, so referred to, pertained to the bar operated by defendant's brother.) In view of all the circumstances which preceded the remark of the judge regarding contempt, and in view of the admonition immediately given to the jury after the remark, it cannot be said that there was prejudicial error.

[9] Appellant also contends that he was prejudiced by the failure of the prosecution to produce defendant's brother as a witness. He argues to the effect that on May 3 the trial of the case was continued to May 17, at the request of the prosecution, in order that the prosecution might produce the brother as a witness. The brother was not present at the trial. Prior to the continuance the defendant had obtained a subpoena for the brother, had sent it to the sheriff at San Francisco for service, and the sheriff had made a return that he was unable to locate the witness. At the trial, and in the presence of the jury, counsel for defendant stated that the subpoena had been issued, that he had sent it to the sheriff, and that said return had been made. When that statement was made the judge told counsel for defendant to file the return of service to show that the subpoena had not been served. The minutes of the court of May 3 show that the case was continued "On motion of People and due to congested condition of court's calendar." When the case was called for trial on May 17 defendant did not ask for a continuance, but answered that he was ready for trial. When it appeared during the trial that the brother was not present, the defendant did not ask for a continuance. Defendant called a deputy district attorney (Mr. Whichello) as a witness and asked him if he was familiar with the file in the case. An objection thereto was sustained. Counsel for defendant said that his question pertained to the efforts the witness had made to secure the attendance of the brother, and that the case was continued on the representation of the district attorney's office "that efforts were being made to procure the presence of—." The judge then said that counsel for defendant had already made those statements. The district attorney was not required to secure the attendance of the brother.

[10, 11] While Mrs. Glancy, the wife of defendant's brother, was a witness, defendant's counsel asked her when she last talked to her husband. She replied that she saw him just before she left (San Francisco) to come to Los Angeles as a witness. She was also asked, "[W]here is your husband now?" An objection thereto was sustained. Defendant argues that he had a right to show that he tried to obtain the brother as a witness, and to show whether the brother was evading service of the subpoena. The objection should not have been sustained, but the ruling was not prejudicial. Defendant had already shown that he tried to serve a subpoena on the brother and that the sheriff could not find him. Furthermore, defendant did not indicate that, in view of the testimony of Mrs. Glancy, he desired a continuance in order to make further efforts to serve the subpoena.

The judgment, and the order denying the motion for a new trial, are affirmed.

Rose ARONIN, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Carol SATTINGER, also known as Carol Minky, M. J. Sattinger, also known as Mike Sattinger, Barney Sattinger, Harry Bergman, and Doe I to Doe X, inclusive, Defendants, Barney Sattinger and Harry Bergman, Appellants.

Civ. 21807.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

July 3, 1956.

Action in damages for fraud. The trial court entered judgment against the defendants and they filed separate appeals. Plaintiff moved to dismiss their appeals on the ground no reporter's transcript on appeal had been filed by either defendant. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held, inter alia, that where a clerk's transcript consisting of the judgment roll was on file, defendant was entitled to a consideration of his appeal based thereon even though no reporter's transcript had been filed and proceedings for the preparation thereof had been terminated.

Motion to dismiss appeal as to one defendant denied, motion to dismiss appeal as to other defendant granted.

1. Appeal and Error ⚷805

An appeal is deemed to have been abandoned when after notice of motion to dismiss an appellant fails to appear or oppose the motion. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 41(c).

2. Appeal and Error ⚷544(3)

Where a clerk's transcript consisting of the judgment roll was on file, defendant was entitled to a consideration of his appeal based thereon even though no reporter's transcript had been filed, and proceedings for the preparation thereof had been terminated.

Jack M. Sattinger, Los Angeles, for appellant Sattinger.

Jacob Paull, Los Angeles, for respondent.

FOURT, Justice.

The respondent herein made a motion to dismiss the appeals of Barney Sattinger and Harry Bergman upon the ground that no reporter's transcript on appeal has been filed by either of them as required by rule 4 of the Rules on Appeal.

The clerk's transcript, among other things, shows that an action in damages for fraud was commenced October 27, 1954; that the relief prayed for was a judgment against the defendants for the sum of $4,000, by way of special and general damages, and the further sum of $2,500 for exemplary damages and for costs of suit. On December 20, 1955, the motion of M. J. Sattinger for a nonsuit was apparently granted. There was a judgment entered November 14, 1955, that the plaintiff recover from defendants Harry Bergman and Barney Sattinger the sum of $4,500 together with costs in the sum of $70.90.

Harry Bergman filed a notice of intention to move for a new trial on November 21, 1955. Barney Sattinger filed a similar notice on November 23, 1955. Each of the motions was denied on December 20, 1955. Notice of entry of the order denying motions for new trial was served by mail December 21, 1955, on the respective attorneys for the defendants.

Notice of appeal to the District Court of Appeal on behalf of Harry Bergman was filed January 17, 1956. Notice to prepare reporter's transcript and clerk's transcript on appeal, including the judgment roll and all exhibits was filed January 25, 1956. Pursuant to rule 4(a) of the Rules on Appeal, a copy of the said notice was mailed February 20, 1956, to the court reporters.

Notice of appeal was filed on behalf of the defendant Barney Sattinger on January 18, 1956. Notice to the clerk to prepare clerk's transcript, including the judgment roll and all exhibits, and reporter's transcript was filed January 25, 1956. A copy of such notice was mailed to the court reporters on February 20, 1956.

Pursuant to rule 4(a) of the Rules on Appeal, a notice by the clerk of the court designating the estimated cost of reporter's transcript to be $650 was mailed February 23, 1956, to the attorneys representing Harry Bergman, namely Walley and Davis and Leo M. Zinner of Los Angeles, and to the attorney representing Barney Sattinger, namely, Jack M. Sattinger of Los Angeles. No arrangements with the clerk for the payment of such amount was made and there was no waiver of deposit filed by the reporter.

Pursuant to rule 5 of the Rules on Appeal, a notice by the clerk of the court designating the estimated cost ($18.35, being one-half of the fee as per rule 11) for the preparation of a consolidated clerk's transcript on appeal was filed January 17, 1956, and January 18, 1956, respectively, and was mailed February 23, 1956, to the attorney representing Barney Sattinger. On March 5, 1956, the attorney for Barney Sattinger made a deposit of $37, being the total cost for the preparation of the clerk's transcript on appeal filed January 18, 1956, on behalf of the defendant Barney Sattinger.

Pursuant to the provisions of rule 5 of the Rules on Appeal, a notice by the clerk of the court designating the estimated cost ($18.35, being one-half the fee per rule 11), for the preparation of a consolidated clerk's transcript on appeal was filed January 17, 1956, and January 18, 1956, respectively, and mailed February 23, 1956, to the attorneys representing Harry Bergman. No arrangement has been made with the clerk for the payment of the clerk's transcript on appeal filed January 17, 1956, on behalf of defendant Harry Bergman.

A clerk's transcript for notice of appeal filed January 18, 1956, on behalf of appellant Barney Sattinger, was filed April 23, 1956.

No clerk's transcript for notice of appeal filed January 17, 1956, on behalf of appellant Harry Bergman has been filed.

A copy of the notice of motion to dismiss the appeal was directed to the respective appellants and their respective attorneys.

[1] No appearance whatsoever was made on behalf of appellant Harry Bergman. Under rule 41(c) of Rules on Appeal, 36 Cal.2d 33, an appeal is deemed to have been abandoned when, after notice of motion to dismiss, the appellant fails to appear or oppose the motion. Pastore v. Floyd, 88 Cal.App.2d 732, 733, 199 P.2d 317. The motion to dismiss the appeal as to Harry Bergman should, therefore, be granted.

Counsel for appellant Barney Sattinger appeared and filed his affidavit wherein he set forth, among other things, that Barney Sattinger now intends to proceed with an appeal on the judgment roll, and further setting forth that he has complied fully with rule 5 of the Rules on Appeal.

[2] We are of the opinion that the motion to dismiss the appeal as to Barney Sattinger should be denied. When a clerk's transcript consisting of the judgment roll is on file, the appellant is entitled to a consideration of the appeal based thereon, even though no reporter's transcript has been filed, and the proceedings for the preparation thereof have been terminated. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. Scott, 10 Cal.2d 581, 584, 75 P.2d 1054.

The motion to dismiss the appeal as to Barney Sattinger is denied.

The motion to dismiss the appeal as to Harry Bergman is granted and the appeal is dismissed.

Dolph MARTIN, Appellant,
v.
Otis O. CULLUM et al., Respondents.
Civ. No. 36.

Appellate Department, Superior Court,
Kern County, California.
June 27, 1956.

Action for overtime wages allegedly due under Fair Labor Standards Act. The Municipal Court rendered judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The Superior Court, Appellate Department, Bradshaw, J., held that employee who was engaged on employer's business of sharpening bits for oil drilling, where the oil was to be shipped interstate, was not within coverage of the Act.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Courts ⚷97(5)

In interpreting a federal statute, state court is bound by decisions of federal courts, and particularly by decisions of the United States Supreme Court.

2. Labor Relations ⚷1156

Employee who was engaged in employer's business of sharpening bits for oil drilling, where the oil was to be shipped interstate, was not within coverage of the Fair Labor Standards Act. Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, § 1 et seq., 29 U.S.C.A. § 201 et seq.

Paul E. Griffiths, Bakersfield, for appellant.

Mack, Bianco, King & Eyherabide, Bakersfield, for respondents.

BRADSHAW, Judge.

The complaint seeks to state a cause of action for overtime wages due the plaintiff against his former employer under the provisions of the so-called Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, 29 U.S.C.A. § 201 et seq. Paragraph IV of this complaint alleges as follows: "That prior to February 13, 1954, Defendant, Otis O. Cullum Welding Service, and on said date and continuously thereafter, was engaged in business in the County of Kern, State of California, and while so engaged and in the course thereof provided for and furnished to various petroleum companies and others, welding services, including the service of plaintiff, for the purpose of and in the actual performance of 'hard facing tool joints on drill pipe, both in company yards and on operating drilling rigs' by operating an inert-gas automatic welding machine; that said pipe was used and employed in the drilling and actual production of oil and gas, said products to be used and shipped between the State of California and other various states, possessions and territories, and between the State of California and various foreign countries; that defendant was engaged in commerce in providing the service of said welding machine and operators to and for said petroleum producing companies and others, as aforesaid."

The appellant in his opening brief calls to our attention and relies on the case of Roland Electrical Co. v. Walling, 326 U.S. 657, 66 S.Ct. 413, 415, 90 L.Ed. 383. An excerpt from the foregoing cited case reads as follows: "Most of the relevant facts were stipulated. Petitioner is a Maryland corporation 'having its principal office, place of business and a manufacturing plant' in Baltimore. It is there engaged in 'commercial and industrial wiring, electrical contracting, and dealing in electrical motors and generators, for private, commercial, and industrial uses.'"

And continuing, "Petitioner had 'approximately 1,000 active accounts * * * 99 per cent of which are commercial or industrial firms.' Its 'larger and most active accounts' were 33 in number. Of such 33 customers, one was a telephone company 'engaged in interstate commerce'; four were 'engaged in the repair of ships, tugs, barges, and other boats which were intended for movement in interstate commerce'; and 'the remaining companies on said list, with the exclusion of the American Ice Company

And continuing, "During the period stipulated, 'every mechanic of the defendant worked, in practically every workweek, for some of the said (33) customers, either in the repair of their motors, generators, the reconstruction of used motors sold to them, or in performing electrical work at their respective establishments.' To carry on its entire business, the petitioner had 36 employees, consisting of a foreman, 4 trouble shooters, 14 mechanics, 11 helpers and 6 office employees."

One of the principal questions involved in that case was whether the employees of that company were exempt from the Act on the ground that petitioner is a service establishment within the meaning of the Act. Because the motors and other products were used in interstate commerce the court held that the employees in that case were not exempt from the Fair Labor Standards Act. Without referring to any of the cases which were cited by appellant here, the court simply decided that in the case cited by respondent the Act should be applicable. The respondent in the case at bar has given a diagram of a number of cases indicating some of the distinctions which the court has drawn in determining when an employee comes within the Act, and it must be admitted that some of the distinctions seem rather strained.

[1, 2] The one that seems most nearly to come within the facts of the present case is that of Mennicucci v. F. & P. Brakelyne Service, D.C., 58 F.Supp. 720. It was in that case held that a mechanic employed by a sales and service station to repair brake drums on trucks and trailers engaged in interstate commerce was not within the Act. This court cannot indulge the luxury of its own ideas where a Federal Statute is concerned, but is bound by the decisions of the Federal Courts, and particularly, by the decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court. But it seems analogous to hold that the sharpening of bits for oil drilling, where the oil is to be shipped interstate, and the repair of brake drums on vehicles to be used in interstate commerce are in the same category, and the same logic should be applied.

The judgment of the lower court is therefore affirmed.

PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Richard John DICKMAN, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. A. 3485.

July 9, 1956.

Defendant was prosecuted for battery and disturbing the peace. From an order denying a motion for new trial judgment and order granting probation of the Municipal Court of Los Angeles Judicial District, Ida May Adams, J., the defendant appealed. The Superior Court, Appellate Department, Swain, J., held that trial rulings were erroneous and that defendant was deprived of a fair trial.

Judgment and orders appealed from reversed.

1. Witnesses ⚷372(2)

In prosecution for battery allegedly committed by defendant on police officers who attempted to take a camera defendant was carrying where on cross-examination defendant sought to prove that the officers were biased because of the picture defendant took at the scene of his arrest limiting defendant's cross-examination to those matters into which the prosecutor had inquired was error.

2. Criminal Law ⚷656(2)

In prosecution for battery allegedly committed on officers during the arrest of defendant, action of the trial court in asking prejudicial questions indicating that the judge did not believe the defendant's testimony was error where no instructions were given to jury that it could disagree with the trial judge in the comment on the evidence.

3. Assault and Battery ⚷86

In prosecution for battery allegedly committed on police officers during the arrest of defendant who testified that an officer had choked him and then sought to prove facts showing self defense, sustaining objection to question whether the defendant was in fear of bodily harm was error.

4. Criminal Law ⚷655(5), 656(1)

In prosecution for battery allegedly committed on officers making an arrest of defendant, comments of the trial court respecting testimony of defendant and the court's attitude towards defense counsel deprived defendant of a fair trial.

Mepham, Romero & Mepham, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Roger Arnebergh, City Atty., Donald M. Redwine, Asst. City Atty., Philip E. Grey, Deputy City Atty., Los Angeles, for respondent.

SWAIN, Judge.

The defendant was convicted of battery and of disturbing the peace. He appeals from (1) the order denying his motion for a new trial, (2) the judgment, and (3) the order granting probation.

The defendant and two companions were arrested because their appearance corresponded in some particulars to the description of three men who had robbed a market. No claim is now made that the defendant or his companions had committed the robbery. The arresting officers drove the defendant and the two other suspects to the garage of the Los Angeles Police Building. There the police officers demanded that the defendant give them a camera he was carrying. A struggle ensued in which, the police officers testified, the defendant hit officer Nash with the camera. The defendant testified that Nash hit him with it. The charges of which the defendant was convicted were based on the events at the garage. The defendant claimed that the arresting officers wanted the camera without waiting to get to the booking office because he had, at the scene of the arrest, taken a picture of officer Nash holding the arms of Peterson (one of defendant's companions) behind his back.

Without attempting to mention all the errors made by the trial court, we comment on these four.

[1] 1. The court erred in limiting defendant's cross-examination of the police officers. In cross-examination the defendant sought to prove that they were biased and prejudiced against him because of the picture he took at the scene of the arrest. This occurred when officer Massender was on the stand: Mr. Romero (defendant's counsel): "Your Honor, may we go into the matter as to the motive, bias, prejudice of the witness for making this arrest?" The court: "Absolutely you cannot ask this officer any question except about those matters into which the City Attorney has inquired." The City Attorney had not inquired whether the witness was biased or prejudiced nor whether he believed that the camera contained a damning picture. Later this was repeated: Romero: "That is what I am trying to elicit for the purpose of showing bias." The court: "I am sorry, counsel, but you cannot elicit that because it was not gone into by the People."

[2] 2. The court erred in asking prejudicial questions. After the defendant had repeatedly denied that he hit officer Nash, the court asked: "Was that before you hit him?" This plainly indicated to the jury that the judge did not believe the defendant's testimony, People v. Mahoney, 1927, 201 Cal. 618, 627, 258 P. 607, and no instruction was given the jury that it was free to disagree with the trial judge in this comment on the evidence.

[3] 3. The court improperly sustained objections to questions by defense counsel. The defendant testified that officer Nash had choked him, he then sought to prove facts showing self defense. This occurred: Romero: "Were you in fear of bodily harm?" The court sustained an objection that this was immaterial.

[4] 4. The court erred in making prejudicial comments. After the defendant testified that he took a picture of officer Nash at the time of the arrest, this occurred. The court: "Do you know whether there was any picture on that film or not?" The defendant: "No." The court: "You don't know then whether there is a picture on it or not; is that correct? You snapped the camera, but you don't know whether there was any picture on the film or not; is that correct?" The witness: "No." The court: "You don't know, or do you know?" The witness: "I don't know." The court: "You don't know?" The witness: "No." The court: "Much to do about nothing. He doesn't know whether there is even a picture on it."

The court's attitude to defense counsel and the effect thereof in connection with the above rulings appear from the following. The court: "Now, counsel, I am assuming you know how to make an offer of proof." Mr. Romero: "I thought there were many things I knew when I came into this court. I have been overruled on so many points that I feel I don't know anything."

From the foregoing it is obvious that the defendant did not have a fair trial. In People v. Mahoney, supra, the court said, 201 Cal. at page 627, 258 P. at page 610: "When, as in this case, the trial court persists in making discourteous and disparaging remarks to a defendant's counsel and witnesses, and utters frequent comment from which the jury may plainly perceive that the testimony of the witnesses is not believed by the judge, and in other ways discredits the cause of the defense, it has transcended so far beyond the pale of judicial fairness as to render a new trial necessary."

The judgment and the orders appealed from are reversed.

Matter of the Application of Leo R. FRIEDMAN for a Writ of Habeas Corpus for and on Behalf of James J. Brumback, for Bail on Appeal.

Ex parte BRUMBACK.

Cr. 5924.

Supreme Court of California.
June 29, 1956.

Original application on behalf of one convicted of felonies for habeas corpus for admission to bail upon appeal from convictions. The Supreme Court, Ashburn, J., pro tem., held that where trial court denied application for bail on erroneous ground that it could not grant such in absence of extraordinary circumstances intervening since receipt of verdicts and entry of judgments, and defendant applied to District Court of Appeal, where his appeal was pending, for writ of habeas corpus for bail but such court denied application by order granting defendant leave to again apply for bail to Superior Court, with bail to be granted or denied in its discretion, defendant's belief that trial judge would not conform to such order was insufficient reason for foregoing suggested remedy and applying directly to Supreme Court for habeas corpus for bail, and application would be denied with leave to renew application to judge or court below.

1. Bail ⇨49

Where convicted defendant obtained certificate of probable cause and stay of execution pending appeal, trial court's action, denying application for bail on appeal, indicating that it would grant application but that it was not permitted to do so because no extraordinary circumstances had arisen since judgment and verdict was equivalent to refusal to exercise jurisdiction, in view of fact that judge was mistaken in believing that there was requirement of extraordinary circumstances before application could be granted by trial court. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 1243, 1244, 1272.

2. Courts ⇨28

Mandamus ⇨31

A failure to exercise judicial discretion or jurisdiction does not divest jurisdiction, and its exercise can be compelled by appropriate proceeding such as mandamus.

3. Bail ⇨42

Rule that bail cannot be granted except where there have been extraordinary circumstances since verdict and judgments applies only to the exercise of discretion by an appellate tribunal and not by the trial court. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1272.

4. Bail ⇨47

Primary discretion in granting bail is in trial judge, and it is a sound legal discretion to be exercised in light of all attending circumstances. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1272.

5. Bail ⇨42

Trial judge in exercising discretion in granting or denying bail should recognize that primary purpose of bail, before or after conviction, is practical assurance that defendant will attend upon court when his presence is required. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1272.

6. Criminal Law ⇨1148

Where trial judge has passed on merits of application for bail, his ruling will not be disturbed unless he manifestly abused his discretion. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1272.

7. Bail ⇨47

Criminal Law ⇨1148

Primary discretion in matter of bail on appeal resides in trial court and manifest abuse of discretion by trial court must appear as basis for exercise of sound discretion by appellate court or justice. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, §§ 4, 4b; West's Ann. Rules on Appeal, rule 32(b); West's Ann. Pen.Code, §§ 1272, 1490.

8. Bail ⇨44

Habeas Corpus ⇨33

Statute authorizing writ of habeas corpus for obtaining bail and rule providing for application to reviewing court for bail or for reduction thereof provide consistent remedies, and the rule does not supersede the statute. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, §§ 4, 4b; West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 32(b); West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 1272, 1490.

9. Bail 🔑47

Rule that bail may be granted where there have been extraordinary intervening circumstances since entry of judgment or receipt of verdicts is designed to enable reviewing court to do justice even though application has come too late for trial judge to do so and is supplementary to power of reviewing court to exercise discretion in granting bail when trial court has abused its discretion. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, §§ 4, 4b; West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 32 (b); West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 1272, 1490.

10. Bail 🔑47

Trial judge may grant bail in his discretion though no intervening circumstances have occurred since receipt of judgment and reviewing court may act to grant it where there has been abuse of discretion regardless of existence of intervening extraordinary circumstances. West's Ann. Const. art. 6, §§ 4, 4b; West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 32(b); West's Ann.Pen. Code, §§ 1272, 1490.

11. Bail 🔑47

Where trial court denied application for bail on appeal on erroneous ground and defendant applied to District Court of Appeal, where his appeal was pending, for writ of habeas corpus for bail but such court denied application by order granting defendant leave to again apply for bail to Superior Court, with bail to be granted or denied in its discretion, defendant's belief that trial judge would not conform to order was insufficient reason for foregoing suggested remedy and applying directly to Supreme Court, and application would be denied with leave to renew application to trial court or judge. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, §§ 4, 4b; West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 32(b); West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 1243, 1244, 1272, 1490.

12. Bail 🔑47

It is settled practice for an appellate court to refuse to act upon bail application before disposition of matter on merits in trial court. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, §§ 4, 4b; West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 32 (b); West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 1272, 1490.

ASHBURN, Justice pro tem.

Application on behalf of James J. Brumback for issuance of writ of habeas corpus for admission to bail upon appeal from conviction of two felonies.

Brumback and others were charged with conspiracy to receive stolen property, Pen. Code, §§ 182, 496, and with buying and receiving stolen property, Pen.Code, § 496. Two trials resulted in jury disagreements, but in the third Brumback was convicted on both counts; he was sentenced to state prison for the terms prescribed by law, same to run concurrently. He appealed and promptly obtained from the trial judge a certificate of probable cause and a stay of execution pending appeal, it being ordered that he be confined in the county jail during that period, Pen.Code, §§ 1243, 1244. Application for bail on appeal was made; it was denied on the day following the issuance of the stay. In making that ruling, the trial judge voiced opinions indicating that he would grant the bail application if authorized to do so but "stated that under prior decisions * * * he had no discretion to allow bail on appeal and had to deny bail pending appeal where no extraordinary circumstances had arisen since the verdicts finding appellant guilty and the pronouncement of judgment and that the only time he had power and discretion to allow bail on appeal was when circumstances of an extraordinary character had intervened between the verdict of the jury and the pronouncement of sentence and judgment."[1]

[1, 2] Appellant's counsel, as petitioner herein, asserts that this was a refusal to exercise a discretion reposed in the trial judge. Pen.Code, § 1272, subd. 3.[2] The argument is sound. The judge merely made an erroneous determination that he had no discretion in the premises. That was the equivalent of the familiar refusal to exercise jurisdiction because of a mistaken view that same does not exist; in such case the error does not divest jurisdiction and its exercise can be compelled by an appropriate proceeding such as mandamus, 13 Cal.Jur.2d § 56, p. 551; 1 Witkin California Procedure, § 163, p. 430. A refusal to exercise an existing judicial discretion falls in the same category, Crocker v. Conrey, 140 Cal. 213, 218, 73 P. 1006; People v. Perdue, 48 Cal. 552, 553.

[3–6] The trial judge erroneously applied to his court, by way of restriction upon its power, a rule that has been promulgated principally as an aid to the exercise of the discretion of an appellate tribunal. It is settled that the primary discretion belongs to the trial judge and that it is a sound legal discretion to be exercised in the light of all attending circumstances. See Ex parte Hoge, 48 Cal. 3, 5; Ex parte Turner, 112 Cal. 627, 629, 45 P. 571; People v. Perdue, supra, 48 Cal. 552; People v. January, 70 Cal. 34, 11 P. 326; In re Torres, 80 Cal.App.2d 579, 580, 182 P.2d 573; People v. Eiseman, 69 Cal.App. 143, 146, 230 P. 669; In re Wilkins, 66 Cal.App. 754, 226 P. 964; People v. Hall, 115 Cal.App.2d 144, 148, 251 P.2d 979. He should recognize that the primary purpose of bail, before or after conviction, is practical assurance that defendant will attend upon the court when his presence is required. Where the trial judge has passed upon the merits of the application his ruling will not be disturbed unless a manifest abuse of discretion appears, Ex parte Turner, supra, 112 Cal. 627, 629, 45 P. 571; People v. Davis, 67 Cal.App.2d 837, 839, 155 P.2d 675; In re Torres, supra, 80 Cal.App.2d 579, 580, 182 P.2d 573; People v. Ephraim, 72 Cal.App. 479, 481, 237 P. 801; People v. Cornell, 28 Cal.App. 654, 657, 153 P. 726; People v. Eiseman, supra, 69 Cal. App. 143, 146, 230 P. 669; In re Gillen, on Behalf of Malotte, 134 Cal.App.2d 58, 285 P.2d 114, or "circumstances of an extraordinary character have intervened since conviction, which make such action obviously proper." Ex parte Turner, supra, 112 Cal. 627, 629, 45 P. 571. This latter test, as announced in Ex parte Marks, 49 Cal. 680, 683 (an application heard by Mr. Chief Justice Wallace), seems to apply to action by the trial judge as well as that of an appellate court. It is there said: "I think that upon the true construction of the statute (in view of the provision which authorizes a stay of proceedings pending an appeal in a criminal case upon certificate of probable cause), bail upon appeal should not be allowed, except by a judge authorized to grant a certificate, and then only in cases where circumstances of an extraordinary character have intervened." But the Chief Justice was discussing the question of granting bail upon an original application made to him in a case wherein there appears to have been no action, affirmative or negative, by the lower court. In a long line of later decisions the test of intervening extraordinary circumstances has been stated but its application has been confined to action by the appellate court.

In the following cases the rule was announced and applied in reviewing the quality of the discretion actually exercised by the lower court: Ex parte Turner, supra, 112 Cal. 627, 629, 45 P. 571; People v. Davis, supra, 67 Cal.App.2d 837, 839, 155 P.2d 675; In re Torres, supra, 80 Cal.App.2d 579, 580, 182 P.2d 573; People v. Ephraim, supra, 72 Cal.App. 479, 237 P. 801; In re Ephraim, 73 Cal.App. 104, 237 P. 801; Ex parte Smith, 89 Cal. 79, 80, 26 P. 638; People v. Cornell, supra, 28 Cal.App. 654, 658, 659, 153 P. 726; People v. Yant, 26 Cal.App.2d 124, 78 P.2d 1042; In re Burnette, 35 Cal.App.2d 358, 95 P.2d 684; In re Pantages, 209 Cal. 535, 291 P. 831; People v. Eiseman, supra, 69 Cal.App. 143, 148, 149, 230 P. 669; Ex parte Hatch, 15 Cal.App. 186, 114 P. 410; In re Wilkins, supra, 66 Cal.App. 754, 756, 226 P. 964; Matter of Preciado, 30 Cal.App. 323, 328–329, 158 P. 1063; In re Ward, 127 Cal. 489, 490, 59 P. 894, 47 L.R.A. 466; People v. Barton, 68 Cal.App.2d 646, 157 P.2d 34. In these cases it likewise was invoked in the absence of action by the trial judge: Ex parte Smallman, 54 Cal. 35, 36; Ex parte Brown, 68 Cal. 176, 183, 8 P. 829; In re Alborï, 95 Cal.App. 42, 58, 272 P. 321; People v. Keyes, 100 Cal.App. 352, 279 P. 833.

[1] The foregoing quotation from the petition fairly summarizes the ruling of the trial judge as shown by the return.

[2] Pen.Code § 1272. "After conviction of an offense not punishable with death, a defendant who has appealed may be admitted to bail:

"1. As a matter of right, when the appeal is from a judgment imposing a fine only.

"2. As a matter or right, when the appeal is from a judgment imposing imprisonment in cases of misdemeanor.

"3. As a matter of discretion in all other cases."

There appears to be no case in which it has been held that this test limits the discretion of the trial judge. Were that rule applied as the trial judge did in this instance it would virtually nullify § 1272, subdivision 3, for it would preclude a successful early application for bail and necessitate defendant's serving part of his term in the penitentiary or sojourning in jail until some new and untoward and unexpected circumstance, like illness or discovery of new and convincing evidence, should eventuate. Absence of intervening extraordinary circumstances cannot prevent the trial judge from acting or excuse his failure to act, although their presence properly may influence his discretion. It follows that the judge in the present instance mistakenly declined to exercise his discretion.

[7–10] It is true that the primary discretion in the matter of bail on appeal resides in the trial court but it is not correct to say that "[i]t always has been the law in this state that the discretion referred to in section 1272 of the Penal Code * * * is not a discretion conferred upon the appellate courts", as stated in People v. Davis, 67 Cal. App.2d 837, 839, 155 P.2d 675, 676; and the cases cited on page 839 of 67 Cal.App.2d, on page 676 of 155 P.2d do not support that proposition. There is no question of power here presented. The Constitution, Art. VI, §§ 4 and 4b, confers upon the Supreme Court and the District Courts of Appeal and each individual justice the right to issue the writ of habeas corpus, and Penal Code, § 1490 [3] makes it a proper avenue for obtaining bail. The requirement of intervening extraordinary circumstances is a self-imposed criterion for the guidance of appellate courts and individual appellate justices in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion. The cardinal rule is that manifest abuse of discretion must appear as a basis for the exercise of a sound discretion by an appellate court or justice; the intervening circumstance test is a supplementary one designed to enable the court of review to do justice even though it has become too late for the trial judge to do so. It operates by way of enlargement of the concept of permissible discretion and not as a restriction upon the power of trial or appellate court. In any event that test is not exclusive. The trial judge may grant bail in his discretion though no intervening circumstance has occurred and the appellate court may act where an abuse of discretion appears regardless of the existence of intervening extraordinary circumstances. But if they have occurred affirmative action by the upper court may be appropriate though no abuse of discretion in the trial court appears. In the present instance no discretion was exercised below and no intervening circumstances now appear. Appellant is entitled to have his application considered on the merits but not in this court at this time.

[3] This section has not been superseded by Rule 32(b) of the Rules on Appeal. The code section and the rule provide parallel and consistent remedies.

[11] The petition discloses that application "for a similar writ" was made to the District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District (the court in which defendant's appeal is pending), "on the same grounds as herein alleged"; that same was denied on May 28, 1956, through a minute order reading: "Petition for Writ of Habeas Corpus denied with leave to petitioner or appellant to again apply for bail before the Superior Court. Bail to be granted or denied in the Superior Court's discretion." Petitioner did not follow the course suggested by the District Court of Appeal. His explanation of failure to make a new application to the Superior Court is "that application had already been made to the Judge thereof who refused to exercise his discretion in the matter upon the ground, as alleged in the petition, that he was without power to grant bail on appeal in the absence of extraordinary circumstances having arisen since the verdicts of guilty that would justify such action. That to apply to the Superior Court for bail would have been a futile and useless act. That pursuant to the rules of said Superior Court a new application for bail would have had to be made before the same Judge who heard the original application." This explanation is not sufficient. The district court plainly ruled that the trial judge does have discretion in the matter and the language of the order, read in the light of the expressed basis for the trial judge's ruling, means that the criterion of intervening extraordinary circumstances does not bind him. If the district court had considered that test to be controlling in the trial court it would have denied the petition and would not have given leave to apply again, nor would it have stated that the superior court was to grant or deny the application in its discretion. Petitioner's belief that the trial judge would not get the point or would not conform to the order is not sufficient reason for his foregoing the suggested remedy and applying directly to this court.

[12] Since 1874, when People v. Perdue, supra, 48 Cal. 552, was decided, it has been settled practice for an appellate court to refuse to act upon a bail application before disposition of the matter upon the merits in the trial court. In that case it was said, at page 553: "The facts and circumstances going to make up the legal discretion in the sound exercise of which the prisoner may be admitted to bail, are necessarily within the knowledge of the Judge who presided at the trial, and, in practice, the power to admit to bail pending the appeal, ought not to be exercised by us in the first instance, or until after the determination of the application below upon its merits.

"The motion made here must, therefore, be denied, with leave to the prisoner to renew the application to the Judge of the Court below." Accord: People v. January, supra, 70 Cal. 34, 35, 11 P. 326; People v. Oreck, 69 Cal.App.2d 317, 318, 158 P.2d 940; In re Torres, supra, 80 Cal.App.2d 579, 582, 182 P.2d 573; In re Gillen on Behalf of Malotte, supra, 134 Cal.App.2d 58, 59, 285 P.2d 114; In re Brahm, 98 Cal.App. 731, 733, 277 P. 895; In re Martin, 51 Cal. App. 706, 707, 197 P. 365. The opinion in People v. Oreck, supra, 69 Cal.App.2d at page 318, 158 P.2d at page 940, aptly says: "The trial judge is in a better position than members of an appellate court to fix the amount. The law and the facts are fresh in the mind of the trial judge. He has an opportunity to observe the conduct of the accused and to consider factors too numerous to mention herein, in addition to the matters that may be considered as set forth in Penal Code section 1275, that play a part in ascertaining an amount that will insure the presence of the accused when required."

The order to show cause is discharged and the petition for habeas corpus is denied without prejudice to renewed application to the superior court for bail on appeal.

COUNTY OF SHASTA, a political subdivision of the State of California, O. M. Turner, Lee S. Foster, Alfred Meeker, Andrew T. Jessen, J. G. Chatham, as the Individual members of the Board of Supervisors of the County of Shasta, William F. Weber, as the Auditor of the County of Shasta, Pacific Gas & Electric Co., a corporation, Defendants and Appellants.

Sac. 6472.

Supreme Court of California.
June 28, 1956.

Action was brought to enjoin county and board of supervisors from maintaining street lighting in county road maintenance district and to have declared illegal a contract between county and electric power company providing for the furnishing of lights in certain unincorporated communities of county. The Superior Court of Shasta County, Albert F. Ross, J., entered judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendants appealed. The Supreme Court, McComb, J., held that a county, through its board of supervisors, can use the special road maintenance district procedure provided for in section of Streets and Highways Code dealing with special road maintenance districts for operating and maintaining a lighting system, which embraces a state highway as well as county highways and streets in unincorporated communities within the county, since the word "road" used in that section includes a state highway.

Carter, J., dissented.

Opinion, 289 P.2d 262, vacated.

1. Highways ⟹90

A county, through its board of supervisors, can use the special road maintenance district procedure provided for in section of Streets and Highways Code dealing with special road maintenance districts for operating and maintaining a lighting system, which embraces a state highway as well as county highways and streets in unincorporated communities within the county, since the word "road" used in that section includes a state highway. West's Ann.Streets and Highways Code, §§ 1550.1, 1550.2, 1550.3.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Road".

2. Statutes ⟹212.6

When the Legislature used the term "roads" in section of the Streets and Highways Code dealing with special road maintenance districts, and used the term "county highways" in sections dealing with special road fund tax and additional special road fund tax, the presumption is that the Legislature used the terms advisedly and intended that each term should be given a different meaning. West's Ann.Streets and Highways Code, §§ 1550.1, 1553, 1554.

3. Highways ⟹95(1)

The maintenance of street lights on state highways does not lie exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Department of Public Works. West's Ann.Streets and Highways Code, § 19000 et seq.

4. Highways ⟹90

Section of the Streets and Highways Code dealing with special road maintenance districts does not necessarily limit the use of district funds to roads that are otherwise eligible for county road moneys. West's Ann.Streets and Highways Code, § 1550.1

Laurence J. Kennedy, Jr., and Randall J. Presleigh, Dist. Attys., Redding, Robert H. Gerdes, William S. Love, San Francisco, and Chenoweth & Leininger, Redding, for appellants.

Daniel S. Carlton, Carlton & Shadwell and Robert A. Haughwout, Redding, for respondent.

McCOMB, Justice.

Plaintiff instituted an action in the superior court seeking (1) to enjoin defendant county and the board of supervisors from maintaining street lighting in Shasta County Road Maintenance District No. 1, and (2) to have declared illegal a contract between defendant county and defendant Pacific Gas and Electric Company providing for the furnishing of lights in certain unincorporated communities of Shasta County.

The superior court found in favor of plaintiff and granted the relief prayed for. From this judgment defendants appeal.

The record discloses the following facts: Three communities are involved, the town of Central Valley, Project City and Pine Grove. Pine Grove is a subdivision adjacent to Highway No. 99, while Project City is at the junction of Highway No. 99 and Highway No. 209, which latter highway extends to Shasta Dam. Central Valley constitutes a town on and adjacent to Highway No. 209 and is between Highway No. 99 and Shasta Dam but a short distance from Project City.

Because of the necessity of lighting these communities along the two state highways and the county highways leading thereto, street lights were installed by the Pacific Gas and Electric Company, hereinafter referred to as the "power company," and were maintained by voluntary contributions for a considerable period before the creation of the maintenance district.

The voluntary financing was unsatisfactory and it was deemed necessary to continue the street and highway lighting of the above-mentioned communities. Therefore, defendant board of supervisors established the Shasta County Road Maintenance District No. 1 under the provisions of section 1550.1 of the Streets and Highways Code.*

After the maintenance district was formed, the board of supervisors on April 2, 1953, entered into a contract with the power company to provide 32 lights in the district, to be paid for by the county of Shasta. The property owners in the district provided the maintenance fund by special taxes.

Approximately 19 of the 32 lamps here involved are located along or upon the two state highways. The remainder are on the streets or connecting county highways near the intersections thereof with the state highways. These 19 lights were installed under written encroachment permit consents of the Division of Highways.

* Section 1550.1 of the Streets and Highways Code reads as follows: "The board of supervisors may form special road maintenance districts in subdivided areas of the county wholly outside of incorporated cities. Formation of said districts may be ordered by the board of supervisors when in their opinion additional road funds are necessary to properly maintain roads in specific areas of the county. Such districts shall be formed by order of the board setting forth the boundaries thereof, and in no case shall a special road maintenance district be formed where the boundaries of said district cause it to include lands within more than one county road district as formed under Section 1020 of this Streets and Highways Code. Such district shall be in existence until the board shall by its order discontinue such district. If such a district is to be formed, the board of supervisors shall set a date for a hearing on said formation. Such hearing shall not be held in less than three weeks after the date of the order for the hearing, and prior to the date of the hearing, a notice of said hearing shall be published twice in a newspaper of general circulation in the area, and, in addition, at least three notices shall be posted in public places within the proposed district. At the hearing, protests may be heard on the proposed formation of such district. It shall be within the power of the board of supervisors to determine from the results of the hearing the necessity for said special road maintenance district, and, if it be deemed necessary, the district may be formed as hereinbefore provided."

The questions presented for determination are:

First: Can a county, through its board of supervisors, use the special road maintenance district procedure provided in section 1550.1 of the Streets and Highways Code for operating and maintaining a lighting system which embraces a state highway as well as county highways and streets in unincorporated communities within the county?

[1] This question must be answered in the affirmative. The board of supervisors of a county may form a special road maintenance district in subdivided areas of the county wholly outside of incorporated cities. (Sts. & Hy.Code, §§ 1550.1, 1550.2, 1550.3.) The lighting of streets is included within the word "maintenance" as used in section 1550.1 of the Streets and Highways Code. Section 27 of the code reads in part as follows: "As used in the general provisions and in Divisions 1 and 2 of this code, 'maintenance' includes: * * (e) Such illumination of streets, roads, highways and bridges which in the judgment of the body authorized to expend such funds is required for the safety of persons using the said streets, roads, highways and bridges."

Plaintiff urges, however, that the word "road" used in section 1550.1 of the Streets and Highways Code does not include a "state highway." This contention is contrary to the definition of the word as found in numerous authorities. The word "road" is a generic term which includes highways, streets, public ways and thoroughfares.

Webster's New International Dictionary (2d ed. 1937), p. 2155, defines the word "road" as: "A place where one may ride; an open way or public passage for vehicles, persons, and animals; * * * Road is generally applied to a highway outside of an urban district, as distinct from a street, which is a highway in an urban district."

Black's Law Dictionary (4th ed. 1951), p. 1491, reads: "Road. A highway."

39 C.J.S. (1944), Highways, § 1, p. 915, reads: "The term [highway] has been held synonymous with 'public road' and 'street.'"

In B. & H. Transportation Co. v. Johnson, 122 Cal.App. 451, at page 453, 10 P.2d 506, at page 507 the court said: "Roads and highways are generic terms embracing all kinds of public ways, such as county and township roads, streets, etc."

In San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Rys. v. County of Alameda, 66 Cal.App. 77, at page 81, 225 P. 304, at page 305 (hearing denied by the Supreme Court), the court said: "A public way over unincorporated territory of a county is generally referred to as a highway or road."

In People v. Odom, 19 Cal.App.2d 641, at page 650 [8], 66 P.2d 206, at page 211, the court, quoting with approval from the Vehicle Code, § 81, said: "'"Street" or "highway" is a way or place of whatever nature open to the use of the public as a matter of right for purposes of vehicular travel.'"

To the same effect are: Johnston v. Wortham Machinery Co., 60 Wyo. 301, 151 P.2d 89, at page 91 [2]; Stedman v. Inhabitants of Southbridge, 34 Mass. 162, at page 165; Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Headley Good Roads Co., D.C., 283 F. 236, at page 237 [1]; Herbert v. City of Richland Center, 264 Wis. 8, 58 N.W.2d 461, at page 462 [1, 2]; Inhabitants of Windham v. Cumberland County Commissioners, 26 Me. 406, 409; Strange v. Board of Commissioners of Grant County, 173 Ind. 640, 91 N.E. 242, at page 247; Shannon v. Martin, 164 Ga. 872, 139 S.E. 671, at page 672, 54 A.L.R. 1246; Washington County, Neb. v. Williams, 8 Cir., 111 F. 801, at page 808; People ex rel. Putnam v. Commissioners of Buffalo County, 4 Neb. 150, at page 158.

[2] In view of the foregoing, the conclusion is inescapable that the word "road" as used in section 1550.1 of the Streets and Highways Code should be given its ordinary meaning to include all highways, county or state. It is presumed that the Legislature knew the meaning of the language used in the statute and used it advisedly. Anderson

v. I. M. Jameson Corp., 7 Cal.2d 60, at page 67, 59 P.2d 962. Therefore, when the Legislature used the term "roads" in section 1550.1 and used the term "county highways" in sections 1553 and 1554, which sections are contained in chapter 7, division 2, of the Streets and Highways Code, the presumption is that the Legislature used these terms advisedly and intended that each term should be given a different meaning. The presumption is not, as plaintiff contends, that when the Legislature used the term "roads" it meant county roads only. If the Legislature had intended to limit the application of section 1550.1 to "county roads" it would have so stated and not used the word "road," which includes every character of highway, including a state highway.

Second: Does the maintenance of street lights on state highways lie exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Department of Public Works?

[3] This question must be answered in the negative. Plaintiff apparently has abandoned this contention, which appears in his complaint, for in his reply memo submitted to the trial court he concedes that a highway lighting district formed by the board of supervisors under part 4, division 14, of the Streets and Highways Code may maintain street lights on a state highway. On page 1, lines 24–30, he says: "We wish to call to the Court's attention the fact that the Board of Supervisors could unquestionably and beyond dispute have contracted with defendant Pacific Gas & Electric Co. for lighting State Highways 209 and 99 within the Central Valley and Project City areas, if they so wished, by specifically creating a highway lighting district in accordance with the provisions of the Highway Lighting District Act."

Having conceded that a maintenance district may maintain street lighting and that certain local taxing districts may maintain street lighting on state highways, plaintiff is left with the argument that the wrong local taxing district has been employed—that this particular taxing district may maintain street lights on county highways but not on state highways. This argument is predicated upon reading something into the statute that is not expressed and that was not intended, that is, construing the term "roads" as though it read "county highways."

[4] It does not appear that the language of section 1550.1 of the Streets and Highways Code necessarily limits the use of district funds to roads that are otherwise eligible for county road moneys.

The use of the word "additional" is not a limitation upon the use of the fund but rather a general description of it. Had the Legislature meant the funds to be purely supplemental it would have more specifically set forth the limitation.

Section 19002 of the Streets and Highways Code expressly provides that the Highway Lighting District Act is merely an alternative procedure for providing street lights. Therefore, it is evident that the board of supervisors had their choice of proceeding under either section 19002 or section 1550.1 of the Streets and Highways Code.

Gillespie v. City of Los Angeles, 36 Cal.2d 553, 225 P.2d 522, is not in conflict with the foregoing conclusion. In that case the court merely held that the city had no duty to maintain traffic signs and signals upon a state highway because the State Department of Public Works has full possession and control of state highways. There is nothing in such decision which conflicts with the contention that a special road maintenance district has power to maintain street lights upon a state highway. Such a district has no duty to maintain signs, signals or street lights for the benefit of motorists, but it does not follow from this that such a district does not have the power to maintain street lights for local benefit if it first obtains a permit from the Department of Public Works, as was done in the present case.

The judgment is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, TRAYNOR, SCHAUER and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

CARTER, Justice.

I dissent.

The majority here has, without any discussion of the comprehensive statutory scheme set up by the Legislature in the Streets and Highways Code, decided that this case must be reversed. There is, in the majority opinion, no discussion of the numerous detailed provisions set forth in the Streets and Highways Code each of which has a specific bearing on what the Legislature intended for each type of public way. The majority has, instead, relied on various dictionary definitions of the word "road," on several California cases which are not in point, and on numerous out-of-state cases without any discussion of the statutory provisions there involved. If California had no Streets and Highways Code and if it were up to this court to decide whether or not the word "road" should be construed to include "state highway," then, and then only, would the majority opinion have any merit. However California has a Streets and Highways Code which sets forth in minute detail every conceivable factor having any bearing on any type of public way.

Inasmuch as the majority opinion leaves much to be desired in setting forth the legislative scheme for the acquisition, control, and maintenance of public ways, I consider it my duty to present, at some length, the reason why the majority is in error in its conclusion that the word "road" includes "'a state highway.'"

The factual situation set forth in the majority opinion is correct. The Board of Supervisors of Shasta County, acting pursuant to section 1550.1 of the Streets and Highways Code, formed a maintenance district to light certain parts of two state highways. After the formation of the maintenance district, the board of supervisors entered into a contract with the Pacific Gas and Electric Company to furnish lights on these highways which were located in certain unincorporated areas of Shasta County. Plaintiff objected on the ground that the county improperly proceeded under section 1550.1 of the Streets and Highways Code and that the contract entered into pursuant thereto was illegal and void and should be set aside. With these contentions of the plaintiff, I agree for the following reasons:

Section 1550.1 of the Streets and Highways Code provides that "The board of supervisors may form special road maintenance districts in subdivided areas of the county wholly outside of incorporated cities. Formation of said districts may be ordered by the board of supervisors when in their opinion additional road funds are necessary to properly maintain roads in specific areas of the county." (Emphasis added.)

The question here presented is one of first impression and may be stated quite simply: Whether the word "roads" in the above quoted section includes state highways.

Plaintiff contends that state highways are not included within the word "roads" and that section 19030 of the Streets and Highways Code provides the only method by which such state highways may be lighted other than where the state itself undertakes the maintenance of such lighting facilities. Section 19030 provides that "Any unincorporated town or village of this State may establish a highway lighting district for the purpose of installing and maintaining a street lighting system on public highways, for the better protection of its residents in accordance with the provisions of this part." It is conceded by defendants that this section and those following it are the only ones specifically providing for the lighting of state highways within unincorporated areas, but defendants argue that the word "roads" includes, by implication, state highways, and that section 27(e) defines "maintenance" as including the illumination of such "streets, roads, highways and bridges which in the judgment of the body authorized to expend such funds is required for the safety of persons using the said streets, roads, highways and bridges." (Emphasis added.) Plaintiff maintains that the italicized portion of the section just set forth proves his point: That section 24 defines "State highway" as meaning any highway acquired, laid out, constructed, improved or maintained as a state highway pursuant to constitutional or legislative authorization; that section 90 provides that the State Department of Public Works "shall have full possession and control of all state highways * * *"; that section 91 provides that the Department of Public Works "shall improve and maintain the state highways * * *"; and that this court said in Gillespie v. City of Los Angeles, 36 Cal.2d 553, 559, 225 P.2d 522, 526, that "The state department of public works has 'full possession and control' of all state highways"; that, as a result, the procedure specifically outlined by sections 19000 through 19312, Division 14, Part 4, Chapters 1 through 17, provides the only way in which unincorporated areas may light state highways. These sections, relied upon by plaintiff, require a petition, an election, and a resolution by the board of supervisors before a street lighting district may be formed as distinguished from the procedure set forth in section 1550.1 which was followed by defendants.

Plaintiff's argument is, in brief, that only the State Department of Public Works as "the authorities charged with the maintenance thereof" (concluding paragraph of section 27) has the authority to maintain state highways unless the Streets and Highways Code otherwise provides and that, in this instance, there is an express alternative method provided for in section 19000 et seq. These sections, as heretofore noted, provide for a petition, an election, and a resolution by the board of supervisors before a street lighting district may be formed. Plaintiff correctly contends that when a statute sets forth a certain procedure to be followed, that procedure is exclusive and mandatory. Gleason v. Spray, 81 Cal. 217, 22 P. 551; Blalock v. Ridgway, 92 Cal.App. 132, 267 P. 713; Miller v. McKinnon, 20 Cal.2d 83, 124 P.2d 34, 140 A.L.R. 570; County of San Diego v. California Water, etc., Co., 30 Cal.2d 817, 823, 826, 186 P.2d 124, 175 A.L.R. 747.

It is obvious that the Streets and Highways Code contains a comprehensive plan for the construction, maintenance, operation and control of public roads and ways. This code was first enacted in 1935, Stats. 1935, ch. 29. It was declared to be an act to establish a streets and highways code, thereby consolidating and revising the law relating to public ways and all the appurtenances thereto. The first twenty-nine sections contain general provisions, definitions and other topics. The code next contains Division 1 which relates to state highways; Division 2 relates to county highways; Division 2.5 relates to city streets. Each division carefully sets forth provisions governing the construction, maintenance, control and possession of the different types of public ways and gives to the several public agencies jurisdiction over the different classifications.

Under "General Provisions," "Highway" is defined in section 23; "Freeway" is defined in section 23.5; "State Highway" is defined in section 24; "County Highway" is defined in section 25. The word "shall" is expressly made mandatory and the word "may" is expressly made permissive. Section 90 provides that the "department [of public works] shall have full possession and control of all state highways and all property and rights in property acquired for state highway purposes. * * *" Section 91 provides that "The department shall improve and maintain the state highways, including all traversable highways which have been adopted or designated as state highways by the commission, as provided in this code." Section 27(e) provides that "maintenance" includes "Such illumination of streets, roads, highways and bridges which in the judgment of the body authorized to expend such funds is required for the safety of persons using the said streets, roads, highways and bridges."

Almost all of Division 1 is devoted to state highways. Each state highway is given a route number and each route is specifically described in a separate section. For illustration, section 309 provides "Route 9. Route 9 is from: (a) Route 2 near Montalvo to Route 4 near San Fernando. (b) San Fernando to San Bernardino." One entire article of Division 1 sets forth the procedure to be followed for county aid for state highways; another article deals with cooperative construction by the counties with the state of state highways. Still another article deals with cooperation between the state and federal authorities. Even the most cursory examination of the Streets and Highways Code leads to the conclusion that the legislative intent was to provide for every contingency which might occur and that, in the process of so doing, the Legislature was extremely explicit.

Division 9 of the Streets and Highways Code deals with "Change of Grade" and "Grade Districts" and "Vacation of City Streets." In this division, section 8116 is of interest in that it enumerates the types of public way which may be dealt with by the board of a county as county roads or highways, or state highways, or city streets. If the word "road" included all of these, why should the Legislature have wasted time and effort in enumerating them? Section 8145 also itemizes the different types of public ways as "city streets, county roads or highways, state highways." It seems very apparent that the Legislature considered a road as something entirely different from a county highway or a state highway or a city street and that it went to great lengths to be specific in each division of the Streets and Highways Code. Division 10 deals with the Improvement Bond Act of 1915 and in section 8570 we find the same specific enumeration of the different types of public ways. A further illustration of the exactitude with which the Legislature set forth its over-all plan for all public ways is found in Division 1 which is entitled "Department of Public Works". Section 145 provides that "The State Highway Engineer is authorized to lay out and construct local service roads on and along any state highway * * *." This illustration is but one of many which could be given to prove that when the Legislature meant "road" it said "road" and when it meant "highway" it said so without equivocation and without leaving what it meant to speculation. Under Division 3, Chapter 3, entitled "Highway Users Tax Fund" we find that the moneys payable to the counties must be apportioned in certain definite ways. For example, section 2114 provides that "there shall be paid to each county eligible thereto an amount computed monthly as follows: The number of miles of maintained county road in each county shall be multiplied by twenty-five dollars ($25) * * *."

Part 1 of Division 16 is entitled "Joint Highway Districts." Not one single section uses the word "road" or "roads." The only words used are "highways" and "public highways." Part 2 of Division 16 is entitled "Boulevard Districts." Section 26114 reads as follows: "For the purposes of this part the district may take over, control, operate, and use in whole or in part any county road or public highway and may construct any boulevard in whole or in part, over, along, or upon all or any part of any county road or public highway. * * *" If the Legislature had intended the word "road" to include "State highway," why should it have entitled the above section "Use of county road or public highway"?

Part 3 of Division 16 is entitled "Bridge and Highway Districts" and again, the word "road" is not used in any of the sections in the division. Division 17 is entitled "Toll Bridges, Toll Ferries and Toll Roads." Chapter 2 of this division deals with toll highways; chapter 3 deals specifically with toll roads.

Division 14, Part 1, is entitled "Street Lighting Act of 1919" and refers to the lighting of streets within a city; Part 2 is the "Street Lighting Act of 1931" and also deals with the lighting of streets within a city; Part 3 is the "Municipal Lighting Maintenance District Act of 1927" and deals with the lighting of streets within cities and municipalities. Part 4 is the "Highway Lighting District Act" and refers to the lighting of, § 19008, "any highway, county highway, state highway, public street, avenue, alley, park, parkway, driveway, or public place, in any county, or unincorporated town or village." Again, the Legislature has been specific and has enumerated the various types of public ways which might need lighting, and set forth in succeeding sections the precise method by which it might be accomplished.

Division 14 is entitled "The Highway Lighting District Act" and specifically notes that it provides for an "alternative" method for making the improvements authorized "by this part", § 19002. This division sets forth the procedure whereby unincorporated areas may light state highways, §§ 19008 and 19030, when the state, as the body authorized to make such improvements, §§ 90 and 91, has not seen fit to do so. Section 19008 defines "Public highway" as including any highway, county highway, or "State highway," thereby leaving nothing to implication. The balance of the sections in the division contains an exact and comprehensive plan for accomplishing what the division permits—the formation of a highway lighting district by unincorporated areas to light state highways. It is elementary that when the Legislature has spoken so clearly this court should not, by implication, read "state highways" into the word "roads" in order to approve the action taken here by the Board of Supervisors of Shasta County in acting pursuant to section 1550.1 of the Streets and Highways Code which does not mention state highways.

It is, I believe, noteworthy that as authority for the "inescapable" conclusion that the word "road" includes a "state highway," the majority cites Webster's New International Dictionary, Black's Law Dictionary, C.J.S., Johnston v. Wortham Machinery Co., a Wyoming case which quoted from a Georgia case, Stedman v. Inhabitants of Southbridge, a Massachusetts case, as well as a case from Maine, and Indiana, and one from Nebraska, and from Wisconsin. We are not informed whether these various states have a comprehensive statutory scheme specifically defining the various types of public ways such as we have here in California.

The majority quotes from B. & H. Transportation Co. v. Johnson, 122 Cal.App. 451, 453, 10 P.2d 506, 507, that "Roads and highways are generic terms embracing all kinds of public ways, such as county and township roads, streets, etc." This case involved a construction of section 15 of article XIII of the state Constitution which provided for taxation of public person or property transportation for compensation "over any public highway in this state between fixed termini or over a regular route * *." The court relying upon section 2618 of the Political Code defined public highways as follows: " 'In all counties of this state public highways are roads, streets, alleys, lanes, courts, places, trails, and bridges * * * ' " came to the conclusion just set forth. It is very interesting to note that section 2618 of the Political Code is now section 25 of the Streets and Highways Code which reads as follows: "County highway. As used in this code, 'county highway' means any highway which is: (a) Laid out or constructed as such by the county. (b) Laid out or constructed by others and dedicated or abandoned to or acquired by the county. (c) Made a county highway in any action for the partition of real property. (d) Made a county highway pursuant to law." It is very obvious, therefore, that this case has no bearing whatsoever upon a present construction of the Streets and Highways Code. Also cited as authority for the proposition that "road" includes "highway" is San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Rys. v. County of Alameda, 66 Cal.App. 77, 81, 225 P. 304. This case involved a construction of language used in certain franchises granted to a railroad corporation covering unincorporated territory in Alameda County which was annexed to and became a part of the city of Oakland. The language quoted in the majority opinion that "'A public way over unincorporated territory of a county is generally referred to as a highway or road'" was taken from the following paragraph: "The case is presented on the theory that the franchises covered the right to operate street car lines 'over certain streets within unincorporated territory of the county of Alameda.' Strictly speaking, the word 'street' relates to a public way within a municipality only. A public way over unincorporated territory of a county is generally referred to as a highway or road. From the transcript it appears that in the franchises the words 'public roads,' 'highways,' and 'routes' are used. A public road or highway through unincorporated territory is generally a public way dedicated to the public use but not owned as such by the county. Generally speaking, the same applies to a public street within a municipality. The exceptions in both instances are where highways or streets are obtained in fee by the county or the city through public or private grant. In most cases the fee to the land rests in the adjoining property owner and the public holds an easement for the use. Where an easement only is acquired, the right lies in the people of the state, and the county or the city is merely the agent or trustee of the state committed to the duty of maintaining the highway for the use of the public. In the absence of any showing to the contrary, we may assume, in support of the judgment, that these franchises covered the right to use public highways, in which the county did not own the fee, but which were dedicated to public use in the ordinary and usual way.

"Thus, in so far as it concerns the public highways over which the franchises were granted, the county had no property to lose, and these highways became public streets of the city of Oakland upon the annexation of the territory where they were located, at least when so declared to be by the city authorities. In any event, the entire jurisdiction and control over such highways for the benefit of the state was thenceforth imposed in the city, and all jurisdiction of the county in respect thereto ceased with the annexation." The court concluded that when the franchises were granted "the county was merely acting as the agent of the state * * that when the supervision and control of these highways was transferred to a new state agency, it carried the benefits as well as the burdens, including the right to collect and retain these charges." (Emphasis that of the court.) It is apparent that this case does not stand for the proposition that the word "road" includes "highways." People v. Odom, 19 Cal.App.2d 641, 650, 66 P.2d 206, involved section 480 of the Vehicle Code. In this case the defendant was charged with wilfully driving a motor vehicle upon a public highway and failing to stop to render aid to an injured person as required by section 482(a) of the Vehicle Code. The court said, 19 Cal.App.2d at page 650, 66 P.2d at page 211: "There is no merit in the contention that there is a fatal variance between the allegation of the information that the accident occurred 'upon a public highway' in Merced county and the proof that the body of the man was found on 'Shaffer road.' * * * It is immaterial whether the accident occurred on a street in Atwater or on an extension of that street outside of the city limits termed Shaffer road. It was called both a highway and a street. Section 81 of the Vehicle Code defines a highway as follows: '"Street" or "highway" is a way or place of whatever nature open to the use of the public as a matter of right for purposes of vehicular travel.'

"There can be no doubt the accident occurred on a roadway open to the public for the purpose of vehicular travel. There appears to be no variance in that regard."

From this summary of the three California cases used by the majority to prove the point that "road" includes "highway" it can at once be seen without any stretching of the imagination that none of them has the slightest bearing upon a construction of the Streets and Highways Code.

I would affirm the judgment.

L. A. 23409, 23657.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.
June 28, 1956.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing
July 24, 1956.

Proceeding by divorced mother for modification of interlocutory decree of divorce so as to increase allowance for support of minor children. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Kurtz Kauffman, J., entered an order denying the application, from which plaintiff appealed, and from an order of the same court, Thurmond Clarke, J., allowing plaintiff $1,000 for attorney's fees and costs on appeal, defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, McComb, J., held, inter alia, that refusal to increase allowance for support of minor children was not abuse of discretion in view of the evidence.

Orders affirmed.

Opinions, 290 P.2d 637 and 292 P.2d 240, vacated.

1. Appeal and Error 🔑989

Where a finding of fact is attacked on ground that there is no substantial evidence to sustain it, the power of reviewing court begins and ends with the determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence contradicted or uncontradicted which will support such finding.

2. Appeal and Error 🔑996

Where two or more inferences can reasonably be deduced from the facts, reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of trial court.

3. Divorce 🔑309, 312.6(6)

In proceeding to modify interlocutory decree of divorce with respect to allowance for support of minor children, the amount of such allowance is in the first instance a matter resting in the sound discretion of trial court, and reviewing court will not interfere with action of trial court unless, as a matter of law, abuse of discretion is shown.

4. Divorce 🔑289

Under provisions of Civil Code, the court may make necessary or proper provision for the custody, care, and education of minor children of parties to divorce action, but jurisdiction to make such orders is limited to the conditions and circumstances existing at the time they are made, and court cannot then anticipate what may possibly thereafter happen and provide for future contingencies. West's Ann.Civ. Code, §§ 138, 139.

5. Divorce 🔑309

In proceeding by divorced mother for modification of interlocutory decree of divorce so as to increase amount former husband was required to pay for support of minor children, mother had the burden of showing in trial court that increased funds were necessary for proper support of children. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 138, 139.

6. Divorce 🔑309

The future needs of minor children, such as a swimming pool, riding horse, and automobile could not properly be considered as ground for modification of interlocutory decree of divorce so as to require father to pay former wife additional sums for support of children. West's Ann.Civ. Code, §§ 138, 139.

7. Divorce 🔑309

Denial of application by divorced mother for modification of interlocutory decree of divorce so as to increase amount father was required to pay for support of five minor children was not abuse of discretion, in view of evidence that father was providing adequately for children and absence of any evidence of necessity for increasing allowance in order to properly provide for maintenance, care and education of the children. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 138, 139.

8. Divorce ⚷312.6(6)

Denial of application by divorced mother for modification of interlocutory decree of divorce so as to increase amount which father was required to pay for support of minor children was binding upon reviewing court in absence of showing of abuse of discretion. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 138, 139.

9. Divorce ⚷309

In proceeding on application by divorced mother for modification of interlocutory decree of divorce so as to increase amount father was required to pay for support of minor children, trial court was not required to make written findings of fact. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 138, 139.

10. Divorce ⚷309

Written findings of fact are not essential to sustain an order modifying the provisions of a decree of divorce relative to amount to be paid for support of minor children. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 138, 139.

11. Divorce ⚷223, 312½

Awarding divorced mother counsel fees and costs to be incurred in connection with appeal from order denying her application for modification of interlocutory decree of divorce so as to increase amount father was required to pay for support of minor children was not abuse of discretion, in view of evidence that mother's separate income would be substantially exhausted for her own household expenses and proper support. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 138, 139.

12. Divorce ⚷184(5), 189, 223, 286

Motion for allowance of counsel fees and costs in a divorce action is addressed to the sound discretion of trial court, whose determination in such respect will not be disturbed on appeal, in absence of a clear showing of abuse of discretion.

13. Divorce ⚷189, 225

Trial court is under no duty to require wife to exhaust her separate capital before ordering husband to pay her costs and attorney's fees on appeal from a decree in a divorce action.

Willis Sargent, Syracuse, N. Y., and Sidney H. Wyse, Pasadena, for J. Primm.

Hanna & Morton and David A. Thomas, Los Angeles, for E. J. Primm.

McCOMB, Justice.

On June 14, 1951, the Superior Court of Los Angeles County (Judge Kurtz Kauffman, presiding) entered an interlocutory decree granting to defendant, Ernest J. Primm (upon his cross-complaint), a divorce from Josephine Primm (who had filed an action for divorce against defendant, Ernest J. Primm).

The interlocutory decree awarded the custody of the five minor children of the parties to plaintiff, with the provision that defendant was entitled to their custody for six weeks each year commencing on the first day of July. It ordered that defendant pay to plaintiff the sum of $1,000 per month except for the month of July "to provide the necessities of life for said minor children, including food, clothing, transportation, laundry, utilities, rent, taxes, recreation, music lessons, salaries of cooks, maids, gardeners and nurses, if any; and related household expenses, and other incidental expenses attendant upon the support, education and maintenance of said minor children."

On March 17, 1954, plaintiff obtained an order to show cause seeking an increase in the amount of support and maintenance for her five children from $1,000 per month for eleven months to $2,000 per month for eleven months and for $1,000 for the twelfth month, and for attorney's fees.

On May 3, 1954, a hearing having been previously held, Judge Kauffman denied plaintiff's application for a modification of the interlocutory decree of divorce and allowed her the sum of $300 for attorney's fees incurred in connection with such proceeding. Plaintiff appeals from this order.

On August 26, 1954, after a hearing, Judge Clarke made an order allowing plaintiff $1,000 for attorney's fees and costs incurred in connection with her appeal from the court's order of May 3, 1954. Defendant appeals from this order awarding attorney's fees and costs.

Plaintiff's Appeal

Two questions are presented in connection with the appeal from the order denying plaintiff's application for a modification of the provisions of the interlocutory decree relating to the award of a sum for the support of the minor children.

First: Did the trial court abuse its discretion in refusing to modify the interlocutory decree of divorce by increasing defendant's payments for the support of his children?

No. This conclusion is governed by these pertinent rules:

[1] (1) When a finding of fact is attacked on the ground that there is not any substantial evidence to sustain it, the power of an appellate court begins and ends with the determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence contradicted or uncontradicted which will support the finding of fact. (Treadwell v. Nickel, 194 Cal. 243, at page 260 [5], 228 P. 25; Estate of Isenberg, 63 Cal.App.2d 214, at page 217 [3], 146 P.2d 424; see also cases cited in 6 West's Cal.Dig.(1951), Appeal and Error, ⚷989, p. 606, and in 2 McK.Dig. (1946), Appeal and Error, § 1235, p. 837.)[1]

[2] (2) When two or more inferences can reasonably be deduced from the facts, a reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the trial court. (Wilbur v. Wilbur, 197 Cal. 1, at page 7 [1], 239 P. 332; Wing v. Kishi, 92 Cal.App. 495, at page 497 [3], 268 P. 483.)

[3] (3) In a proceeding to modify the amount allowed in an interlocutory decree of divorce for the support of the minor children of the parties, such amount is in the first instance a matter resting in the sound discretion of the trial court, and an appellate court will not interfere with the action of the trial court unless, as a matter of law, an abuse of discretion is shown. (Sawyer v. Sawyer, 57 Cal.App.2d 582, at page 584 [2], 134 P.2d 868; Brockmiller v. Brockmiller, 57 Cal.App.2d 623, at page 625 [1], 135 P.2d 184; cf. Williams v. Williams, 80 Cal.App.2d 28, at page 29 [1], 181 P.2d 110.)

[4] (4) Under sections 138 and 139 of the Civil Code[2] the court may make neces-

[1] Mr. Justice Vallée, in Overton v. Vita-Food Corp., 94 Cal.App.2d 367, at page 370, 210 P.2d 757, at page 759 [hearing denied by the Supreme Court], apropos of this rule, pertinently said: "André Gide once observed: 'Everything has been said already; but as no one listens, we must always begin again.' With rhythmic regularity it is necessary for us to say that where the findings are attacked for insufficiency of the evidence, our power begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence to support them; that we have no power to judge of the effect or value of the evidence, to weigh the evidence, to consider the credibility of the witnesses, or to resolve conflicts in the evidence or in the reasonable inferences that may be drawn therefrom. No one seems to listen."

[2] Section 138 of the Civil Code reads in part as follows: "In actions for divorce * * * the court may, during the pendency of the action, or at the final hearing or at any time thereafter during the minority of any of the children of the marriage, make such order for the custody of such minor children as may seem necessary or proper and may at any time modify or vacate the same. In awarding the custody the court is to be guided by the following considerations: (1) By what appears to be for the best interests of the child; and if the child is of a sufficient age to form an intelligent preference, the court may consider that preference in determining the question; * * *."

Section 139 of the Civil Code reads in part as follows: "In any interlocutory * * * decree of divorce * * * the sary or proper provision for the custody, care and education of the minor children of the parties but its jurisdiction to make such orders is limited to the conditions and circumstances existing at the time they are made, and the court cannot then anticipate what may possibly thereafter happen and provide for future contingencies. (Schammel v. Schammel, 105 Cal. 258, at page 261, 38 P. 729; see also 16 Cal.Jur.2d (1954), § 276, p. 570.)

Applying the foregoing rules to the instant case, the record discloses that plaintiff deposited the $1,000 she received each month from defendant in a bank account denominated "household account." In 1953 she deposited in this account $11,000 received from defendant. She also deposited therein $5,155.50 of her separate funds. From this account she paid substantial amounts on her own investments, all expenses for maintaining the house which she and the children shared, all expenses for food for herself, domestic help and the children, the expenses for her automobile and also insurance premiums on a policy upon her own life. She paid from this account final payments in 1953 upon the purchase of a Cadillac automobile, which is her separate property. She had also made deferred payments upon the automobile from this account.

For about six to eight months she engaged in the real estate business and used her automobile in connection therewith. The expense of the automobile while used in her own business was charged to the household account, as was the insurance upon the same.

In December 1953 she purchased as her separate property a house in San Marino, for which she paid $40,000 and upon which $5,000 was expended for alterations and repairs. She gave a trust deed upon the house to secure the unpaid balance of the purchase price, and each monthly payment of $134 during 1953 was deducted from the household account. She also made a personal loan which was repayable at the rate of $150 per month. These payments were likewise made from the household account, as was $1,413 for carpenter work and painting on her new home. Many other payments of a similar nature were made from the account. However, no useful purpose would be served by setting forth the items in detail.

[5] Plaintiff concedes that she has not allocated the expenses between herself and her children. The burden was upon her to make a showing in the trial court that it was necessary for her to have increased funds for the proper support of her children. This she failed to do.

[6] The uncontradicted evidence further shows that plaintiff desired to have the increase in allowance for the purpose of meeting future needs of the minor children, for example, to install a swimming pool for them at a future date, to buy a horse for one of the children to ride at some time in the future, to use part of the money in the future to purchase an automobile for her daughter Joan, who at the time of the hearing was 15 years of age, and for other similar future expenses. Clearly such items under the 4th rule, supra, were not proper items to be considered as a basis for ordering defendant to pay plaintiff additional sums for the support of the children.

[7] The record fails to disclose any evidence which shows a necessity for increasing the allowance in order to properly provide for the maintenance, care and education of the minor children of the parties. On the other hand, it discloses that at the present time defendant is providing adequately for his children. Therefore, there is a total absence of any showing of an abuse of discretion of the trial court.

[8] The same judge who tried the divorce proceeding passed upon the motion court may compel the party against whom the decree * * * is granted * * * to make suitable allowance for the support, maintenance and education of the children of said marriage during their minority * * *."

for a modification of the judgment. Therefore, in the absence of a showing of an abuse of discretion, which is not present in the instant case, his determination of the matter is binding upon this court.

Second: Was it necessary for the trial court to make written findings of fact after the hearing of plaintiff's order to show cause for modification of the provisions of the interlocutory decree of divorce pertaining to the amount to be allowed for the support of the minor children of the parties?

[9, 10] No. It is the general rule that written findings of fact are not essential to sustain an order modifying the provisions in a decree of divorce relative to the amounts to be paid for the support of minor children. (Crater v. Crater, 135 Cal. 633, at page 634 et seq., 67 P. 1049; Simmons v. Simmons, 22 Cal.App. 448, at page 456, 134 P. 791; cf. Davis v. Davis, 41 Cal. 2d 563, at page 565 [1], 261 P.2d 729; Smith v. Smith, 85 Cal.App.2d 428, at page 433 [3], 193 P.2d 56.)

Defendant's Appeal

This is the single question presented on the appeals from the orders allowing plaintiff attorney's fees and costs: Did the trial court abuse its discretion in awarding plaintiff counsel fees and costs to be incurred in connection with the appeal from Judge Kauffman's order of May 3, 1954?

[11–13] No. The motion for the allowance of counsel fees and costs in a divorce action is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and in the absence of a clear showing of abuse, its determination will not be disturbed on appeal. (Wilder v. Wilder, 214 Cal. 783, at page 785 [1], [2], 7 P.2d 1032.) It is likewise settled that the trial court is under no duty to require the wife to exhaust her separate capital before ordering the husband to pay her costs and attorney's fees on appeal from a decree in a divorce action. (Baldwin v. Baldwin, 28 Cal.2d 406, at page 418, 170 P.2d 670.)

In the present case the foregoing rules are applicable. It appears from the record that there was not an abuse of discretion by the trial court for the reason that the evidence disclosed that plaintiff's separate income would be substantially consumed for her own household expenses and proper support of herself. Under these circumstances the award was proper. (See Westphal v. Westphal, 122 Cal.App. 388, at page 389 [1], 10 P.2d 122, [hearing denied by the Supreme Court]; Fallon v. Fallon, 83 Cal.App.2d 798, at page 806 [4], 189 P.2d 766 [hearing denied by the Supreme Court]; Sigesmund v. Sigesmund, 115 Cal. App.2d 628, at page 632 [7], 252 P.2d 713.)

Loeb v. Loeb, 84 Cal.App.2d 141, 190 P.2d 246, 248, relied on by defendant, is factually distinguishable from the present case. In the cited case the record disclosed that the wife's living expenses were not over $665 per month and that her income from her own resources was not less than $795. Thus, her income exceeded her expenditures by approximately $130 per month. The court then pointed out that section 137 of the Civil Code (as it then stood) was the only authority for awards pendente lite so that the court could not exercise general equity powers or generally consider " 'the circumstances of the parties' " and then held in accordance with the record that no necessity of any kind had been shown for awarding suit money to the wife.

Each order is affirmed.

George J. LYNN, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.
Sherman P. DUCKEL, as Director of Public Works of the City and County of San Francisco, Defendant and Respondent.
S. F. 19220.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.
July 24, 1956.
Rehearing Denied Aug. 21, 1956.

Action by property owner to enjoin city and county from closing an alley and for damages. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Preston Devine, J., denied relief, and property owner appealed. The Supreme Court, McComb, J., held, inter alia, that plaintiff who was denied a permit to build a paved roadway in an alley but who failed to apply to city board of permit appeals, in accordance with the established administrative procedure, was not entitled to judicial relief against obstruction of the alley.

Judgment affirmed.

Carter and Shenk, JJ., dissented.

Opinion, 294 P.2d 452, vacated.

1. Municipal Corporations 🔑697(2)

Plaintiff who was denied a permit to build a paved roadway in an alley but who failed to apply to city board of permit appeals, in accordance with the established administrative procedure, was not entitled to judicial relief against obstruction of the alley. St.1931, pp. 2991, 2992, 3001, 3002, 3041, §§ 24, 39, 106; St.1899, pp. 286, 287, art. 6, c. 1, § 9, subd. 1.

2. Administrative Law and Procedure 🔑229

One is not entitled to judicial relief until the prescribed administrative remedy is not only invoked but exhausted.

3. Equity 🔑65(1)

Where party who seeks to set judicial machinery in motion and obtain some remedy has violated conscience, good faith or other equitable principle in his prior conduct, court will refuse to interfere on his behalf to acknowledge his right, or to afford him any remedy.

4. Equity 🔑65(2)

Plaintiff who, without obtaining required permit, had graded and paved alley so as to make it passable for vehicular traffic to his premises was barred by doctrine of unclean hands from seeking judicial relief against obstruction of alley.

5. Estoppel 🔑62(1)

Neither the doctrine of estoppel nor any other equitable principle may be invoked against a governmental body where it would operate to defeat the effective operation of a policy adopted to protect the public.

6. Estoppel 🔑62(4)

Where alley had long been used as a pedestrian passageway, that city employees, without authority, so constructed curbs and sidewalks as to permit a property owner to use a portion of the alley for vehicular traffic did not estop city and county from asserting their rights to claim that another property owner had not complied with statute relative to changing alley into a vehicular street, or from barring street to vehicular traffic.

Dion R. Holm, City Atty., and George E. Baglin, Deputy City Atty., San Francisco, for respondent.

McCOMB, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of defendant after trial of an action instituted to obtain (1) a mandatory injunction directing defendant to remove obstructions erected in and across the entrance to Argent Alley from Market Street in San Francisco, and (2) damages resulting from the obstruction of the entrance to the alley.

Argent Alley is a 10-foot public alley on the east slope of Twin Peaks in San Francisco, connecting Market and Corbett Streets. It is too steep and narrow for vehicular use, and since its dedication by recordation of a subdivision map in 1867 the public has always used it soley as a pedestrianway. It is the sole route for pedestrians between Market and Corbett Streets without going two blocks out of their way. Six other alleys in the same area, all dedicated at the same time, have always been used exclusively as pedestrianways.

The following photograph is a view of the alley looking in a westerly direction from its intersection with Market Street.

On November 1, 1951, plaintiff bought a house and lot at 4512 23rd Street. The rear of this lot, which contained a large depression, abuts on Argent Alley. At that time Argent Alley was impassable to vehicles.

Plaintiff, without the required permit from the city's Department of Public Works (defendant herein), brought a bulldozer into the alley and graded many tons of earth out of it, and used the earth to fill in and level off his lot. He then commenced running trucks in the alley from Market Street to his property. This resulted in the alley being impassable to pedestrians.

Residents of the district complained to defendant, who found the condition existing to be dangerous to the public, halted plaintiff's running of trucks in the alley by removing a ramp and bringing the Market Street sidewalk up to the official grade, and installed a 4-inch iron post imbedded in concrete at the entrance to the alley.

Plaintiff then applied to defendant for a permit to build a paved roadway in the alley. This was denied. Plaintiff did not appeal to the city's Board of Permit Appeals, but instead instituted the instant action. After trial without a jury the trial court made the following findings of fact:[1] (1) the alley was dedicated to public use as a pedestrianway; (2) the running of vehicles therein was dangerous to the public; and (3) plaintiff, because of his unlawful disregard of the city's permit procedure, did not come into court with "clean hands," and therefore was not entitled to relief. Judgment was accordingly rendered for defendant.

Questions

First: Was plaintiff's cause of action barred by the fact that he did not exhaust his administrative remedy prior to instituting the present suit?

Yes. Section 106 of the San Francisco Charter, which became effective January 8, 1932 (Stats.1931, p. 3041), reads: "The director of public works shall have and succeed to the powers and duties of the board of public works from and after twelve o'clock noon on the 8th day of January, 1932."

Article VI, chapter I, § 9, subdivision 1 of San Francisco's Charter of 1900 (Stats. 1899, pp. 286–287) read:

> "The board of public works shall have charge, superintendence and control, under such ordinances as may from time to time be adopted by the supervisors:
> "1. Of all public ways, streets, avenues, lanes, alleys, places, courts, roads, highways and boulevards now opened or which may hereafter be opened in the city and county; of the manner of their use; and of all work done upon * * * the same; and herein particularly the board shall have exclusive authority to prescribe rules and grant permits, in conformity with the ordinances of the supervisors, for * * * the using of the street or any portion thereof * * * for any purpose other than such as ordinarily and properly belongs to the public from the dedication thereof to public use; and without such permission in writing from said board no person shall do any of the acts in this section enumerated; * * * ."

Section 24 of the San Francisco Charter, effective in 1932 (Stats.1931, pp. 2991–2992), read: "The board of supervisors shall regulate, by ordinance, the issuance * * * of * * * permits for the use of * * * public streets and places, * * *. Permits * * * shall be issued by the departments as designated by ordinance, only after formal application for such permit * * *. If any application for a permit * * * is denied by the department authorized to issue same, the applicant may appeal to the board of permit appeals."

Section 39 of the San Francisco Charter of 1932 (Stats.1931, pp. 3001–3002) read: "Any applicant for a permit * * * who is denied such a permit * * * by the department authorized to issue same * * or any person who deems that his interests or property or that the general public interest will be adversely affected as the result of operations authorized by or under any permit * * * granted or issued by any department, may appeal to the board of permit appeals. Such board shall hear the applicant, the permit-holder, or other interested parties, as well as the head or representative of the department issuing or refusing to issue such * * * permit * * *. After such hearing and such further investigation as the board may deem necessary, it may concur in the action of the department authorized to issue such * * * permit, or, by the vote of four members, may overrule the action of such department and order that the permit * * * be granted * * * or refused."

[1] Plaintiff does not question the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the trial court's findings of fact.

Section 335 of the San Francisco Public Works Code reads in part: "It shall be unlawful for any person * * * to make * * * any excavation in * * * the surface of any public * * * alley * * * without first obtaining from the Department of Public Works a written certificate that such person * * * is entitled to make such excavation * * *."

[1, 2] In view of the foregoing provisions of the city charter, it is apparent that after plaintiff was denied a permit to build a paved roadway in the alley administrative procedure required that he apply to the city's Board of Permit Appeals. This he failed to do, and the established rule is here applicable that one is not entitled to judicial relief until the prescribed administrative remedy is not only invoked but exhausted. (United States v. Superior Court, 19 Cal.2d 189, at page 194 [1], 120 P.2d 26; Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal, 17 Cal.2d 280, at page 291 [5], 109 P.2d 942, 132 A.L.R. 715; Myers v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp., 303 U.S. 41, 50 et seq., 58 S.Ct. 459, 82 L.Ed. 638; cf. Lindell Co. v. Board of Permit Appeals, 23 Cal.2d 303, at page 314, 144 P.2d 4.)

Hence, the trial court properly found that since plaintiff did not exhaust his administrative remedies he was not entitled to judicial relief.

Second: Was plaintiff properly denied relief because he did not come into court with "clean hands"?

[3] Yes. The rule is settled in California that whenever a party who, as actor, seeks to set judicial machinery in motion and obtain some remedy, has violated conscience, good faith or other equitable principle in his prior conduct, then the doors of the court will be shut against him in limine; the court will refuse to interfere on his behalf to acknowledge his right, or to afford him any remedy. (DeGarmo v. Goldman, 19 Cal.2d 755, at page 764 [5] et seq., 123 P.2d 1; Bowman v. Bowman, 125 Cal.App. 602, at page 612 [5], 13 P.2d 1049, 14 P.2d 558.)

The foregoing rule is applicable to the facts presented in the instant case. The record discloses that plaintiff, without written permit and in violation of the San Francisco Public Works Code, graded Argent Alley so as to make it available for vehicular traffic when it had been previously used solely for pedestrian traffic. By grading a roadway into the alley without a permit, plaintiff circumvented the city's permit procedure established for the protection of the public. Upon either the granting or denial of a permit, the procedure provided for an appeal to the Board of Permit Appeals—by the applicant if the permit was denied; or, if granted, by any person who deemed his interests or property would be adversely affected as the result of operations under the permit.

[4] By ignoring the city's permit procedure and building the road without a permit, then suing defendant, the Director of Public Works, for a mandatory injunction, plaintiff attempts to nullify the procedure established by law, denies the public the hearing to which it is entitled, and flouts the public interest which the procedure was designed to protect. Obviously the public, whom defendant represents, was injured by plaintiff's illegal conduct and the "clean hands" doctrine applies to him.

Third: Was defendant estopped because of certain unauthorized acts of employees of the city and county of San Francisco from asserting its rights to claim that plaintiff had not complied with the statute relative to changing Argent Alley into a vehicular street?

No. In 1924 Argent Alley was a path for pedestrians. At that time Market Street in the vicinity of the seven alleys (including Argent) was being improved under contract.

The grade of the sidewalk in front of Argent Alley had been established by the board of supervisors as being level with the walk on each side, with no depression therein. The official plans called for the curb in front of Argent Alley and the other six alleys to be continuous, without the customary break and turning in of the curbs found at intersecting vehicular ways, and for a concrete stairway to rise from the street level to the sidewalk level in front of Argent Alley.

A city civil service examiner named Zion owned property at the northwest corner of Market Street and Argent Alley. He requested the city's engineering department, instead of building the concrete stairs as called for by the plans, to "build this ramp up here so that we could use it for our property to move in."

Without change in the official plans or change in the sidewalk grade established by the supervisors, the engineering department personnel caused the contractor to build a ramp where stairs were called for, to shift the stairs 10 feet south, and to build a 10- to 12-inch depression in the outer half of the sidewalk to accommodate the ramp and keep a vehicle ascending the ramp from hanging up on the edge of the sidewalk. The continuous curb was not changed, but a triangular asphalt plug was inserted between the curb and the street so a vehicle could cross the curb.

It is contended that this unlawful construction for Zion's benefit and Zion's vehicular use of the alley for 15 years constituted public acceptance of Argent Alley for vehicular use (although the public had used it exclusively as a pedestrianway since 1867) and therefore the unauthorized conduct of the engineering department raised an estoppel against the public and in favor of plaintiff.

[5] Such is not the law. Mr. Chief Justice Gibson, in County of San Diego v. California Water, etc., Co., 30 Cal.2d 817, at page 826, 186 P.2d 124, at page 130, 175 A.L.R. 747, thus accurately states the rule: "It is clear, however, that neither the doctrine of estoppel nor any other equitable principle may be invoked against a governmental body where it would operate to defeat the effective operation of a policy adopted to protect the public. (Citations.)" (Simons Brick Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 182 Cal. 230, at page 237 [4], 187 P. 1066; Gardella v. County of Amador, 164 Cal. 555, at page 564, 129 P. 933; see also cases cited in 10 Cal.Jur. (1923), p. 652, Estoppel, Note 4.)

[6] It it thus evident that the doctrine of estoppel was not available to plaintiff under the facts of the present case.

The judgment is affirmed.

I dissent.

Where a municipal corporation has closed a street to vehicle traffic by placing an obstruction therein, an owner of property abutting on the street may have preventive relief against the closing and is not barred by the clean hands rule or exhaustion of administrative remedies since his acts in partially grading the street has no connection with the closing and he has no administrative remedy for the closing.

The majority opinion holds that plaintiff, the property owner, may not obtain equitable relief for the closing of the street because: (1) He did not have clean hands; and (2) he did not exhaust his administrative remedies, allegedly afforded by the city.

Before discussing the grounds of the majority opinion, let us examine the facts as they appear in the evidence and in the findings of the trial court. Plaintiff acquired his property in 1951. It has a house on it which fronts on 23rd Street in the middle of the block between Corbett and Market Streets. 23rd Street, while a public street, has never been graded for use by either pedestrian or vehicular traffic because it is too steep. Hence plaintiff has no access, pedestrian or vehicular, at the front of his property and none to the rear except as hereinafter appears. The rear of his lot abuts on Argent Alley, a duly established public street, and the one here in question. It runs parallel to 23rd Street. Argent is steep but passable for vehicles from Market Street to the rear of plaintiff's lot. From there on to Corbett Street there are steps for use by pedestrians. Plaintiff, finding Argent filled with debris, obtained permission of defendant, head of the Department of Public Works, to clean it up and had a bulldozer work one day on it, pushing the debris and dirt into a hole on plaintiff's land. Argent became muddy and defendant objected. On further conversation with men in defendant's department, it was agreed that plaintiff would put crushed rock on the surface of Argent, and he was told by defendant he needed no further authority to do so. The rock was accordingly spread on Argent by plaintiff. Thereafter defendant tore out the ramp over the curb at the intersection of Argent with Market Street and placed a post in the middle of the entrance to Argent. Contrary to the statement in the majority opinion, Argent was used for both pedestrian and vehicular traffic from 1922 to 1939, although it was not so used thereafter until plaintiff commenced so to use it after he acquired his property. When a contractor paved Market Street in 1922, the owner of property on Market and along Argent requested the engineer in the Department of Public Works that a ramp or gutter plug be put in so that vehicles could get over the curb and onto Argent. This was done and the city paid for it. Plaintiff apparently applied to defendant for a permit to pave Argent after he had cleaned out the debris, but his request was denied and he did not appeal to the city Board of Permit Appeals.

We have a situation, then, in which plaintiff used Argent, a public street, as it was supposed and fixed to be used in entire good faith believing that he had the approval of defendant Duckel and his department. Defendant then proceeded to close Argent to vehicular traffic by physically making it impossible for a vehicle to enter it. Plaintiff then brought this action seeking the aid of the court to have the obstruction removed. The majority here denies him relief for the reasons heretofore stated.

Plaintiff should not be denied relief because of unclean hands as there was no connection between the transaction, grading of Argent and the closing of it, and he acted in entire good faith, having the approval of those in charge of defendant's department. It is said in Treager v. Friedman, 79 Cal.App.2d 151, 173, 179 P.2d 387, 400, quoting from Carman v. Athearn, 77 Cal.App.2d 585, 598, 175 P.2d 926: "As stated in Carman v. Athearn, 77 Cal.App.2d [585], at page [598], 175 P.2d 926, 934: 'The misconduct which brings the "clean hands" doctrine into operation must relate directly to the transaction concerning which complaint is made. The misconduct must infect the cause of action before the court. Relief is not denied because the plaintiff may have acted improperly in the past or because such prior misconduct may indirectly affect the problem before the court. A party may have relief in connection with a transaction itself untainted although his original title may have been tainted by improper conduct. These principles are well settled. See Germo Mfg. Co. of Missouri v. McClellan, 107 Cal.App. 532, 290 P. 534; Bradley Co. v. Bradley, 165 Cal. 237, 131 P. 750; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Commercial Pac. Cable Co., 177 Cal. 577, 171 P. 317; 2 Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence (5th Ed.), p. 94, § 399; cases collected 30 C.J.S., Equity, § 98 c, p. 491; 4 A.L.R. 44, at page 65.'" See, also, Western Union Tel. Co. v. Commercial Pac. Cable Co., 177 Cal. 577, 171 P. 317; Watson v. Poore, 18 Cal.2d 302, 115 P.2d 478; Hamrick v. Hamrick, 119 Cal.App.2d 839, 260 P.2d 188; Boericke v. Weise, 68 Cal.App.2d 407, 156 P.2d 781; McCarthy v. City of Oakland, 60 Cal.App.2d 546, 141

P.2d 4; Miller & Lux v. Enterprise Canal, etc., Co., 142 Cal. 208, 75 P. 770; Germo Mfg. Co. of Missouri v. McClellan, 107 Cal.App. 532, 290 P. 534; Bradley Co. v. Bradley, 165 Cal. 237, 242, 131 P. 750; City of Los Angeles v. Watterson, 8 Cal. App.2d 331, 48 P.2d 87. Here the only unlawful act charged against plaintiff is that he graded Argent without obtaining a permit, but that does not mean that he cannot complain of the closing of Argent. They are unrelated transactions. If the conclusion of the majority is correct, any time a citizen commits some minor infraction with reference to public streets, he may be forever barred from objecting to the closing of a street because he has unclean hands. The closing was not the result of the grading of the street. It was an arbitrary action on defendant's part because he thought it was unsafe to permit vehicular traffic on Argent.

The majority lumps together plaintiff's grading of Argent with his alleged failure to exhaust an administrative remedy as showing lack of clean hands. Certainly failure to exhaust is not a showing of unclean hands and as will later appear herein, plaintiff had no administrative remedy.

On the question of exhaustion of remedies, the majority refers to plaintiff's failure to appeal to the Board of Permit Appeals after his application for a permit to pave Argent was denied. No application was made for anything else and the paving would have no effect on the closing of Argent. Even if he had obtained a permit to pave, defendant would still have closed Argent. Hence there was no administrative remedy available to him which touched upon the question of closing. It is crystal clear, as it should be, that: "In all of the cases in this state in which it has been held that a party had not exhausted his administrative remedies and therefore was not entitled to relief by the court, provision was made in the governing law for a proceeding of some nature before an administrative body which the party had not pursued. Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal, 17 Cal.2d 280, 109 P.2d 942, 132 A.L.R. 715; Metcalf v. County of Los Angeles, 24 Cal.2d 267, 269, 148 P.2d 645, and cases cited therein. It is only when no mode of attacking the validity of an ordinance is provided other than by resort to the courts, that a court will take jurisdiction. Where an ordinance contains provisions looking to the prevention of hardship upon owners in particular cases, resort to the administrative agency is required. We have not been cited to any case, and we have found none, holding that resort must be had to an administrative agency when the agency has no power to act. In a number of cases where an ordinance prohibited the doing of a particular act in a specific district, direct application to the courts for relief has been permitted and the ordinance held unconstitutional. Apparently in these cases there was no provision for a variance in the ordinance. The question whether an administrative remedy should have been exhausted was not urged or discussed. It seems clear, however, that it was not done because there was no administrative remedy to pursue." Bernstein v. Smutz, 83 Cal.App.2d 108, 115, 188 P.2d 48, 52. Here the charter and ordinances of San Francisco do not purport to give anyone the right to confer special permission to use Argent, and the paving of it, as seen, has no relation to the closing of it. There is no law which gives the defendant, Director of Public Works, any power to close a street or to issue permits for the customary and usual use to which streets are put such as vehicular and pedestrian traffic; his power is limited to permits to use streets for purposes other than the customary ones. The charter provisions as set forth in the majority opinion only give the director superintendence and control over the streets and expressly provide that permits for using them may be granted for any purpose "other than such as ordinarily and properly belongs to the public." There can be no question that use of streets for vehicular traffic belongs to the public and hence the director has no authority to grant or deny a permit in connection with such use. Therefore, in arbitrarily closing Argent he usurped his power and authority and plaintiff is clearly entitled to the relief here prayed for.

I would reverse the judgment.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Philip J. WATSON, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5813.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.
July 3, 1956.
Rehearing Denied Aug. 1, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of second degree murder. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Twain Michelson, J., entered judgment, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, Spence, J., held that admitted evidence, which cast aspersions on defendant's reasons for wearing an Army uniform which he was entitled to wear, and which showed an attempt by defendant to obtain a discharge from Army, had no bearing on his motive or credibility in relation to crime charged and was collateral and irrelevant to any issue in the case, but admission of such evidence did not result in a miscarriage of justice.

Judgment affirmed.

Schauer and Carter, JJ., dissented.

Opinion, 288 P.2d 184, vacated.

1. Criminal Law 🔑1186(4)

Where review of record in murder prosecution led to conclusion that there was no prejudicial error resulting in a miscarriage of justice, judgment of conviction would be affirmed. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½.

2. Witnesses 🔑269(1)

Generally, scope of cross-examination should be confined to matters which have been elicited from the witness on direct examination. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 2048.

3. Witnesses 🔑328, 330(1)

Chief object of cross-examination is to test credibility, knowledge, and recollection of the witness, and it should be given wide latitude, particularly in cases involving a witness against a defendant in a criminal prosecution.

4. Witnesses 🔑269(4)

Where witness testifies on direct examination as to part of a conversation, whole of the conversation, at least so far as it is germane, may be elicited on cross-examination. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1854.

Witnesses 🔑269(4)

Fact that police officer testified, on direct examination in murder prosecution, about certain phases of his own inspection of scene of crime and of deceased's body and of his conversation with defendant did not open door to an unrestricted line of cross-examination upon anything that officer may have heard from third persons while officer was at scene of crime, but these remarks and comments of third persons, who were not called as witnesses, and who had not made such statements under oath, but who had merely inspected the scene and expressed their personal views or opinions, were inadmissible hearsay and not proper cross-examination.

6. Criminal Law 🔑1172(2)

In murder prosecution, trial court's giving of instruction that neither prosecution nor defense was required to call as witnesses all persons who were shown to have been present at any of the events involved in the evidence was not reversible error, even though prosecution did not call as witnesses all such persons, in view of fact that defendant could have called them as witnesses on his own behalf if he believed their testimony would have aided his cause.

7. Criminal Law 🔑308

Where evidence is susceptible of two constructions, jury has duty to adopt that construction which points to defendant's innocence.

8. Criminal Law 🔑552(1)

Where circumstantial evidence is relied upon as proof of guilt to justify a conviction, the facts or circumstances must not only be entirely consistent with theory of guilt but must be inconsistent with any other rational conclusion.

9. Criminal Law 🔑789(2)

Jury instruction that "when the case which has been made out by the People against a defendant rests entirely or chiefly on circumstantial evidence, and in any case before the jury may find a defendant guilty basing its finding solely on such evidence, each fact which is essential to complete a chain of circumstances that will establish the defendant's guilt must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt", when properly interpreted, applies doctrine of reasonable doubt not to proof of miscellaneous, collateral, or incidental facts but only to proof of each fact which is essential to complete a chain of circumstances that will establish the defendant's guilt.

10. Criminal Law 🔑829(18)

In murder prosecution, trial court's refusal to give instruction which applied doctrine of reasonable doubt to proof of each fact which would be essential to complete chain of circumstances which would establish defendant's guilt was error, but such error did not result in a miscarriage of justice, in view of other instructions given. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½.

11. Witnesses 🔑277(1)

Where defendant takes stand and makes general denial of crime with which he is charged, permissible scope of cross-examination is very wide.

12. Witnesses 🔑277(4)

Where, in homicide prosecution, defendant, on direct examination, had been questioned about his background and specifically about his education and, in response to such interrogation, defendant had related his graduation from high school, his semester of college, and his maritime service training, permitting prosecution to make inquiry as to defendant's attendance at radio-television classes was not error.

13. Criminal Law 🔑1186(4)

In murder prosecution, admitted evidence, which cast aspersions on defendant's reasons for wearing an Army uniform which he was entitled to wear, and which showed an attempt by defendant to obtain a discharge from the Army, had no bearing on his motive or credibility in relation to crime charged and was collateral and irrelevant to any issue in the case, but admission of such evidence did not result in a miscarriage of justice. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., §§ 2065, 2066; West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½; West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 1258, 1404.

14. Criminal Law 🔑1186(4)

Under constitutional provision providing for reversal where error results in "miscarriage of justice," a "miscarriage of justice" should be declared only when the court, after examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, is of the opinion that it is reasonably probable that a result more favorable to appealing party would have been reached in absence of the error. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½.

SPENCE, Justice.

[1] Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction of second degree murder. His wife, Arlys Watson, was killed on February 15, 1953, in their San Francisco apartment. Defendant's conviction rests on circumstantial evidence. He does not challenge the sufficiency of the evidence to support the conviction, but he argues these points as grounds for reversal: (1) the restriction of the defense's cross-examination of one of the prosecution witnesses, Officer Mullen; (2) the giving of an instruction that neither the prosecution nor the defense was required to call as witnesses all persons present "at the events involved in the evidence"; (3) the refusal of an instruction requiring, in substance, that each essential fact in a chain of circumstantial evidence must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt; and (4) the overruling of the objection to certain cross-examination of defendant. Only points (3) and (4) raise any serious question, but a review of the record leads us to the conclusion that there was no prejudicial error resulting in a "miscarriage of justice," and the judgment of conviction should therefore be affirmed. Cal.Const. art. VI, § 4½.

In February, 1953, defendant was 26 and his wife was 22. He was then an Army corporal, stationed in San Francisco, and was due to be discharged on March 19, 1953. The couple had married in June, 1952, and lived in an upstairs furnished apartment. Apparently there was no particular friction between them.

February 15, 1953, was a Sunday. At 7:00 that evening defendant telephoned to the police that he had just found his wife dead in their apartment. Officer Mullen was the first official at the scene. Defendant met him there and took him to the bathroom, where he found Arlys lying in the bathtub, with her legs bent in a jackknife position and with her head partially submerged, although neither the nose nor mouth was under water. Officer Mullen noted a red-brown stain about 4 or 5 inches wide that ran down the back of the tub (from the top of Arlys' head into the water) and the water was bloody. The bathroom walls were clean and the floor was dry. He noticed that the body was rigid, and he made no effort to remove it from the tub. He saw black and blue marks on the deceased's fingers but no wounds on the body. He noted that the bed was unmade but that everything else in the bedroom seemed to be in order. Defendant appeared nervous.

Shortly after Officer Mullen's arrival, Inspectors Flynn and Thompson reached the scene, followed by ambulance driver Hynes and ambulance steward Zielinsky. The latter two, after removing the deceased from the tub to a mat on the bathroom floor, made a brief examination of the body. Zielinsky testified that the body was very stiff and rigid; that there was some bleeding from a matted mass of hair in the back of deceased's head but no wounds were visible; and that her hands were bruised. He removed a sheet from the bed and covered the body. At that time there was a rose-colored bedspread on the unmade bed. The landlady of the apartment testified that the rose-colored bedspread was hers, but that when the Watsons rented the apartment, Arlys had stated that they had a bedspread of their own and would use the rose-colored one on the divan in the living room; and that as recently as February 9, 1953, she had seen a white bedspread on the bed. Defendant professed not to know what had become of this white bedspread. He stated that some 2 or 3 months before, he had burned a hole in it and not wanting the landlady to know of such incident, either he or his wife threw it in the garbage can. It was the theory of the prosecution that defendant had killed his wife in the bedroom; that the white bedspread had become bloodstained; and that defendant disposed of it before he called the police. The white bedspread was not produced.

Two coroner's deputies next arrived at the apartment, and the ambulance men departed. After cleaning up the bathroom, the coroner's men left with the body. Defendant testified that he then notified the military authorities, but neither then nor later did he attempt to communicate with his or his wife's parents. He further testified that Officer Mullen told him that all there was left for him to do was to appear at the coroner's inquest in about six weeks, advised him against remaining in the apartment that night, and left.

About 9:30 o'clock that evening the coroner's office reported the death to Inspector Nelder of the homicide detail, and shortly thereafter he and Inspector VanDervoort went to the Watson apartment. The door was locked, and the landlady admitted them. The apartment appeared to be in order, and there was no evidence of breakage or a forced entry. Money was found in the deceased's purse, standing on the bureau, and there was no evidence of robbery. Nelder learned from the Army authorities that defendant was staying at a certain downtown hotel, and the two inspectors went there. Defendant was not in his room but after searching the neighborhood, they found him on the street about 10:30 o'clock that evening, and they took him to the Hall of Justice for questioning. The story defendant then told the police and during subsequent interrogation, as well as at the trial, was substantially the same. He admitted that Saturday night, February 14, 1953, he and wife had a disagreement over the fact that she had sent him a Valentine and he had failed to remember her, but he denied that they had a serious argument then or at any other time.

Defendant stated that on the morning of February 15, 1953, while waiting for his wife to prepare breakfast, he went to the store, purchased a newspaper and six cans of beer, which he brought home; that while he was in the bathroom, his wife, without his knowledge, opened one of the cans of beer; that when he came into the kitchen reading the newspaper, he attempted, without looking, to open the same can, and cut his finger, causing it to bleed. They ate breakfast about 11:00 a.m., each having half of two waffles. In the garbage pail in the kitchen there was found a small part of a waffle and other remnants from the breakfast meal as described by defendant, as well as one empty and bloody beer can; the other five cans were found in the refrigerator.

According to defendant, after breakfast he asked his wife if she wanted to take a ride, but she declined stating that she wanted to clean the house in preparation for an expected house guest who was coming the next week. He stated that he then went to make the bed, that as he grasped the bedspread his finger started to bleed again, and he went to get a fresh bandage; that his wife told him that she would take care of the bed; and that he then decided to go out for awhile. He left the apartment about 12:30 p.m., first taking two laundry bags to a nearby laundromat. He then drove to Half Moon Bay, sunned himself on the beach for about half an hour, but left when it became windy. After his arrest, sand was discovered in defendant's shoes and socks. Defendant stated that he then went to Sutro's Baths for a swim, using his own swimming suit. After leaving Sutro's defendant stated that he started toward home, stopping first about 6:00 p.m. at a drugstore to buy his wife a heart-shaped box of candy in view of his Valentine Day oversight; next going to a bar where he had a couple of beers, then proceeding to a nearby store to purchase a pint of ice cream, and finally arriving home about 7:00 p.m. The Watsons' normal dinner hour was about 8:00 p.m. on Sundays. The box of candy and carton of ice cream were found in the kitchen by the police. Defendant stated that upon entering his apartment he searched for his wife and found her in the bathtub; that he started to lift her, realized that she was dead, desisted, and then telephoned the police. The clothing that defendant stated he was wearing that Sunday—a civilian sports suit—when he undertook to remove his wife from the bathtub was found at the hotel where he later registered that night; and all the clothing, including the jacket, was dry. Defendant stated that he did not get any of his clothing wet at that time.

In attacking defendant's alibi, the prosecution produced the testimony of a cab driver that he had seen defendant sometime between 12 noon and 1 p.m. that Sunday near a certain bar in Daly City. This was on an entirely different route from the one defendant stated that he had taken. Another cab driver and also the wife of the bartender testified that they had seen defendant near or in the bar at about 1:30 p.m. that day. Defendant at all times denied that he had been in Daly City on that Sunday.

It was the theory of the prosecution that defendant had killed his wife in the bedroom before leaving the apartment that Sunday morning; that he then went out to build up an elaborate alibi, and hid or made some disposition of the bloody bedclothes—the previously mentioned white bedspread and a certain yellow blanket which the police learned had been in the apartment but which, like the white bedspread, was never found; that defendant returned home before 7:00 p.m., cleaned up the apartment to hide the evidence of any struggle, and placed his wife in the bathtub to make the death look like an accident.

The building in which the Watsons occupied an upstairs apartment was so constructed that the tenant below could hear any noises or sounds which might occur above him. The tenant testified that on that Sunday morning between 10:00, when he arose, and 10:30 o'clock, when he left, there was no unusual sound from the Watson apartment; nor were there any unusual sounds between 12:30 and 2:30 p.m. or between 4:30 and 6:00 p.m., when he was again in his apartment. Both this tenant and the landlady in the building testified that on the preceding Saturday, February 14, they heard noises emanating from the Watson apartment, as if furniture was being moved. Upon this premise, the prosecution maintained that the homicide did not occur during the recited hours that the tenant below was in his apartment, and that the Saturday noises were caused by Mrs. Watson's cleaning activities that day, with the result that she had no reason for staying home Sunday to do the already-completed work. A neighbor in adjoining premises testified that sometime between 10:30 a.m. and 12:00 noon that Sunday morning, she heard three or more unusual thumping noises coming from the Watson apartment. No witness testified to hearing any screams or shouts from the Watson apartment that Sunday morning.

An autopsy on the deceased's body revealed some lacerations on the scalp, distributed in the back and central top area of her head. She had a bruise on her forehead, her neck was bruised as if she had been choked, and she had a small discoloration on her chin. There were multiple bruises over the backs of both hands and wrists, the pathologist characterizing them as defensive contusions caused when she placed her hands over her head to ward off the blows as she was struck from behind. There was no skull fracture but there had been extensive bleeding from the head lacerations. The brain showed multiple areas of contusions and hemorrhages. No water was present in the lungs. There was no evidence of a sexual attack. Apparently, the death was due to multiple traumatic injuries to the head, with contusions and concussion of the brain caused by use of a heavy blunt instrument. The death instrument was never found.

The time factor was a vital element in the case, and the prosecution presented medical testimony bearing on this point. Two medical experts testified as to their examination of the contents of the deceased's stomach, one fixing the death as having occurred one hour, and the other fixing it as one to two hours after the last meal had been eaten. As noted above, defendant stated that he and his wife had breakfast between 10 and 11 that Sunday morning; and he left the apartment about 12:30 p.m. In relation to the setting-in of rigor mortis, these medical experts agreed that eight hours after death would be the normal period required for a body of the age and condition of deceased's to reach the state of rigidity which had been described by other witnesses in reciting their observations at the time they went to defendant's apartment about 7:30 p.m. that Sunday. Again this would fix the time of death as about 11:30 a.m., which was before defendant stated that he left the apartment. With regard to whether the deceased's body had long been immersed in water, these medical experts testified that normally skin wrinkling in certain areas occurs about one hour after immersion and remains present for about twenty-two to twenty-four hours. There was no skin wrinkling when the body was examined some seventeen or eighteen hours after removal from the tub.

The civilian clothes that defendant had worn that Sunday were found in the hotel room where he went that evening. Included with this clothing was a pair of socks stuffed into his shoes. There were bloodstains on the soles of the socks—later determined to be both "A" and "O" types of blood; the deceased's was "A" and defendant's was "O." Defendant testified that after Officer Mullen left him in the apartment, he finished cleaning the bathroom, including some of the bloody water that fell on the bathroom floor when the body was removed. He did this work in his stocking feet. No other bloodstains were found on defendant's clothing.

On Sunday night, February 15, following defendant's interrogation at the Hall of Justice relative to the homicide, defendant was asked to remove his clothes for examination of his body. At that time it was observed that defendant had some scratches and bruises on his body, apparently recent ones and as to which he was only able to give a partial explanation: a bruise on his knee attributed to rifle range practice the preceding day, Saturday, and the cut on his right index finger resulting from his opening the beer can that Sunday morning; but he could not account for scratches found on his right forearm and left upper chest.

Police criminologists and inspectors made several scientific examinations of the Watson apartment, the first being on February 16. Numerous small bloodstains were found on the east wall of the bedroom (near the bed), which proved to be "O" (defendant's) blood. The bedroom rug near that same side wall appeared to have been rubbed or washed, but was dry; and when sprayed with luminal, that portion of the rug indicated the presence of blood. A luminous reaction was found between the bed and the east wall of the bedroom, going toward the bathroom. No bloodstains were found on the bathroom walls. Examination of the living-room furniture disclosed a few bloodstains on the undersurface of the divan (both "A" and "O" blood). The rose-colored bedspread which was found on the bed (though presumably it was originally on the divan according to the prosecution's evidence as above noted) also contained bloodstains (in the main "O" type but also some "A").

On the circumstantial evidence which has been summarized, the jury returned a verdict of second degree murder. Defendant does not contend that the evidence is insufficient to support the conviction, but he relies for reversal upon four assignments of error.

[2] First to be considered is defendant's complaint of the restriction of the defense's cross-examination of Police Officer Mullen. It is generally recognized that the scope of cross-examination should be confined to matters which have been elicited from the witness on direct examination. Code Civ. Proc. § 2048. The prosecution's objections in the main were sustained on this ground. The record shows that apparently some seven public officials examined the deceased's body in the apartment that Sunday evening between 7:15 and 7:45 p.m.: Officer Mullen; the two ambulance men, Hynes and Zielinsky; the two police inspectors, Flynn and Thompson; and the two coroner's men. Officer Mullen was the first police officer to arrive on the scene, and he remained there while these others came and went. Of this group, the prosecution only called the two ambulance men, in addition to Officer Mullen, as witnesses. The defense in the main was attempting to get in the record, through cross-examination of Officer Mullen, conversations between Officer Mullen and the public officials above-mentioned who did not testify at the trial; also various comments and remarks that Officer Mullen may have heard these persons make while they were in the apartment.

[3, 4] The chief object of cross-examination is to test the credibility, knowledge, and recollection of the witness. It should be given wide latitude, particularly in cases involving "a witness against a defendant in a criminal prosecution." 27 Cal.Jur. § 76, p. 97; People v. Whitehead, 113 Cal.App.2d 43, 48, 247 P.2d 717. Thus, it is undisputed that where a witness testifies as to part of a conversation on direct examination, then on cross-examination, the whole of the conversation may be elicited, at least so far as it is germane. Moreover, section 1854 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "When part of an act, declaration, conversation, or writing is given in evidence by one party, the whole on the same subject may be inquired into by the other; * * * and when a detached act, declaration, conversation, or writing is given in evidence, any other act, declaration, conversation, or writing, which is necessary to make it understood, may also be given in evidence." This section was applied in People v. Whitehead, supra, in reversing a murder conviction because of improper limitations imposed in the cross-examination of a prosecution witness. There the court prohibited cross-examination of the witness on certain conversation between the deceased and defendant at the time of the killing, as to which conversation "no testimony whatsoever was introduced on direct examination." 113 Cal.App.2d at page 49, 247 P.2d at page 721. This ruling was held to be erroneous upon the basis of the "verbal act theory," that "physical acts testified to cannot be arbitrarily separated from the verbal acts accompanying them and made at the same time and place", 113 Cal.App.2d at page 49, 247 P.2d at page 721, and so "when testimony has been introduced relative to an occurrence all parts of that occurrence, verbal as well as physical, are properly within the scope of the cross-examiner's probe." 113 Cal.App.2d at pages 49–50, 247 P.2d at page 721.

[5] But the Whitehead case involved a typical situation for application of the rule in that the object of the cross-examination was to bring out the conversation between the deceased and defendant accompanying the commission of the killing. Here, the situation differs in that the conversations, comments and remarks which the defense sought to elicit from Officer Mullen on cross-examination, though they formed no part of his testimony on direct examination, concerned conversations of third persons occurring after, rather than accompanying, the happening of the crime. Simply because Officer Mullen testified on direct examination about certain phases of his own inspection of the Watson apartment, his observations of the deceased's body, and his conversation with defendant, does not mean that the door was thereby opened to an unrestricted line of cross-examination upon anything that he may have heard from third persons while he was in the apartment. These remarks and comments, being in the nature of unsworn statements made by various third persons who had not been called as witnesses, and who had merely inspected the premises and expressed their personal views or opinions, were inadmissible hearsay and not proper cross-examination.

While defendant makes some general complaint concerning the alleged curtailment of the cross-examination of Officer Mullen and other prosecution witnesses, the record does not sustain his claim. On the contrary, it appears that the trial court was very liberal in the allowance of the defense's cross-examination of Officer Mullen, for his direct examination covered but 14 pages of the transcript while his cross-examination covered 80 pages. There were other instances showing the liberality of the trial court in allowing cross-examination of prosecution witnesses: Inspector Nelder's direct examination covered 86 pages, his cross-examination 169 pages; the autopsy surgeon's direct examination covered 14 pages, his cross-examination 163 pages; and another pathologist's direct examination covered 18 pages, his cross-examination 185 pages. It does not appear that the trial court misapplied the principles governing the proper limitation of cross-examination, but rather that it followed a liberal policy in its rulings.

[6] Defendant next contends that the trial court erred in giving an instruction that neither the prosecution nor the defense was required to call as witnesses "all persons who are shown to have been present at any of the events involved in the evidence." He claims that the prosecution should have called the two police inspectors and the two coroner's men to testify as to their observations concerning the degree of rigor mortis found in the deceased's body at the time of their arrival at the Watson apartment that Sunday evening between 7:15 and 7:45 p.m. He makes no comment, however, as to his own failure to call these witnesses if he thought their testimony would have supported his case.

Defendant takes the position that since these witnesses were not called by the prosecution, it should be presumed that their testimony would not have been corroborative of the account of prosecution witnesses Mullen and the two ambulance men, Hynes and Zielinsky, but rather would have been unfavorable to the prosecution's theory. For this proposition, he cites People v. Beal, 116 Cal.App.2d 475, 254 P.2d 100, where the prosecuting witness in a rape charge failed to produce her examining physician, and there was no other independent proof of the alleged offense other than her own testimony, which varied in several material particulars; and Julson v. Julson, 110 Cal.App.2d 797, 243 P.2d 558, where in a divorce action, about ten persons of a group witnessed a certain episode, no one of them was called as a witness, no explanation was given therefor despite the need for corroborating evidence, and under such circumstances the court was declared "bound to presume * * * that their testimony would be unfavorable and was for that reason suppressed." 110 Cal.App.2d at page 801, 243 P.2d at page 560. But the present situation is not comparable to the cited cases, for the prosecution did call several witnesses as above mentioned to testify to the degree of rigor mortis present in the body when they saw it that Sunday evening. The instruction that neither side was required to produce all witnesses who might be able to testify to that particular fact has a practical premise, for otherwise there would be a repetitious recital of testimony which would prolong the trial beyond reasonable limits. Under the circumstances, it would seem that defendant's remedy would have been to have called the witnesses on his own behalf if he believed their testimony would have aided his cause. See People v. Powell, 83 Cal.App. 62, 67–68, 256 P. 561.

[7, 8] The next question concerns the court's instructions on circumstantial evidence. As above stated, this was wholly a circumstantial evidence case, and the court properly gave several instructions on the subject: That where the evidence is susceptible of two constructions, it is the jury's duty to adopt that construction which points to defendant's innocence (CALJIC No. 26); and where circumstantial evidence is relied upon as proof of guilt to justify a conviction, the facts or circumstances must not only be entirely consistent with the theory of guilt but must be inconsistent with any other rational conclusion (CALJIC No. 27). People v. Bender, 27 Cal.2d 164, 175, 163 P.2d 8; People v. Koenig, 29 Cal.2d 87, 91–93, 173 P.2d 1; People v. Zerillo, 36 Cal.2d 222, 233, 223 P.2d 223. The following related CALJIC instructions were also given: No. 21 (presumption of innocence, reasonable doubt, burden of proof); No. 24 (direct and circumstantial evidence equally entitled to consideration); and No. 25 (direct and indirect evidence—code definitions). But the court refused to instruct in language substantially embodying CALJIC No. 28: That "When the case which has been made out by the People against a defendant rests entirely or chiefly on circumstantial evidence, and in any case before the jury may find a defendant guilty basing its finding solely on such evidence, each fact which is essential to complete a chain of circumstances that will establish the defendant's guilt must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt."

Defendant argues that it was error for the court to refuse to give a requested instruction in language substantially embodying CALJIC No. 28. People v. Bender, supra, People v. Koenig, supra, and People v. Zerillo, supra, were concerned primarily with the court's error in failing to give CALJIC No. 27, although in the Koenig case the refused instruction was extended to include, in part, the principle of CALJIC No. 28. In the Zerillo case the error was held reversible error but not so in the Bender and Koenig cases.

In the District Courts of Appeal the adequacy of the instructions on the principles governing circumstantial evidence cases has been variously handled. Depending on the particular record, the court's failure to give more complete instructions on the subject was held cause for reversal in People v. Hatchett, 63 Cal.App.2d 144, 152–156, 146 P.2d 469; People v. Rayol, 65 Cal.App.2d 462, 465–466, 150 P.2d 812; and People v. Tholke, 75 Cal.App.2d 857, 860–861 171 P.2d 904; but not in People v. Webster 79 Cal. App.2d 321, 327–329, 179 P.2d 633; People v. Candiotto, 128 Cal.App.2d 347, 356–358, 275 P.2d 500, and People v. Perez, 128 Cal. App.2d 750, 758–759, 276 P.2d 72. Where the error in the instructions has required a reversal, the essential consideration was in the failure to give a proper statement of the principle that circumstantial evidence must be inconsistent with any other rational hypothesis than that of guilt (CALJIC No. 27). CALJIC No. 28 was held applicable in the determination of a circumstantial evidence case in People v. Webster, supra, People v. Garnier, 95 Cal.App.2d 489, 500, 213 P.2d 111; People v. Candiotto, supra, and People v. Perez, supra; but was deemed "too liberal" in People v. Mansour, 103 Cal. App.2d 592, 598, 230 P.2d 52, 55. The latter view was based on the premise that the law only requires that defendant's guilt be proved beyond a reasonable doubt but not that each fact in the chain of circumstances—in the sense of "each incident or event inculpating the defendant"—be so proved, citing People v. Nunn, 65 Cal.App.2d 188, 195, 150 P.2d 476, and People v. Klinkenberg, 90 Cal.App.2d 608, 632, 204 P.2d 47, 613. Moreover the Mansour case rested on circumstantial evidence, while in the Nunn and Klinkenberg cases the evidence was not wholly circumstantial but was largely direct; and "a court is not required to instruct upon the rules of law applicable to circumstantial evidence which is incidental to and corroborative of direct evidence." People v. Jerman, 29 Cal.2d 189, 197, 173 P.2d 805, 809; see also People v. Zerillo, supra, 36 Cal.2d 222, 233, 223 P.2d 223; People v. Harmon, 89 Cal.App.2d 55, 60, 200 P.2d 32. People v. Kross, 112 Cal.App.2d 602, 615, 247 P.2d 44, and People v. Eddy, 123 Cal.App.2d 826, 835, 268 P.2d 47, follow People v. Mansour, supra, 103 Cal.App.2d 592, 598, 230 P.2d 52.

[9, 10] Properly interpreted, CALJIC No. 28 applies the doctrine of reasonable doubt not to proof of miscellaneous collateral or incidental facts, but only to proof of "each fact which is essential to complete a chain of circumstances that will establish the defendant's guilt." Although the import of the opening phrase in CALJIC No. 28 may be somewhat confusing because of the reference to its applicability when the People's case rests "chiefly" on circumstantial evidence, it is clearly applicable to cases such as the present one, which rests entirely upon circumstantial evidence. Accordingly, the trial court erred in refusing to give defendant's instruction which substantially embodied CALJIC No. 28. See cases collected: Stout on "Appellate Review of Criminal Convictions on Appeal," 43 Cal. L.Rev. 381, 446–447. However, the jury here was correctly instructed on the doctrine of reasonable doubt (CALJIC No. 21; Penal Code, §§ 1096, 1096a), the law applicable where evidence is susceptible of different constructions (CALJIC No. 26), the principle that circumstantial evidence of defendant's guilt must be inconsistent with any other rational hypothesis (CALJIC No.

27), and other related matters as above noted. Under these circumstances, it does not appear here that the court's failure to give a further instruction substantially in the language of CALJIC No. 28 has "resulted in a miscarriage of justice" within the meaning of the constitutional provision as hereinafter discussed. Const. art. VI, § 4½.

Defendant finally contends that the court erred in permitting the prosecution, over objection, to develop certain alleged collateral matters through his cross-examination, and which he claims could have had no purpose except to discredit and degrade him.

[11, 12] The first point to be considered is the propriety of the prosecution's questioning of defendant on the matter of his attending a radio-television school. After eliciting on defendant's cross-examination the fact of defendant's attendance, the prosecution continued the questioning by asking defendant as to the courses such instruction covered. Defendant's objection that such inquiry was incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, as well as beyond the scope of his direct examination, was overruled; and his answers indicated that his studies there consisted of script-writing, voice projection, and related matters. While the relevancy of such inquiry might be open to reasonable dispute, still it is generally recognized that where "a defendant takes the stand and makes a general denial of the crime with which he is charged, the permissible scope of cross-examination is very wide." People v. Zerillo, supra, 36 Cal.2d 222, 228, 223 P.2d 223, 227. Furthermore, on direct examination, defendant had been questioned about his background, and specifically with regard to his education. In response to such interrogation he related his graduation from high school, his one semester of college, his training with the Maritime Service. Under these circumstances the trial court did not err in allowing the prosecution's inquiry as to defendant's attendance at radio-television classes.

Defendant's second point of objection concerns his cross-examination as to his height and related facts. On direct examination, defendant stated that he was 6 feet 6 inches tall. On cross-examination, the prosecution asked defendant about certain marks on one of the door frames in his apartment, and defendant admitted that they were measurements of his height at various intervals. Then over objection, the prosecution was permitted to show that defendant had been attending gymnasium classes, the contention being that defendant did so to stretch his height beyond the 6 feet 6 inch limit fixed by the Army, and so he could be discharged from further Army service. The prosecution then made an offer of proof—that defendant had written a letter dated February 6, 1953, addressed to the Army authorities to the effect that he was above the maximum height of 78 inches acceptable to the Army and should be permitted to get out of the Army. The prosecution argued that defendant was wearing his Army uniform in court to gain sympathy and respect for his patriotic service, and the proffered evidence would serve to rebut this effect. Counsel for defendant responded that the proposed line of questioning was not only beyond the scope of the direct examination, but that defendant's motive in wearing the uniform was entirely collateral, for admittedly defendant was still in the Army and was entitled, in fact required, to wear the uniform. After considerable discussion with counsel, the trial court finally ruled that such evidence was admissible "for the limited purpose only * * * of permitting the jury to determine in the last analysis the weight that it is to give to this line of testimony." The prosecution then proceeded to cross-examine defendant about his gymnasium exercises and that about his letter to the Army authorities. He stated that in January, 1953, he attended these classes to improve his posture, not to stretch his height. He further stated that when he learned of the Army regulations as to height, he wrote the letter in question, not for the purpose of getting out of the Army earlier, for his discharge was due in March, 1953, and the letter would not be acted upon by that time, but he just wanted to see what would happen and to throw a "bombshell" into the Army administration.

[13] Section 2065 of the Code of Civil Procedure, after providing what answers a witness must give, states "but he need not give an answer which will have a tendency to subject him to punishment for a felony; nor need he give an answer which will have a direct tendency to degrade his character, unless it be to the very fact in issue * * *." Section 2066 of the same code provides: "It is the right of a witness to be protected from irrelevant, improper, or insulting questions, and * * to be examined only as to matters legal and pertinent to the issue." The challenged but admitted evidence was undoubtedly collateral and irrelevant to any issue in the case. The casting of aspersions on defendant's reasons for wearing an Army uniform that he was entitled to wear, and offering evidence to show an attempt to get a discharge from the Army had no bearing on his motive or credibility in relation to the crime charged. Such questioning on collateral matters and having apparently no other purpose but to degrade defendant has been held reversible error under certain circumstances. People v. Fleming, 166 Cal. 357, 383, 136 P. 291; People v. Rodriguez, 134 Cal. 140, 142, 66 P. 174; People v. Adams, 76 Cal.App. 178, 184, 244 P. 106. The question now presented is whether the error here requires a reversal in view of the provisions of Article VI, § 4½ of the Constitution.

This section, first adopted in 1911 with reference only to criminal cases but amended in 1914 so as to apply as well to civil cases, now reads: "No judgment shall be set aside, or new trial granted, in any case, on the ground of misdirection of the jury, or of the improper admission or rejection of evidence, or for any error as to any matter of pleading, or for any error as to any matter of procedure, unless, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice." (Emphasis added.) While it had long been provided in our statutory law that judgments would not be reversed because of technical errors or defects which did not affect the substantial rights of the defendant, Pen.Code, §§ 1258, 1404, the courts nevertheless in reviewing convictions in criminal cases had generally followed the rule that prejudice would be presumed from error and upon that basis the defendant was "entitled to a reversal of the judgment." People v. Williams, 18 Cal. 187, 194; see also People v. Murphy, 47 Cal. 103, 106; People v. Stanley, 47 Cal. 113, 119; People v. Furtado, 57 Cal. 345, 347; People v. Sansome, 84 Cal. 449, 451, 24 P. 143; People v. Moore, 103 Cal. 508, 511, 37 P. 510; People v. Richards, 136 Cal. 127, 128, 68 P. 477. The constitutional amendment added a new concept calling for a determination by the court that the alleged error resulted in "a miscarriage of justice." To this end the appellate court was required to review the evidence so as to form an "opinion" as to whether the assigned errors had affected the outcome of the case resulting in "a miscarriage of justice."

Shortly after the adoption of the amendment, its meaning and scope were considered in People v. O'Bryan, 1913, 165 Cal. 55, 130 P. 1042. That case involved the infringement of the defendant's constitutional right not to be compelled to testify against himself in a criminal action. Cal. Const. art. I, § 13. Conceding the error, there remained the question of whether the character and effect of that error were such as to require a reversal under the circumstances, having "due regard to the terms of section 4½ of article 6." 165 Cal. at page 63, 130 P. at page 1045. In an exhaustive discussion of the problem, the following principles were declared: That the section abrogated the former rule that prejudice is presumed from error, and allowed the reviewing court to consider the evidence to determine whether the error did in fact prejudice the defendant; that the distinction between reversible and nonreversible error does not rest upon the distinction between error relating to constitutional rights as contrasted with other rights, but that the section applies to both; that certain fundamental rights, however, are guaranteed to the defendant upon which he can insist regardless of the state of the evidence, such as the right to a jury trial and the right to protection under the plea of once in jeopardy, but that not every invasion of a constitutional right necessarily requires a reversal; that generally, error involving the infringement of a constitutional right, like any other error, requires a further determination whether the defendant has been prejudiced, and the final test is the "opinion" of the reviewing court, in the sense of its belief or conviction, as to the effect of the error; and that ordinarily where the result appears just, and it further appears that such result would have been reached if the error had not been committed, a reversal will not be ordered. Upon this basis, the error committed in the O'Bryan case was held not to be cause for reversal. See also People v. Mayfield, 1927, 85 Cal.App. 77, 259 P. 75.

The controlling consideration in applying the section is whether the error has resulted in a "miscarriage of justice." In determining the meaning of this phrase, the reviewing courts have stated the test to be applied in varying language. Emphasis in the main, however, has been placed on the constitutional requirements of a fair trial and due process, which emphasis is found in decisions resulting in reversals, People v. Sarazzawski, 27 Cal.2d 7, 11, 161 P.2d 934; People v. Mahoney, 201 Cal. 618, 627, 258 P. 607; People v. Hall, 199 Cal. 451, 458, 249 P. 859; People v. Carmichael, 198 Cal. 534, 547, 246 P. 62, as well as in decisions resulting in affirmances, People v. Kelso, 25 Cal.2d 848, 852–853, 155 P.2d 819; People v. Gonzales, 24 Cal.2d 870, 877, 151 P.2d 251; People v. Watts, 198 Cal. 776, 792–793, 247 P. 884. In People v. Watts, supra, 198 Cal. at page 793, 247 P. at page 890, it was said that "it must affirmatively appear to the satisfaction of this court * * * that the accused may well have been substantially injured by the error of which he complains"; and in People v. Kelso, supra, 25 Cal.2d at page 853, 155 P. 2d at page 822, it was said that there should be no reversal where "it appears that a different verdict would not otherwise have been probable."

Somewhat different is the language used where the reviewing court has expressed doubt as to whether the error had affected the verdict. Such view has been stated in the form of a double negative, with a reversal required if the court is of the opinion that "a different verdict would not have been improbable had the error not occurred", People v. Putnam, 20 Cal.2d 885, 892, 129 P.2d 367, 371, or "if it cannot be said that, in the absence of the error complained of, a different verdict would have been improbable, the erroneous ruling constitutes a miscarriage of justice, within the meaning of the constitutional provision. People v. Hamilton, 33 Cal.2d 45, 51, 198 P.2d 873; People v. Rogers, 22 Cal.2d 787, 807, 141 P.2d 722; People v. Putnam, 20 Cal.2d 885, 892, 129 P.2d 367." People v. Newson, 37 Cal.2d 34, 45, 230 P.2d 618, 624; see also People v. Carnine, 41 Cal.2d 384, 392, 260 P.2d 16; and cases collected in "Appellate Review of Criminal Convictions on Appeal," 43 Cal.L.Rev. 381.

[14] Giving due consideration to the varying language heretofore employed in relating the constitutional amendment to the particular situations involved, it appears that the test generally applicable may be stated as follows: That a "miscarriage of justice" should be declared only when the court, "after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence," is of the "opinion" that it is reasonably probable that a result more favorable to the appealing party would have been reached in the absence of the error. Phrasing the test in this language avoids any complexity which may be said to result from the language employed in the double negative approach, and such phrasing seems to coincide with the affirmative language used in the constitutional provision. We are of the view, however, that the test as above stated does not constitute a departure from the tests heretofore applied, but is merely a crystallization in affirmative form of the guiding principle which the courts have sought to enunciate in phrasing the test in other language. For example, the application of the double negative approach, as stated in some of the recent decisions, presupposes that a reversal will result only when there exists, in the opinion of the court, at least such an equal balance of reasonable probabilities as to leave the court in serious doubt as to whether the error has affected the result. But the fact that there exists at least such an equal balance of reasonable probabilities necessarily means that the court is of the opinion "that it is reasonably probable that a result more favorable to the appealing party would have been reached in the absence of the error." Thus, it appears that the tests, as variously stated, are not fundamentally different but, on the contrary, are essentially the same. Nevertheless, the test, as stated in any of the several ways, must necessarily be based upon reasonable probabilities rather than upon mere possibilities; otherwise the entire purpose of the constitutional provision would be defeated.

Applying the test as above stated to the record before us, we are of the opinion that it is not reasonably probable that a result more favorable to defendant would have been reached in the absence of the error in permitting the cross-examination of defendant as to his gymnasium exercises and his letter to the Army authorities. He gave an explanation of both acts designed to remove any derogatory effect that otherwise might have resulted from the prosecution's inquiry. It does not appear reasonably probable that the jury was influenced by such evidence to defendant's prejudice, or that the admission of such evidence affected the verdict. Similarly, we are of the opinion, as heretofore indicated, that it is not reasonably probable that a result more favorable to defendant would have been reached in the absence of the error in refusing to give the additional instruction relating to circumstantial evidence. The uncontradicted evidence concerning the condition of the body of the deceased clearly showed that the deceased met her death during the hours that defendant admittedly was in the apartment; and this evidence, together with other evidence, unerringly pointed to defendant's guilt. In short, from an "examination of the entire cause, including the evidence," it is our "opinion" that "the error complained of has" not "resulted in a miscarriage of justice."

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and TRAYNOR and McCOMB, JJ., concur.

SHENK, J., concurs in the judgment.

SCHAUER, Justice (dissenting).

In the majority opinion it is recognized that "It is the right of a witness [italics added] to be protected from irrelevant, improper or insulting questions, and * * * to be examined only as to matters legal and pertinent to the issue." (See Code of Civ. Proc., §§ 2065, 2066.) When the "witness" is also the defendant on trial for his life or liberty, failure to accord him that specifically declared right takes on vastly greater import than where the victim of the misconduct is affected only as a witness.

The majority opinion also recognizes that "The challenged but admitted evidence was undoubtedly collateral and irrelevant to any issue in the case. The casting of aspersions on defendant's reasons for wearing an Army uniform that he was entitled [apparently required] to wear, and offering evidence to show an attempt to get a discharge from the Army had no bearing on his motive or credibility in relation to the crime charged." In other words, it is conceded that the object and effect of asking the improper questions was to prejudice the defendant in the minds of the jurors.

Technical proof of guilt and effective persuasion of guilt may be quite different things. For proof of guilt to sustain the verdict on appellate review the prosecution relies upon circumstantial evidence which, while not wholly insufficient as a matter of law, is far from being overwhelming or even satisfyingly convincing as a matter of substance. Many of the suspicious circumstances are susceptible of innocent construction. The finding of guilt rests heavily upon inferences drawn in some respects from objective facts and as to other elements from opinion evidence. Certainly, resolution of the conflicting inferences and of the ultimate fact is for the jury, but when the scales of proof are so delicately balanced it should be resolved by a jury which has heard relevant evidence and which has not been prejudiced and thereby persuaded by irrelevant matters. It seems rather clear to me that the natural result of the conceded error was a miscarriage of justice—a verdict of guilty materially aided by other than relevant evidence and, hence, obtained by means other than those delimited by the standards of a fair trial.

For a more complete narration of the evidence, elaboration of the general unfair conduct of the trial, and a correct application of the pertinent rules of law, reference is made to the opinion prepared for the District Court of Appeal by Presiding Justice Peters and concurred in by Justices Bray and Fred B. Wood, Jr., reported at 288 P.2d 184.

For the reasons therein and hereinabove indicated I conclude that there has been a miscarriage of justice and would reverse and remand for a new trial.

CARTER, Justice.

I dissent.

In my opinion this case was correctly decided by the District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, Division One, in an able and exhaustive opinion prepared by Mr. Presiding Justice Peters and concurred in by Justices Bray and Wood. 288 P.2d 184, 195. After an exhaustive review of the evidence and an able and comprehensive discussion of the contentions of the respective parties, that opinion concludes: "We conclude, after reading the transcript, that, because we cannot say with conviction that, in the absence of the errors complained of, a different verdict would have been improbable, the judgment must be and is reversed, and a new trial ordered."

The majority of this court concedes, as it must, that numerous errors were committed by the trial court during the trial of this case, but concludes that such errors were not prejudicial to defendant and did not result in a miscarriage of justice, as that term is used in section 4½ of article VI of the Constitution of California.

I have heretofore had occasion to discuss the applicability of this constitutional provision to both criminal and civil cases, see dissenting opinions, People v. Tarantino, 45 Cal.2d 590, 604, 290 P.2d 505 and Buckley v. Chadwick, 45 Cal.2d 183, 203, 208, 289 P.2d 242, and I will not here take the time to review the authorities or discuss their applicability to the case at bar. I cannot refrain from stating that I positively do not agree with the holding of the majority here "that generally, error involving the infringement of a constitutional right, like any other error, requires a further determination whether the defendant has been prejudiced, and the final test is the 'opinion' of the reviewing court, in the sense of its belief or conviction, as to the effect of the error; and that ordinarily where the result appears just, and it further appears that such result would have been reached if the error had not been committed, a reversal will not be ordered." On the contrary, it is my positive and unqualified opinion that it was not the intention of the framers of section 4½ of article VI of our Constitution or of the people who voted for the adoption of said provision, that said section could be invoked for the purpose of affirming a judgment in either a criminal or civil case where the appealing party had been denied a constitutional or statutory right, because such a holding would have the effect of reading into said provision the repeal of all constitutional provisions which were adopted for the purpose of establishing a system for the administration of justice which the courts of this state are required to follow if we are to have a government of law and not of men. In other words, it is my concept that before a conviction of a criminal offense may be sustained, it is necessary that the constitutional and statutory provisions which outline the procedure to be followed, must be complied with, and it cannot be said that guilt has been established in accordance with law if the accused has been denied any of the rights guaranteed to him by the Constitution and statutes of this state.

It is perfectly obvious to me that the concept of the framers of section 4½ of article VI of our Constitution was that technical errors in instructions to the jury or in the admission or rejection of evidence or errors in pleading or procedure which could not affect the result in a case should not be relied upon as a ground for the reversal of a judgment. In fact this is what the plain language of the section states, and I am in full accord with this concept. However, the section has not been so construed by this court. In fact, the section has been invoked to affirm judgments of conviction where the errors complained of clearly and obviously affected the substantial rights of the defendant, see People v. Tarantino, 45 Cal.2d 590, 604, 290 P.2d 505. To my mind it is perfectly obvious that this salutary provision of our Constitution has been applied in recent years in such a manner that any judgment of conviction may be upheld regardless of the grievous errors which may have been committed by the trial court because it was the view of four members of this court that the conviction should be upheld regardless of the effect of such errors; in other words, it is a matter of the philosophy of the individual members of this court rather than the interpretation of the constitutional provision here involved.

A reading of the majority opinion here demonstrates that whenever the majority desires to invoke section 4½ of article VI for the purpose of affirming a judgment of conviction, it simply resorts to double-talk and finally arrives at the conclusion that the judgment should be affirmed. This is precisely what has happened in the case at bar.

For the reasons stated in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal hereinbefore cited, I would reverse the judgment and grant defendant a new trial.

Victor DESNY, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Billy WILDER, Paramount Pictures Corporation, a corporation, and Paramount Film Distributing Corporation, a corporation, Defendants and Respondents.

L. A. 23892.

Supreme Court of California.
June 28, 1956.

Action against moving picture producer to recover for use of plaintiff's story. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Stanley Mosk, J., granted summary judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court, Schauer, J., held that pleadings and affidavits raised substantial fact issues as to whether writer had submitted synopsis to producer on condition that he should be paid if story were used, and whether producer had in fact used material from the synopsis, which was based on historical facts, precluding summary judgment.

Judgment affirmed in part and reversed in part and remanded; attempted appeals dismissed.

Opinion, 286 P.2d 55, vacated.

1. Judgment 🔑186

Issue on motion for summary judgment is whether opponent has presented any facts which give rise to a triable issue or defense, and facts alleged in opponent's affidavit must be accepted as true, and affidavits need not necessarily be composed wholly of strictly evidentiary facts. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 437c.

2. Judgment 🔑185(5)

A summary judgment is proper only if affidavits in support of motion would be sufficient to sustain a judgment and opponent does not show facts sufficient to present a triable issue, and affidavits must be construed with all intendments in favor of opponent. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 437c.

3. Appeal and Error 🔑882(1)

Supreme Court is not bound to accept concessions of parties as establishing the law applicable to a case.

4. Literary Property 🔑7

The act of disclosing an unprotectible idea, if act is in fact a bargained-for exchange for a promise, may be consideration to support the promise.

5. Contracts 🔑15

A party cannot, by unilateral words or deeds, thrust upon another a contractual relationship unless the latter has, by his own words or deeds, consented thereto.

6. Property 🔑1

An essential element of individual property is the legal right to exclude others from enjoying it.

7. Literary Property 🔑2, 5

That a product of the mind has caused its producer money and labor, and has a value for which others are willing to pay, does not insure it protection as private property, and an idea, after voluntary communication to others, is free to common use.

8. Literary Property 🔑2

There is no individual property in abstract ideas.

9. Literary Property 🔑7

A contract for conveyance of and payment for an idea may be either express or implied.

10. Literary Property 🔑7

The conveyance of an idea can constitute valuable consideration and can be bargained for before it is disclosed to proposed purchaser, but once it is conveyed, it belongs to the one to whom it has been conveyed, and he may use it as his own.

11. Literary Property 🔑7

Where an idea has been conveyed with expectation by purveyor that compensation will be paid if idea is used, recipient may thereafter gratuitously promise to pay a reasonable compensation for idea and create a valid obligation.

12. Literary Property 🔑7

The purveyor of an abstract idea cannot recover compensation for idea unless before or after disclosure he has obtained an express promise to pay or the circumstances preceding and attending disclosure, together with the conduct of offeree acting with knowledge of the circumstances, show a promise of the type referred to as "implied" or "implied in fact".

13. Literary Property 🔑7

The law will not imply a promise to pay for an abstract idea from mere facts that idea has been conveyed, is valuable, and has been used for profit, even though the conveyance was made with hope or expectation that some obligation would ensue.

14. Literary Property 🔑9

In action to recover from moving picture producer on account of idea which plaintiff disclosed to producer and which producer allegedly used in photoplay, evidence was insufficient to take to jury question whether there had been before disclosure, a contract to pay for the idea or whether producer's conduct disclosed a promise to pay. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., §§ 53, 437c; West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1584, 1589, 1605, 1606, 1619–1621, 3523.

15. Literary Property 🔑1

"Literary property" means either the interest of an author in his works or the corporeal property in which an intellectual production is embodied.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Literary Property".

16. Literary Property 🔑1

Literary property in an intellectual production is protected by the common law, by federal statute, and by state law. 17 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.; West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 980; U.S.C.A.Const. art. 1, § 8.

17. Copyrights 🔑1

The common law protects only a property right while a copyright statute grants a limited monopolistic privilege.

18. Literary Property 🔑2

Protectible literary property may be created out of unprotectible material such as historical events, and does not depend upon the novelty of plot or theme.

19. Literary Property 🔑2

Creation is not essential to literary property, and a compiler may have property in the result of his labors.

20. Literary Property 🔑7

A person may recover for the use of its literary creation, even if creation is not copyrightable, if it was disclosed under contract.

21. Principal and Agent 🔑101(1), 178(1)

Where moving picture producer's secretary had authority to receive and transmit messages to producer, she also had authority to receive and transmit conditions and terms of an offer and her knowledge was knowledge of producer. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 2332.

22. Literary Property 🔑2

A person can have no property rights in public domain facts.

23. Literary Property 🔑5

A person may recover for the use of his writing in production of moving picture even if facts upon which writing was based had previously been conveyed to producer.

24. Judgment 🔑185.3(8)

In action by writer to recover from moving picture producer on account of producer's alleged use of a synopsis of writer's story in production of moving picture, pleadings and affidavits raised substantial fact issues as to whether writer had submitted synopsis to producer on condition that he should be paid if story were used, and whether producer had in fact used material from the synopsis, which was based on historical facts, precluding summary judgment. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., § 437c.

25. Pleading 🔑237(6)

In action for use of plaintiff's writing in production of moving picture, wherein defendant, in moving for summary judgment, relied upon writer's testimony that he had submitted synopsis of his writing to producer, variance between this testimony and allegation in complaint that writer had submitted his story did not mislead defendant and was not a complete failure of proof, and writer should have been permitted to amend to conform to proof. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 469–471.

26. Pleading 🔑229

Great liberality is indulged in matters of amendment to end that lawsuits may be determined upon their merits.

27. Pleading 🔑248(1)

For purpose of determining whether an amendment is possible, cause of action which may be altered refers to the legal obligation which is sought to be enforced.

28. Appeal and Error 🔑103, 113(1)

Orders denying motions to set aside summary judgment and denying permission to file amendment to complaint were not appealable.

SCHAUER, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a summary judgment rendered against him in this action to recover the reasonable value of a literary composition, or of an idea for a photoplay, a synopsis of which composition, embodying the idea, he asserts he submitted to defendants for sale, and which synopsis and idea, plaintiff alleges, were accepted and used by defendants in producing a photoplay.

The case as presented to us is perplexed by manifold problems, some of which appear only upon a composite view of the pleadings, the evidence, and the briefs on appeal. Among the questions are these: Is the plaintiff seeking to recover for (a) the conveyance[1] of an abstract idea or (b) the sale of a literary property? Or (c) is he clutching at both theories? (d) Does plaintiff's evidence tend to show an express or implied contract or (e) facts from which the law might impose a so-called quasi-contractual obligation, as to either the idea or the synopsis? The ultimate question is (f), Does the record permit the conclusion that there is no triable issue of material fact pertinent to any tenable theory available to plaintiff?

To answer the above listed questions with any substantial degree of confidence requires statement of the factual substance of the record, explanation of the nature of the judgment appealed from and the rules governing our consideration of it, together also with some discussion of the law of ideas, the law of literary property, and the law of contracts as it relates to transactions concerning ideas and literary property, with definitive recognition of the somewhat differing situations to which, as descriptive of the "contract" or obligation, some authorities apply the terms "express," "inferred," "implied in fact," "implied-in-law" or "quasi-contractual," and the significance of the subjective and objective tests in determining contractual existence under the several possibly pertinent theories.

After threading the maze, we have concluded, for reasons hereinafter stated, that the summary judgment in favor of defendants was erroneously granted and should be reversed.

The Pleadings. The complaint[2] alleges (Count I) that "Plaintiff conceived, originated and completed a certain untitled literary and dramatic composition (hereinafter called 'Plaintiff's Property') based upon the life of Floyd Collins. Plaintiff has, at all times * * * been, and now is, the sole * * * owner of Plaintiff's Property, * * * Plaintiff submitted Plaintiff's Property to the Defendants * * * In making said submission, Plaintiff stated * * * that it was made for the purpose of sale of Plaintiff's Property to Defendants to be used * * * only if

[1] Lest there be some who would question use of the word "conveyance" in this connotation, it is noted that no less an authority than Coleridge speaks of "words that convey feelings, and words that flash images." For general use in this opinion the term "conveyance" seems slightly more accurate than the word "disclosure."

Defendants paid to Plaintiff the reasonable value thereof. Defendants accepted submission of Plaintiff's Property * * * [Shortly after accepting submission of plaintiff's property defendants] commenced the preparation of and * * * actually photographed a motion picture photoplay entitled 'Ace In The Hole,'[3] [and have exhibited the same] * * * At all times [concerned] * * * the Defendants knew * * * that the Plaintiff expected them to pay him the reasonable value of Plaintiff's Property if used by them. With such knowledge * * * the Defendants did copy and use Plaintiff's Property in and in connection with said motion picture photoplay." That the reasonable value of plaintiff's property at the time of use was $150,000, "no part * * * of which has been paid." We do not consider Counts II and III, as plaintiff concedes that as to them the judgment should be affirmed.

The material allegations of the complaint were denied by defendants in their answer. Thereafter defendants filed notice of motion for summary judgment. The motion was heard upon affidavits filed by defendants and upon plaintiff's deposition, which is treated as an affidavit in opposition to the motion. The judgment entered upon the granting of such motion is the subject of this appeal.

Inasmuch as the contentions of the parties are largely related, directly or indirectly, to the significance and sufficiency of the evidence, and as all evidential contentions must be resolved in the light of the rules governing summary judgment proceedings it is desirable, before undertaking discussion of the principal problems, to indicate the pertinent rules concerning summary judgments.

[1, 2] The Law of Summary Judgments. Motions for summary judgment are provided for in section 437c of the Code of Civil Procedure. The principles to be observed in proceeding under that section are stated as follows in Eagle Oil & Refining Co. v. Prentice (1942), 19 Cal.2d 553, 555–556, 122 P.2d 264: The issue to be determined by the trial court in ruling upon a motion for summary judgment is whether or not the party opposing the motion "has presented any facts which give rise to a triable issue or defense, and not to pass upon or determine the issue itself, that is, the true facts in the case. [Citations.] * * * [T]he better rule is that the facts alleged in the affidavits of the party against whom the motion is made must be accepted as true, and that such affidavits to be sufficient need not necessarily be composed wholly of strictly evidentiary facts. [Citation.]" (See also Gardner v. Jonathan Club (1950), 35 Cal.2d 343, 347, 217 P.2d 961; Hardy v. Hardy (1943), 23 Cal.2d 244, 245, 143 P.2d 701; Walsh v. Walsh (1941), 18 Cal.2d 439, 441, 116 P.2d 62.) A summary judgment is proper only if the affidavits in support of the moving party "would be sufficient to sustain judgment in his favor, and * * * [his opponent] does not 'by affidavit or affidavits * * * show such facts as may be deemed by the judge hearing the motion sufficient to present a triable issue of fact.' [Citations.]" (Coyne v. Krempels (1950), 36 Cal.2d 257, 261, 223 P.2d 244.) In other words, the affidavits are to be construed with all intendments in favor of the party opposing the motion—here, plaintiff.

The Facts upon Which the Claim of Contract is Based. Construed agreeably to the rules above stated, it appears from the present record that defendant Wilder at the times here involved was employed by defendant Paramount Pictures Corporation (sometimes hereinafter referred to as Paramount) either as a writer, producer or director, or a combination of the three. In November, 1949, plaintiff telephoned Wilder's office. Wilder's secretary, who was also employed by Paramont, answered, and plaintiff stated that he wished to see Wilder. At the secretary's insistence that plaintiff explain his purpose, plaintiff "told her about this fantastic unusual story. * * * I described to her the story in a few words. * * * I told her that it was the life story of Floyd Collins who was trapped and made sensational news for two weeks * * * and I told her the plot. * * * I described to her the entrapment and the death, in ten minutes, probably. She seemed very much interested and she liked it. * * * The main emphasis was the central idea, which was the entrapment, this boy who was trapped in a cave eighty-some feet deep. I also told her the picture had never been made with a cave background before." Plaintiff sought to send Wilder a copy of the story but when the secretary learned of its length of some 65 pages she stated that Wilder would not read it, that he wanted stories in synopsis form, that the story would first be sent to the script department, and "in case they think it is fantastic and wonderful, they will abbreviate it and condense it in about three or four pages, and the producers and directors get to see it." Plaintiff protested that he preferred to do the abbreviating of the story himself, and the secretary suggested that he do so. Two days later plaintiff, after preparing a three or four page outline of the story, telephoned Wilder's office a second time and told the secretary the synopsis was ready. The secretary requested plaintiff to read the synopsis to her over the telephone so that she could take it down in shorthand, and plaintiff did so. During the conversation the secretary told plaintiff that the story seemed interesting and that she liked it. "She said that she would talk it over with Billy Wilder and she would let me know." Plaintiff on his part told the secretary that defendants could use the story only if they paid him "the reasonable value of it * * * I made it clear to her that I wrote the story and that I wanted to sell it. * * * I naturally mentioned again that this story was my story which has taken me so much effort and research and time, and therefore if anybody used it they will have to pay for it * * * She said that if Billy Wilder of Paramount uses the story, 'naturally we will pay you for it.'" Plaintiff did not remember whether in his first telephone conversation with the secretary anything was said concerning his purpose of selling the story to defendants.[4] He did not at any time speak with defendant Wilder. It seems clear, however, that one of the authorized functions of the secretary was to receive and deliver messages to Wilder and hence, as is developed infra, that on this record her knowledge would be his knowledge. Plaintiff's only subsequent contact with the secretary was a telephone call to her in July, 1950, to protest the alleged use of his composition and idea in a photoplay produced and exhibited by defendants. The photoplay, as hereinafter shown in some detail, closely parallels both plaintiff's synopsis and the historical material concerning the life and death of Floyd Collins. It also includes a fictional incident which appears in plaintiff's synopsis and which he claims is his creation, presumably in the sense of being both original and novel in its combination with the facts from the public commons[5] or public domain.

[4] Although defendants in their answer deny submission of plaintiff's story, nevertheless defendants state that for purposes of the motion for summary judgment they "are assuming that plaintiff did make a submission to defendants in accordance with his testimony in his deposition. At the trial of the action the purported fact of such submission would be contested, but to simplify the issues it is not contested in the making of this motion."

[5] The term "public commons" is used and defined by Mr. William B. Carman of the Los Angeles Bar (of counsel for defendants) in a paper appearing in 42 Cal.L. Rev. 52, 59. Mr. Carman says, "I have used the words 'public commons' to describe * * * elements which can under no circumstances constitute private property, and avoided the more usual 'public domain,' because the latter phrase leads to confusion. 'Public domain' of course includes these elements, but it includes also any pre-existing published works which were not initially protected by statutory copyright, or on which such

The Contentions of the Parties and Amici Curiae. In his opening brief plaintiff states "It is conceded for purposes of argument [italics added] that the synopsis submitted by plaintiff to defendants was not sufficiently unique or original to be the basis for recovery under the law of plagiarism or infringement. It is conceded that the plaintiff first obtained the central idea or theme of his story, which involves the entrapment of a man in an underground cave and the national interest promoted by the attempt to rescue him, from the Floyd Collins incident which occurred in the 1920's.

"It is appellant's [plaintiff's] contention, however, that in spite of this, the lower court committed reversible error in granting a summary judgment in this case for the reason that the summary judgment had the effect of denying the plaintiff the right to prove that his idea or synopsis was the subject of a contract wherein the defendants promised to pay him for it if they used it. It is clear that 'ideas', as such, may still be the subject of a contract in California and may be protected, as such, even though not protectible under the laws of plagiarism."

Plaintiff also asserts that he "is not suing defendants for plagiarizing his idea but is suing defendants because they agreed to pay him the reasonable value of the use of his idea and story synopsis if they used his idea" and that "defendants so used plaintiff's idea and synopsis but refused to pay him as they agreed." But the complaint, as already shown, alleges that "Plaintiff conceived, originated and completed [and offered for sale to and defendants accepted submission of and thereafter used] a certain untitled literary and dramatic composition (hereinafter called 'Plaintiff's Property') based upon the life of Floyd Collins."

If plaintiff is seeking to recover for a mere abstract, unprotectible idea, he must meet certain rules; if he seeks recovery for a literary composition in which he conceivably had a property right, the rules are quite different, as will subsequently be shown.

It may be that plaintiff's concessions and arguments, in the light of the pleadings and evidence, are intended to suggest that there is some nebulous middle area between an abstract idea and a literary composition, wherein the idea has been cast in "concrete" form but not "concrete" enough to constitute a literary property. (See generally, Melville B. Nimmer of the Los Angeles Bar, writing in 27 So.Cal.L.Rev. 140–144, and cases cited.) However, for the purposes of this case at least, we find it unnecessary and undesirable to recognize any such hybrid, although we are aware that the Supreme Court of the United States has spoken of a "quasi property" right in news gathered and disseminated by a news service agency. (See International News Service v. Associated Press (1918), 248 U.S. 215, 242, 39 S.Ct. 68, 73, 63 L.Ed. 211, 222.) The plaintiff here, we conclude, must stand or fall, and this case will be resolved, on rules applicable to ideas on the one hand or literary property on the other.

[3] This court, of course, is not bound to accept concessions of parties as establishing the law applicable to a case. (Bradley v. Clark (1901), 133 Cal. 196, 209–210, 65 P. 395; Berniker v. Berniker (1947), 30 Cal.2d 439, 449, 182 P.2d 557.) It is also to be noted that plaintiff's concession is qualified by the words "for purposes of argument." Hence, although plaintiff makes it clear that he is not suing for "plagiarism or infringement," we feel constrained to the view that in the light of the entire record we cannot disregard a protection has expired; in fact this is its usual technical meaning. Such works are freely open for use by either plaintiff or defendant, but it is not the law that plaintiff's claim of a property interest is inevitably defeated by the prior existence of similar material in works in the 'public domain.'" For the purposes of this opinion it is, however, unnecessary to observe the distinction suggested by Mr. Carman.

[4] Defendants concede, as they must, that "the act of disclosing an unprotectible idea, if that act is in fact the bargained-for exchange for a promise, may be consideration to support the promise." They then add, "But once the idea is disclosed without the protection of a contract, the law says that anyone is free to use it. Therefore, subsequent use of the idea cannot constitute consideration so as to support a promise to pay for such use." And as to the effect of the evidence defendants argue that plaintiff "disclosed his material before * * * [defendants] did or could do anything to indicate their willingness or unwillingness to pay for the disclosure. The act of using the idea, from which appellant attempts to imply a promise to pay, came long after the disclosure * * * Accordingly, even if a promise to pay could be found * * * it came after the disclosure had been made and is therefore unenforceable." The conclusion of law asserted in the last sentence, insofar as it might be applicable to an express (whether proved by direct or by circumstantial evidence) promise to pay for the service (the conveyance of the idea) previously rendered from which a profit has been derived, for reasons which hereinafter appear (infra, 299 P.2d 269), is not tenable.

[5] Relative to the subject of inferred or implied contractual liability, amici curiae Association of Motion Picture Producers, Inc., National Broadcasting Company, Inc., and Four Star Films, Inc., are concerned with the state of the law. They fear that what they conceive to be quasi contractual situations, wherein the law equitably but fictionally presumes of one the making of a promise which he not only did not make but never intended to make, will be confused with circumstances which evidence actual meeting-of-the-minds but unspoken contracts; i. e., what they appear to consider to be properly termed implied-in-fact contracts. They caution us that in a situation such as this, "One party cannot, by unilateral words or deeds, thrust upon another a contractual relationship unless the latter has, by his own words or deeds, consented thereto" and that "In the absence of manifest assent to the same thing upon the same terms by both parties, there is no contract." With the first of these cautionary propositions we unqualifiedly agree. Our agreement with the second, as will hereinafter appear, must depend on what is meant by "manifest assent." We do not agree with the further proposition, asserted or implied by defendants and their related amici, that an idea which before conveyance has sufficient value to constitute consideration for a promise to pay its reasonable value necessarily and ipso facto upon disclosure becomes devoid of value so that as a matter of law it cannot support a promise then—and only then—made to pay its reasonable value. A promise, made in advance of disclosure, to pay for the act of conveyance or disclosure of an idea which may or may not have value is one thing. A promise, made after conveyance of the idea to the promisor, to pay reasonable value for an idea which does have value to the promisor and which has been conveyed to, and has been used by, him is another contract, the possible enforceability of which is discussed, infra, 299 P.2d 269.

From what has been indicated above it appears necessary for us in the proper disposition of this case, having in mind the problems which apparently will confront the trial court at a trial on the merits and the duty imposed on us by section 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to consider not only (1) the rules for recovery pertaining to the conveyance of ideas, as such, but also (2) the question whether the synopsis of plaintiff's untitled composition could on any view of the evidence be deemed entitled to the status of a literary property, and (3) the rules defining rights of recovery, so far as pertinent on this record, if plaintiff has a literary property in his composition.

The Law Pertaining to Ideas. Generally speaking, ideas are as free as the air and as speech and the senses, and as potent or weak, interesting or drab, as the experiences, philosophies, vocabularies, and other variables of speaker and listener may combine to produce, to portray, or to comprehend. But there can be circumstances when neither air nor ideas may be acquired without cost. The diver who goes deep in the sea, even as the pilot who ascends high in the troposphere, knows full well that for life itself he, or someone on his behalf, must arrange for air (or its respiration-essential element, oxygen) to be specially provided at the time and place of need. The theatrical producer likewise may be dependent for his business life on the procurement of ideas from other persons as well as the dressing up and portrayal of his self-conceptions; he may not find his own sufficient for survival. As counsel for the Writers Guild aptly say, ideas "are not freely usable by the entertainment media until the latter are made aware of them." The producer may think up the idea himself, dress it and portray it; or he may purchase either the conveyance of the idea alone or a manuscript embodying the idea in the author's concept of a literary vehicle giving it form, adaptation and expression. It cannot be doubted that some ideas are of value to a producer.

[6-8] An idea is usually not regarded as property, because all sentient beings may conceive and evolve ideas throughout the gamut of their powers of cerebration and because our concept of property implies something which may be owned and possessed to the exclusion of all other persons. We quote as an accurate statement of the law in this respect the following language of Mr. Justice Brandeis, dissenting in International News Service v. Associated Press (1918), supra, 248 U.S. 215, 250, 39 S.Ct. 68, 76, 63 L.Ed. 211, 225: "An essential element of individual property is the legal right to exclude others from enjoying it. If the property is private, the right of exclusion may be absolute; if the property is affected with a public interest, the right of exclusion is qualified. But the fact that a product of the mind has cost its producer money and labor, and has a value for which others are willing to pay, is not sufficient to ensure to it this legal attribute of property. The general rule of law is, that the noblest of human productions—knowledge, truths ascertained, conceptions, and ideas—become. after voluntary communication to others, free as the air to common use." [6] Of similar import, but stated negatively: "The doctrine that an author has a property right in his ideas and is entitled to demand for them the same protection which the law accords to the proprietor of personal property generally finds no recognition either in the common law or in the statutes of any civilized country." (34 Am.Jur. 402-403, § 5; 18 C.J.S., Copyright and Literary Property, § 10 e, p. 143; cf. Golding v. R. K. O. Pictures, Inc. (1950), 35 Cal.2d 690, 693-697, 702, 711-712, 221 P.2d 95; Burtis v. Universal Pictures Co., Inc. (1953), 40 Cal.2d 823, 831, 256 P.2d 933; Kurlan v. Columbia Broadcasting System (1953), 40 Cal.2d 799, 256 P.2d 962.) Whether the theory upon which this court sustained recovery in the Golding case may properly be classed as a property rights theory is not clear (see pages 694-695 of 35 Cal.2d, pages 97-98 of 221 P.2d and pages 831, 836-837 of 40 Cal.2d, pages 939, 942-943 of 256 P.2d) but it is clear that California does not now accord individual property type protection to abstract ideas.

(Weitzenkorn v. Lesser[7] (1953), 40 Cal.2d 778, 788–789, 256 P.2d 947.) This accords with the general weight of authority. (See generally, Nimmer, "The Law of Ideas," (1954) 27 So.Cal.L.Rev. 120 et seq. and cases cited.) "There may be literary property in a particular combination of ideas [and this must presuppose an expression thereof] or in the form in which ideas are embodied. There can be none in the ideas." (Fendler v. Morosco (1930), 253 N.Y. 281, 287, 171 N.E. 56, 58.) Neither common law nor statutory copyright extends protection to an idea as such. "[O]nly in the 'expression' of a copyrighted work does any monopoly inhere; the 'theme,' the 'plot,' the 'ideas' may always be freely borrowed." (Dellar v. Samuel Goldwyn, Inc. (2 Cir., 1945), 150 F.2d 612.)

The principles above stated do not, however, lead to the conclusion that ideas cannot be a subject of contract. As Mr. Justice Traynor stated in his dissenting opinion in Stanley v. Columbia Broadcasting System (1950), supra, 35 Cal.2d 653, 674, 221 P.2d 73: "The policy that precludes protection of an abstract idea by copyright does not prevent its protection by contract. Even though an idea is not property subject to exclusive ownership, its disclosure may be of substantial benefit to the person to whom it is disclosed. That disclosure may therefore be consideration for a promise to pay * * * Even though the idea disclosed may be 'widely known and generally understood' [citation], it may be protected by an express contract providing that it will be paid for regardless of its lack of novelty." (Cf. Brunner v. Stix, Baer & Fuller Co. (1944, 352 Mo. 1225), 181 S.W.2d 643, 646; Schonwald v. F. Burkart Mfg. Co. (1947, 356 Mo. 435), 202 S.W.2d 7.) Amici supporting plaintiff add, "If a studio wishes to have an idea disclosed to it and finds that idea of sufficient value to make use of it, it is difficult to see how any hardship is involved in requiring payment of the reasonable value of the material submitted." The principles enunciated in the above quotation from Justice Traynor's dissent are accepted as the law of California (Weitzenkorn v. Lesser (1953), supra, 40 Cal.2d 778, 791–792, 256 P.2d 947) and we have no quarrel with amici's postulation. This case, however, remains to be resolved.

[9] The lawyer or doctor who applies specialized knowledge to a state of facts and gives advice for a fee is selling and conveying an idea. In doing that he is rendering a service. The lawyer and doctor have no property rights in their ideas, as such, but they do not ordinarily convey them without solicitation by client or patient. Usually the parties will expressly contract for the performance of and payment for such services, but, in the absence of an express contract, when the service is requested and rendered the law does not hesitate to infer or imply a promise to compensate for it. Columbia Broadcasting System, (Cal.1949), 208 P.2d 9, 17; Id. on rehearing, 35 Cal.2d 653, 668, 672, 221 P.2d 73, 23 A.L.R.2d 216; Weitzenkorn v. It is to be noted that the opinion of Justice Edmonds in the Weitzenkorn case, sometimes referred to as the majority opinion, has the full concurrence of but two other justices (Chief Justice Gibson, and Justice Shenk), with a limited concurrence by Justice Schauer. Justices Traynor and Spence concur only in the judgment and Justice Carter dissents. However, any portions of the Weitzenkorn opinion quoted herein as holdings of the court, or cited with approval, are to be understood as now having the concurrence of a majority of the court.

Zumwalt v. Schwarz (1931), 112 Cal.App. 734, 736, 297 P. 608; People's Nat. Bank v. Geisthardt (1898), 55 Neb. 232, 237–238, 75 N.W. 582; 6 Cal.Jur.2d 378, § 181; 5 Am.Jur. 351, § 153; 41 Am.Jur. 256, § 142; 7 C.J.S., Attorney and Client, § 190 (b), p. 1078; 70 C.J.S., Physicians and Surgeons, § 68, p. 1023; see also Long v. Rumsey (1938), 12 Cal.2d 334, 341–342, 84 P.2d 146.) In other words the recovery may be based on contract either express or implied. The person who can and does convey a valuable idea to a producer who commercially solicits the service or who voluntarily accepts it knowing that it is tendered for a price should likewise be entitled to recover. In so holding we do not fail to recognize that free-lance writers are not necessarily members of a learned profession and as such bound to the exalted standards to which doctors and lawyers are dedicated. So too we are not oblivious of the hazards with which producers of the class represented here by defendants and their related amici are confronted through the unsolicited submission of numerous scripts on public domain materials in which public materials the producers through their own initiative may well find nuclei for legitimately developing the "stupendous and colossal." The law, however, is dedicated to the proposition that for every wrong there is a remedy (Civ.Code, § 3523) and for the sake of protecting one party it must not close the forum to the other. It will hear both and seek to judge the cause by standards fair to both. To that end the law of implied contracts assumes particular importance in literary idea and property controversies.

The Law Pertaining to Contracts, Express, Implied-in-Fact and Implied by Law, and Quasi Contractual Obligations, as Related to Ideas and Literary Property. The parties and amici, from their several viewpoints, discuss the law of contracts and caution us not to confuse the rules insofar as such rules may differentiate respectively among contracts which are express or implied-in-fact or implied-in-law, meaning by the latter expression to denote a quasi-contractual obligation imposed by law. We agree that whether a contract be properly identified as express or as implied-in-fact or inferred from circumstances; or whether the bargain meets the subjective test of a meeting of minds or is held to reside in the objective evidence of words and acts with or without a meeting of minds; or whether the obligation be recognized as implied by law from acts having consensual aspects (and therefore often termed implied-in-fact); or whether the obligation be imposed by law because of acts and intents which, although tortious rather than consensual, should in justice give rise to an obligation resembling that created by contract and, hence, should be termed quasi-contractual, is important here to the extent that we recognize the situations and discriminate appropriately in the governing rules.

An eminent writer says that "The elements requisite for an informal contract * * * are identical whether they are expressly stated or implied in fact," citing e. g., Lombard v. Rahilly (1914), 127 Minn. 449, 149 N.W. 950, holding "A 'contract implied in fact' requires a meeting of the minds, an agreement, just as much as an 'express contract'; the difference between the two being largely in the character of the evidence by which they are established"; see also Silva v. Providence Hospital of Oakland (1939), 14 Cal.2d 762, 773, 97 P.2d 798. (Williston on Contracts, Rev. Ed., Vol. 1, p. 8.) The same author describes quasi contracts by declaring that "as quasi contractual obligations are imposed by the law for the purpose of bringing about justice without reference to the intention of the parties, the only apparent restriction upon the power of the law to create such obligations is that they must be of such a sort as would have been appropriately enforced under common-law procedure by a contractual action. Indeed even this limitation is too narrow, for a bill in equity or a libel in admiralty might be the appropriate means of enforcing some quasi contractual obligations. As the law may impose any obligations that justice requires, the only limit in the last analysis to the category of quasi contracts is that the obligation in question more closely resembles those created by contract than those created by tort. On the other hand, a true contract cannot exist, however desirable it might be to have one, unless there is a manifestation of assent to the making of a promise. Furthermore, the measure of damages appropriate to contractual obligations differs from that applicable to quasi contracts * * *. It is also true that quasi contractual obligations are not so universally based on unjust enrichment or benefit as is sometimes supposed.[8] There are many cases where the law enforces in a contractual action a duty to restore the plaintiff to a former status—not merely to surrender the benefit which the defendant has received."

If it were not for precedent we should hesitate to speak of an implied-in-fact contract. In truth, contracts are either made in fact or the obligation is implied in law. If made in fact, contracts may be established by direct evidence or they may be inferred from circumstantial evidence. The only difference is in the method of proof. In either case they would appear to be express contracts. Otherwise, it would seem that they, or the presumed contractual obligation, must be implied at law. A so-called "implied-in-fact" contract, however, as the term is used by some writers, may be found although there has been no meeting of the minds. Even an express contract may be found where there has been no meeting of minds. The classic example of this situation is set up by the parol evidence rule. The law accepts the objective evidence of the written contract as constituting the contract and, subject, of course, to certain exceptions, precludes oral evidence to show that the minds of the parties did not meet in the writing. Professor Williston recognizes in effect, if not specifically, that the law implies (or construes) contractual obligations in many cases where there is no true contract in the historically conventional sense and that such implied obligations are of the nature of, and governed by the rules applicable to, contracts termed implied-in-fact by many writers. In a paper published in 14 Illinois Law Review 85, 90, Mr. Williston says: "The parties may be bound by the terms of an offer even though the offeree expressly indicated dissent, provided his action could only lawfully mean assent. A buyer who goes into a shop and asks and is given [told] the price of an article, cannot take it and say 'I decline to pay the price you ask, but will take it at its fair value.' He will be liable, if the seller elects to hold him so liable, not simply as a converter for the fair value of the property, but as a buyer for the stated price." (See Lucy v. Mouflet (1860), 5 H. & N. 229, 232; Wilcox, Ives & Co. v. Rogers (1913), 13 Ga.App. 410, 79 S.E. 219; Rest., Contracts, § 5, p. 7; § 72(2), p. 77.) Concerning the same subject Professor Costigan, in a paper published in 33 Harvard Law Review 376, at 398, states his view: "Professor Williston is absolutely right in his contention that the no-meeting-of-the-minds express contracts—the objective but not subjective test contracts—are properly to be denominated contracts instead of quasi-contracts, and the reason for that concession was that on their breach the normal contract measure of damages is applied. But that same reason has led us to the further conclusion that there are genuine implied-in-fact contracts of both the meeting-of-the-minds and the no-meeting-of-the-minds varieties."

Whether the resulting "contract" in the cases discussed by the learned professors is classified as express (as may be fictionized by the law's objective test) or as implied-in-fact (as also may be fictionized by the law) or whether in the same or slightly differing circumstances an obligation shall be "implied" and denominated "quasi contractual" because it is strong-armed by the law from non-consensual acts and intents, is probably important in California—and for the purposes of resolving the problems now before us—principally as an aid to understanding the significance of rulings and discussions in authorities from other jurisdictions. Here, our terminology and the situations for application of the pertinent rules are simplified by codification.

Our Civil Code declares that (§ 1619) "A contract is either express or implied"; (§ 1620) "An express contract is one, the terms of which are stated in words" and (§ 1621) "An implied contract is one, the existence and terms of which are manifested by conduct." The same code further provides that (§ 1584) "[T]he acceptance of the consideration offered with a proposal, is an acceptance of the proposal"; (§ 1589) "A voluntary acceptance of the benefit of a transaction is equivalent to a consent to all the obligations arising from it, so far as the facts are known, or ought to be known, to the persons accepting"; (§ 1605) "Any benefit conferred * * * upon the promisor, by any other person, to which the promisor is not lawfully entitled * * * is a good consideration for a promise"; and (§ 1606) "[A] moral obligation originating in some benefit conferred upon the promisor * * * is also a good consideration for a promise, to an extent corresponding with the extent of the obligation, but no further or otherwise." (See also Silva v. Providence Hospital of Oakland (1939), supra, 14 Cal.2d 762, 773, 97 P.2d 798, and cases there cited; Horacek v. Smith (1948), 33 Cal.2d 186, 194, 199 P.2d 929 [11]; Yadkoe v. Fields (1944), 66 Cal.App.2d 150, 158–159, 151 P.2d 906; Rest., Contracts, §§ 5, 72(2); 12 Cal.Jur.2d 186–189.)

[10–12] From what has been shown respecting the law of ideas and of contracts we conclude that conveyance of an idea can constitute valuable consideration and can be bargained for before it is disclosed to the proposed purchaser, but once it is conveyed, i. e., disclosed to him and he has grasped it, it is henceforth his own and he may work with it and use it as he sees fit. In the field of entertainment the producer may properly and validly agree that he will pay for the service of conveying to him ideas which are valuable and which he can put to profitable use. Furthermore, where an idea has been conveyed with the expectation by the purveyor that compensation will be paid if the idea is used, there is no reason why the producer who has been the beneficiary of the conveyance of such an idea, and who finds it valuable and is profiting by it, may not then for the first time, although he is not at that time under any legal obligation so to do, promise to pay a reasonable compensation for that idea—that is, for the past service of furnishing it to him—and thus create a valid obligation. As said in 12 American Jurisprudence 603, section 110, "there is considerable authority which supports the view that the moral obligation arising from a benefit of a material or pecuniary kind conferred upon the promisor by past services, rendered in the expectation that they were to be paid for—or, at least, if rendered upon the assumption by the person rendering them, though mistaken that they would create a real liability—and, otherwise, in circumstances creating a moral obligation on the part of the promisor to pay for the same, will support an executory promise to do so, although there was, previous to such promise, no legal liability or promise, perfect or imperfect." (See also Civ.Code, §§ 1605, 1606, quoted, supra, 299 P.2d 269; Edson v. Poppe (1910), 24 S.D. 466, 124 N.W. 441, 26 L.R.A.,N.S., 534; Bailey v. City of Philadelphia (1895), 167 Pa. 569, 31 A. 925; Gray v. Hamil (1889), 82 Ga. 375, 10 S.E. 205, 6 L.R.A. 72; Credit Bureau of San Diego v. Johnson (1943), 61 Cal.App.2d Supp. 834, 839, 142 P.2d 963; 17 A.L.R. 1366–1371, s. 79 A.

L.R. 1354; 53 L.R.A. 371–376; 26 L.R.A., N.S., 526.) But, assuming legality of consideration, the idea purveyor cannot prevail in an action to recover compensation for an abstract idea unless (a) before or after disclosure he has obtained an express promise to pay, or (b) the circumstances preceding and attending disclosure, together with the conduct of the offeree acting with knowledge of the circumstances, show a promise of the type usually referred to as "implied" or "implied-in-fact."[9] (See Weitzenkorn v. Lesser (1953), supra, 40 Cal.2d 778, 794–795, 256 P.2d 947; Elfenbein v. Luckenbach Terminals (1933, 111 N.J.L. 67), 166 A. 91, 93.) That is, if the idea purveyor has clearly conditioned his offer to convey the idea upon an obligation to pay for it if it is used by the offeree and the offeree, knowing the condition before he knows the idea, voluntarily accepts its disclosure (necessarily on the specified basis) and finds it valuable and uses it, the law will either apply the objective test (discussed, supra, 299 P.2d 268) and hold that the parties have made an express (sometimes called implied-in-fact) contract, or under those circumstances, as some writers view it, the law itself, to prevent fraud and unjust enrichment, will imply a promise to compensate.

[13] Such inferred or implied promise, if it is to be found at all, must be based on circumstances which were known to the producer at and preceding the time of disclosure of the idea to him and he must voluntarily accept the disclosure, knowing the conditions on which it is tendered. Section 1584 of the Civil Code ("[T]he acceptance of the consideration offered with a proposal, is an acceptance of the proposal") can have no application unless the offeree has an opportunity to reject the consideration—the proffered conveyance of the idea—before it is conveyed. Unless the offeree has opportunity to reject he cannot be said to accept. (Cf. People v. Forbath (1935), 5 Cal.App.2d Supp. 767, 769–770, 42 P.2d 108; County of Ventura v. Southern California Edison Co. (1948), 85 Cal.App.2d 529, 532, 193 P.2d 512; Krum v. Malloy (1943), 22 Cal.2d 132, 135, 137 P.2d 18.) The idea man who blurts out his idea without having first made his bargain has no one but himself to blame for the loss of his bargaining power. The law will not in any event, from demands stated subsequent to the unconditioned disclosure of an abstract idea, imply a promise to pay for the idea, for its use, or for its previous disclosure. The law will not imply a promise to pay for an idea from the mere facts that the idea has been conveyed, is valuable, and has been used for profit; this is true even though the conveyance has been made with the hope or expectation that some obligation will ensue. So, if the plaintiff here is claiming only for the conveyance of the idea of making a dramatic production out of the life of Floyd Collins he must fail unless in conformity with the above stated rules he can establish a contract to pay.

[14] From plaintiff's testimony, as epitomized above (299 P.2d 261), it does not appear that a contract to pay for conveyance of the abstract photoplay idea had been made, or that the basis for inferring such a contract from subsequent related acts of the defendants had been established, at the time plaintiff disclosed his basic idea to the secretary. Defendants, consequently, were at that time and from then on free to use the abstract idea if they saw fit to engage in the necessary research and develop it to the point of a usable script. Whether defendants did that, or whether they actually accepted and used plaintiff's synopsis, is another question. And whether by accepting plaintiff's synopsis and using it, if they did accept and use it, they may be found to have implicitly—by the rules discussed, supra, 299 P.2d 267—agreed to pay for whatever value the synopsis possessed as a composition embodying, adapting and implementing the idea, is also a question which, upon the present summary judgment record, is pertinent for consideration in reaching our ultimate conclusion. That is, if the evidence suggests that defendants accepted plaintiff's synopsis, did they not necessarily accept it upon the terms on which he had offered it? Certainly the mere fact that the idea had been disclosed under the circumstances shown here would not preclude the finding of an implied (inferred in fact) contract to pay for the synopsis embodying, implementing and adapting the idea for photoplay production.

[15, 16] The Law Pertaining to Literary Property. "Literary property" is a general term which is used either to describe the interest of an author (or those who claim under him) in his works (whether before or after publication or before or after copyright has been secured) or to denote the corporeal property in which an intellectual production is embodied. (Bouvier's Law Dictionary, Rawle's Third Revision, p. 2035; 34 Am.Jur. 400, § 2; 18 C.J.S., Copyright and Literary Property, § 3, p. 139.) Literary property in an intellectual production is afforded protection by the common law (Werckmeister v. American Lithographic Co. (2 Cir., 1904), 134 F. 321, 68 L.R.A. 591; see also 34 Am.Jur. 405–406, § 8), by federal statute pursuant to constitutional authorization (see U.S. Const. art. I, § 8; see also Title 17, U.S. Code; Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Straus (1908), 210 U.S. 339, 346, 28 S.Ct. 722, 52 L.Ed. 1086), and by state law (Cal.Civ.Code, § 980).

[18, 19] Literary property which is protectible may be created out of unprotectible material such as historical events. It has been said (and does not appear to have been successfully challenged) that "There are only thirty-six fundamental dramatic situations, various facets of which form the basis of all human drama." (Georges Polti, "The Thirty-Six Dramatic Situations"; see also, Henry Albert Phillips, "The Universal Plot Catalog"; Eric Heath, "Story Plotting Simplified.") It is manifest that authors must work with and from ideas or themes which basically are in the public domain. History both in broadly significant and in very personal aspects has furnished a wealth of material for photoplays. The Crusades, The French Revolution, The War Between the States, the lives, or events from the lives, of rulers, ministers, doctors, lawyers, politicians, and military men, among others, all have contributed. Events from the life of the late General William Mitchell are even now the basic theme of a current showing. Events from the life of Floyd Collins were avowedly the basic theme of plaintiff's story. Certainly, it must be recognized that a literary composition does not depend upon novelty of plot or theme for the status of "property," if it is entitled to that status at all. The terms "originality" and "novelty" have often been confused, or used without differentiation, or with meanings which vary with different authorities. We therefore suggest the sense in which we use them. A literary composition may be original, at least in a subjective sense, without being novel. To be original it must be a creation or construction of the author, not a mere copy of another's work. The author, of course, must almost inevitably work from old materials, from known themes or plots or historical events, because, except as knowledge unfolds and history takes place, there is nothing new with which to work. But "Creation, in its technical sense, is not essential to vest one with ownership of rights in intellectual property. Thus, a compiler who merely gathers and arranges, in some concrete form, materials which are open and accessible to all who have the mind to work with like diligence is as much the owner of the result of his labors as if his work were a creation rather than a construction." (34 Am.Jur. 409, § 12; see also 23 A.L.R. 2d 265; Amdur on Copyrights, 69–70, § 3; Fred Fisher, Inc., v. Dillingham (D.C. 1924), 298 F. 145, 150–151; Jewelers' Mercantile Agency v. Jewelers' Weekly Pub. Co. (1898), 155 N.Y. 241, 49 N.E. 872, 41 L.R.A. 846; Booth & Hanford Abstract Co. v. Phelps (1894), 8 Wash. 549, 36 P. 489, 23 L.R.A. 864; Leon Loan & Abstract Co. v. Equalization Board (1892), 86 Iowa 127, 53 N.W. 94, 17 L.R.A. 199; Dart v. Woodhouse (1879), 40 Mich. 399.)

Writing—portraying characters and events and emotions with words, no less than with brush and oils—may be an art which expresses personality. Accordingly, the language of Mr. Justice Holmes, speaking for the Supreme Court in a copyright case relating to circus posters is apropos: "Others are free to copy the original. They are not free to copy the copy * * * The copy is the personal reaction of an individual upon nature. Personality always contains something unique. It expresses singularity even in handwriting, and a very modest grade of art has in it something irreducible, which is one man's alone. That something he may copyright unless there is a restriction in the words of the act." (Bleistein v. Donaldson Lithographing Co. (1903), 188 U.S. 239, 249–250, 23 S.Ct. 298, 47 L.Ed. 460.) As indicated, the theme of a writer must almost inevitably be neither novel nor original. The finished work probably will not be novel because it deals only with the public domain or public commons facts. But the completed composition may well be the original product of the researcher who compiles or constructs it. He gives it genesis, and genesis in this sense requires only origin of the composition, not of the theme. The composition will be the property of the author. Whether it possesses substantial value, and to what extent, if any, it may be entitled to copyright protectibility, may be quite another matter.

The time of the author; his resourcefulness in, opportunity for and extent of, research; his penetration in perception and interpretation of source materials; the acumen of his axiological appraisals of the dramatic; and his skill and style of composition, including the art of so portraying accurate narration of events long passed as to arouse vivid emotions of the present, are all elements which may contribute to the value of his product. Some of those elements in varying quanta and proportions must exist in any literary composition; thereby the composition reflects the personality of the author. And any literary composition, conceivably, may possess value in someone's estimation and be the subject of contract, or, conversely, it may be considered totally devoid of artistic, historic, scientific or any practical value. Obviously the defendants here used someone's script in preparing and producing their photoplay. That script must have had value to them. As will be hereinafter shown, it closely resembles plaintiff's synopsis. Ergo, plaintiff's synopsis appears to be a valuable literary composition. Defendants had an unassailable right to have their own employes conduct the research into the Floyd Collins tragedy—an historical event in the public domain—and prepare a story based on those facts and to translate it into a script for the play. But equally unassailable (assuming the verity of the facts which plaintiff asserts) is plaintiff's position that defendants had no right—except by purchase on the terms he offered—to acquire and use the synopsis prepared by him.

The proposition which seems to be implicit in some of the contentions of defendants and their related amici—that a producer, to whom a literary composition or idea is offered for sale for its reasonable value if used, may state that he will not agree to purchase the proffered literary composition, or idea for one, until he knows what composition or idea is, may then, when it is submitted to him on those terms, consider it and say, in words or by his acts, "Yes, it is indeed valuable and I shall use it but I will not pay you for it because now I have it"—does not commend itself to us. If a producer is not commercially soliciting, and is not willing to accept an obligation to pay for, valuable ideas, or for compositions adapting and implementing them, which ideas and compositions are offered to be conveyed only upon the assumption of such an obligation, he does not need to read manuscripts which he knows are submitted on those terms, or to have his secretary take dictated synopses of stories offered on those conditions, and then use them. (See Elfenbein v. Luckenbach Terminals (1933), supra, 111 N.J.L. 67, 166 A. 91, 93; cf. Matarese v. Moore-McCormack Lines (2 Cir., 1946), supra, 158 F.2d 631, 634.) We are satisfied that, for the purposes of this appeal, plaintiff's dictation to defendant Wilder's secretary of the synopsis of his composition, embodying the core of his idea and his concept of a desirable entertainment media adaptation of it, is equivalent to submission of the synopsis in typed form.

Under the principles of law which have been stated it appears that for plaintiff to prevail on this appeal the record must indicate either that the evidence favors plaintiff, or that there is a triable issue of fact, in respect to the following questions: Did plaintiff prepare a literary composition on the Floyd Collins tragedy? Did he submit the composition to the defendants for sale? Did the defendants, knowing that it was offered to them for sale, accept and use that composition or any part thereof? If so, what was the reasonable value of the composition?

[20] It is not essential to recovery that plaintiff's story or synopsis possess the elements of copyright protectibility if the fact of consensual contract be found. (Weitzenkorn v. Lesser (1953), supra, 40 Cal.2d 778, 791–792, 256 P.2d 947.) Neither can we hold, on the state of the record, that plaintiff's synopsis is devoid of the elements necessary to give it some measure of such protectibility. While the trial court, or an appellate court on a sufficient record, may determine the specific extent of an author's property right in any particular work (Nichols v. Universal Pictures Corporation (2 Cir., 1930), 45 F.2d 119, 121–122) it is unnecessary on this appeal to define the limits more exactly than has already been done, supra, 299 P.2d 271 (see also infra, 299 P.2d 277).

The Law Applied to the Facts. Here, as conceded by defendants for purposes of their summary judgment motion, plaintiff, in accordance with his testimony, submitted his synopsis to them through defendant Wilder's secretary and such submission included a declaration by both plaintiff and the secretary that defendants were to pay for his story if they used it. The mere fact that at the time of plaintiff's first telephone call to Wilder's office he described the central idea of the story to the secretary in response to her insistence that he explain the purpose of his call would not as a matter of law deprive plaintiff of the right to payment for the story as discussed by him and the secretary when he again spoke with her two days later and at her request read his synopsis to her, for her to take down in shorthand for defendants' consideration; the two conversations appear to have been parts of a single transaction and must be construed as such. The affidavits submitted on behalf of defendants by Wilder and by an officer of Paramount to the effect that neither Wilder nor Wilder's secretary had authority to negotiate contracts for the purchase of scripts do not compel the conclusion as a matter of law that an implied (inferred) contract binding defendants to pay for plaintiff's story was not created if (as is hereinafter shown) the record discloses any substantial evidence indicating that defendants did accept and make use of plaintiff's composition.

[21] Factually it would be inconsistent, and legally it would be untenable, for the defendant corporations to deny that Paramount's employes, Wilder and the secretary, had authority to negotiate contracts for the purchase of literary material and at the same time to permit them to act as agents for the procurement of material offered for sale, and to use the material so acquired while disavowing the authority of the agents. Certainly if the secretary had accepted from plaintiff any other item of merchandise, such, for example, as office supplies, which plaintiff left with her with the statement that he was offering them for sale and that if used by defendants plaintiff expected to be paid therefor, defendants' subsequent use of such property would be held to give rise to an inferred or so-called implied-in-fact promise on their part to make payment. As hereinabove shown (supra, 299 P.2d 269), Civil Code, section 1589, provides: "A voluntary acceptance of the benefit of a transaction is equivalent to a consent to all the obligations arising from it, so far as the facts are known, or ought to be known, to the person accepting." If the secretary had authority to receive and transmit messages to her employer—such as messages offering to sell a story embodying a writer's idea for a photoplay—and to take down in shorthand for transmission to her employer the script of a synopsis, she also necessarily had authority to receive and transmit the conditions and terms of the offer. Her knowledge of those terms and conditions is the knowledge of her employers. (Civ. Code, § 2332; Chapman College v. Wagener (1955), 45 Cal.2d 796, 802, 291 P.2d 445; see also Civ.Code, § 3521: "He who takes the benefit must bear the burden.") On this issue the evidence would support a finding that plaintiff's synopsis reached defendants through the secretary, and that they are chargeable with knowledge of the conditions on which the synopsis was offered.

With respect to whether defendants used plaintiff's composition, it may be first noted that defendants presented no affidavits in any way denying such use, but merely exhibited their photoplay to the court for purposes of comparison between plaintiff's synopsis and defendants' production. Defendants also produced extracts from a magazine and newspaper to which plaintiff had already freely testified in his deposition that he had referred in preparing his story. A script of the photoplay was, however, attached to plaintiff's complaint as an exhibit, and plaintiff has provided an outline comparing his synopsis[10] with defendants' scenario. Defendants in their brief have likewise outlined the story of their photoplay.[11] In defendants' motion picture script the trapped man expresses a fear of the curse

[10] Plaintiff's Synopsis: Plaintiff's synopsis of his story, submitted to defendant Wilder's secretary as related hereinabove, stated that the "story deals with the sensational and tragic end of Floyd Collins who lost his life in a cave in Ky. in 1925 and held the whole nation in suspense. * * * Since 1925 to the beginning of World War II only the Lindbergh stories * * * have outdone the Collins story for sustained interest. F. Collins lived with his family in a cave region of Ky. * * * It was underneath his father's farm where F. C. discovered the great Crystal Cave in 1917. Collins was obsessed with cave exploration since his boyhood. He gained reputation for discovering many relics left by the Indians which he sold to the tourists * * * F. was very much in love with a girl named Alma * * * In the spring of 1918 the Crystal Cave was opened for commercial tourists trade * * * On January 30, 1925, F. was on his way to enter a narrow aperture, his last excursion into the cave land. In all his previous trips Floyd had learned to fear a huge egg-shaped boulder weighing approximately 100 lbs. which was held in place, sharp point downward, by a small wedge rock, for he knew it meant disaster if he should brush against it. The joy of his new discovery overcame his natural caution. The heavy heel of his new boots struck the rock wedge. Down it crashed with the speed of a lightning flash, falling across his left ankle and pinioning both legs, for his right leg had been doubled beneath the left. He was held prisoner * * * F's father * * * spread the alarm. Telephones were busy * * * and soon the whole countryside was aroused * * The first reporter to reach F. was William Burke Miller * * * [who told Collins] 'The world is coming, old man,' * * * F. told the reporter of a horrifying dream he had had, and he feared the curse of the dead Indians for having disturbed their graves. [The idea of the dreams and fears of the trapped man with respect to a curse of dead Indians was fictional or original with plaintiff, rather than historical fact.] * * * Lieutenant Burdon from the Louisville Fire Department who was led to F. by * * Miller, * * * said, 'There is only one way to save Collins without maiming him, and that is to sink a shaft to him.'

"A stream of machines and men was moving down the clay road * * * Opposition develops between the natives and the rescue crew. * * * An ugly situation was imminent.

"The Louisville Courier-Journal was bringing the F. C. sensational news every day on the front page. W. Burke Miller's acceptance of danger was instigated, by the lure of Pulitzer Prize which later was awarded to him. Cave City was rapidly taking on the appearance of a Klondike gold rush town. * * * Miller was the only reporter who saw F. He placed an elec. light bulb around F.'s neck and fed him. * * * [A] general contractor * * brought an acetylene torch to burn away the rock that held F, but he never got a chance to use it. * * * Rumors spread around that it was all a hoax and a publicity scheme, and that Floyd had fallen victim of foul play. Doc Hazlett feared that by now pneumonia might set in as F. was growing weaker. * * * Special reporters * * * came * * * from all sections of the country. * * * Special trains stopped at Cave City to unload travelers and equipment. * * * Many people regarded the occasion as a picnic. * * * F's father resented feebly the behavior.

"The shaft was sinking steadily toward the cavern. F. laying dying. * * * Extremely suspicious accusations were made by some reporters in regard to the rescue of F. C. Gov. Field summoned the Board of Military Inquiry * * * [which] was also directed to run down a most unfortunate story dispatched by two reporters who considered the whole thing a giant publicity scheme and a hoax * * *" The story ends with Collin's death.

According to defendants' description of their photoplay, the central character is Charles Tatum, a reporter for a newspaper in Albuquerque, New Mexico. Tatum had once been a big-time newspaper man, but is now down on his luck and looking for an opportunity to regain his former prominent position. While traveling through New Mexico he stops at a roadside stand and finds that Leo Minosa, one of the proprietors, has just been trapped in an old Indian cliff dwelling nearby. Tatum recognizes in this event a chance to create an incident similar to the Floyd Collins incident and to exploit it in his own selfish interest. Playing on the greed of the local sheriff and of the trapped man's wife, Tatum succeeds in getting the exclusive right to enter the cave and interview the victim, who expresses fear of "The Indian dead. They're all around here. This is a tomb * * * with mummies four hundred years old." Tatum contrives to prolong the rescue operation so as to increase public interest in the affair and thus increase the value of his exclusive accounts of the event. He builds the affair into a horrible carnival of cheap publicity, pandering to the morbid curiosity of the public. He exacts enormous fees for his exclusive stories of the entrapment and rescue operations and his two selfish, inhuman assistants (the sheriff and the wife) avidly grasp at the profit to be made from the big build-up. The only difficulty is that the rescue operation is prolonged too long and the trapped man dies. Tatum is left with the realization that his careless disregard of consequences has made him in effect a murderer. He falls out with the wife and sheriff and is himself killed.

of dead Indians, as did Collins in the fictional portion of plaintiff's synopsis. Other similarities between plaintiff's story and the scenario of defendants' picture are these:

Defendants' Scenario	Plaintiff's Story
Cave where Minosa trapped was on property owned by him and father.	Cave where Collins trapped was underneath father's farm.
Minosa operated Indian Curio Shop.	Collins sold Indian relics to tourists.
Minosa cave open to tourist trade.	Crystal Cave open to tourist trade.
Minosa's difficulty in extricating himself from cave was due to large flat slab wedged against wall of his cell, which slanted across him, pinning him down.	Rock wedge fell across Collins' left ankle and pinioned both legs, holding him prisoner.
Minosa's father calls sheriff.	Collins' father spread alarm.
Tatum is first reporter to arrive; tells Minosa not to worry, as "they'll get you out."	Miller is first reported to reach Collins, and tells him, "The world is coming, old man."
Tatum suggests setting up a drill on top of the mountain and going straight down; this is done.	Lt. Burdon says, "There is only one way to save Collins without maiming him, and that is to sink a shaft to him."
Local miners object that drilling is unnecessary.	Opposition develops between the natives and the rescue crew.
Tatum comments that the news story is "Big. As big as they come, I think. Maybe bigger than Floyd Collins," and refers to fact that reporter on Collins story received a Pulitzer Prize.	Collins story carried on front page of Louisville newspaper every day; Miller was later awarded Pulitzer Prize.
Carnival trucks are described, and persons operating concessions are shown; excursion train is referred to; rescue equipment assembled and public address system used.	Cave City took on appearance of Klondike gold rush town; special reporters came; special trains stopped to unload travelers and equipment; occasion regarded as picnic by many.
Minosa's father protests.	Collins' father resented the behavior.
Doctor diagnoses pneumonia.	Doc Hazlett fears pneumonia.
Tatum is only reporter who saw Minosa.	Miller is only reporter who saw Collins.
Other reporters are suspicious of the "whole set-up and criticized and complained about Tatum's control of the situation"; one threatened to "take this all the way to Santa Fe. To the Governor."	Some reporters make accusations expressing strong suspicions with respect to lack of good faith in rescue of Collins; governor summons Board of Military Inquiry; two reporters considered whole thing a giant publicity scheme and hoax.
Minosa dies.	Collins dies.

For the purposes of appellate review of this summary judgment proceeding it is apparent from the comparisons above tabulated, and from the outlines which are set out in the margin, that a factual issue, rather than one of law, is presented as to whether defendants used plaintiff's synopsis or developed their production independently thereof. (See Yadkoe v. Fields (1944), supra, 66 Cal.App.2d 150, 159–160, 151 P.2d 906; cf. Sutton v. Walt Disney Productions (1953), 118 Cal.App.2d 598, 603, 258 P.2d 519.) Particularly does this appear true in view of the fact that plaintiff submitted his synopsis to defendants in November, 1949, and that as early as July, 1950, the latter were producing their photoplay which, despite their assertion that it "does not purport to be a biography of the life of Floyd Collins * * * Its characters, plot and development are wholly imaginative," obviously does bear a remarkable similarity to plaintiff's story both in respect to the historical data and the fictional material originated by plaintiff.

It has been suggested that this court view the photoplay (which defendants in their brief offer to make available) in order to determine whether a triable issue of fact exists. The scope of the implications in that suggestion is persuasive to us that the issues here are not for summary disposition. In the light of the conclusions we have reached on the evidence already discussed it appears that viewing the photoplay would relate merely to the weight of the evidence. (See Kurlan v. Columbia Broadcasting System (1953), supra, 40 Cal.2d 799, 806–807, 256 P.2d 962.) We therefore find it unnecessary to view the film.

[22–24] At the trial the trier of fact should proceed with nicety of discrimination in applying the evidence to resolve the issues. Inasmuch as plaintiff's story is taken from the public domain, and as both his story and that of defendants are in principal substance historically accurate, it must be borne in mind that the mere facts that plaintiff submitted and offered to sell to defendants a synopsis containing public domain material and that thereafter defendants used the same public domain material, will not support an inference that defendants promised to pay for either the synopsis or for the idea of using the public domain material. The plaintiff can have no property right in the public domain facts concerning Floyd Collins or in the abstract idea of making a photoplay dramatizing those facts. On the other hand, the fact that plaintiff used the public domain material in constructing his story and synopsis would afford no justification whatsoever for defendants to appropriate plaintiff's composition and use it or any part of it in the production of a photoplay—and this, of course, includes the writing of a scenario for it—without compensating plaintiff for the value of his story. And the further fact, if it be a fact, that the basic idea for the photoplay had been conveyed to defendants before they saw plaintiff's synopsis, would not preclude the finding of an implied (inferred-in-fact) contract to pay for the manuscript, including its implemented idea, if they used such manuscript.

The Complaint; Failure of Proof, or Variance; Amendment. Defendants urge in support of the summary judgment that although in plaintiff's amended complaint he alleges a contract by defendants to pay him if they used his entire 65 page story based upon the life of Floyd Collins, plaintiff's testimony is that such story was actually never submitted to defendants, but rather only the synopsis thereof, and that therefore there was a complete failure of proof. Plaintiff, following entry of the summary judgment, moved the court for an order setting aside the judgment and permitting plaintiff to file an amendment to his amended complaint, alleging submission of the synopsis instead of the 65 page story. The motion was denied and defendants argue that the amendment would have substituted a different cause of action after the statute of limitations had run. This contention is without merit.

Section 469 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "No variance between the allegation in a pleading and the proof is to be deemed material, unless it has actually misled the adverse party to his prejudice in maintaining his action or defense upon the merits. Whenever it appears that a party has been so misled, the court may order the pleading to be amended upon such terms as may be just." Section 470 states that "Where the variance is not material, as provided in the last section, the court may direct the fact to be found according to the evidence, or may order an immediate amendment, without costs." Section 471: "Where, however, the allegation of the claim or defense to which the proof is directed, is unproved, not in some particular or particulars only, but in its general scope and meaning, it is not to be deemed a case of variance, within the last two sections, but a failure of proof."

[25] The variance between plaintiff's pleading and proof in the present case obviously did not mislead defendants, since when making their motion for summary judgment they relied upon his testimony that he had submitted his synopsis to them, rather than the entire 65 page story. (See Chelini v. Nieri (1948), 32 Cal.2d 480, 486, 196 P.2d 915.) Further, such a variance clearly did not constitute a complete failure of proof of the general scope and meaning of plaintiff's claim, but merely a showing that his story was submitted in shorter form than that alleged in the complaint.

[26, 27] Great liberality is indulged in matters of amendment to the end that lawsuits may be determined upon their merits. (See Klopstock v. Superior Court (1941), 17 Cal.2d 13, 19–20, 108 P.2d 906, 135 A.L.R. 318, and cases there cited.) In the Klopstock case it was declared that "In determining whether a wholly different cause of action is introduced by the amendment technical considerations or ancient formulae are not controlling; nothing more is meant than that the defendant not be required to answer a wholly different legal liability or obligation from that originally stated. As the court says in * * * [Frost v. Witter (1901), 132 Cal. 421, 426, 64 P. 705], for the purpose of determining whether amendment is possible, the 'cause of action' referred to as furnishing the test means only the legal obligation which it is sought to enforce against the defendant. Other courts have used almost identical language; the test is not whether under technical rules of pleading a new cause of action is introduced, but rather, the test is whether an attempt is made to state facts which give rise to a wholly distinct and different legal obligation against the defendant. The power to permit amendment is denied only if a change is made in the liability sought to be enforced against the defendant. [Citation.]"

In the present case it is obvious that the proposed amendment would not constitute an attempt to state facts which would give rise to a wholly distinct and different legal obligation against defendants, but would only make the pleading conform to the plaintiff's testimony as to the manner in which his story was submitted to defendants. It is for defendants' claimed use of the same story as that already alleged that plaintiff still would be seeking recovery under the proposed amendment. Such amendment should have been allowed.

[28] Plaintiff has also attempted to appeal from an order denying his motion to set aside the summary judgment and to permit him to file an amendment to his amended complaint. Such order is not appealable, and the attempted appeal therefrom will be dismissed. (See Bank of America, etc., v. Oil Well Supply Co. (1936), 12 Cal.App.2d 265, 271, 55 P.2d 885; Werner v. Sargeant (1953), 121 Cal.App.2d 833, 834–835, 264 P.2d 217.)

The attempted appeal from the order denying plaintiff's motion to set aside the summary judgment and to permit him to file the amendment to his amended complaint is dismissed. The judgment is affirmed as to the second and third counts of the complaint, but as to the first count it is reversed and the cause is remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with the views expressed in this opinion.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, TRAYNOR, SPENCE and McCOMB, JJ., concur.

CARTER, Justice.

I concur only in the result reached in the majority opinion. I dissent from, and heartily deplore, the lengthy discussion of numerous principles of law wholly inapplicable and unnecessary to a determination of this matter. No good purpose is served by such a discussion other than to confuse the reader and the future state of the law so far as this type of case is concerned and other cases in general involving similar problems. I had always thought it the policy of this court, and other appellate courts, to determine only the issues actually involved and to avoid dissertations on points of law having no bearing on those issues. Such useless, although learned, discussions must later be distinguished, dissented from, and finally overruled by subsequent decisions.

In reviewing a summary judgment "The better rule is that the facts alleged in the affidavits of the party against whom the motion is made must be accepted as true * * *" and if any facts are presented which give rise to a triable issue, the summary judgment must be denied, Eagle Oil & Refining Co. v. Prentice, 19 Cal.2d 553, 122 P.2d 264. It is not the function of a reviewing court to pass upon or determine the issue itself. Despite this well-settled rule, the majority opinion sets forth, at length, the two stories—plaintiff's synopsis and defendant's scenario and proceeds to dissect them with a scalpel and microscope. Further, the majority opinion directs that "At the trial the trier of fact should proceed with nicety of discrimination in applying the evidence to resolve the issues." I had always thought that the well-settled rule was that the trier of fact, whether judge or jury, was the sole judge of the evidence, that it determined the weight to be accorded to such evidence, and the credibility to be accorded the witnesses! But now we find the trier of fact being directed by this court to use the same scalpel and microscope in examining the evidence. We also find the majority directing the trier of fact as to what inferences may, and may not, be drawn from certain evidence. I had also thought, prior to this case, that the inferences to be drawn were for the trier of fact!

If the only function of the court upon a motion for a summary judgment is to determine whether triable issues of fact exist, then the issues were joined: That plaintiff had a property interest in a certain literary and dramatic composition which he submitted to defendants on the condition that if defendants used said literary and dramatic composition, defendants would pay plaintiff for the use thereof; that defendants copied and used plaintiff's literary and dramatic composition and have not compensated him therefor. Whether or not the literary and dramatic composition had merit, whether or not defendants' production was so similar as to warrant the inference that defendants had copied plaintiff's work, and whether or not the evidence showed that plaintiff had submitted the same to defendants with the expectation of compensation if defendants used the literary and dramatic work, were all questions of fact for the trier of fact. In other words, the defendants' motion for summary judgment was improperly granted. And the only function of this court is to review the action of the trial court in granting that summary judgment—in other words, to determine whether or not triable issues of fact existed. But a majority of this court has seen fit not only to take unprecedented flights of fantasy but to set forth learned discussions of inapplicable law and then direct the trier of fact at the new trial as to how it should perform its function in the judicial field.

Taking into consideration the length of the majority opinion, there is no necessity of here reiterating the evidence concerning plaintiff's submission of his literary work to defendant Wilder's secretary. We all are aware, I believe, that ideas may be taken from the public domain and woven into a plot, or story, which may present something new, different, and of value to one in the market for such merchandise. It does not require interminable discussion of how many plots there are, nor of what some writers have considered as plots, nor of the services rendered by doctors, lawyers, dentists and the like, to bring home to the average attorney that an old theme may be given new interest by a different interpretation thereof and that this different interpretation may have value to one in the business of purchasing that type of merchandise.

When we consider the difference in economic and social backgrounds of those offering such merchandise for sale and those purchasing the same, we are met with the inescapable conclusion that it is the seller who stands in the inferior bargaining position. It should be borne in mind that producers are not easy to contact; that those with authority to purchase for radio and television are surrounded by a coterie of secretaries and assistants; that magazine editors and publishers are not readily available to the average person. It should also be borne in mind that writers have no way of advertising their wares—that, as is most graphically illustrated by the present opinion, no producer, publisher, or purchaser for radio or television, is going to buy a pig in a poke. And, when the writer, in an earnest endeavor to sell what he has written, conveys his idea or his different interpretation of an old idea, to such prospective purchaser, he has lost the result of his labor, definitely and irrevocably. And, in addition, there is no way in which he can protect himself. If he says to whomever he is permitted to see, or, as in this case, talk with over the telephone, "I won't tell you what my idea is until you promise to pay me for it," it takes no Sherlock Holmes to figure out what the answer will be! This case is a beautiful example of the practical difficulties besetting a writer with something to sell—he is not permitted even to see the secretary in person—he must convey to her over the telephone the result of his efforts.

There is no necessity for the superfluous, even though learned, discussion of the "law pertaining to contracts, express, implied-in-fact and implied-in-law, and quasi-contractual obligations, as related to ideas and literary property" found in the majority opinion. In California we have code sections distinctly defining the various types of contract and we have not been informed why those code sections are ineffective to deal with the problem of ideas and literary property. As a matter of fact, if I understand the majority opinion, it finally comes down to earth and relies on those code sections. In the majority opinion we find this statement: "From what has been shown respecting the law of ideas and of contracts we conclude that conveyance of an idea can constitute valuable consideration and can be bargained for before it is disclosed to the proposed purchaser, but once it is conveyed, i. e., disclosed to him and he has grasped it, it is henceforth his own and he may work with it and use it as he sees fit. In the field of entertainment the producer may properly and validly agree that he will pay for the service of conveying to him ideas which are valuable and which he can put to profitable use. Furthermore, where an idea has been conveyed with the expectation by the purveyor that compensation will be paid if the idea is used, there is no reason why the producer who has been the beneficiary of the conveyance of such an idea, and who finds it valuable and is profiting by it, may not then for the first time, although he is not at that time under any legal obligation so to do, promise to pay a reasonable compensation for that idea—that is, for the past service of furnishing it to him—and thus create a valid obligation." (Emphasis added.) It seems to me most obvious that a seller of literary work would not disclose his ideas incorporated in his work to a prospective purchaser of the same without an implied understanding on the part of both that such an idea, if used by the one to whom it was disclosed, would be paid for by the one in a position to use the literary work. The very positions occupied by the buyer and seller would be sufficient to raise an implication that the one offering the literary work, and the one to whom it was disclosed, had agreed, impliedly that if the literary work were used by the one to whom it was shown, or offered, that it would be paid for. It should not be necessary to lay down so many cast-iron rules when really the only question involved is the use made of the proffered work without compensation being made therefor. The buyer, or one to whom the literary work was offered, is adequately protected from unfounded claims by the rules defining a protectible literary work and by the fact that the trier of fact must find that the one accused of an unauthorized use of the literary work had access thereto, that the author's work bears a reasonable resemblance to that produced by the defendant. I disagree with the statement in the majority opinion that: "The idea man who blurts out his idea without having first made his bargain has no one but himself to blame for the loss of his bargaining power." It seems to me that in the ordinary situation, when the so-called "idea man" has an opportunity to see, or talk with, the prospective purchaser, or someone in his employ, that it is at that time, without anything being said, known to both parties that the one is there to sell, and the other to buy. This is surely true of a department store when merchandise is displayed on the counter—it is understood by anyone entering the store that the merchandise so displayed is for sale—it is completely unnecessary for the storekeeper, or anyone in his employ, to state to anyone entering the store that all articles there are for sale. I am at a loss to see why any different rules should apply when it is ideas for sale rather than the normal run of merchandise. It is quite true that one need not pay for ideas as such which are in the public domain but when those ideas have been so treated that they have worth or value to a prospective purchaser, it is difficult to understand why it is necessary that the seller should definitely state that he is selling his merchandise to a prospective buyer. It appears to me that the positions occupied by the parties should be sufficient to raise the inference that if the literary work is used by the prospective buyer, compensation would be paid therefor regardless of how much time the buyer takes to decide whether he will use it.

Leta May JACQUEMART, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Eugene Arthur JACQUEMART, Pearl Cox, also known as Peggye Louise Jacquemart, and also known as Peggy Carroll, et al., Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 21415.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

July 3, 1956.

Wife's action against husband for partition of real estate. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Lewis Drucker, J., rendered judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Parker Wood, J., held that wife who held a community interest with her husband was not entitled to partition.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error 🔑103

Orders striking evidence, sustaining objections to introduction of evidence, and granting motion for judgment on pleadings were not appealable.

2. Husband and Wife 🔑14(3), 249

A community estate and a joint tenancy cannot exist at the same time in the same property.

3. Husband and Wife ⚷272(4)

Wife who held a community interest with her husband in property was not entitled to partition. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., § 752; West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 161, 682, 685.

4. Partition ⚷1, 32

Partition is a statutory action, and may be brought by one or more of the persons described by statute. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 752.

Walter H. Young, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Beardsley, Hufstedler & Kemble, Seth M. Hufstedler and Harry L. Hupp, Los Angeles, for respondents.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

[1] Plaintiff filed an action for partition of real property. Defendants, Eugene A. Jacquemart and Pearl Cox, made a motion for judgment on the pleadings on the ground that the complaint did not state a cause of action. They also objected, upon the same ground, to the introduction of any evidence. The court reserved the rulings on the motion and objection, and received evidence subject to the reservation of rulings. When the presentation of evidence was completed, defendants made a motion to strike out all the evidence. The objection (to introduction of evidence) was sustained, and the two motions (to strike the evidence, and for judgment on the pleadings) were granted. The judgment was that plaintiff take nothing. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment. The notice of appeal also states that she appeals from the orders striking the evidence, sustaining the objection to introduction of evidence, and granting motion for judgment on the pleadings. Since said orders are not appealable, the purported appeals therefrom will be dismissed.

The complaint alleged: Plaintiff and defendant Eugene A. Jacquemart are husband and wife, but since November 10, 1942, they have been living separate and apart by virtue of a judgment of separate maintenance entered by the superior court of Los Angeles County in favor of plaintiff and against said defendant Eugene A. Jacquemart. Plaintiff and said defendant Eugene A. Jacquemart own as community property in equal undivided interests certain real property in Los Angeles County, California (the legal description thereof being alleged). There is an encumbrance against said property in the form of a note secured by a trust deed with Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company as a beneficiary, and the unpaid balance thereof being approximately $4,500. Defendant Pearl Cox asserts some claim, right, title or interest in and to said property, but said assertions are without right and invalid. Prior to commencement of said action, plaintiff requested Eugene A. Jacquemart to sell the property, pay the encumbrance, and divide the proceeds between plaintiff and said Eugene A. Jacquemart. The property consists of a lot with a dwelling thereon and cannot be physically partitioned or divided. Plaintiff has employed an attorney at law to prosecute said action for partition for the common benefit of the owners thereof, and plaintiff requests a reasonable sum for the services of said attorney.

The prayer of the complaint was for a judgment of partition, that the property be sold, that from the proceeds of the sale the encumbrances, attorney's fees, and expenses of sale, be paid and that the net proceeds be divided as ordered by the court.

The question is whether a wife, who is living separate and apart from her husband by virtue of a judgment of separate maintenance, can maintain an action for partition of community property.

[2, 3] Section 752 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "When several cotenants own real property as joint tenants, or tenants in common, in which one or more of them have an estate of inheritance, or for life or lives, or for years, or when real property is subject to a life estate with remainder over, an action may be brought by one or more of such persons * * * for a partition thereof according to the respective rights of the persons interested therein, and for a sale of such property, or a part thereof, if it appears that a partition can not be made without great prejudice to the parties." The complaint does not allege that the property is owned as joint tenants or tenants in common. The allegation is that the property is owned "as community property." Ownership of community property is not the same as ownership of property as joint tenants or as tenants in common. Section 161 of the Civil Code provides: "A husband and wife may hold property as joint tenants, tenants in common, or as community property." Section 682 of the Civil Code provides: "The ownership of property by several persons is either: 1. Of joint interests; 2. Of partnership interests; 3. Of interests in common; 4. Of community interest of husband and wife." "[A] community estate and a joint tenancy cannot exist at the same time in the same property." Siberell v. Siberell, 214 Cal. 767, 773, 7 P.2d 1003, 1005. "An interest in common is one owned by several persons, not in joint ownership or partnership." Civ.Code, § 685. It thus appears that the allegation that the property involved herein is owned "as community property" is not a sufficient allegation that plaintiff is a person, within the meaning of section 752 of the Code of Civil Procedure, who is entitled to maintain a partition action.

[4] Partition is a statutory action. In Ryer v. Fletcher Ryer Co., 126 Cal. 482, at page 483, 58 P. 908, at page 909, it was said: "Partition under our Code, is a special statutory proceeding. [Citations.] We must therefore look to the statute for the authority to bring the action." In Murphy v. Superior Court, 138 Cal. 69, at page 70, 70 P. 1070, it was said: "Partition in this state is a special statutory proceeding." In Bacon v. Wahrhaftig, 97 Cal. App.2d 599, at page 603, 218 P.2d 144, at page 147, it was said: "The action for partition may be brought by one or more of the persons described in section 752 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is a special proceeding regulated by the provisions of the statute * * *." In Smedberg v. Bevilockway, 7 Cal.App.2d 578, 46 P.2d 820, the plaintiff, as trustee in the bankruptcy estate of a wife sought to satisfy an approved claim in bankruptcy (claim against the wife) from the community property of the wife and her husband (the husband was not obligated to pay the claim). It was held therein that a demurrer to the complaint was properly sustained. That was not a partition action, but it was said therein, 7 Cal.App.2d at page 581, 46 P.2d at page 821: "At the instance of the wife her interest could be segregated by a mutual contract between her and her husband [Citation.]; or in a divorce action [Citation.]; or a separate action based on a divorce action [Citation.]; or, on her death, by reason of the provisions of her will. [Citation.] Our statutes provide no other methods. There are authorities to the effect that neither husband nor wife, except as we have recited, can force a division of the community property by partition (Freeman on Partition and Cotenancy, § 445), nor by a proceeding in equity." Section 172a of the Civil Code provides, in part, that "The husband has the management and control of the community real property * * *." In Johnson v. Johnson, 33 Cal.App. 93, at page 96, 164 P. 421, at page 422, which was an action for separate maintenance, it was said that the decree of separate maintenance did not affect the marital relation, and until that relation was dissolved "the husband was entitled to the control of the community property * * *."

Appellant asserts that while Eugene A. Jacquemart, as a husband, may have the right to manage and control the property, he does not have a right to manage and control it adversely to the interests of himself and wife, and "that when he continues to reside therein with his admitted paramour and to assert that she is the real owner of the property, that under these circumstances the court has inherent equity jurisdiction to decree a partition of this property under its general equity powers," and "that in the case of a Decree of Separate Maintenance, the court has inherent power to divide the community property on the application of a spouse by instituting a separate action for such division and that the husband's right of management of the community property is no insuperable bar. To hold otherwise would be to force the wife to sue for divorce to obtain such relief and the wife in this case should certainly not be deprived of her community property interest in property where the husband is clearly acting adversely to the wife's interest."

At the trial in the present case, the opinion on appeal in the case of Jacquemart v. Jacquemart, 125 Cal.App.2d 122, 269 P.2d 951, was handed to the trial judge for his consideration. The parties in that case are parties in the present case. That opinion shows that in 1942 when the decree of separate maintenance was granted the community property of Mr. and Mrs. Jacquemart was divided equally between them; thereafter he lived with Pearl Cox, and in 1950 he gave her money with which she purchased a home; title to the property was taken in her name; the action was to impress a trust upon the property as community property. It was held therein that the property (the same property that is involved here) was community property and that Mrs. Cox held the property as trustee for the husband and wife. It is also to be noted that the court therein, in modifying the judgment of the trial court, said, 125 Cal.App.2d at page 126, 269 P.2d at page 953: "Mr. Jacquemart shall have the right to manage and control it [property involved in the present case] in conformity with the community property laws of this state." In the present case, appellant argues that judicial notice can be taken of said former case of Jacquemart v. Jacquemart, and that said case shows a fraudulent scheme on the part of Eugene A. Jacquemart and Pearl Cox to conceal the existence of the property from the appellant herein. She also argues in effect that since there was fraud on the part of the husband, a court of equity has inherent power to partition the community property. Appellant cites Dandini v. Dandini, 120 Cal.App.2d 211, 260 P.2d 1033, wherein a wife was awarded a decree of separate maintenance and all the community property and thereafter the wife sued the husband and some third persons on the basis that they conspired to defraud her of her interest in certain other community property by concealing the other property. In that case plaintiff obtained a money judgment against the defendants, apparently upon the basis of "extrinsic fraud." That case is distinguishable in that it is not a partition case.

As above indicated, the complaint in the present case did not allege facts showing that plaintiff is a person, within the meaning of said section 752 of the Code of Civil Procedure, who is entitled to maintain an action for partition of the property involved here.

The purported appeals from the orders striking the evidence, sustaining the objection to introduction of evidence, and granting motion for judgment on the pleadings, are dismissed. The judgment is affirmed.

Fay H. Douglas, Real Party in Interest.

Civ. 21825.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.
July 10, 1956.

Petition for a writ of prohibition. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, J. pro tem., held that in divorce action, where wife filed an answer and cross complaint and husband was ordered to pay $250 a month as alimony pendente lite and subsequently court dismissed cross complaint but denied husband's motion to dismiss cross complainant's action and wife applied to the respondent court for a writ of execution for sums unpaid under alimony order, respondent court had jurisdiction and writ of prohibition to prevent the court from exercising that jurisdiction must be denied.

Peremptory writ of prohibition prayed for denied and alternative writ heretofore issued discharged.

1. Prohibition 🔑31

Where the very wording of a writ of prohibition was limited to proceedings against the petitioners who had there sought the writ and petitioner in the instant proceeding was not one of them the writ did not prohibit the respondent court from taking further proceedings as against the petitioner.

2. Divorce 🔑214(1), 216, 218

An order for the payment of alimony pendente lite is to all intents a judgment, and application for such an order while not a separate action is a proceeding for a separate judgment independent of the final judgment in the action and the dismissal of the action or judgment upon the merits in favor of the party against whom the order is made does not vacate that judgment but only terminates the right to alimony awarded by it.

Jerrell Babb, Los Angeles, for real party in interest.

NOURSE, Justice pro tem.

Petitioner is the plaintiff and cross-defendant in an action for divorce commenced by him in April, 1944.

On June 1, 1944, his wife filed an answer and cross-complaint in which she named as cross-defendants petitioner and Edwin S. Douglas, Jr. On October 30, 1944, the respondent court made and entered an order requiring petitioner to pay to his wife as defendant and cross-complainant the sum of $250 per month as alimony pendente lite. On March 21, 1946, the cross-complainant filed what she entitled a supplemental cross-complaint naming as cross-defendants one Grace Kunkle; Telegraph Delivery Service, a corporation; Edwin S. Douglas, Jr.; and petitioner. On July 5, 1949, the court of its own motion dismissed the plaintiff's action pursuant to the provisions of section 583, Code of Civil Procedure. On July 7, 1949, the court dismissed the cross-complaint but denied petitioner's motion to dismiss cross-complainant's action, and proceeded to try the case upon the supplemental cross-complaint.

After the cause was submitted a mistrial was declared. Thereupon the cross-defendants other than petitioner here applied to this court for a writ of prohibition to restrain the court from taking any further proceedings against them, contending that the court was without jurisdiction and had abused its discretion in denying their motion to dismiss the action. On November 2, 1949, this court granted a peremptory writ of prohibition.[1] The writ that issued, so far as pertinent here, reads: "The People of the State of California to the Superior Court in and for the County of Los Angeles, and to the Honorable Clarence L. Kincaid, Judge thereof, Greeting: "* * * we do command you * * that you absolutely desist and refrain from taking any further proceedings against or making any orders affecting petitioners herein in the above entitled proceedings * * *." [Emphasis added.]

No order has been made dismissing the supplemental cross-complaint, although undoubtedly petitioner is entitled to have it dismissed.

Fay H. Douglas, cross-complainant and real party in interest here, has applied to the respondent court for a writ of execution for sums accrued and unpaid under the order of October 30, 1944. Respondent court has entertained this motion and will, unless restrained by this court, order a writ of execution to issue.

Petitioner here seeks to restrain the court from entertaining cross-complainant's motion or taking any action in the premises. Petitioner's contentions are: (1) That the respondent court is prohibited from acting by the writ of prohibition issued by this court and heretofore mentioned; (2) That the respondent court is without jurisdiction for the reason that it is mandatory upon said court to dismiss said action because of the failure of Fay H. Douglas to bring her action to trial within the five-year period specified by section 583, Code of Civil Procedure; (3) That the dismissal of the cross-complaint by the respondent court on July 7, 1949, constituted a dismissal of cross-complainant's action, and that therefore the court is without jurisdiction to order execution to issue.

None of petitioner's contentions can be sustained.

[1] The peremptory writ of prohibition issued by this court in 1949 did not prohibit the respondent court from taking further proceedings as against petitioner here. By its very wording the writ was limited to proceedings against the petitioners who had there sought the writ. Petitioner here was not one of them.

We will treat of the second and third contentions made by petitioner together, and will assume for the purposes of this decision that the dismissal of the cross-complaint constituted a dismissal of cross-complainant's action.

[2, 3] An order for the payment of alimony pendente lite "is to all legal intents and purposes a judgment" and the application for such an order, while not a separate action, is a proceeding for a separate judgment independent of the final judgment in the action; and the dismissal of the action or a judgment upon the merits in favor of the party against whom the order is made does not vacate that judgment but only terminates the right to alimony awarded by it. Robbins v. Mulcrevy, 101 Cal.App. 300, 281 P. 668; Biltmore Drug Store v. Superior Court, 101 Cal.App. 363, 281 P. 710; In re Robbins, 212 Cal. 534, 299 P. 51; Rothermel v. Dipple, 15 Pa.Dist.R. 547. It follows that the respondent court has jurisdiction to exercise the discretion vested in it by section 685 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the writ sought here must

Civ. 8669.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
July 5, 1956.

Action for an injunction to prevent defendants from continuing to use an access road from their property which narrowed the street in front of plaintiff's property and for damages for injury to the street. From an adverse judgment in the Superior Court, Placer County, Lowell L. Sparks, J., the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McMurray, J. pro tem., held that the court properly refused to enjoin the continued use of the access roadway, and held that plaintiff could have no private action for the damages incurred by narrowing of the traveled way of the public highway, where the injuries suffered by plaintiff for which he had not received damages, were no different than those suffered by the general public.

Affirmed.

1. Municipal Corporations 🔑671(5)

Where damages were awarded plaintiff for injury to his lot from construction of an access road from defendants' property to the street, the court properly refused to enjoin the continued use of the access road or to award further damages to the public way by reason of its narrowing.

2. Municipal Corporations 🔑671(1)

In action for damages for injury to street which has been dedicated to the public because of the construction of an access road from defendants' property to the street where the injuries suffered by plaintiff for which he had not received damages were no different than those suffered by the general public, plaintiff had no private cause of action for the damages incurred by narrowing of the traveled way of the public highway.

3. Injunction 🔑1

Injunction is a remedy wherein the equities involved in the particular matter must be carefully regarded by the court below.

Samuel C. Shenk, San Francisco, for appellant.

McMURRAY, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a judgment by which the trial court denied the plaintiff's request for injunctive relief to prevent the defendants from continuing to use an access road from defendants' property to the street, which access road narrowed the street in front of plaintiff's property and prevented free ingress to and egress from a portion of plaintiff's property. Plaintiff also appeals from the decision of the trial court denying damages for the injury to the street which had been dedicated to public use by reason of the construction of this access road. The trial court awarded plaintiff damages for the permanent injury to his property caused by the construction of the access road and by reason of his loss of ingress to and egress from the portion of his property affected by the encroachment. By his complaint the plaintiff sought damages for the encroachment upon his property and also sought damages for the damage to the fee underlying the easement for right of way which arose from the dedication of the property to public use and in the alternative sought injunctive relief.

The court, acting within its fact-finding powers, found that there was damage to the plaintiff's property by reason of a certain cut and fill made in constructing the access road, a portion of which fill spilled over onto the plaintiff's property, but further found that the plaintiff had suffered no different or greater damage which was specially injurious to it than did the members of the general public by reason of the narrowing of that portion of the traveled way which was encroached upon by the cut made in building defendants' access road. On this appeal, plaintiff complains that the trial court erred in not granting an injunction against the continued existence of the encroachment upon plaintiff's property in the fee underlying the right of way granted by dedication at the time a subdivision was made of the property. The plaintiff having elected to sue for damages as well as an injunction comes within the rule enunciated in Slater v. Shell Oil Co., 58 Cal.App.2d 864, 137 P.2d 713, and cases therein cited. On page 870 of 58 Cal.App. 2d, on page 715 of 137 P.2d of that opinion the court said:

> "* * * Where, therefore, a party elects to sue for damages past and prospective he is deemed to have waived the invasion and consented to the continued occupancy of the land. Such is the rule of the majority of the cases." See also Williams v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 150 Cal. 624, 89 P. 599; Rankin v. DeBare, 205 Cal. 639, 271 P. 1050.

[1] By awarding damages to the plaintiff for the damage done to his lot, it must be assumed that the court included in that assessment of damage the damage in the nature of waste which has been committed against the underlying fee owned by the plaintiff in the public highway since such interest could only exist by reason of plaintiff's ownership of the principal lot, and we believe that the court was correct in refusing to enjoin the continued use of the access roadway or the award of further damages for injury to the public way by reason of its narrowing.

[2, 3] It cannot be said that the injuries suffered by plaintiff for which he has not received damages is any different from the injury which has been suffered by the general public. Under the state of the record here it would seem readily apparent that the plaintiff could have no private action for the damage incurred by the narrowing of the traveled way of the public highway. Gardner v. Stroever, 89 Cal. 26, 26 P. 618; Hitch v. Scholle, 180 Cal. 467, 181 P. 657; Siskiyou Lumber & Mercantile Co. v. Rostel, 121 Cal. 511, 53 P. 1118; McCloskey v. Kreling, 76 Cal. 511, 18 P. 433. Under these facts we cannot say that the court abused its discretion in failing to grant an injunction which is a remedy wherein the equities involved in the particular matter not only should be but must be carefully regarded by the court below. It is apparent that the court performed this duty and arrived at its conclusion well within the limits prescribed by established equitable principles.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

PACIFIC MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Defendant, Cross-Complainant and Appellant.*

Civ. 5168.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

July 19, 1956.

Hearing Granted Sept. 13, 1956.

Action to recovery disability benefits under income policy. The Superior Court, San Diego County, Dean Sherry, J., entered judgment for insured and insurer appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Burch, J., pro tem., held that provision of income policy that indemnity would not be paid at rate in excess of average earnings of insured for period he had been actually employed during two years immediately preceding commencement of disability was an exception or exclusion to obligation and was ambiguous and hence would be construed strictly against insurer and liberally in favor of insured.

Affirmed.

1. Insurance ⚷530

A policy provision which measures the amount of recovery does not avoid the obligation of the policy.

2. Insurance ⚷530

Where insured explained to insurer at time of renewing income policy in 1946 that insured had been given physical disability discharge from army and insurer's executive officer replied that only exclusion would be for service-connected sickness and coverage would be effective as to other illnesses and where insured reported to insurer in 1947 that insured had been unable to do any work, circumstances did not indicate that parties intended that insured's retirement more than two years prior to disability suffered on September 17, 1952 vitiated insurance under policy provision that indemnity would not be paid at rate in excess of average earnings of insured for period he had been actually employed during two years immediately preceding commencement of disability.

3. Insurance ⚷530

Provision of income policy that insurer will pay indemnity for period throughout which disability consists of continuous, necessary and total loss of all business time does not carry with it clear and unambiguous meaning that gainful employment is a prerequisite to recovery notwithstanding total disability.

4. Insurance ⚷530

Where insurer before renewing income policy had full and truthful information from insured of disability requiring insured's discharge from army, if gainful employment was essential and retirement a ground for exclusion, it became duty of insurer to deny renewal or at least pursue inquiry.

5. Insurance ⚷530

Provision of income policy that indemnity would not be paid at rate in excess of average earnings of insured for period he has been actually employed during two years immediately preceding commencement of disability was an exception or exclusion to obligation and was ambiguous and hence would be construed strictly against insurer and liberally in favor of insured.

6. Insurance ⚷146(3)

If any uncertainties or ambiguities appear in an insurance policy which may be solved by either one of two reasonable constructions, the one which is most favorable to the insured and which will give life, force and effect to policy should be adopted.

The plaintiff brought this action to recover certain disability benefits alleged to be due from defendant, a California corporation, under the terms of a certain insurance policy. The court below gave judgment for plaintiff and defendant appeals.

* Opinion vacated 306 P.2d 448.

The policy originally issued in January, 1929, was inoperative during plaintiff's military service from 1940 to 1946. It was renewed in 1946 and continued in force through the year 1952. It is captioned "Non-Cancellable Income Policy" and it "provides indemnity for * * * loss of time by sickness; * * *". The obligation is stated, so far as material, as insurance "against disability commencing while this policy is in force and resulting from sickness; as follows:

> "The company will pay indemnity at the rate of Two Hundred Dollars per month for the period throughout which disability * * * consists of continuous, necessary and total loss of all business time * * *".

Plaintiff suffered the kind of disability described in the obligation of the contract on September 17, 1952, while the policy as renewed was in full force. In denying liability the company states:

> "(Our contention) is that under the policy plaintiff had to prove two things: First, in order for the plaintiff to recover under the policy at all he had to bring himself within its terms—that is he had to show that he really lost business time; second, in order to establish a measure of recovery under the terms of the policy (in excess of zero), he had to show average earnings in excess of zero during some part of the prior two years."

Among the "Additional Provisions", on the third page of the policy, we find "The Insured is by occupation a Physician and Surgeon classified Extra Ordinary by the Company", and also Paragraph 25:

> "Indemnity for disability will not be paid under this policy at a rate in excess of the average earnings of the Insured for the period of time that he has been actually employed during the two years immediately preceding the commencement of the disability for which the Company is liable * *".

[1, 2] Defendant construes the last quoted clause to defeat the benefits of the insurance in their entirety. The argument is made that, since this is the only method of measuring the rate of indemnity payable in the event of the insured's disability, the insured must have been gainfully employed within the two-year period mentioned in order to collect any indemnity. This argument is fully answered, we think, by a recent decision of the Supreme Court in construing an "incontestable" clause where the insured understated his age in his application. The court said: "A policy provision which measures the amount of recovery does not avoid the obligation of the policy." New York Life Ins. Co. v. Hollender, 38 Cal.2d 73, 78, 237 P.2d 510, 513. Concededly the insured was voluntarily retired from his profession during the two years before he suffered his present total disability in 1952. He was also retired from his practice during the period of his military service. On renewing his policy thereafter he explained to the company that he was given a physical disability discharge, and particularly inquired the effect thereof upon the renewal. The company by an executive officer replied that the only exclusions would be for service-connected sickness, and that coverage would be effective as to other illnesses. Again in 1947 plaintiff reported to the company "I have been unable to do any work". He stated on a company form that his occupation was "Physician (retired)" and indicated he had no earnings. These definite statements of the insured, accepted by the company, are some evidences of the intent of the parties upon the point in renewing the policy, and maintaining it over a period of six years while the plaintiff was unemployed. These circumstances do not indicate that the parties intended that plaintiff's retirement vitiated the insurance. Defendant argues further that the construction for which it contends finds support in the use of the term "loss of business time" in the clause of the policy quoted, supra.

[3] A policy of the company which contained this same clause was interpreted by the Supreme Court of Arkansas, wherein the court said:

> "So, here, the controlling consideration is one of fact: Was there substantial testimony to support the jury's finding that the disease suffered by appellee resulted in continuous, necessary, and total loss of all business time, 'business time' meaning ability to engage in sustained effort of a character sufficiently substantial to negative the idea that there was not a total loss of power reasonably to continue the business or profession." Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Riffel, 202 Ark. 94, 149 S.W. 2d 57, 59.

The interpretation put upon the clause by the high court of a sister state is of course not controlling here. It is, however, an impressive demonstration that the clause does not carry a clear and unambiguous meaning that gainful employment is a prerequisite to recovery notwithstanding total disability, as defendant suggests. No California case interpreting the exact point has come to our attention, but in Cobb v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co., 4 Cal.2d 565, 51 P.2d 84, the defendant's noncancellable income policy furnished the basis for the action. The court said in its opinion, 4 Cal.2d at page 567, 51 P.2d at page 85:

> "By its terms the company obligated itself to pay indemnity on account of disability resulting from sickness or accidental means, at the rate of $250 per month for the period throughout which such disability 'consists of continuous, necessary and total loss of all business time.' * * * That the disabling effects of said disease [sleeping sickness] have rendered the insured totally and permanently incapacitated within the terms of the policy and constitutes a continuous loss of 'business time,' and that its course is progressive and cannot be cured or arrested, is conclusively established by all of the medical testimony in the case * * *". (Emphasis ours.)

The same clause then, when brought to the court's attention in the Cobb case, seems to have received a construction quite contrary to defendant's contention here. As treated by the court the "loss of 'business time'" was only a fact question incident to the extent of the incapacity, and was determined by the character of the disability. Whether Paragraph 25 was before the court does not appear specifically, nor is it apparent that the insured was either retired or employed gainfully. The court did hold that upon paying the premiums and suffering the described disability the indemnity was payable "provided he made no fraudulent misrepresentations nor withheld any material information from the company's medical examiner as to the state of his health, or made any statement as to facts which were not true and which, if fully and truthfully given, would have probably caused said company to reject said applicant as not being an acceptable or desirable risk."

[4] Plaintiff here has met every requirement under the policy as stated in the last quotation from the Cobb case. Before the company renewed the policy in 1946 affording the insurance in question, it had full and truthful information from plaintiff of a disability requiring his discharge from the army. If gainful employment was essential, and retirement a ground of exclusion, it became the duty of the company to deny renewal or at least pursue the inquiry, DiPasqua v. California Western States Life Ins. Co., 106 Cal.App.2d 281, 235 P.2d 64; Weir v. New York Life Ins. Co., 91 Cal.App. 222, 266 P. 996; Johnson v. Life Ins. Co. of Georgia, Fla., 52 So.2d 813, and cases there cited. Circumstances putting the insured on notice may not be deliberately disregarded. (See Zeldman v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 269 App.Div. 53, 53 N.Y.S.2d 792, 794.) More than that, before renewal the insured asked the company for its interpretation of the policy on the matter of his incapacity. The company found no reason for exclusion at that time. The record discloses neither fraud nor concealment, or want of fair dealing on his part.

[5, 6] Paragraph 25 is an exception or exclusion to the obligation of the contract and, as such, must be construed "strictly against the insurer and liberally in favor of the insured. Mah See v. North American Accident Ins. Co., 190 Cal. 421, 424–425, 213 P. 42, 26 A.L.R. 123; Pacific Heating & Ventilating Co. v. Williamsburg City Fire Ins. Co., 158 Cal. 367, 369–370, 111 P. 4." Arenson v. National Automobile & Casualty Ins. Co., 45 Cal.2d 81, 286 P.2d 816, 818.

The same rule of construction applies because of the ambiguity of the paragraph. Arenson v. National Automobile & Casualty Ins. Co., supra. When tested by the understanding of the ordinary person the inference that it only applies where the insured has been "actually employed" is at least equally tenable with the inference defendant would have us draw. In such case, the words of Justice Marks, approved and adopted by the Supreme Court in Narver v. California State Life Ins. Co., 211 Cal. 176, 180, 294 P. 393, 395, 71 A.L.R. 1374, are authoritative. He writes:

> "It is a well-recognized rule of law that if any uncertainties or ambiguities appear in an insurance policy which may be solved by either one of two reasonable constructions, the one which is most favorable to the insured and which will give life, force, and effect to the policy should be adopted. The insurance company, having prepared the policy and all documents used in connection with its issuance, should not be heard to put such a construction upon an ambiguity caused by it, as will defeat the policy and take from the beneficiary the very purpose and object of the insurance, if a reasonable construction upholding the insurance can be had that does no violence to the language used and the clear intention of the parties."

Here, the company could have easily made the meaning plain and did not.

Judgment affirmed.

James F. Curtin, Long Beach, for appellant.

Loughman & Fay, Ventura, for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

Evelyn C. Neathery died testate on July 14, 1951; appellant is decedent's husband, and the respondent Dorothy Patterson is decedent's daughter by a previous marriage and executrix named in the will.

The will bequeathed to the husband "all of my interest in the household furniture and furnishings now located in the real property in the name of either or both of us. To any other person claiming an interest in my estate, I give the sum of $1.00 and no more. Fourth: I hereby give, devise and bequeath all of the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, real and personal, including jewelry, of whatever kind or character and wherever situated to my beloved daughter, Dorothy Patterson."

Subsequent to execution of the will, and on June 12, 1951, testatrix executed three grant deeds to the daughter, conveying the property alluded to in the will, but reserving a life estate therein to appellant husband and the decedent. According to these deeds the property was held by Mr. and Mrs. Neathery as joint tenants. It is to be noted, however, that in an action for declaratory relief and to quiet title, (Ventura County, No. 44283) brought by Clarence M. Neathery against Dorothy Patterson, a judgment was entered on February 14, 1955, adjudging that this real estate was the community property of Mr. and Mrs. Neathery. An appeal from this judgment was abandoned.

The order appealed from is one denying Clarence M. Neathery's "Petition for Decree Determining Interests in Estate and to Construe Will", which prayed "That the court will order and decree that the legal effect of the delivery of the three grant deeds to Dorothy Patterson her daughter on the 12th day of June, 1951, after she had made her last will and testament was an ademption and gift of the real estate in Clause Fourth thereof and a revocation of the testamentary disposition of said devise". The order made by the trial court determines that "the deeds involved herein were nullities and did not constitute an ademption".

Section 73 of the Probate Code, upon which appellant's claim is predicated, reads as follows: "If the instrument by which an alteration is made in the testator's interest in any property previously disposed of by his will expresses his intent that it shall be a revocation, or if it contains provisions wholly inconsistent with the terms and nature of the testamentary disposition, it operates as a revocation thereof, unless such inconsistent provisions depend on a condition or contingency by reason of which they do not take effect."

Respondent, however, refers to Section 1050 of the Probate Code which provides that "A gift before death shall be considered as an ademption of a bequest or devise of the property given; but such gift shall not be taken as an advancement to an heir or as an ademption of a general legacy unless such intention is expressed by the testator in the grant or otherwise in writing, or unless the donee acknowledges it in writing to be such." (Italics added.)

[1] In view of the above provisions, and of the circumstances evidenced by the record, the appellant's contention that the execution of the deeds operated as an ademption, cannot be sustained. As pointed out in respondent's brief, the Fourth paragraph of the will here in dispute is a general, residuary clause, giving to Dorothy Patterson "all the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, real and personal". It is not a specific bequest, and the deeds include no expression of intention by testatrix that the transaction should operate as an ademption. Nor is there any other writing expressing such an intention. Whatever the legal effect of the deeds may be, a clear intention is indicated that the daughter is to have Mrs. Neathery's interest in the real estate, which is the same intention evidenced in the will.

[2] Furthermore, as mentioned by the trial court in its Memorandum of Opinion, "The Court has heretofore held (Ventura County, No. 44293) that the property involved is community property", and that "the deeds involved were nullities". Obviously, if the deeds are nullities, they can be of no effect whatsoever, either as amounting to an ademption, or otherwise. In giving effect to the testamentary clause making Dorothy Patterson the general, residuary legatee and devisee, the intention of the testatrix is being given effect.

The order is affirmed.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from the judgment dismissing his action after the demurrer to his amended complaint was sustained and he refused to further amend. The object of the action is to recover taxes on certain jewelry for the years 1953 and 1954 paid by appellant to the City of Los Angeles and County of Los Angeles. The facts alleged in the complaint are deemed true and the following is a summary of the pertinent allegations.

The jewelry was purchased by appellant in 1943 while he and his wife were residents of Beverly Hills in Los Angeles County. An action for divorce and other relief was commenced by his wife in April 1951, while both parties were still residents of Los Angeles County. In June of the same year appellant moved to, and became a resident of, Ventura County. In July 1952, his wife appealed from the portion of the interlocutory judgment of divorce which awarded said jewelry to appellant as his sole and separate property, and in August 1952, pursuant to court order staying execution in accordance with Section 943 of the Code of Civil Procedure, she delivered all of said jewelry to the Clerk of Los Angeles County.

Taxes for the years 1953 and 1954 were assessed to said County Clerk and paid by appellant under protest. The District Court of Appeal affirmed the judgment that appellant was the owner of the jewelry. Howard v. Howard, 128 Cal.App.2d 180, 275 P.2d 88. The remittitur was issued and filed with the Clerk of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County on December 20, 1954. Thereafter appellant procured an order to show cause and a further order of court directing delivery of the jewelry to him. On March 4, 1955, all of said jewelry was delivered to him and removed by him to Ventura County. If appellant "had not been prevented from removing said jewelry to the county of his residence and where he maintains his home, namely, said Ventura County, he would, in June, 1951, have moved it to said County of Ventura".

[1] We have purposely omitted the statements of contentions and conclusions alleged in the complaint as the demurrer does not give to them the status of admitted facts, as urged by appellant. Connecticut Gen. L. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 8 Cal. 2d 624, 628–629, 67 P.2d 675.

Much of appellant's briefs is based upon the assumption that the impounding of the jewelry with the Clerk of Los Angeles County removed it from the domicile of its owner in Ventura County. However, since the record on the instant appeal fails to disclose that the jewelry was outside of Los Angeles County at any time between 1943 and 1955, we need not consider the arguments based upon that assumption.

[2] The question to be decided is not what effect the removal of jewelry from the residence of its owner would have upon its situs for taxation, but the effect, if any, of the removal of the owner from the tax situs of his jewelry. Appellant's change of residence in June 1951, leaving the jewelry in the possession of his wife in Los Angeles County did not end the right of Los Angeles County to tax it. The deposit of the jewelry in the custody of the Clerk of Los Angeles County, therefore, did not remove the jewelry from any former tax situs, but kept it in Los Angeles County, where it had been continuously from 1943.

> "All property, except as otherwise in this Constitution provided, shall be assessed in the county, city, city and county, town or township, or district in which it is situated, in the manner prescribed by law." Const. art. 13, § 10.

> "Property in litigation in possession of a county treasurer, court, county clerk, or receiver shall be assessed to the officer in possession, and the taxes shall be paid under the direction of the court." Rev. & Tax.Code, § 983.

[3] Appellant urges further that the fact that he did not consent to the impounding of the jewelry in Los Angeles County nullifies the provisions of Section 983, last above quoted. This court is aware of the fact that much of the property in custodia legis has been impounded against the will of its owner. The statute provides the method of taxing that property. The consent of the owner is not a prerequisite. In the instant action, as in many such cases, the ownership of the property was the very question in issue. The jewelry was properly taxed by Los Angeles County as required by said section 983. City of San Luis Obispo v. Pettit, 87 Cal. 499, 25 P. 694; City of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles

July 10, 1956.

Pedestrian's suit against city for damages resulting from personal injuries received by reason of a fall allegedly caused by defect in city sidewalk. The Superior Court, County of Alameda, Ralph E. Hoyt, J., granted a judgment of non-suit and pedestrian appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that even though a difference of elevation in two concrete slabs amounting to only one-half inch was a defect so trivial that as a matter of law no liability could be imposed upon the city, where such defect was only one of many defects in a sidewalk in a generally dilapidated condition, there was sufficient evidence to present a jury question.

1. Municipal Corporations 🔑768(1)

Minor defects in sidewalks will inevitably occur, both in the construction and maintenance of heavily traveled surfaces and the continued existence of these defects is not unreasonable and imposes no liability on part of the city. West's Ann. Gov.Code, §§ 53050 et seq., 53051.

2. Municipal Corporations 🔑791(2)

A city will be charged with constructive notice of substantial defects in a public sidewalk which have existed for such a length of time and are of such a conspicuous character that a reasonable inspection would have disclosed them. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 53050 et seq., 53051.

3. Municipal Corporations 🔑821(16)

In determining whether or not a city has constructive notice of defects in sidewalk, the existence of a badly fragmented and broken sidewalk over several years is sufficient to take the issue of such notice to the jury.

4. Municipal Corporations 🔑819(6)

The determination of whether or not the city had notice of a particular defect in a sidewalk may be aided by the existence of other defects in the same area.

5. Municipal Corporations 🔑821(6)

In pedestrian's suit against city for damages caused by a fall on a public sidewalk, evidence showing a difference in elevation between adjoining concrete slabs of one-half inch at the place of injury together with the existence of a generally broken sidewalk in the area was sufficient to present a jury question as to the city's liability. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 53050 et seq., 53051.

Smith & Parrish, George W. Hauer, Oakland, for appellant.

Clark, Heafey & Martin, Schofield & Cunningham, Oakland, for respondent City of Berkeley.

DOOLING, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment of nonsuit entered in favor of defendant City of Berkeley.

Appellant sued the city for damages, charging negligence in the construction and maintenance of a public sidewalk. She received personal injuries as a result of a fall caused by a defect in this sidewalk.

The trial court being of the opinion that the defect responsible for appellant's fall was a trivial one which did not as a matter of law create a dangerous and defective condition granted a judgment of nonsuit.

The incident out of which this action arose occurred December 29, 1953, at about 1:45 p. m. on a clear, sunny day. Appellant, a woman about 52 years old, left her home at 2243 Ashby Avenue, Berkeley, and proceeded to walk westerly on the sidewalk toward Shattuck Avenue where she intended to catch a bus to take her to her place of employment.

After appellant passed Wheeler Street, which intersects Ashby Avenue, she walked to the curb to see if a bus was coming down Ashby Avenue in the direction she wished to go. There being no bus in sight, appellant turned and started again to walk toward Shattuck Avenue on Ashby. She had taken about four or five steps when she tripped and fell on the sidewalk.

Photographs of the sidewalk area where the accident occurred were introduced into evidence. These reveal a very poor general condition of the sidewalk and a general state of disrepair. Photographs were also introduced showing appellant with her feet placed on the sidewalk approximately as they were just before her fall. In these pictures she was wearing the same shoes she had on at the time of her accident. They were of a low, flat, wedge type sometimes characterized as "sensible."

At the point where appellant fell one concrete slab of the sidewalk was raised about one-half inch over the level of the adjoining and contiguous slab. From the photographs in evidence and appellant's testimony the toe of appellant's left foot caught on the rise between the two concrete slabs while her right foot was on the higher slab of concrete, thus causing her fall.

Beverly Robinson, the fourteen-year old granddaughter of appellant, testified that about two weeks prior to December 29, 1953, she tripped and fell over the same defect that caused appellant's accident. She did not notify anyone of the fact that she had tripped at this place on the sidewalk.

There was evidence that the sidewalk had been in the general condition shown by the photographs approximately a couple of years and that it had been in poor condition for six or seven years.

[1] It is appellant's position that the evidence viewed most favorably to herself showed proof of a dangerous condition and constructive notice to respondent City of Berkeley. Respondent is liable, if at all, under the provisions of what is commonly known as the Public Liability Act, now found in the Government Code, § 53050 et seq. Section 53051 provides that a municipality shall be liable for injuries resulting from a dangerous or defective condition of the public streets where it has notice or knowledge of the condition and fails to remedy it within a reasonable time. In determining whether the essential elements to a recovery under this statute have been proved the determination of whether the defect involved is a minor or trivial one may be material. It is recognized that minor defects will inevitably occur, both in the construction and maintenance of heavily traveled surfaces and the continued existence of these defects is not unreasonable. In such a case, irrespective of the question of notice of the condition, no liability may result. Barrett v. City of Claremont, 41 Cal.2d 70, 256 P.2d 977.

In this case if the only defect considered is the half-inch variance between the two slabs of concrete it is probably true, as contended by respondent, that this defect constituted a minor one as a matter of law for which it could not be held liable. Whiting v. National City, 9 Cal.2d 163, 69 P.2d 990. A half-inch ridge in a sidewalk was held, as a matter of law, to be a trivial defect that imposed no duty on the city in Barrett v. City of Claremont, supra. Moreover, that case, 41 Cal.2d on page 74, 256 P.2d on page 980, contains a listing of other decisions holding that defects of a greater magnitude than the half-inch ridge there involved were minor ones. Indeed appellant admits that if this was the sole defect in question she probably could not recover because as a practical matter it is asking too much of a city to require it to repair the hundreds of minor isolated defects spread throughout its entire area.

Here however appellant argues that when the whole area in question is considered the court is not presented with a trivial or minor defect but with the existence of a dangerous condition of which respondent had notice or knowledge. In making this contention appellant relies on her testimony to the effect that she usually stayed on the right side of a sidewalk, "but there it was so badly that a person kind of jig-jagged around to get on the good spots," and on the photographs in evidence.

[2] There is no contention that respondent had actual knowledge or notice of the alleged dangerous and defective condition. Appellant argues however that respondent had constructive notice of the situation and failed to remedy it. If so, assuming the condition was in fact dangerous or defective respondent would be liable for the injuries resulting therefrom. It is well settled that a city will be charged with constructive notice of substantial defects in the public sidewalk which have existed for such a length of time and are of such a conspicuous character that a reasonable inspection would have disclosed them. Peters v. City & County of San Francisco, 41 Cal.2d 419, 260 P.2d 55.

The photograph, "Plaintiff's Exhibit 5," shows a general view of the sidewalk. From this photograph it is apparent that the entire sidewalk is in an extremely dilapidated and fragmented condition. It is composed of the conventional rectangles of concrete. The rectangle from which appellant was stepping is broken into three pieces with grass and weeds growing through the interstices. The rectangle to which appellant was stepping is broken across one corner with grass and weeds growing through the break. Thirteen or fourteen of the rectangles shown in the photograph have visible cracks running through them, many showing growth protruding through. The outer edge of the sidewalk has cracked and fallen away over a considerable portion of its length, and grass and weeds are growing through wide breaks over a large part of the entire area of the sidewalk.

[3, 4] So far as constructive notice to respondent is concerned, the existence of such a badly fragmented and broken sidewalk over the period of time testified to is more than ample to take the case to the jury. Constructive notice of a particular defect may be aided by the existence of other defects in the same area. In Van Dorn v. City & County of San Francisco, 103 Cal.App.2d 714, at page 719, 230 P.2d 393, at page 396, the court said:

"But in considering the questions whether it was conspicuous or notorious, and whether it had existed for a long time the jury could also consider the three other sunken areas surrounding it, all of which were worse."

In determining the basic question, whether the one-half inch elevation of one rectangle over the other, which had broken away from it and become depressed to that extent, is as a matter of law a trivial defect for which the respondent cannot be held liable a consideration of the policy behind the rule becomes important. In Graves v. Roman, 113 Cal.App.2d 584, at pages 586–587, 248 P.2d 508, 510 the court thus expressed the policy underlying the cases denying liability for trivial defects:

"The authorities disclose that the underlying basis of the decisions is a practical recognition of the impossibility of mantaining heavily traveled surfaces in a perfect condition and that minor defects such as differences in elevation are bound to occur in spite of the exercise of reasonable care by the party having the duty of maintaining the area involved."

Our Supreme Court in Barrett v. City of Claremont, supra, 41 Cal.2d 70, at page 73, 256 P.2d 977, at page 979, similarly said:

"Growing out of the difficulty of maintaining heavily traveled surfaces in perfect condition is the practical recognition that minor defects inevitably occur, both in construction and maintenance, and that their continued existence is not unreasonable. * * * A municipality cannot be expected to maintain the surface of its sidewalks free from all inequalities and from every possible obstruction to travel. Minor defects due to continued use, or action of the elements, or other cause, will not necessarily make the city liable for injuries caused thereby."

[5] Where an entire sidewalk area is in a broken, dilapidated and fragmented condition, so that pedestrians using it must undergo the hazards of many inequalities, any one of which might cause a fall, the reason behind the rule should cease to operate. An isolated minor defect may be so trivial, that though it creates a peril to pedestrians using it, the city as a matter of public policy may not be held liable to repair it. An entire sidewalk crumbling and falling apart is an entirely different matter and the city should not be entitled to ignore the cumulative perils presented by its generally fragmented condition.

Judgment of nonsuit reversed.

Petition for writ of mandate. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Arnold Praeger, J., entered an order denying the petition, and petitioner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Parker Wood, J., held that the matter of determining the duties to be performed by deputy marshal for Municipal Courts in Los Angeles County within the classification of custodian was a matter within the discretion of marshal and not subject to judicial control by writ of mandate and that disciplinary suspension of such deputy marshal for 30 days was not subject to judicial review.

Order affirmed.

1. Courts 🔑58

The position in office of marshal for all Municipal Courts in Los Angeles County, designated by statute as "deputies (custodians)" was one of three different classifications of deputies and assigning some such custodians to perform duties as custodians of business property and others to perform duties as car crew custodians did not constitute a classification of such deputies. 2. Mandamus 🔑72

A writ of mandate will be issued to correct abuse of discretion by a public officer, but it will not be issued to control the discretion of such officer, that is, to compel the exercise of discretion in a particular manner. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1085.

4. Courts 🔑58

A deputy with permanent civil service status in the office of marshal for all Municipal Courts in Los Angeles County, classified as a custodian, was not legally entitled to be assigned to duties of a car crew custodian rather than to duties of property custodian and marshal was not specially enjoined by law to assign such deputy to duties of one type of custodian rather than the other. Taking and signing oath of office as deputy marshal for Municipal Courts of Los Angeles County, on January 2, 1952, was a formality incident to automatic transfer of deputy under new law from former position in office of marshal for Municipal Court of City of Los Angeles to comparable position in office of marshal for Municipal Courts of Los Angeles County and did not change classification of deputy, classified as the property custodian, to that of deputy marshal without regard to duties of custodian of property. PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Appeal from order denying petition for writ of mandate. An alternative writ was not issued. There was no hearing in the superior court.

The petition (by petitioner in pro. per.) alleges: On June 30, 1949, petitioner was duly appointed a deputy marshal (of the Municipal Court of the City of Los Angeles) to perform duties as a custodian of property. On July 13, 1950, he was given a permanent civil service status by the Civil Service Commission of the City of Los Angeles. On June 4, 1951, he was promoted from a deputy marshal performing duties of a business property custodian to a deputy marshal performing duties of a car (automobile) crew custodian, which gave him better working conditions and more pay. He continued to perform the duties of car crew custodian until he was suspended from those duties on November 19, 1953, by Roy W. Carter, the present municipal court marshal. On January 2, 1952, he and other members of the Van Nuys Marshal's office were given the oath of office under the present régime of the marshal of the municipal courts of Los Angeles County. The form of oath signed by petitioner classified him as a deputy marshal. By taking and signing the oath petitioner was thereby transferred by operation of law to the new régime of the municipal court marshal with Roy W. Carter as marshal. On November 13, 1953, Deputy Marshal Strong and petitioner levied an execution upon an automobile, and while the deputies were waiting for "a promised pay off of the execution and costs" a man unknown to petitioner "made off with" the automobile. Petitioner, in the belief that a felony was being committed, fired two shots from his revolver at the left rear tire of the automobile. By reason of those events petitioner was served with a letter of suspension which became effective on November 19, 1953. On December 3, 1953, petitioner filed a request with the Civil Service Commission of Los Angeles County for a hearing to determine whether the charges were sufficient "to discharge a permanent civil service employee." Also on said December 3 petitioner was served with a second letter, containing the identical charges that were in the letter of suspension, which informed petitioner that he had been discharged as a deputy marshal. On January 7, 1954, a hearing was had before the Civil Service Commission of Los Angeles County. On February 19, 1954, said commission decided in favor of petitioner and sent a letter to him which stated, "After full consideration of the evidence, it was found that the reasons given are not sufficient to justify the discharge, the Commission feeling that the thirty day suspension is sufficient penalty." On February 25, 1954, a letter was sent to petition by the personnel officer of the marshal's office directing petitioner to report to the marshal's office. On March 1, 1954, petitioner reported to that office and he was reassigned to duties as deputy marshal to perform the duties of a business property custodian, which assignment is illegal in that it is a demotion of petitioner. Roy W. Carter acted arbitrarily, capriciously and fraudulently in demoting petitioner. The petitioner asked (in the petition) that the superior court issue an "Alternative Writ of Mandate or An Order to Show Cause in lieu thereof," to grant petitioner relief on "the following points"; that the marshal issue a new badge, eliminating the word "Custodian" therefrom; that the marshal return petitioner to duty as deputy marshal performing duties as a car crew custodian; that the marshal, auditor, and Board of Supervisors have warrants issued to pay petitioner $21.54 a day from said November 19, less actual earnings, and to pay for vacations, holidays, sick leave, automobile mileage and parking, attorney's fee, and transcripts; that the court release petitioner from thirty days' penalty imposed by the City Service Commission.

[1–4] As stated in the petition, the petitioner was appointed a deputy marshal to perform duties as a custodian of property. In 1949 when he was appointed, the statutory provision regarding the classification of deputies to perform duties as custodian was "One hundred deputies (custodians), at the fee allowed by law for keeping property." Deering's Gen. Laws (1944), Act 5238, § 7b, Municipal Court Act of 1925; Stats.1943, Ch. 307, § 1. Preceding that provision in said section 7b there were 7 other classifications of deputies for the office of marshal. In 1951 there was a statutory enactment that "there shall be one Marshal for all the municipal courts established in judicial districts of Los Angeles County." That enactment provided, among other things, that the marshal should appoint 115 senior deputies, 35 deputy marshals, and "Two hundred deputies (custodians), at the fee allowed by law for keeping property." Deering's Gen. Laws (1951), Act 4475, § 7; Stats.1951, Ch. 1420, § 7. It thus appears that the position in the office of marshal, designated by statute as "deputies (custodians)," is one of three different classifications of deputies. There is no statutory provision or any legal requirement that some custodians shall perform duties as custodians of "business property" and that others shall perform duties as "car crew custodians." There was at the time of petitioner's appointment, and now is, one classification of deputies who are custodians of property. Section 1085 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides, in part, that a writ of mandate "[M]ay be issued * * * to any * * * board, or person, to compel the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins, as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station; or to compel the admission of a party to the use and enjoyment of a right or office to which he is entitled, and from which he is unlawfully precluded by such * * * board or person." In Wallace v. Board of Education, 63 Cal.App.2d 611 at page 616, 147 P.2d 8 at page 10, it was said: "'The remedy [mandamus] is not a matter of right but is awarded in the exercise of sound judicial discretion. [Citations.] An applicant for a writ must show that his right thereto is clear and certain.'" A writ of mandate will not be issued to control the discretion of a public officer, that is, it will not be issued to compel the exercise of discretion in a particular manner; but it will be issued to correct an abuse of discretion. See Wallace v. Board of Education, supra, 63 Cal.App.2d at page 616, 147 P.2d 8. The matter of determining the duties to be performed by petitioner as a deputy marshal within the classification of custodian was a matter within the discretion of the marshal, a respondent herein. The marshal was not specially enjoined by law to assign petitioner to the duties of a car crew custodian; nor was petitioner legally entitled to be assigned to such duties.

[5] Petitioner asserts in effect that taking and signing the oath of office on January 2, 1952 (which written form of oath was that of a deputy marshal) had the effect of classifying him as a deputy marshal, without regard to the duties of custodian of property. Taking and signing the oath of office by petitioner on that day was a formality incident to his automatic transfer, under the new law, from his position in the office of the Marshal of the City of Los Angeles to a comparable position in the office of Marshal of Municipal Courts, Los Angeles County. January 2, 1952, was the date provided in the legislation, creating the office of "Marshal of Municipal Courts, Los Angeles County," that appointments to positions (subordinate to marshal) in that office should become effective. The legislation provided that deputies in the offices of various marshals in Los Angeles County, which offices were established under the Municipal Court Act of 1925, should succeed to comparable positions as deputies under the new legislation. Stats. 1951, Ch. 1420, § 7, p. 3384. Petitioner's classification was not changed by reason of his taking and signing the oath.

[6] Petitioner also contends that he was illegally suspended, and he asks that this court review the evidence that was before the Civil Service Commission and set aside the ruling of the commission which upheld his suspension for thirty days. Section 34 of Article IX of the Los Angeles County Charter provides, in part: "The Commission shall prescribe, amend and enforce rules for the classified service, which shall have the force and effect of law; * * * The rules shall provide: * * * (12) For suspensions for not longer than thirty days * * *." Rule 19.01 of the Civil Service Commission provides: "An employee may be suspended by the appointing power for not to exceed thirty (30 days), pending investigation, filing of charges and hearing on discharge or reduction, or for disciplinary reasons, the reasons for such suspension to be forthwith furnished in writing to the employee and a copy filed with the Commission. A suspended employee shall be entitled to answer, explain or deny the charges in writing within ten business days, but shall not be entitled to a hearing. A copy of the answer shall be sent to the Commission and filed as part of the employee's record." As above stated, the commission did not sustain the order discharging petitioner, but ruled that thirty days' suspension was a sufficient penalty. Since a suspension for thirty days could be made without a hearing, there is nothing to be reviewed with respect to the suspension. This contention is not sustainable.

[7, 8] Petitioner also contends that he is entitled to pay for "sick leave," vacations, and retirement, the same as deputies who are paid on a salary basis. As above shown, the statutory provision creating the classification under which petitioner holds his appointment provides that he shall be paid "the fee allowed by law for keeping property." Fees to be charged and collected by the marshal are the same as the fees to be charged and collected by the sheriff. Stats. 1949, Ch. 1510, § 27, p. 2690 (now included in Gov. Code, § 71266). Section 26726 of the Government Code provides, with respect to fees of the sheriff, as follows: "The fee for keeping and caring for property under attachment, execution, or claim and delivery is not to exceed eight dollars ($8) when necessarily employed for any eight (8) hour period or any part thereof. Should an additional keeper or keepers be required during such eight (8) hour period or fraction thereof, the fee for such additional keeper or keepers shall be the same as herein fixed, but, in no event shall any one keeper receive more than sixteen dollars ($16) during any twenty-four (24) hour period when so employed." It thus appears that custodians are piece workers and their compensation is a fee established by statute that is paid by litigants. There is no statutory or other provision, with respect to such custodians, for pay for "sick leave" or vacations. In Treu v. Kirkwood, 42 Cal.2d 602, 268 P.2d 482, petitioner sought a writ of mandate to compel the state controller to approve and the state treasurer to pay her claim for overtime as a state employee. It was said therein 42 Cal.2d at page 611, 268 P.2d at page 487: "In the absence of either a valid contract or statute, there is no basis for a recovery * * *." In view of that decision, it would seem that, in the present case, in the absence of a statutory provision or contract there is no basis for paying petitioner for sick leave or vacations. As to retirement, section 31469 of the Government Code states, "'Employee' means any officer or other person employed by a county * * * whose compensation is paid by the county * * *." Since petitioner herein is not paid by the county, he is not entitled to be included in the retirement system.

The order denying petition for writ of mandate is affirmed.

Action to recover alleged indebtedness. The Superior Court, Tehama County, Curtiss E. Wetter, J., granted defendant's motion for change of venue. Plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that where contract for sale of turkey eggs was not made in Tehama County, defendant was entitled to have action to recover indebtedness allegedly arising out of such sale transferred from Tehama County to county of defendant's residence.

Affirmed.

Where first count was based on open account and second count was based on express oral contract and third count was for money had and received and each of the three counts arose out of plaintiff's sale and delivery of eggs to defendant, the counts were not to be considered as different causes of action but as alternative methods of pleading the plaintiff's single right to recovery.

2. Venue 🔑72

Where defendant's request to present oral testimony at hearing on his motion for change of venue to county of his residence was denied on assurance that testimony proffered would be the same as in the affidavits, affidavits were treated as sufficient to raise issues of fact as to the county in which the contract sued on was made. Price & Morony, Chico, for appellant.

Kruger & McMahon, Sonoma, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from an order granting a motion for a change of venue from the County of Tehama to the County of Sonoma.

[1] Appellant brought the action in the County of Tehama, seeking recovery of a money judgment against respondent in the sum of $4,569.36. The complaint is in three counts. The first count alleges that defendant became indebted to plaintiff upon an open book account for turkey eggs sold and delivered by plaintiff to defendant. The second count alleges that defendant became indebted to plaintiff upon an express oral contract, whereby he agreed to purchase from plaintiff, and plaintiff agreed to sell to him, from time to time, turkey eggs as ordered. The first count alleges that the obligation therein sued on was incurred in the County of Tehama; the second count alleges that the contract therein sued on was made in the County of Tehama. The complaint is verified. The third cause of action is a common count for money had and received. The same recovery is sought in each of the three counts, and the prayer is for a single judgment in the amount sued for in each count The third count is silent as to where the alleged indebtedness was incurred, but it is obvious that each of the three counts is based on the same transactions, that they are not be considered as different causes of action but as alternative methods of pleading the plaintiff's single right to recover. Maselli v. E. H. Appleby & Co., Inc., 117 Cal.App.2d 634, 637, 256 P.2d 618.

[2] The respondent made a motion for a change of venue to the county of his residence. It is not disputed that at all times mentioned in the complaint the respondent did reside in the County of Sonoma. He further averred that although he visited plaintiff Ruth Mitchell in her home in Tehama County on one or two occasions during the fourteen years of his residence in Sonoma County, no contract or agreement either oral or written was entered into, made, or incurred in Tehama County; that he "never at any time agreed to pay to plaintiff in the County of Tehama the sum of $4,569.36 or any other sum"; and further that he had "never agreed to perform the obligation sued upon in Tehama County or any County other than the County of Sonoma." A counter-affidavit was filed by counsel for plaintiff, which contained the following averments: "That the agreement, the subject matter of said complaint, was made in Tehama County; that the defendant, H. P. Griffin, personally came to plaintiff's ranch west of the Town of Corning, in Tehama County, California, and interviewed plaintiff personally and submitted to plaintiff a list of customers that he desired to purchase eggs for and requested plaintiff to ship said eggs directly to said customers for his, said defendant's, account from Tehama County; that plaintiff agreed to furnish said eggs and to ship the same at said defendant's directions in Tehama County; that at said time and place said defendant agreed to pay for said eggs so shipped to said plaintiff in Tehama County upon invoice; that said defendant did from time to time pay plaintiff on account for eggs shipped pursuant to said agreement; that said payments were made to plaintiff in Tehama County." When the motion was called for hearing, counsel for defendant requested the right to present oral testimony. Counsel for plaintiff objected thereto, and the request was denied on assurance that the testimony proffered would be the same as in the affidavits, that is, that the contract was not made in Tehama County. Under such circumstances the affidavits must be treated as sufficient to raise the issues of fact as to which county was the county in which the contract was made. Neither side claimed that there was a written contract.

In Dawson v. Goff, 43 Cal.2d 310, 315, 273 P.2d 1, 3, it was stated:

> "The obligation is incurred at the time the contract is made and the obligations under it arise and are incurred in the county in which it is made. Under the section [Section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure] the county where the contract is made is deemed to be the county where it is to be performed unless there is a special contract in writing to the contrary. The counties in which an action on the contract may be tried are two, that of defendant's residence or where the contract is made, unless there is a special contract in writing to the contrary."

[3, 4] The affidavits filed by the parties, largely conclusional, as they are, are yet factually in conflict. It is well settled that under such circumstances it is the province of the trial court to resolve the conflict, and the finding of the trial court will not be disturbed on appeal. Crofts & Anderson v. Johnson, 101 Cal.App.2d 418, 225 P.2d 594; Hale v. Bohannon, 38 Cal.2d 458, 241 P.2d 4. Here, the trial court impliedly found the contract not to have been made in Tehama County. Therefore, appellant did not begin her action in the county where the contract was made and respondent was entitled to have the venue changed to the county of his residence.

The judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 8770.

Action by buyer under a conditional sales contract of a truck to recover payments made thereunder before the balance of the entire purchase price of the truck was paid off in full prior to the final maturity of the contract of sale covering the truck. Judgment sustaining demurrers in the Superior Court, Siskiyou County, James M. Allen, J., and the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McMurray, J. pro tem., held that the complaint filed more than two years after accrual of the cause of action was barred by limitations.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Usury ⚿136

The statute providing that buyer of a motor vehicle may satisfy in full the indebtedness evidenced by the conditional sales contract at any time before final maturity and shall receive a refund credit thereon for such anticipation of payments and that on seller's violation of the statute buyer may recover the total amount paid on the contract balance is merely an extension of the usury laws. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 2982(d, e).

2. Statutes ⚿64(2)

The statute authorizing buyer of a motor vehicle under conditional sales contract to satisfy in full the indebtedness evidenced thereby at any time before final maturity and providing that on seller's violation of the statute the buyer may recover the total amount paid on the contract balance contains severable provision. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 2982(d, e).

3. Limitation of Actions ⚷35(1)

Complaint by buyer under a conditional sales contract of a truck seeking to recover all the installment payments made by the buyer before balance of the entire purchase price of the truck was paid off in full prior to final maturity of the contract of sale covering the truck, which was filed over two years after accrual of the cause of action, was barred by the one-year statute of limitations applicable to recovery of penalties or forfeitures. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 2982(d, e); West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 340, subd. 1.

4. Limitation of Actions ⚷127(11)

McMURRAY, Justice pro tem.

The plaintiff appeals from a judgment entered against him after the trial court sustained a demurrer without leave to amend. The complaint on file seeks to recover certain payments made under a conditional sale contract for the sale of a certain truck. Recovery is sought of all the installment payments made by plaintiff to defendants before the payment of the balance of the entire purchase price of the truck was paid off in full prior to final maturity of the contract of sale covering the truck. The action is, by its terms, based upon Civil Code, § 2982, subdivisions (d) and (e), which read as follows:

> "(d) Any provision in any conditional sale contract for the sale of a motor vehicle to the contrary notwithstanding, the buyer may satisfy in full the indebtedness evidenced by such contract at any time before the final maturity thereof, and in so satisfying such indebtedness shall receive a refund credit thereon for such anticipation of payments. The amount of such refund shall represent at least as great a proportion of the time price differential, after first deducting from such time price differential a minimum charge of not to exceed twenty-five dollars ($25), as the sum of the periodic time balances after the month in which such contract is paid in full bears to the sum of all of the periodic time balances under the schedule of payments in the contract, both sums to be determined according to the monthly balances which would result if the indebtedness were paid according to the terms of the contract; provided, however, that the provisions of this subsection shall not impair the right of the seller or his assignee to receive a minimum time price differential of twenty-five dollars ($25), or to receive interest on delinquent installments or reasonable collection costs and fees, as provided in subsection (c) of this section; and provided further, that where the amount of such refund credit would be less than one dollar ($1), no refund need be made.
> "(e) If the seller, except as the result of an accidental or bona fide error in computation, shall violate any provision of subdivisions (c), or (d) of this section the conditional sale contract shall not be enforceable, except by a bona fide purchaser for value, and the buyer may recover from the seller in a civil action the total amount paid on the contract balance by the buyer to the seller or his assignee pursuant to the terms of such contract."

[1-4] The demurrer interposed to this complaint pleads the statute of limitations as a bar and cites subdivision 1 of section 340 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This statute prescribes a one-year period of limitation and provides in part that, "An action upon a statute for a penalty or forfeiture, when the action is given to an individual, or to an individual and the State, except when the statute imposing it prescribes a different limitation; * * *" shall be commenced within one year after the accrual of the cause of action. The complaint here was filed over two years after the accrual of the cause of action alleged in the complaint. Appellant contends first that the provisions of section 2982 contained in paragraphs (d) and (e) are severable, and that those provisions contained in paragraph (e) even if penal (which appellant does not grant, urging that they provide for liquidated damages), there would still exist a right of action under the provisions of paragraph (d) to recover the finance charges which were prepaid and not returned in accordance with the provisions of that paragraph of the section. In this contention appellant may well be right. In Carter v. Seaboard Finance Co., 33 Cal.2d 564, 203 P.2d 758, the court exhaustively reviewed the provisions of this code section before its last amendments, and in its opinion points out that it is merely an extension of the usury laws under the provisions contained in Article XX, section 22 of the California Constitution. This being so, it would seem apparent that cases which were decided under the usury law, as it was in effect in previous years, would be helpful in determining whether or not the provisions of paragraphs (d) and (e) were severable. We think that they are. Paragraph (e) would seem to be explicitly a paragraph imposing a penalty or forfeiture (see Volume 2, Stanford Law Review, pages 362, 370, where it is indicated that the punitive characteristics of the statute are important), and paragraph (d) would appear to grant implicitly the right to recover back finance charges which were not proportionately refunded in accordance with the provisions of that section. This view finds support in the cases of Taylor v. Budd, 217 Cal. 262, 266, 18 P.2d 333, and in Douglas v. Klopper, 107 Cal.App.Supp. 765, 288 P. 36. In the last cited case, however, the plaintiff can find small solace, as it is there pointed out that the action for recovery of usurious interest (in this case nonrefunded finance charges) is in the nature of an action for money had and received, an action to which the two-year statute of limitations applies. Stock v. Meek, 35 Cal.2d 809, 816, 221 P.2d 15. The provisions of paragraph (e) of 2982 are clearly those of a section enforcing a penalty or forfeiture. This section, therefore, falls within the provisions of section 340, subd. 1. Since the complaint failed to state a cause of action not barred by the statute of limitations, the court below correctly sustained the demurrer. It appears that only by stating an entirely new cause of action could plaintiff escape the bar of the statute of limitations; and this, the court could not allow plaintiff to do by amending his complaint. Defendant was convicted of robbery and kidnapping for purpose of robbery. The Trial Court, Kenneth C. Newell, J., entered judgment and denied motion for new trial, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., 132 Cal.App.2d 20, 281 P.2d 289, affirmed order and judgment and, on motion to recall remittitur, held that, where affirmation by District Court of Appeal of sentence of life imprisonment without possibility of parol following conviction for crime of kidnapping with intent and for purpose of committing robbery was erroneously predicated upon statute as it existed prior to defendant's alleged criminal act and at time when statute did not make it an offense, separate from robbery, to hold or detain a person for purpose of committing robbery, remittitur as to count involved would be recalled, and the District Court of Appeal would vacate judgment as to such count and put appeal as to such count on the calendar for consideration of an amended petition for rehearing as to the affirmance of judgment rendered on such count.

Judgment vacated in part.

It appearing from the record that the opinion of this court, filed March 29, 1955, affirming a conviction of "life imprisonment without possibility of parole" for the crime of kidnapping "with intent and for the purpose of committing robbery", under Section 209 of the Penal Code, was erroneously predicated upon said statute as it existed prior to 1951, prior to defendant's alleged criminal acts, in which year it was amended, whereas said statute, as amended in 1951, does not make it an offense separate from robbery, to hold or detain a person for the purpose of committing robbery, good cause appearing, it is ordered that appellant's motion to recall the remittitur as to Count II is granted and it is ordered that the judgment heretofore entered (on March 29, 1955) as to said Count II is vacated and set aside and the remittitur issued thereon (April 29, 1955) is recalled.

The appeal as to said Count II is ordered on calendar August 28, 1956 at 10 a. m., for consideration of an amended Petition for Rehearing as to the affirmance of the judgment rendered on said Count II.

Hearing Denied Aug. 21, 1956.

Action for dissolution of joint venture The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Clarence W. Morris, J., rendered a judgment from which defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Agee, J. pro tem., held that record on appeal disclosed that referee, in making accounting, erred in failing to debit plaintiff with an amount plaintiff's statements acknowledged had been received by plaintiff.

Judgment modified and affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⚿1046(5)

Record on appeal in action for dissolution of joint venture disclosed that defendant, who appeared without counsel in nonjury trial, had not been harmed by trial court's comments.

2. Pleading ⚿147

Defendant in action for dissolution of a joint venture was not entitled to cross-complain for sums allegedly owed by plaintiff as a result of other ventures between parties as part of their general association. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 442.

3. Pleading ⚿147

The right to file a cross-complaint depends upon its relation to the claim on which the suit is brought. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 442.

4. Joint Adventures ⚿5(2)

AGEE, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff and defendant entered into a joint venture for the purpose of buying 12 government surplus busses. Defendant was to arrange for reconditioning and resale and plaintiff was to furnish the financing. Trouble developed and plaintiff filed this action for dissolution of the joint venture and an accounting thereof. Defendant filed an answer and a cross-complaint which contained two common counts for money. The trial court refused to allow the introduction of any evidence on these counts on the ground that they related to and were based upon ventures other than the bus transaction. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff, ordering dissolution of the joint venture and approving the accounting of the referee previously appointed by the trial court. Defendant appeals from the judgment.

[1] Appellant states: "The Honorable Trial Court, upon learning that appellant was to appear in propria persona, showed concern for his interest, and advised him that it would be better if he were represented by an attorney. In many instances, the Court was liberal in making allowances for McCausland's unfamiliarity with legal procedure. However, it is apparent that as the trial progressed, a definite animus against McCausland was acquired." This last statement is not borne out by the record. The comments complained of were admonitions to appellant to stop being evasive while on the witness stand and to answer the questions asked of him without "bickering." There was no jury present and appellant suffered no harm by such comments. In fact, he would have helped his case if he had followed the Court's admonitions. Two comments made by respondent's counsel and one made by counsel for a defendant who was dismissed during the trial are criticised by appellant. It is unnecessary to set them forth here. It is inconceivable that such comments in any way affected the trial judge.

[2, 3] Appellant next contends that the trial court erred in refusing to allow him "to introduce evidence in support of his cross-complaint by showing that respondent owed him the sums prayed for therein as a result of other ventures in which Hanover and McCausland were parties as part of their general association." (Emphasis added.) Our attention has not been called to any authority which supports appellant's contention. Section 442 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "Whenever the defendant seeks affirmative relief against any party, relating to or depending upon the * * * transaction, * * * upon which the action is brought, * * * he may, in addition to his answer, file at the same time, * * * a cross-complaint." The trend in recent years has been to give a rather broad interpretation to the "transaction" clause. However, as stated in 2 Witkin, California Procedure, p. 1582: "Even under the liberal test, however, it is still not enough to show that convenience will result from a trial of the cross-claims between the same parties in one action. This may be sufficient for a motion to consolidate (supra, sec. 155), but the right to file a cross-complaint still depends upon its relation to the claim on which the suit is brought." See also Frazure v. Fitzpatrick, 21 Cal.2d 851, 859–860, 136 P.2d 566.

[4] The trial court found, in accordance with the referee's report, that respondent had disbursed, to and including November 1, 1954, the total sum of $8,271.64. Respondent was credited with this entire amount even though he admitted having received $1,364.30 from the sale of what was referred to as the "De Lorenzo Bus." The figure of $8,271.64 was obviously taken by the referee from a statement submitted by respondent entitled, "Money Advanced From Harry T. Hanover on Bus Deal to November 1st, 1954." At the trial, held in April, 1954, respondent's bookkeeper produced a similar statement covering the same items and testified that respondent's disbursements up to and including April 21, 1954, totaled $8,121.91. This statement acknowledges receipt by respondent of $1,364.30 from the sale of the "De Lorenzo Bus" and shows, at the end, net disbursements of $6,757.61. This statement was admitted in evidence. The statement of November 1, 1954, was added to the record by stipulation. The mistake in accounting is obvious. The referee failed to debit respondent with the $1,364.30 and the trial court, in adopting his report, carried this same mistake into the judgment. Appellant contends that the referee also erroneously failed to debit respondent with the sum of $1,674.73 and with several lesser sums totaling approximately $200. This contention is without merit. The referee properly found the total amount advanced by respondent on behalf of the joint venture regardless of the source from which respondent advanced the money. These two sums were advanced by respondent from sources other than the joint venture special account. Respondent then drew checks on the special account in his favor for the sums thus advanced. The only effect of this was to charge the special account with these advancements. Respondent was entitled to reimbursement of all advancements charged to the special account, and the referee properly refused to charge him with having been reimbursed for these amounts.

The judgment was signed November 10, 1954. Clause 2 thereof provides: "That plaintiff is hereby credited with contributions unto the joint venture to the date hereof in the sum of $8,271.64." This amount should be reduced by $1,364.30 and changed to $6,907.34. As so modified, the judgment is affirmed.

Prosecution for the possession of marijuana. The Superior Court, County of Contra Costa, Homer W. Patterson, J., rendered judgment of conviction and the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that evidence obtained in a search of the defendant's person by police officers at a time when defendant's conduct would not arouse suspicion of misconduct was obtained by an illegal search and seizure.

Judgment reversed.

1. Criminal Law ⚿=1036(1)

Where prosecution for possession of marijuana was tried before the Supreme Court decision rendering illegally obtained evidence inadmissible, the claim that the evidence was obtained by an illegal search was open to the defendant although no objection was made to the introduction of the evidence. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

2. Arrest ⚿=63(4)

Defendant, who drove up to his residence and parked his automobile, talked to a person in another automobile, looked at something on the windshield of a third automobile, went into his residence, left his residence again with his hands in his pockets, crossed the street and stood on the sidewalk looking up and down, had done nothing to arouse suspicion of misconduct, and officers hidden behind trees nearby were not justified in placing defendant under arrest without a warrant, and hence the marijuana found on him was obtained by an illegal search and seizure, notwithstanding that defendant was believed to be dealing in narcotics and that defendant backed away from officers, who had already decided to arrest, and refused to take his hands from his pockets. DOOLING, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction entered on a jury verdict finding him guilty of possessing marijuana in violation of Health and Safety Code, section 11500.

On the evening of October 28, 1954, Police Officers Aiello and Russo of the Pittsburg Police Department were instructed by their superiors, Inspectors Schillace and Flynn to go on a "stake-out" in the vicinity of appellant Harvey's residence. They were told that appellant had been under surveillance by the department for some time and that he was believed to be dealing in narcotics. They were to observe appellant's residence and appellant if he should appear. If they believed that "something was wrong" they were instructed to place appellant under arrest.

About 8:30 p. m. the police officers arrived at the stake-out. They concealed themselves across the street from appellant's residence behind a tree. A few minutes later appellant arrived on the scene in a 1950 Cadillac. Appellant got out of the Cadillac and apparently stood by it a little while. A blue coupe approached and parked just behind appellant's car. Appellant walked up to the occupant of the coupe, who remained in his car, and talked with him several minutes. The coupe then drove away. Appellant walked across the street toward his residence. He looked at something that was on the windshield of another car and then disappeared from the officers' view.

A few minutes later the officers saw appellant coming down an outside flight of stairs from his upstairs apartment. Appellant stood for a few seconds at the foot of his stairs looking up and down the street with his hands in his overcoat pockets. He crossed the street to where the officers were standing behind the tree. Appellant looked up and down the street. The officers then decided to take him into custody.

Officer Russo testified: "We thought something was wrong."

The officers testified that they identified themselves as officers, showed their police badges and asked appellant to take his hands out of his pockets. Appellant did not comply but backed off from the officers. A struggle ensued. Three other officers arrived and appellant was subdued. All of the police officers were in civilian clothes. Officer Russo took a package from appellant's hand which was later found to contain marijuana.

At the trial the package containing marijuana taken from appellant at the time of his arrest was introduced into evidence. Marijuana was also found after his arrest in the Cadillac car driven by appellant and traces of marijuana were found on the clothing worn by him when he was arrested. This was also introduced into evidence.

We agree with appellant's contention that the marijuana was obtained by an illegal search and seizure.

[1] The case was tried before the decision of People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905, and hence the claim that the evidence was obtained by an illegal search is open to defendant although no objection was made to the introduction of the evidence. People v. Kitchens, 46 Cal.2d 260, 294 P.2d 17; People v. Maddox, 46 Cal.2d 301, 294 P.2d 6.

[2] When the officers stepped from behind the tree and approached the defendant with the avowed purpose of placing him under arrest they had no legal ground for arresting him. His conduct up to that time was such as any man may legally engage in on a public street without arousing suspicion of misconduct. He had parked his car, talked to a person in another car, looked at something on the windshield of a third car, gone into his house, left his house again with his hands in his pockets, crossed the street and stood on the sidewalk looking up and down. These were all innocent actions that any law-abiding citizen should be able to engage in without fear of search or arrest. The fact that defendant was believed to be dealing in narcotics, added to such innocent conduct as the officers observed, was not sufficient to justify defendant's arrest without a warrant. The case in this respect was no stronger than that in People v. Sanders, 46 Cal.2d 247, 294 P.2d 10, where the court held that the fact that the defendant was a known bookmaker did not justify his arrest when he was seen writing upon a pad which might be innocently used by any businessman in the lawful conduct of his business.

The People however argue that since the officers had the right to interrogate a man found upon the street at night, People v. Blodgett, 46 Cal.2d 114, 293 P.2d 57, the conduct of the defendant in backing away and refusing to take his hands from his pockets constituted suspicious conduct which justified the officers in seizing and searching the defendant. People v. Blodgett, supra; People v. Martin, 46 Cal.2d 106, 293 P.2d 52.

The difficulty with this argument is that the police officers were not interrogating the defendant, but by their own unqualified testimony they were arresting him. Aiello testified that just before they stepped out from behind the tree: "I says, 'Shall we place him under arrest' and he says, 'Okay', so I walked out first." Russo testified, "we nudged each other and says, 'Let's place him into custody.'"

From the testimony of the officers it is clear that they approached the defendant, identified themselves to him as officers and requested him to remove his hands from his pockets as a step in his arrest, which they had already determined upon. They had no intention of interrogating him. They had already decided to arrest him and were carrying out that decision. Since the arrest was illegal their illegal conduct cannot become legal by what was disclosed while they were engaged in making the illegal arrest. People v. Brown, 45 Cal.2d 640, 290 P.2d 528; People v. Gale, 46 Cal.2d 253, 294 P.2d 13.

Prosecution for burglary. The Superior Court, San Mateo County, Murray Draper, J., entered judgment of conviction and an order denying defendant's motion for new trial and the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that where police officers went to apartment of woman who owned the automobile suspected of being used in the burglary and entered with manager's key after officers had heard moans coming from the apartment and found stolen property which the officers later seized under a warrant, officers were justified in entering and the evidence obtained as a result of the entry was admissible.

1. Municipal Corporations ⊂⇒188, 189(1)

It is the duty of the police to watch over the safety of citizens and to guard their persons and property from assault, destruction and injury and it is within the powers and duties of police officers to make some sort of an investigation when they have reason to believe that some one is in distress.

2. Criminal Law ⊂⇒394

Where police officers went to apartment of woman who owned the automobile suspected of being used in the burglary and entered the apartment with the manager's key after officers had heard moans coming from the apartment and after entry the officers found part of the stolen property which the officers later seized under a warrant, the officers' entry was lawful on the ground that they were trying to aid some one in distress and the evidence obtained as a result of this lawful entry was admissible in the prosecution for burglary.

3. Criminal Law ⊂⇒394

In prosecution for burglary, where police officers went to apartment of woman who owned the automobile suspected of being used in the crime, evidence that the officers entered the apartment with manager's key after having thought they heard moans coming from the apartment was not so inherently improbable that it could not support the trial court's finding that they made a lawful entry for the purpose of aiding some one who may have been in distress.

William John Scammon, Burlingame, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., William M. Bennett, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction entered on a jury verdict finding him guilty of the crime of burglary, second degree. An appeal is also taken from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Robert Quinn, an officer of the Burlingame Police Department, observed appellant on the evening of August 5, 1955, at about 10 p. m. standing in front of the display window of the Wollmer Music Company in Burlingame. This officer saw appellant enter a Ford automobile and drive away. He noted the license number of the car driven by appellant.

On August 7, 1955, it was discovered that the Wollmer store had been burglarized. The display window had been broken open and merchandise on exhibition was taken. Among this merchandise was an RCA table model radio, serial No. 079149.

Upon investigation it was learned through the Department of Motor Vehicles that the Ford automobile seen in the vicinity of the Wollmer store on August 5, 1955, was registered to one Margaret Higgins, 771 Turk Street, San Francisco.

Two police officers from the Burlingame Police Department, Officers Quinn and Hinterman, with Inspector Edward C. Preston of the San Francisco Police Department went to 771 Turk Street in search of Mrs. Higgins. They were told that she had moved to 761 Turk Street so they next went to that address. Arriving at 761 Turk Street, an apartment house, they talked to the building manager, Mrs. Davis, and obtained the number of Mrs. Higgins' apartment from her. They went to apartment No. 44, that of Mrs. Higgins, and knocked on the door. There was no response. The officers testified that they then heard moans or groans coming from the apartment and thinking someone was in distress they decided to contact the manager.

Mrs. Davis, the manager, at the police officers' request came to apartment No. 44 and opened the door. The police officers went in and looked around. No one was present in the apartment. (When asked to express an opinion as to where the moans must have come from in view of the fact that the apartment was empty, one of the officers testified that the sound could have been the moan of pigeons.) A new radio was seen on a shelf in the kitchen. One of the officers picked it up and noted its serial number. He recognized it as one of the radios taken from Wollmer's store. The officers were in the apartment two or three minutes and then left.

A search warrant was obtained and the radio seen by the officers on their first trip to Mrs. Higgins' apartment was seized pursuant to this warrant. This was the RCA table model, serial No. 079149, that had been taken from Wollmer's store. Appellant was arrested at the apartment.

Appellant's sole contention on this appeal is that the trial court erred in ruling that the original entry into Mrs. Higgins' apartment by the police officers before obtaining a search warrant was lawful. It is his contention that the motivating purpose for this entry was to discover stolen goods and that the entry was thus illegal and the evidence obtained thereby inadmissible. The trial judge was of the view, when this contention was presented to him, that the evidence supported a finding that the officers entered because they felt compelled to aid someone in distress. He therefore ruled that the original entry was not illegal and that the evidence later obtained under the search warrant as a result of this entry was admissible.

[1] It has been said that nowhere in the general law or local ordinances can all the duties of a police officer be found set forth in detail. These duties are so varied and indefinable that an exact and detailed outline of them cannot be expected. Noble v. City of Palo Alto, 89 Cal.App. 47, 264 P. 529. However, in general it is the duty of the police to watch over the safety of citizens and to guard their persons and property from assault, destruction and injury. 21 Cal.Jur. 400. Certainly it can be considered to be within the powers and duties of police officers to make some sort of an investigation when they have reason to believe that someone is in distress. Indeed they would probably be derelict in their duty if they did nothing to render assistance in such a situation.

[2] The officers did not force the door but procured the manager to admit them with a key. See People v. Caritativo, 46 Cal.2d 68, 292 P.2d 513; People v. Gorg, 45 Cal.2d 776, 291 P.2d 469. Under the circumstances of believing that some person in the apartment was in distress and might be in need of assistance we agree with the trial court that the entry was a proper one for a lawful purpose. Once lawfully in the apartment the stolen radio was in plain view and seeing it there the officers were justified in looking for the serial number. The rule against unlawful searches and seizures should not be stretched to unreasonable lengths and the facts presented by each particular case must be reasonably interpreted, having in view the primary purpose of protecting the constitutional rights of the individuals involved against unlawful searches. Having observed the stolen property in the apartment while the officers were lawfully therein they had ample grounds for procuring the search warrant.

[3] We cannot agree with appellant's contention that the officers' testimony was so inherently improbable that it cannot support the trial court's finding. People v. Huston, 21 Cal.2d 690, 693, 134 P.2d 758.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Greenbaum, Baker & Ancel, William P. Hyde, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Howard W. Hunter, Los Angeles, for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

The defendants, husband and wife, are appealing from a judgment which "Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed that the plaintiff is the owner of an easement for a walk and stairway and for a retaining wall securing the same together with the right of ingress and egress over and along that certain real property", thereafter described, belonging to the defendants. The judgment permanently enjoined defendants "from maintaining any encroachments" in reference thereto and from "interfering in any manner with the easement adjudged to belong to the plaintiff or in the use and enjoyment thereof by plaintiff".

The record discloses that the property involved in this controversy, namely, Lots 39 and 40, adjoining hillside lots in Alhambra, California, had been owned by Roy L. Robinson and wife for more than 20 years. On November 14, 1946, Lot 39 was conveyed by the Robinsons to Frederick Zeller, plaintiff and respondent herein, and Mrs. Zeller; on September 22, 1948, Lot 40 was conveyed by the Robinsons to defendant-appellant Dorothy A. Browne who, in turn, deeded Lot 40 to George T. Browne, husband and appellant.

During the period of the Robinsons' ownership (from 1917), the residence building on Lot 39 was occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Robinson; the house on the contiguous Lot 40 was rented to tenants by the Robinsons during the same period. The two residence buildings are located on the side of a hill, each has a separate entrance by steps from the street; the buildings are parallel to each other and are cut in the hill at the rear which has about a 40% grade.

There is substantial evidence in support of the trial court's finding, "That for many years prior to November 14, 1946, Robinsons had continuously occupied the house located on said Lot 39 and had used and maintained a concrete block walk on the northerly side of said house and concrete steps and stairway leading to a higher elevation at the rear of said house together with a concrete retaining wall along the northerly side of said walk and stairway; that a small portion of said walk, stairway and retaining wall is located on said Lot 39 and the greater portion is located on said Lot 40."

The trial court further found "That said walk and stairway were at all times, for many years prior to November 14, 1946, visibly present and continuously used by said Robinsons in connection with their occupancy of said house located on said Lot 39 and as their only reasonable access around the northerly side of their house and to reach the higher elevation at the rear of said house; that said use by Robinsons had been so obvious as to show that it was intended to be permanent".

There is evidence sustaining the court's finding that from November 14, 1946, when plaintiff acquired title to Lot 39, plaintiff continuously so used said walk and stairway until in November, 1949, "when defendants, against the protest of plaintiff and without his consent and permission, constructed a steel chain link fence on said Lot 40 parallel to and approximately 0.34 of a foot northerly of the southerly line thereof thus preventing plaintiff's access to and from said walk and stairway"; that in November, 1953, "defendants erected against a portion of said steel fence, on defendants' side of said fence, corrugated iron sheets attached to said fence".

It was further found that "there was no malice on the part of defendants in constructing said fence but the construction thereof did constitute an unreasonable act on the part of defendants"; that plaintiff had not unreasonably delayed bringing this action; that there were no actual or punitive damages but that the easement in question "is necessary for the beneficial enjoyment of Lot 39 by plaintiff, and plaintiff cannot without unreasonable cost create a substitute on his own premises".

The appellants Browne contend that "it was reversible error not to make findings of fact on the affirmative defense of waiver * * * and estoppel"; that the judgment was not in accordance with the law in respect to easements by implication; and that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding of reasonable necessity for such an easement. It is likewise claimed that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding "That it is not true that any interest claimed by plaintiff in said Lot 40 has been settled or paid for by the Robinsons".

[1–3] Appellants' contention that the findings are insufficient in that there are no express findings of fact on the subjects of waiver and estoppel is untenable. As said in Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. Blade, 139 Cal.App.2d 580, 294 P.2d 140, 147, " 'There is no error in the failure of the trial court to make an express finding upon an issue if it is implicit in the findings made' ". Also, in the recent case of Devers v. Greenwood, 139 Cal.App.2d 345, 293 P.2d 834, 838, the rule is laid down that "an appellant cannot complain of the lack of a finding where such finding, if made, would necessarily have been against him". Consideration of the entire findings in the instant case and of the record as a whole makes it clear that such findings are implied, and that had such express findings been made they would have necessarily been against the appellants. In this particular, then, no reversible error has been shown.

In respect to the law governing easements by implication, the parties to this appeal are, as stated in appellants' brief, "substantially in accord". Section 1104 of the Civil Code provides that "A transfer of real property passes all easements attached thereto, and creates in favor thereof an easement to use other real property of the person whose estate is transferred in the same manner and to the same extent as such property was obviously and permanently used by the person whose estate is transferred, for the benefit thereof, at the time when the transfer was agreed upon or completed".

[4, 5] As said in Dixon v. Eastown Realty Co., 105 Cal.App.2d 260, 263, 233 P.2d 138, 140, "It is a rule of real property that when an owner of the entire state sells a portion of it, the purchaser takes the portion sold with all the benefits and with all the burdens that appear at the time of the sale to belong to it as between it and the property which the grantor retains". Also applicable to the present controversy is the case of Fristoe v. Drapeau, 35 Cal.2d 5, 8, 215 P.2d 729, 731, where the court says: "The conditions of section 1104 [Civil Code] are met by the facts of this case and there is also present the additional element usually required at common law for the creation of an easement by implication, i. e., that the easement should be reasonably necessary for the enjoyment of the property conveyed".

[6] That the record herein discloses substantial evidence in support of the trial court's findings and judgment cannot be doubted. As noted in the previous resumé of the evidence, the Robinsons owned both Lots 39 and 40 for more than 20 years and during that period created and maintained the easement in question which, as the trial court found, was necessary to the enjoyment of the property. In 1946 Lot 39 was conveyed to respondent; about two years later Lot 40 was deeded to appellants. As found by the trial court, "none of the parties knew the location of the boundary line between the respective parcels when they made their respective purchases", and the deed to appellants made no mention of the easement. However, when appellants purchased Lot 40, the walk, stairway and wall in question were in use by the respondent as a necessary means of getting from a lower to a higher level of Lot 39 and to respondent's attic. The permanent nature of these physical features was obvious.

In November, 1949, appellants having ascertained the true boundary line by a survey, erected a steel fence, as hereinbefore mentioned, which effectually blocked respondent's only means of access to the higher level and attic, which the court found to be an unreasonable use of appellants' property. Respondent was, by the Building Department, denied a permit to construct another stairway.

The trial court's comments at the close of the case, "that it should try to put in effect the original intent of the parties", and that "its pretty obvious what the intention of the parties was", are well supported by both law and evidence. Likewise, the finding of no settlement between respondent and the Robinsons in respect to the easement, is supported by substantial evidence, as are all of the other findings. In this state of the record, it is not within the scope of appellate review to attempt a new appraisal of the weight of evidence.

The judgment is affirmed and the attempted appeal from the order denying a new trial is dismissed.

Doris WILSON, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

James Gordon WILSON et al., Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 21519.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

July 11, 1956.

Wife brought divorce action in which the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Roy L. Herndon, J., determined that a business venture of the husband was a community property asset and the husband and an alleged partner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that evidence supported finding that business venture of husband in which his mother was listed as a partner, was a fictitious and void limited partnership, and the assets thereof were community property of the husband and wife.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error 🔑1011(1)

Where the record discloses substantial evidence in support of the trial court's findings and judgment, the existence of some evidentiary items in the record which appear contrary to such findings and judgment become immaterial.

2. Divorce 🔑253

In divorce action involving question of whether or not so-called limited partnership was in fact void and thereby making its assets community property, where all of the alleged partners were named as defendants the court had the power to find that the business in question was community property because there was no valid limited partnership.

3. Husband and Wife 🔑264

In wife's divorce action, substantial evidence supported the findings that husband's business venture in which his mother was listed as a limited partner was fictitious and void limited partnership, and that the assets thereof were community property. West's Ann.Corp.Code, § 15502.

Smith, Van Dyke & Hildreth, Jack E. Hildreth, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Belcher, Kearney & Fargo, George M. Henzie, Los Angeles, for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

The action herein is one for divorce and the appeal is from that portion of a judgment which decreed that a certain limited partnership known as Tri-Color Laboratories was "fictitious, invalid, void and non-existent and of no force and effect", and that appellant Anna E. Wilson, the husband's mother and nominally a limited partner therein, "does not have, own or hold any right, title or interest in or to any of the community property" of the husband and wife, including said partnership.

The appeal by the husband and the husband's mother is, according to appellants' brief, "predicated on the basis that there was no evidence to substantiate the findings of fact * * *, that these findings do not substantiate the conclusions of law, and that there is no evidence to substantiate that portion of the judgment heretofore mentioned".

The record discloses evidence to the effect that Doris and James Gordon Wilson were married December 31, 1933, at which time Mr. Wilson was president of Harmonizing Cartoon Studios, and Doris Wilson was employed by RKO Theatre Corporation which latter employment continued for about a year after the marriage. During 1937 Mr. Wilson's mother, the appellant Anna E. Wilson, and James A. Wilson, James Gordon Wilson's father, came from New Mexico for a visit, and continued to live with the junior Wilson for some years; the senior Wilson remaining for eleven years until death, and Anna E. Wilson remaining for four years, thereafter living with a daughter, the defendant Doris Seligman. During this period the senior Wilson was only employed for short intermittent periods, and Anna E. Wilson was not gainfully employed during the four year residence with the junior Wilsons. According to plaintiff's testimony, the elder Wilsons "never had any money. They have never been able to even take care of themselves except for intermittent periods when Pop (Wilson, Sr.) worked, which was a very short period out of his life when I knew him".

In January, 1940, appellant James Gordon Wilson organized Color Prints, Inc., acted as president thereof, and owned 15% of the stock. This business was not particularly profitable. In 1945, Wilson organized Tri-Color Laboratories as a sole proprietorship to take advantage of a new Printon color process, for which venture Doris Wilson's mother, Mrs. Ora Kimball, advanced $21,000. Initially Mrs. Kimball was to have a one-half interest in Tri-Color; later on, two post-dated notes were given Mrs. Kimball for this amount, which notes are still outstanding although some payments thereon have been made.

In 1945, the first of two fires occurred at the premises occupied by Color Prints, Inc. and Tri-Color; financial difficulties followed, and soon both businesses and James Gordon Wilson were being harassed by creditors. There is evidence that in 1949, Anna E. Wilson had received a life insurance payment of $1,000 upon the death of the senior Wilson which was deposited at Bank of America, Beverly-Wilshire Branch; that Anna E. Wilson wrote a check for $1,500 to Color Prints, Inc., and received in return an assignment of accounts receivable. A bank account was then opened in the name of Anna E. Wilson at the Security-First National Bank, Vermont and Sunset Branch on which account appellant James Gordon Wilson was authorized to draw checks. Mr. Wilson's accountant characterized this as "a business account pure and simple" which "was set up as a device to protect business funds". This account was so maintained until July, 1953.

During this same period of financial difficulties two promissory notes secured by trust deeds covering the family home of Doris and James Gordon Wilson were executed in favor of this same Anna E. Wilson. One was dated September 24, 1949, in the amount of $7,500; the other was dated August 20, 1950, for the sum of $5,000. Anna E. Wilson testified that neither amount was ever loaned; that these instruments were "just for temporary and were to be turned back any time."

As pointed out in respondent's brief, "During the same period of time that the above steps were being taken to circumvent creditors, defendant Anna E. Wilson applied for and commenced receiving Old Age Security benefits from the State of California (Rep.Tr. p. 840, lines 9–15). She 'made no misrepresentations' in her application and advised the Bureau of Public Assistance that she 'owned "No property"' * * *. She would have been ineligible for benefits if she had owned personal property of a value in excess of $1,200.00. She received said benefits continuously from the year 1949 or 1950, a year or so after her husband's death, down to the date of trial herein in the year 1955".

After a second fire which occurred in 1950, Color Prints, Inc., was closed out as a defunct corporation; thereafter, James Gordon Wilson resumed operations under the Tri-Color proprietorship, and profits steadily increased until in the last months of 1954 when such profits amounted to $49,822.55. In July, 1952, for the alleged purpose of obtaining certain tax advantages, a limited partnership agreement was prepared naming James Gordon Wilson as general partner (90%), and appellant Anna E. Wilson as limited partner (10%), reciting a $5,000 capital contribution by Anna E. Wilson.

Henry D. Crookston, accountant and comptroller for James Gordon Wilson, testified that Anna E. Wilson did not put $5,000 in cash into the limited partnership as recited in the agreement, "probably only a minor portion of it", but that under instructions from Mr. Wilson, certain bookkeeping entries were made in respect to checks drawn to Anna E. Wilson and other items, indicating a credit of $10,430.10 on account of Anna E. Wilson. A debit entry of $5,000 was entered to reflect a purported $5,000 capital contribution by Anna E. Wilson to the limited partnership.

The accountant further testified that "on numerous occasions where Anna E. Wilson was to have made contributions, the money did not come from her but came indirectly from Tri-Color or some other source which was not her own personal one". Another accountant, Russell O. Guder, testified that "I have never seen any reconciliation of that account (Anna E. Wilson), and had never "seen any supporting data whatsoever for this item of $10,430.10 other than the bookkeeping entries which are * * * in Plaintiff's Exhibits 23 and 21".

In January, 1953, James Gordon Wilson formed another corporation, Tri-Color Multiprint, Inc., to utilize a new color printing process, all shares of which were placed in the names of Anna E. Wilson (300 shares), and Mr. Wilson's sister, Doris M. Seligman (400 shares). To pay for Anna E. Wilson's stock, $3,000 was withdrawn from Tri-Color funds in the hereinbefore mentioned Anna E. Wilson business account; thereafter when James Gordon Wilson received an inheritance of $2,968.63, checks in payment thereof were indorsed over to Anna E. Wilson. Multiprint was not a profitable venture and after the present action was filed, James Gordon Wilson purchased all stock in Multiprint and dissolved the corporation.

On June 12, 1953, the wife, Doris Wilson, filed complaint for divorce and the husband, James Gordon Wilson, filed a cross-complaint. After a trial lasting from February 25, 1955, to March 7, 1955, the trial court found that Tri-Color Laboratories and Tri-Color Multiprint are community property; that the purported limited partnership between James Gordon Wilson and Anna E. Wilson known as Tri-Color Laboratories is fictitious and of no effect; that Anna E. Wilson contributed nothing to said partnership, and that the same was not formed in substantial compliance with law. The present appeal is from that portion of the interlocutory judgment based thereon.

The appellants' challenge of the sufficiency of evidence to support the findings and judgment is governed by well settled rules of law. As said in Scott v. Nevis, 120 Cal.App.2d 619, 621, 261 P.2d 797, 798, "It is a rule too well established to require the citation of authorities that before an appellate tribunal is justified in reversing a judgment upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence, it must appear from the record that, accepting the full force of the evidence adduced, together with every inference favorable to the prevailing party which may be drawn therefrom, and excluding all evidence in conflict therewith, it still appears that the law precludes such prevailing party from recovering a judgment. The evidence must be construed most strongly against the losing party.

* * * The prevailing party's evidence must ordinarily be accepted as true * * *."

[1] Applying the above principles to the present case, it is evidence that appellants' contentions cannot be sustained. The appellants' brief sets out in considerable detail various items of evidence alleged to show that the trial court erred in finding that the purported limited partnership with Anna E. Wilson was invalid and that such person had no interest in the business. However, under the rule just mentioned the existence of such evidentiary items becomes immaterial where the record discloses substantial evidence in support of the trial court's findings and judgment. That the record herein does reveal such evidence cannot be doubted.

The trial court was entitled to believe and evidently did believe the evidence hereinbefore mentioned which leads to a reasonable conclusion that Anna E. Wilson in fact owned no interest in the business which was actually community property belonging to Doris and James Gordon Wilson. As stated in the respondent's brief, there is substantial evidence indicating that "Anna E. Wilson was merely held out as owing an interest in a community asset in order to gain a supposed advantage, as had been done on prior occasions. Thus, even if, as defendants urge, such procedure was recommended to secure needed tax relief", there still would have been no valid limited partnership. "Defendant Anna E. Wilson neither owning nor acquiring an interest in Tri-Color, was not a partner in fact but in name only".

[2] Appellants' contention that the judgment is void because in effect it amounts to a dissolution of a partnership in an action where the partnership was not made a party is without merit. As pointed out in respondent's brief, the trial court merely found that the business in question was community property and that there was no valid limited partnership with Anna E. Wilson. Furthermore, all of the alleged partners were named as defendants.

[3] As hereinbefore indicated, there is substantial evidence in support of the findings of fact, and such findings adequately support the trial court's conclusions of law, that the purported limited partnership "is fictitious, invalid, void and non-existent, and of no force and effect; that said purported Limited Partnership was not formed in substantial compliance in good faith with the requirements of Section 15502 of the Corporations Code of the State of California; that the attempted gift from defendant, James Gordon Wilson to defendant Anna E. Wilson of an interest in Tri-Color Laboratories is fictitious, invalid, void, and of no force or effect", etc.

The judgment is affirmed.

Action by grantors' successors in interest for declaration that grantors were entitled to recover lands conveyed to railroad for railroad purposes but not so used. The Superior Court, Monterey County, Anthony Brazil, J., rendered judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Devine, J. pro tem., held that where land, which was held by railroad in fee simple, grantors retaining a right of entry for breach of condition that lands be used for railroad purposes, had been leased by railroad to other enterprises, for periods from eight months to 32 years past, grantors' time to declare a forfeiture on account of the particular uses involved was expired.

Judgment modified and affirmed.

1. Railroads ⚿82(6)

In action for declaration that land which had been conveyed to railroads for railroad purposes reverted to grantors, on account of railroad's nonuser, evidence sustained finding that land which was not being used at all, or which was leased to businesses which shipped their products by railroad, was being held or used for railroad purposes.

2. Railroads ⚿69

Where land was conveyed to railroad with a defeasance clause to be operative in event land should not be used for railroad purposes, railroad held in fee simple on condition subsequent, and grantors retained a possessory interest consisting of a right of entry for breach of condition.

DEVINE, Justice pro tem.

In 1872, plaintiff's predecessors in interest, Alfred and Mariano Gonzales, conveyed to Southern Pacific Branch Railway Company, predecessor of defendant Southern Pacific Company, a right of way at Gonzales in Monterey County, for the railroad to run from San Francisco to Los Angeles. In 1873, they conveyed 20 acres of land surrounding the right of way at Gonzales, and it is this property which is the subject of the present lawsuit. The grant was in fee simple but in it was a defeasance clause to be operative in event the land should not be used for railroad purposes. The action which gives rise to this appeal is one for declaratory judgment, in which plaintiffs seek a declaration of their right to parts of the land which, they allege, are not used for railroad purposes. Judgment having been rendered for defendants Southern Pacific Company and its lessees, plaintiffs appeal.

It is conceded by plaintiffs that parts of the 20 acres are used for railroad purposes, such as tracks, signal devices, bunkhouses and the like, and plaintiffs do not seek defeasance as to those parts. The other parts of the land may be considered in three categories: land not used at all, land used for businesses which do considerable amounts of shipping by the railroad, and land used by local enterprises which do not patronize the railroad except perhaps incidentally.

The trial court, in declaring the rights of the parties, adjudged that the reversionary right remains, to become effective if the land ceases to be used for railroad purposes. The court held that the railroad has the right to use the property "for any and all lawful purposes as long as the use for railroad purposes is not obstructed or interfered with and use thereof for railroad purposes does not cease." The court found that the uses to which the land was put were for railroad purposes, except that temporary uses under leases and permits have been permitted, and that these temporary uses do not interfere with use for railroad purposes.

[1] We consider first the unused portion of the grant. It was the conclusion of the court that this property was being retained for railroad purposes, and the conclusion is well justified by the history of the original grant, by a more recent event described below which shows how the railroad uses develop, and by prospects for the future. When the land was deeded in 1873 it must have been apparent to the grantors that it would be many years before it would be used for purposes having to do with the operation of the railroad. In fact the deed expressly preserved the rights of the then lessees, whoever they may have been. When the main line between San Francisco and Los Angeles was to be built, no doubt the Gonzales family which, according to the testimony, still holds a large area of ranch lands, deemed it worth while to deed the comparatively small rectangle which is the subject of this case. The recent event to which reference has been made is the construction of a spur track a few years ago to a vacuum cooling plant, the track running across an area of the property which had remained unused for some 70 or more years since the grant. As the trial judge noted in his memorandum opinion, had this action been brought 10 or 15 years ago and a forfeiture granted, the town of Gonzales might have lost an industry, and the railroad, a customer. As to the future, there was the testimony of the district freight and passenger agent of the railroad that the unused lands are retained "for future industrial expansion and whatever use it might be required for railroad operating purposes." The trial judge personally inspected the property. He took note of the increase in population of California.

We consider next the subject of those lands which are leased, with 30-day cancellation provisions, to businesses which ship their products by the railroad. These are, a plant for manufacture of concrete pipe, a warehouse for seed products, a warehouse for farm supplies and a vegetable shed. These enterprises, which are connected by spur track with the main line of the railroad, shipped a total of 4,735 carloads of freight by Southern Pacific in the years 1941–1953 inclusive, an average of about 32 cars a month, or slightly more than one a day.

The notice of appeal in this case was filed on January 3, 1955. Since then, and on May 27, 1955, the supreme court has decided the case of City of Long Beach v. Pacific Electric Railway Co., 44 Cal.2d 599, 283 P.2d 1036. In that case, a condemnation proceeding, a merely nominal award had been made by the trial court to the railroad as compensation for an easement for "railroad purposes." It was held that more than nominal damages ordinarily would be caused by the taking because a railroad may use its right of way for many commercial purposes which contribute to the railroad's business such as a lumber yard, for which purpose part of the railroad's right of way had been leased. Among the uses enumerated in the court's opinion, 44 Cal.2d at page 603, 283 P.2d at page 1038, are such businesses as a manufacturing plant and a grain elevator and warehouse, enterprises almost, if not completely, identical with those in the category now being considered. In the City of Long Beach case, the railroad had an easement only, whereas in the case before us, the railroad holds a fee. We conclude that there was no forfeiture by these uses. Besides defending these uses as being for railroad purposes, respondents raised the defense that plaintiffs acquiesced in these uses, and this defense is discussed in the consideration of the third category, below.

The enterprises which do not make use of the railroad's shipping facilities are a gasoline filling station, a lot for parking used cars for sale and 4 advertising boards. The first two are on leases with 30-day termination clauses, and the signs, on a permit with 24-hour notice of cancellation. Defendants concede that the present uses of these parcels (the exact measurements of which are not before us, but which, from the map in evidence, are relatively small in comparison to the whole of the grant) are not for railroad purposes; but they contend that generally, and in a permanent way, they are held for the purposes of the railroad, in that the leases and permits may be revoked rapidly if a railroad need arises, and, as stated above, they defend on the ground of acquiescence of plaintiffs to these uses.

We need not decide whether or not, if the latter defense were not available, these leases and permits of these essentially retail enterprises which do not contribute to the railroad's business of transportation could be sustained upon the grounds that the uses do not interfere with railroad operation and that the railroad keeps the tenancies subject to termination on short notice, because of our holding on the subject of acquiescence, as appears below. From a practical standpoint at least, it seems that the possibility of abrupt termination is more of theoretical than of actual importance, because the uses have been long continued, a factor which, indeed, is the basis for the railroad's next considered defense.

These uses the court found to have been open and notorious, and the times elapsing between their commencement and the date of demand for reentry were, respectively, of the used car lot, 16 years, of the sign, 17 years, and of the filling station, 23 years. Although the statute of limitations was rejected as a defense, the action having been commenced shortly after demand for reentry, the court did sustain the defenses of waiver of the right of reentry and of laches. Prescinding from the defense of laches, wherein we would be faced with the questions whether or not this action for declaratory relief despite its form was substantially an action at law for reentry, and hence not one in which laches would apply, and whether or not damages had been suffered by the defendants by delay, we conclude that the court's holding of waiver of the right of reentry should be sustained.

[2] It was stipulated that the title was held by the railroad in fee simple on condition subsequent. Thus, plaintiffs have, and always have had, a possessory interest consisting, not of a possibility of reverter which would take effect immediately upon the happening of the event named, but of a right of entry for breach of condition. City of Santa Monica v. Jones, 104 Cal.App.2d 463, 232 P.2d 55; 1 Simes, Law of Future Interests, sec. 177, p. 321.

The judgment as it stands perhaps might be subject to the interpretation that the property may be put to any use in the future which does not interfere with railroad purposes. We think that the judgment should be limited, and it is not unlikely that the court intended so to do, to denying forfeiture or reentry because of past and present uses and because of non-use of part of the land and to retaining in general the reversionary right of plaintiffs. Although the action was denominated one for declaratory relief, essentially it was one to declare a forfeiture, and the answer simply prayed that plaintiffs take nothing. Accordingly, the judgment is modified to deny that forfeiture or reentry be decreed because of past or present use of parts of the land or for non-use of other parts, and to preserve the reversionary right as contained in the deed. As so modified, the judgment is affirmed.

Maudie Mae McGLASSON, Plaintiff and Cross-Defendant, and Appellant,

v.

James BLYTHE, Effie Blythe, Clifford McGlasson, First Doe, and Second Doe, Defendants and Cross-Complainants, and Respondents.

Civ. 16853.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

July 16, 1956.

Action to quiet title under an alleged agreement for the exchange of certain property. Defendants' cross-complained to have title quieted in themselves. The Superior Court, Alameda County, Charles Wade Snook, J., entered judgment for defendants and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, P. J., held that evidence sustained finding that a definitive oral exchange agreement for property in question was entered into by the parties.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Exchange of Property 🔑8(4)

In action to quiet title under an alleged agreement for the exchange of certain property wherein defendants cross-complained to have title quieted in themselves, evidence sustained finding that a definitive oral exchange agreement for property in question was entered into by the parties.

2. Frauds, Statute of 🔑139(4)

Where defendants obtained legal title and possession of property in question under a definitive oral exchange agreement and performed as the agreed consideration conveyance of their property to plaintiff and the payment of obligations defendants assumed, full execution of said agreement was accomplished taking it out of the statute of frauds.

3. Exchange of Property 🔑7

Where an oral definitive agreement for the exchange of property was entered into between plaintiff and defendants, and fully executed by defendants, purchaser lost all equitable interest in such property and no transfer of such interest from her to defendants who held legal title was required.

4. Frauds, Statute of 🔑139(4, 5)

The statute of frauds does not apply to fully executed contracts relating to lands such as contracts to convey, exchange or lease land.

5. Quieting Title 🔑10(2)

An action by defendants for quieting of their title after performance of a definitive oral exchange agreement was not an action subject to the strict requirements of an action for specific performance, and requirements of certainty and fairness of the agreement and adequacy of consideration necessary to support an action for specific performance were therefore not relevant.

6. Pleading 🔑411

Where plaintiff did not demur to defendants' cross-complaint to quiet title based on a definitive oral agreement for the exchange of land notwithstanding the fact that it did not allege ownership and was based on quiet possession and occupancy for less than the statutory period of five years, but alleged in her answer that legal title was in defendants but that such title was fraudulent, it was, under such circumstances, irrelevant whether defendants' cross-complaint was correctly formulated.

7. Quieting Title ⚷52

In an action to quiet title, even though defendant does not file a cross-complaint or ask for any affirmative relief, a decree declaring that defendant has title, and enjoining plaintiff from further setting up a claim thereto, is a proper form of judgment.

8. Quieting Title ⚷44(2)

In an action to quiet title under an alleged definitive oral agreement for the exchange of land, an assignment of a contract of sale under which plaintiff originally had possession of property in question, although not signed by plaintiff and apparently not delivered and therefore ineffectual to transfer plaintiff's right under the contract of sale, was nevertheless properly introduced in evidence to enable the court to consider whether plaintiff's husband had signed the document in order to determine whether previously a definitive oral agreement of exchange had been entered into.

9. Appeal and Error ⚷970(2)

Action of trial court in receiving evidence as material will not be disturbed on appeal in the absence of an abuse of discretion.

10. Appeal and Error ⚷843(2)

Where, in action to quiet title under an alleged definitive oral agreement for the exchange of certain property, findings and conclusions of the trial court as to the execution of such agreement were sufficient to support judgment for defendants without any reliance on estoppel of plaintiff to invoke statute of frauds, defendants making substantial improvements on the property or on laches of plaintiff in instituting action, District Court of Appeal would not review such points.

11. Appeal and Error ⚷1071(1)

Where a finding although improper had no influence on the decision of a case nor was any danger of harm from the irregularity shown, District Court of Appeal would not order amendment of the finding.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

In reciprocal quiet title actions with respect to certain real property in Newark, Alameda County, hereinfurther called the property, title was quieted in Jim Blythe and Effie Blythe, husband and wife. The other claimant, Maudie Mae McGlasson, sister of Jim Blythe appeals.

Before January 1, 1949, appellant and her husband were living on the property under a sales agreement from the former owners, who retained title pending installment payments of the purchase price. On January 1st, appellant still owed $125 plus interest on the sales price and $542 on a contract for improvements she made on the property. At that time respondents were living on a property which they owned in Stanislaus County subject to a deed of trust for $3,250. This property is called herein the Stanislaus property. In the first part of January 1949, the parties exchanged residences. The dispute between the parties centers on respondents' contention that the change was based on a definitive oral agreement that they would take over the property, pay the two balances due and receive title directly from the former owners and that appellant in exchange would take the Stanislaus property subject to the deed of trust, as against appellant's contention that there was no definitive agreement, that the parties moved in anticipation of a possible future agreement and that said uncertain status was permitted to continue indefinitely.

Judge Allen J. Norris, who at the time was a practicing attorney and who had earlier drawn up the contract of sale of the property to the McGlassons, testified that in the first part of January 1949, a conference of the parties took place in his office, in which conference appellant took a leading part. No provisional exchange contract was signed then because the parties thought such unnecessary, but after it, Mr. Norris ordered title insurance on the property for respondents, took steps to clear two title defects which appeared, mailed to the McGlassons, who then occupied the Stanislaus property, for their signature an assignment to respondents of their contract of sale of the property, obtained a deed from the former owner to respondents, which deed was sent to the title company who recorded it, collected from respondents the money due on the contract of sale and paid it over and prepared and had recorded a deed of the Stanislaus property from respondents to the McGlassons. Clifford McGlasson, appellant's husband, signed the assignment, but appellant did not do so, and later (in June 1949) she told attorney Norris that she wanted the property back, and that she had not signed anything. Respondents refused to undo the exchange. They maintained possession of the property until April 11, 1953, either by living in it or by renting it to others and collecting rents. They paid the balance due on the improvement contract as they had paid the balance due on the contract of sale. On April 11, 1953, when a new lessee of respondents was preparing to move in, appellant took possession. She and her husband had lived sometime on the Stanislaus property; they had tried to sell it with the encumbrance but had not succeeded; they had not kept up the payments required by the deed of trust and the Stanislaus property had been sold at a trustee sale in 1951. After appellant had taken possession of the property respondents commenced a forcible entry action on April 27, 1953, in Justice's Court. Then only did appellant take her first legal measures, this quiet title action with a cause of action to enjoin the forcible entry action until the title suit would be decided. A temporary restraining order issued accordingly. Defendants cross-complained to have title quieted in themselves.

The trial court found in substance that the oral exchange agreement had been concluded, that the deed from the former owners of the property to respondents was executed and delivered with the consent of appellant and pursuant to said agreement and that respondents hold legal title without fraud; that they paid the debts of appellant which they had assumed conveyed the Stanislaus property to appellant, and made substantial improvements on the property. The court also concluded that there was such performance of the oral agreement as to take the case out of the operation of the statute of frauds, that appellant was estopped from invoking the statute and that the delay to the detriment of respondents in commencing the action constituted laches and prevented relief.

[1] Appellant's main contention that the evidence does not support the finding that the parties entered into a definitive exchange agreement is wholly without merit. Testimony of Jim Blythe and Judge Norris supports the definitive character of the agreement. The fact that after six years they could not always exactly remember who said what does not indicate that there was no definite meeting of the minds at the time itself. Moreover, the court could consider the definitive character of the exchange corroborated by the evidence that appellant told Mary Andrade, a neighbor in Stanislaus County, "that they had traded and she was going to come down and sign the Deed" and that appellant's husband offered to sell the Stanislaus property to his neighbor Manuel Andrade, asking $500 for his equity. Appellant's testimony caused a conflict only the solution of which against appellant is binding on this court.

[2-4] When it is accepted that a definitive oral exchange agreement had been made, according to which respondents would obtain title to the property directly from the original sellers, then the evidence showed full execution of said agreement, which takes it out of the statute of frauds.

Respondents having obtained legal title and possession of the property and having performed as the agreed consideration the conveyance of the Stanislaus property to appellant and the payment of the obligations they had assumed, nothing further remained to be done. By the oral agreement and its stated execution appellant had lost all equitable interest in the property and no transfer of such interest from her to respondents who held the legal title was required. "The statute of frauds does not apply to fully executed contracts relating to lands, such as contracts to convey, exchange, or lease land * * *." 37 C.J.S., Frauds, Statute of, § 240, p. 741; See Pearsall v. Henry, 153 Cal. 314, 326, 95 P. 154, 159; 23 Cal.Jur.2d 406, § 134. Neither is the fact that attorney Norris, who handled the conveyances in execution of the agreement as agent of the parties, had no authority in writing relevant after the conveyances have been fully executed. Dearborn Electric Light & Power Co. v. Jones, 8 Cir., 299 F. 432, 437.

[5] It must be noted that the action of respondents, who were holders of the legal title, had had full possession and had complained of appellant's forcible entry was not an action for specific performance, but for quieting of their title after performance had taken place. Such action is not subject to the strict requirements of an action for specific performance (49 Am.Jur. 7–8, Specific Performance § 3). Appellant's authorities regarding the requirement of certainty of the agreement and fairness of the agreement and adequacy of consideration are therefore beside the point.

[6, 7] It is true that respondents in their cross-complaint to quiet title did not allege ownership (legal title) and based their action on quiet possession and occupancy for less than the statutory period of five years only. However, appellant did not demur to the cross-complaint and in her answer alleged deeds of the former owners of the property to respondents, and that the legal title was in respondents but that said title was fraudulent. The deeds to respondents were introduced in evidence by stipulation and extensive evidence taken without objection as to the exchange agreement of the parties. Under these circumstances appellant was evidently not misled to her prejudice in the proceedings. Code Civ. Proc. § 469; Constitution Art. 6, § 4½; Hayes v. Richfield Oil Corp., 38 Cal.2d 375, 382, 240 P.2d 580; Rosenthal v. Harris Motor Co., 118 Cal.App.2d 403, 408–409, 257 P.2d 1034. It is then irrelevant whether respondents' cross-complaint was correctly formulated, because "In an action to quiet title, even though defendant does not file a cross-complaint or ask for any affirmative relief, a decree declaring that defendant has title, and enjoining plaintiff from further setting up a claim thereto, is a proper form of judgment." Ridgway v. Ridgway, 95 Cal.App.2d 46, 50, 212 P.2d 6, 9.

Appellant's contention that findings and judgment relating to appellant alone, without her husband being a party to the proceeding, is erroneous because her interest in the property was a community interest is disproved by her own testimony and that of her husband that he transferred all of his interest in the property to her.

[8, 9] Appellant's contentions that there was no substantial evidence that the assignment of the contract of sale under which appellant originally had possession of the property was signed by her husband and that its admission was error because even the signed contract was immaterial because no delivery had been shown, are without merit. It had been stipulated that with respect to the signature of Clifford McGlasson the court would act as its own expert in comparing signatures and so forth and on that basis the court could find that Clifford had signed the assignment. Although the document, which was not signed by appellant and of which it did not appear that it was delivered, was ineffectual to transfer appellant's rights under the contract of sale, the court could consider the fact that Clifford signed the document relevant with respect to the essential issue whether previously a definitive oral agreement of exchange had been entered into. The action of the trial court in receiving evidence as material will not be disturbed on appeal in the absence of an abuse of discretion. In re Estate of Ades, 81 Cal.App.2d 334, 342, 184 P.2d 1; Decter v. Stevenson Properties, Inc., 39 Cal.2d 407, 420, 247 P.2d 11. We do not find such abuse here.

[10] The findings and conclusion of the trial court upheld in the above are sufficient to support the judgment without any reliance on an estoppel of appellant to invoke the statute, respondents making of substantial improvements on the property or on laches of appellant in instituting action. It is then unnecessary for us to review the latter points. Shultz v. Redondo Improvement Co., 156 Cal. 439, 440–441, 105 P. 118; Sands v. Eagle Oil & Refining Co., 83 Cal.App.2d 312, 321, 188 P.2d 782.

[11] It may well be that the statement in the third finding "that the agreement between Plaintiff and the Defendant further provided that the Plaintiff and Clifford McGlasson would assume and pay a certain debt of the said Defendant which was secured by the property located in Stanislaus County" does not render exactly the evidence on this point, which indicates that the liability of plaintiff and her husband in that respect would be restricted to the Stanislaus property, but this detail can have no influence on the decision of the case and we see no reason to order amendment of the finding as appellant has not shown any danger of harm from the irregularity. Alonso v. Hills, 95 Cal.App.2d 778, 785, 214 P.2d 50.

Mary Royal MONIZ, Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.
Louis G. MONIZ, Defendant and Appellant.
Civ. 16945.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.
June 28, 1956.

Hearing Denied Aug. 27, 1956.

Action for divorce wherein the husband made certain motions. From an order denying the motions without prejudice in the Superior Court, County of Alameda, James R. Agee, J., the husband appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Devine, J. pro tem., held that the various motions of the husband were properly denied.

Order affirmed.

1. Divorce 🔑249(1)

On motion by husband to allow as an offset to the amounts due wife under a property settlement agreement incorporated in an interlocutory decree of divorce the expenses of the husband in his successful efforts to regain custody of the children, court properly denied the motion without prejudice leaving the subject open to an independent action if the husband decided to commence such an action. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc., §§ 22, 25; West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 138.

2. Divorce 🔑254

A decree adjusting the property rights of the parties to a divorce action and not making an allowance by way of alimony is not subject to modification without the consent of the parties.

3. Divorce 🔑253

Where interlocutory decree of divorce adopting a property settlement agreement established finally the property rights of the parties, if either party later created a new cause of action in favor of the other the remedy was by a separate action.

4. Divorce ⚷264

An interlocutory decree of divorce containing a property settlement agreement was not subject to modification so as to reimburse husband for expenses and counsel fees incurred incident to the custody and maintenance of the children where the trial court by an order denied reimbursement to the husband and he did not appeal from that order, though the husband claimed there was no ruling on the merits, where part of the order showed that the judge did rule on the merits in that he stated no showing was made of the ability of the wife to reimburse the husband. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 138.

5. Judgment ⚷280

The recording of an abstract of judgment is not a judicial action but is the exercise of a statutory right which did not call for assistance of the court. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc., § 674.

6. Judgment ⚷280

The husband was not entitled to have canceled abstracts of judgment which his wife caused to be recorded on the ground that she was in contempt of court in wrongfully withholding custody of the children and that she should not have the assistance of the court in view that the statutory right for recording of an abstract of judgment does not call for the assistance of a court. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 674.

7. Divorce ⚷254

Abstracts of judgment which wife caused to be recorded for amounts due under property settlement agreement incorporated in an interlocutory decree of divorce were not required to be canceled because they created a lien for an amount greater than the amount of judgment due at the time of recording, since the proper procedure would be the recording of a satisfaction of judgments. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 675.

8. Judgment ⚷762

A judgment providing for payment in installments does not when recorded create a lien at least as to amounts not due unless such lien is impressed by the terms of the judgment itself, since there would be no clear way for a debtor to relieve his property of the lien without paying the entire amount thereof.

9. Divorce ⚷264

Husband's motion to cancel abstract of judgment which his wife caused to be recorded for amounts due under property settlement agreement embodied in an interlocutory divorce decree on ground the abstract included an amount not due was not required to be granted where a sum was admittedly due and the husband claimed that he could not presently pay what was then owing.

10. Divorce ⚷258

Husband's motion to grant delay in making of payments to wife allegedly due under property settlement agreement incorporated in interlocutory divorce decree on the ground of the expense that she had caused the husband in his successful attempt to obtain custody of the children was properly denied, since if the wife takes affirmative action such as proceedings on contempt for nonpayment the court might give weight to the husband's asserted cause for delay.

Stanley Block, San Leandro, Henry Muller, Oakland, for appellant.

C. O. Heffernan, San Leandro, Haley & McInerney, Oakland, for respondent.

DEVINE, Justice pro tem.

The parties in this case are the same persons as those in Moniz v. Moniz, Cal.App., 298 P.2d 710, but their positions are reversed, the husband being appellant herein, and the wife, respondent. The earlier opinion sets forth the facts of the struggle of the parties for the custody of their children. Following the several proceedings that are related in that opinion, the husband made certain motions, described below, all of which were "denied without prejudice" by minute order, and from that order, the husband appeals.

Motion was made by the husband to allow, as an off-set to the amounts due to the wife, the expenses of the husband in his successful efforts to regain custody of the children, a sum of $3,942.56.

[1] It is our conclusion that appellant was not entitled, on motion to modify, to have a set-off for his expenses, and that the court was correct in denying the motion and, by doing so without prejudice, leaving the subject open to an independent action, if appellant decides to commence such an action. If, on the one hand, he has such a cause, it should be set forth in an action, which is the ordinary proceeding for the enforcement of a right. Section 22, Code of Civ.Proc. The complaint will thus be subject to test by demurrer and the whole proceeding will be governed by all the rules of law pertaining to civil actions. If, on the other hand, appellant does not have a valid cause of action, arising from an obligation or an injury, section 25, Code of Civ.Proc., he cannot elevate his claim to the status of a set-off, which would be tantamount to a judgment against the original judgment creditor, his wife. Appellant's arguments are, that the court had inherent continuing supervisory power over its decree, and may modify it by allowing the set-off as a matter of justice, and, second, that there is statutory authority for the modification under the provisions of section 138 of the Civil Code.

[4] It is contended by appellant that the decree was subject to modification under the provisions of section 138 of the Civil Code, and that the expenses, and in particular, counsel fees, incurred by him, having been incident to custody and maintenance, should have been allowed on motion to modify. It is true that counsel fees and expenses such as those of travel have been allowed in custody matters, Bancroft v. Bancroft, 178 Cal. 352, 358, 173 P. 582, but in this case, the court, in the order by Judge Chamberlain relating to custody, which was the basic order of the earlier case, had denied reimbursement to the husband, and appellant did not appeal from that order. Appellant seeks to avoid the effect of that order on the ground that there was no ruling on the merits, because in the written order, Judge Chamberlain stated that the matter should have been brought up in the still earlier contempt matter before Judge Fox. That ruling, appellant argues, was erroneous because he had no opportunity to appear before Judge Fox. However, if the reason given by Judge Chamberlain be regarded as part of his opinion (even though it is in that part of the document entitled "order") it would not affect his order. If it be regarded as part of the order itself, it is balanced by another part thereof which shows that the judge did rule on the merits, because he states that no showing was made of ability of the wife to reimburse her husband.

[5, 6] The next motion of appellant was to cancel certain abstracts of judgment which his wife caused to be recorded. It is argued by appellant, first, that when his wife recorded the abstracts, she was in contempt of court in wrongfully withholding custody of the children, and that she should not have had the assistance of the court. The recording of an abstract of judgment is not a judicial action. Coley v. Hecker, 206 Cal. 22, 272 P. 1045; Gudger v. Manton, 21 Cal.2d 537, 545, 134 P.2d 217; Sampsell v. Straub, 9 Cir., 189 F.2d 379, 381. It is the exercise of a statutory right under section 674 of the Code of Civil Procedure which does not call for the assistance of the court, and the contempt did not affect the right to file the abstracts.

[7] It is contended that the abstracts should have been cancelled because they created a lien for an amount greater than the amount of the judgment due at the time of the recording. The first of the abstracts contained a recital of the provisions for support of the children during the time the wife should have had their custody. The husband sets forth in his affidavit, and it is not denied by the wife, that the husband has paid in full all sums due under this part of the decree because when he obtained the custody, the obligation to pay this part of the award ended. However, it does not seem that there was error on the part of the trial court in declining to make an order cancelling the abstract, an order for which there does not seem to be precedent, although it is conceivably a valid procedure. A more orderly way to proceed would seem to be the one provided by statute, the recording of satisfaction of judgment under the provisions of the last paragraph of section 675 of the Code of Civil Procedure; the granting of satisfaction of judgment being the subject of compulsory action under that section.

[8, 9] The second abstract contained a description of amounts to be paid to the wife, the total being $2,563, of which $1,413 had accrued as of the date of recording the abstract. Appellant complains that the abstract includes an amount not due. A judgment which provides for payment in instalments does not when recorded, create a lien, at least as to amounts not due, unless such lien is impressed by the terms of the judgment itself, because there would be no clear way for the debtor to relieve his property of the lien without paying the entire amount. Yager v. Yager, 7 Cal.2d 213, 217, 60 P.2d 422, 106 A.L.R. 664; Bird v. Murphy, 82 Cal.App. 691, 695, 256 P. 258. However, it was not necessary for the trial court to take affirmative action at the time the motion was presented to grant relief to appellant. Admittedly, the sum of $1,413 was due if the set-off were not allowed, and appellant did not, and, as he says, could not presently pay what was owing. Nor was the court obliged, as appellant urges, to determine the amount then due and the amount not yet due. If and when appellant desires to borrow on his home (the only real property he owns) in order to pay what he may then owe his wife, an action which he alleges he is prevented from doing by the abstract, no doubt the court will hear him, if, indeed, the wife requires him to seek the court's assistance for that purpose.

[10] Finally, the alternate motion to grant delay in the making of payments to the wife, on the ground of the expense she had caused the husband, properly was denied. If the wife takes affirmative action, such as proceedings on contempt for nonpayment, the court may give weight to the asserted cause for delay.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

July 3, 1956.

Hearing Granted Aug. 30, 1956.

Proceeding by state employee for mandamus to compel state personnel board to reconsider an order dismissing petitioner from state civil service position. The Superior Court, Sacramento County, Ralph McGee, J., ordered reconsideration in part, and both petitioner and respondents appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that board's action in discharging the supervising veterinary meat inspector who had been charged with duty of inspecting construction of meat packing plants and who accepted money from persons within his supervision for the drafting of plans for plants was within discretion.

Decision of board affirmed; order of remand annulled.

1. Agriculture ⚷2

In proceeding against supervising veterinary meat inspector, who was charged with duty of inspecting construction of meat packing plants, evidence supported findings of state personnel board to effect that defendant was guilty of accepting money for private work from persons within his supervision.

James H. Phillips, Sacramento, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., by Paul M. Joseph and Willard A. Shank, Deputy Attys. Gen. for respondents and cross-appellants.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

Dr. Harry Shepherd, hereinafter called appellant, appeals from a judgment directing issuance of a peremptory writ of mandate commanding the State Personnel Board, hereinafter called the Board, to reconsider, in part, its order dismissing the appellant from his state civil service position of Supervising Veterinary Meat Inspector.

Appellant was dismissed by the Director of the Department of Agriculture. A notice of punitive action was filed, containing a statement of causes, as required by Section 19572 of the Government Code, and a statement of facts supporting the causes listed. Hearings were held before a hearing officer, and the Board, after consideration of the transcript, entered findings of fact and decision sustaining the dismissal of the appellant.

* Opinion vacated 307 P.2d 4.

Appellant then brought mandate proceedings in the Superior Court. The issues were submitted to that court upon the record before the Board. The court found only part of the causes supported by substantial evidence and remanded the matter to the Board for reconsideration of the penalty imposed. Both parties have appealed.

The duties of appellant were officially defined as follows: "Under general direction, to have charge of the administration of the meat inspection provisions of the Agricultural Code in an assigned district and, in connection therewith, to direct the work of a group of Veterinary Meat Inspectors and assistants, and on occasion to perform meat inspection work; and to do other work as required." In actual practice, however, appellant had achieved an unusual status in that he became a recognized authority on the planning, construction, alteration and remodeling of meat slaughtering and processing plants throughout the state. Articles written by him concerning this specialized work of design had been published nationally, and engineers and architects sought and received his advice in plant design. In the performance of his somewhat specialized duties, he reviewed, corrected and passed upon plans for meat processing plants and consulted, advised and assisted establishment operators, owners and their architects and contractors in preparing such plans. He visited plants to ascertain that the facilities complied with all sanitary requirements of California law and with the rules and regulations of the Department of Agriculture; he advised and assisted plant owners and managers in meeting those requirements. He was the only employee of the department engaged wholly in the particular phase in which he had specialized.

Pursuant to procedural requirements of the Government Code, Sections 19570 to 19588, the Director of Agriculture served and filed upon appellant a notice of punitive action which later on and during the proceedings was amended on several occasions. In its final form it specified 11 causes for punitive action. They were: 1. Inexcusable neglect of duty; 2. Insubordination; 3. Dishonesty; 4. Inexcusable absence without leave; 5. Wilful disobedience; 6. Violation of the Civil Service Act, Title 2, Division 5, Part 2, Government Code; 7. Failure of good behavior; 8. Acts during duty hours which are incompatible with the public service; 9. Acts during duty hours which are inimical to the public service; 10. Acts outside of duty hours which are incompatible with the public service; 11. Acts outside of duty hours which are inimical to the public service. Complying with the further provisions of Section 19574 that the notice contain "a statement in ordinary and concise language of the acts ar omissions upon which the causes are based", the notice of action set forth allegations which may be summarized as follows: That as a part of appellant's duties he was required to and did supervise the planning, construction, alteration and remodeling of meat slaughtering and processing plants throughout the state subject to or applying for state meat inspection; that he was further required to review, correct and pass upon such plans and assist establishment operators, owners, architects and contractors in preparing plans for meat establishments; that he was further required to survey buildings in which construction, alteration, or remodeling was contemplated for use as meat establishments and to visit meat establishments in the course of construction or remodeling to see that such work was satisfactory and that sanitary requirements were met; that he was further required to make surveys of establishments which had made application for state inspection to determine whether they met the state sanitary and other requirements, to recommend changes in establishments in order that state requirements be met, and to specify and advise operators of the state requirements for plant sanitation and the necessary facilities for inspection. It was further asserted that during the year 1945 and on various occasions thereafter appellant's superior, the Chief of the Bureau of Meat Inspection, advised and instructed him that during his assigned hours of duty he was not to perform or carry out personal activities; that he was not to use state property or equipment in the performance of personal work or in the carrying on of personal activities; that neither during hours of duty nor hours outside of duty was he to perform services for owners or operators of establishments subject to state meat inspection or for contractors or architects working on or in connection with establishments subject to state meat inspection or on behalf of anyone else interested in or connected with establishments under state meat inspection if for such work or activities he demanded or received any compensation or remuneration in addition to the regular salary paid him for the services performed in his said position. After these general allegations concerning his duty and his instructions, the notice of punitive action proceeded to assign four instances in which it was claimed the appellant had failed in his duty, disobeyed his instructions and had received compensation from prohibited persons for work done by him for them.

The first allegation of wrongful acts was the following: With regard to the Union Packing Company of Vernon, a meat slaughtering and processing establishment, subject, however, to federal inspection as opposed to state inspection, it was charged that in September of 1949 the company contemplated converting to state meat inspection and discussed the matter with appellant; that at least some of these conferences were during appellant's duty hours during which he made plant measurements and suggested plans for remodeling for state inspection; that he used a state automobile in connection with that activity and claimed and received reimbursement for travel expenses in connection therewith; that the knowledge he gained while working on the premises of the Union Packing Company during the period from September 13 to September 17, 1949 was necessary for, material to and was used by him in doing prohibited work for said company; that during October and November, 1949, outside of his duty hours, appellant worked for the Union Packing Company and in November presented to the company plans for the remodeling of their establishment, for which in March of 1950 he was paid by the company the sum of $500 which was payment for the work done for the company by appellant during both on duty and off duty hours.

As another incident of wrongful activity on the part of appellant the following allegations were made: That during August and September of 1950 one Minardi owned certain premises occupied by United Meat and Provision Company as lessee; that the lessee was operating thereon a meat slaughtering and processing establishment subject to and actually receiving state inspection; that Minardi proposed to remodel the premises and sought the advice and counsel of appellant with reference thereto; that with knowledge that United Meat and Provision Company was subject to state inspection and that said meat company would be subject to appellant's supervision in the future and with knowledge that any plans for remodeling said establishment would likewise be subject to his approval in connection with his position with the state, appellant did in August and September of 1950 prepare plans for Minardi; that he delivered the plans so prepared to Minardi in September of 1950 and by Minardi was paid the sum of $250 for the services so rendered; that thereafter the meat establishment continued to be subject to state inspection and plans for the remodeling of the establishment were submitted to appellant for approval.

As a further incident of improper action by appellant the following was alleged: That in November of 1946 appellant performed services for Jerome and George Siemsen who were operating a meat establishment subject to and receiving state inspection service, all of which appellant knew; that he advised the Siemsens in connection with his official duties that the establishment's plant did not comply with state requirements and that they did not have required facilities for state inspection service; that appellant performed services for the Siemsens consisting in the creating and furnishing of sketches and plans for the remodeling of their plant so as to meet state requirements; that he transferred said plans to the Siemsens and by them was paid on November 22, 1946 the sum of $500 therefor; that the Siemsens continued to operate under state inspection until December 31, 1950.

As a further incident of improper activity on the part of appellant, it was alleged as follows: That during the year 1947 and continuously up to the time the notice of punitive action was filed and served, the Grass Valley Meat Company of Grass Valley was a meat packing establishment under state inspection; that during a period of several months prior to April, 1950, and during that month appellant supplied plans to said meat company for the reconstruction of their meat packing establishment and supervised the construction of a killing unit and other buildings in connection with such reconstruction; that said services were so rendered by appellant during both on duty and off duty hours; that the reconstruction was finished about April 20, 1950 and the meat company paid appellant $850 for such services. It was also charged in connection with said Grass Valley Meat Company that it stored certain barrels of tallow for appellant which belonged to appellant, which services it rendered to him without charge.

The Board made findings of fact as to the allegations contained in the notice of punitive action. Speaking generally, they found the allegations as to the employment of appellant and as to his specialized services within his employment to be true. This finding is not disputed. With regard to the Union Packing Company incident, the Board found that the company was conducting a meat slaughtering establishment subject to federal meat inspection service and still continued to operate under that service and had never applied for state meat inspection. But the Board found further that previous to the month of September, 1949, the company contemplated the enlarging and altering of their said plant and were considering the advisability of converting to state inspection; that the company requested the Department of Agriculture to have appellant confer with them with regard to such contemplated remodeling and that appellant had been instructed to so confer; that from September 13, 1949 to about September 17, 1949, and during his duty hours appellant had conferred with officials of the company, had examined the existing meat establishment and obtained from the company the measurements of their existing plant for the purpose of supplying the company with plans for remodeling their establishment; that appellant had used a state automobile and had been reimbursed by the state for expenses during that period; that the services he had rendered to the company were performed by appellant as a part of and in connection with his civil service position; that the information he received during that tour of duty was used by him in preparing plans for the company during off duty hours; that during such off duty hours appellant did further work for the company, and as a result of his inspection of the plant and obtaining of information during on duty hours and of his off duty work, he prepared and presented to the company plans for the remodeling of their meat establishment; that for all said things done he received from the company the sum of $500 in payment, which payment included payment for his on duty work as well as his off duty work.

Concerning the Minardi incident the Board, again speaking generally, found the allegations of the notice of punitive action to be true; that that plant was, during all its relations with appellant, receiving state inspection service; that appellant was called in particularly by Minardi to revise plans theretofore designed by an architect, to overcome a situation that had developed when it had been discovered that construction according to those plans as designed by the architect would result in overlapping the boundaries of Minardi's property. This necessitated readjusting the plans. It was found that Minardi's lessee intended to have the remodeling job passed by the state inspection service, and this involved appellant's supervision and approval of plans in part designed by himself; that for his work on the plans appellant had received from Minardi $250; that Minardi's plant had been remodeled and state inspection service thereafter had been accorded his lessee. While it was found that the plans appellant prepared and transferred to Minardi were prepared on appellant's own time, yet it was further found that in that preparation he had used information obtained by him during duty hours.

Concerning the Siemsen brothers incident occurring about November of 1946, the allegations of the notice of punitive action were substantially found to be true. It was found that beginning with late 1946 and continuing until December 31, 1950, when the plant went out of operation, the plant had been in an unsanitary condition and did not comply with the sanitary standards required by the Bureau of Meat Inspection; that these facts were throughout that period known by appellant; that prior to November of 1946 appellant had in the discharge of his duties inspected the establishment to ascertain whether or not it was up to standard, and thereafter and in November had advised Siemsen and one Howard Butler, an employee of the Siemsens, that the plant was in an unsanitary condition, did not comply with state meat inspection requirements, could not be remodeled to so comply and that another plant at a new location must be constructed if they were to continue to operate under state inspection; that this advice was true; that thereupon the Siemsens retained a building contractor to investigate the building of a new plant at a new location; and that the contractor, along with the Siemsens, requested appellant to create and furnish floor layout plans for a new establishment, which appellant did, drafting the plans outside of his duty hours. It is further found that he transferred the plans to the contractor, received from the contractor $500 therefor, which sum within a few days the Siemsens paid back to the contractor. It was found that the Siemsens continued to operate the slaughtering establishment at this old location until late in December of 1947, when they sold to two men, one of whom was the employee who had previously negotiated with appellant concerning the furnishing of said plans; that these assignees continued to operate the business in the old plant until December 31, 1948, when they closed that plant; that neither the Siemsens nor their assignee had ever constructed the proposed new plant; that throughout the critical period the operators had insisted that the old plant did comply with state requirements, which contention, as the Board found, was untrue; that the plant could not be remodeled because of the nature of the terrain; and that appellant had known this during the whole period that the slaughtering business was being operated in an unsanitary plant.

Concerning the Grass Valley incident originating in 1946, the Board again substantially found the allegations of the notice of punitive action to be true. There were findings as follows: That from time to time beginning in 1946 and continuing until April 20, 1950, the operators had done work in remodeling and reconstructing their meat packing establishment, which at all times was under state inspection; that from time to time appellant inspected the work so being done; that in 1947 the operators requested him to and the appellant did, but on his own time and outside of duty hours, create a set of sketches and plans suitable for remodeling the plant for federal meat inspection, which plans and sketches were also suitable for and met the standards of state inspection; that for these plans it was agreed that appellant would receive somewhere between $800 and $1,000 when the same were completed; that on August 2, 1947, he was paid $500 and on April 20, 1950, received an additional $350; that after the agreement for plans and for payment therefor had been made and the plans had been furnished by appellant, the operators advised him they did not wish to proceed with further remodeling on such an extensive scale; that they did not wish to change from state inspection to federal inspection, and it was then agreed that appellant would create plans and sketches of a simpler nature suitable for operation under state inspection; that appellant did so create and furnish such new sketches and plans; and that no agreement was ever made for compensating him for the second set; that the operators reconstructed the plant, substantially following the second set of plans; and that in the performance of his duties and while construction was going on, appellant in his position did inspect the construction work from time to time. The allegations concerning the free storage of tallow were substantially found to be true.

It appeared during the hearing and the Board found that appellant had been an unusually efficient employee. He received an outstanding rating on the following factors: Relationships with people, initiative, analytical ability, and administrative ability. He received a standard rating on all other factors of performance. His last rating memo contained the following statement: "You have been rated outstanding in performance items 4, 5, 7, and 9. You have demonstrated over a period of years that you get along well with people and are effective in achieving the deserved results from such relationships. Your work is well-performed, with a minimum of supervisions from this office. Much credit must be given to you for the constant improvement of the meat plants in the state during the past years." However, the Board also found that at the time said performance report was rated and approved that neither the rater nor the approver knew that appellant had received compensation in addition to his state salary as found to have been the case. The Board further found that the improper acts and conduct of appellant had been done by him, knowing that they were in violation of the instructions given to him by his superiors and with the knowledge that they were in violation of the policies of the Department of Agriculture; that the acts recited were committed without good cause or excuse and had not been disclosed by appellant to his superiors.

The Board found that the conduct of appellant constituted inexcusable neglect of duty, insubordination, dishonesty, wilful disobedience, violation of Title 2, Division 5, Part 2 of the Government Code, failure of good behavior, acts during duty hours which were incompatible with the public service, acts during duty hours which were inimical to the public service, acts outside of duty hours which were incompatible with the public service, and acts outside of duty hours which were inimical to the public service within the meaning of Section 19572 of the Government Code. The Board found that appellant had not been guilty of the charge of having been absent without leave.

In conclusion, the Board decided to and did uphold the punitive action of the Director of Agriculture without modification. They decided further that each of the four incidents of misbehavior severally and separately and without reference to the others justified the discharge of appellant.

The record upon which the Board based its decision presents some sharp conflicts. For instance, it appeared that before any of the wrongful conduct as found occurred, the appellant had submitted to his superiors a communication in which he pointed out that he had, through application to duty, study and experience, gained special knowledge concerning the most economical and efficient way in which to design meat processing plants to meet both federal and state inspection requirements; that there was a dearth of such specialized professional knowledge; that there was a real demand for the services of one who could render such specialized service and furnish such expert advice; that the need was felt by architects, engineers and contractors engaged in designing, planning and constructing meat processing establishments; that he could, outside of duty hours, supply designs and floor layouts for such plants and obtain compensation for such work from those whom he could thus serve; that he considered there was nothing incompatible with his state position if, during off duty hours, he should enhance his income by such means. There was no dispute but that such a communication had been made by appellant to his superiors. The conflict appeared in their reaction to it. Appellant testified that he was orally told that there was no objection to his rendering such specialized off duty services and obtaining compensation therefor. His superiors, however, testified that no such advice was given, and that, on the contrary, one of them told him that such work would be incompatible in that he would be furnishing plans, making designs and accepting employment from operators building plants in accordance with his designs; that as the plants were constructed he would again have to pass upon and either approve or disapprove the product of his own compensated work; that he would destroy his impartiality, both actually and in view of those who had employed him. The Board found that he had been specifically told he was not to engage in the proposed activities for compensation. On this appeal we must, of course, accept the evidence supporting the punitive action. It also was substantially shown that he did not inform his superiors of the incidents covered by the findings wherein he was paid for the preparation of plans and designs. There was no dispute but that he had done the work or that he had received money therefor. While the findings were that some of the work had been done while he was on duty, we think it only fair to say that from the record it appears that if that were so, it was a matter of incidentally gaining, during the regular performance of his duties, information which later and during off duty hours he used in creating his plans. Both he and the operators who employed him testified that the work was done before the amount of pay was agreed upon, but that, after it had been completed and the plans delivered, he was asked in each instance how much he wanted for the work done; that he replied in each instance that whatever was satisfactory to the operators would be satisfactory to him and that, generally speaking, he was paid far less than the going price for such work.

[1, 2] In the light of the whole record we hold that the findings of fact made by the Board are sustained by substantial evidence; that the facts so found, in turn, support the Board's decision that they constitute the specified causes for punitive action. We hold also that the Board's decision upholding the punitive action taken by the Director constitutes action well within the bounds of the Board's discretion and that the same must be upheld on this appeal. This we say, notwithstanding the punitive action of discharging appellant from state service is severe. There appears to have been a considerable investigation of the appellant's conduct, going back at least six or seven years, and the result was the accumulation of charges which we have heretofore recited. It is noted that these incidents of misconduct are scattered over a period of around five years, and in view of the excellent rating enjoyed by appellant the punishment inflicted, that is, the separation of appellant from state service after nearly twenty-five years of sustained employment, may well seem unnecessarily severe. But, within broad limits, it is for the appointing power in the first instance, and the personnel board in the last instance, to measure out punishment for dereliction.

Appellant attacks the decision of the Board from many directions, but the overall quality of the decision stands impregnable. The fundamental issue presented was tersely stated by the trial court in the following language: "Essentially the issue in this cause can be summed up in a single question—May a supervising meat inspector, whose duty requires him to supervise the planning, construction and remodeling of meat processing plants, and to review, correct and pass upon the plans for those plants, accept money from plant operators or contractors for drawing plans himself? The question answers itself. The moment the inspector accepts money from the concern whose plans it is his duty to review, correct and pass upon, he disqualifies himself from approaching his assigned task and duty with a detached and impartial mind. It is immaterial that he draws plans on his own time and after duty hours. It is immaterial that the plans conform to the highest standard. It is immaterial whether the state or the public is injured or benefited. The inspector had ceased to be impartial. He is not entitled to sit in judgment upon his own work. This policy is clearly set forth in Section 19250 Government Code which reads in part as follows: —'In his official activities the State employee shall pursue the common good, and, not only be impartial, but so act as neither to endanger his impartiality nor to give occasion for distrust of his impartiality.'"

[3] The trial court found that the record did not substantially support the causes of "inexcusable neglect of duty", "insubordination", "dishonesty", and "wilful disobedience". The trial court further found that acts during and outside duty hours incompatible with the public service which occurred after October 1, 1949 and before October 2, 1950 did not constitute acts incompatible with the public service. What we have already said sufficiently disposes of these findings, save only the finding concerning acts of incompatibility occurring after October 1, 1949 and before October 2, 1950. Obviously, the designations of causes overlap. Wilful disobedience may well include insubordination, and neither measures up to the required honest action of a public servant. Inexcusable neglect of duty is shown by acts of insubordination, wilful disobedience and dishonesty. A public servant who performs his duties cannot be guilty of either of the three.

The finding of the court that acts during and outside duty hours were not incompatible with the public service was grounded solely upon the court's construction of the effect of the amendment in 1949 to Section 19251 of the code. Before the 1949 amendment the code section read as follows:

> "A State officer or employee shall not engage in any other activity or enterprise inconsistent, incompatible, or in conflict with his duties as a State officer or employee."

The section followed Section 19250, which has not been amended and which enjoins upon every state employee a high standard of personal conduct in fulfilling the duties and responsibilities of his office. In 1949 Section 19251 was amended to read as follows:

> "A state officer or employee shall not engage in any employment, activity, or enterprise which has been determined to be inconsistent, incompatible, or in conflict with his duties as a state officer or employee or with the duties, functions or responsibilities of his appointing power or the agency by which he is employed.
> "Each appointing power shall determine and prescribe, subject to approval of the board, those activities which, for employees under his jurisdiction, will be considered inconsistent, incompatible or in conflict with their duties as state officers or employees. In making this determination the appointing power shall give consideration to employment, activity or enterprise which: (a) involves the use for private gain or advantage of state time, facilities, equipment and supplies; or the badge, uniform, prestige or influence of one's state office or employment or, (b) involves receipt or acceptance by the officer or employee of any money or other consideration from anyone other than the State for the performance of an act which the officer or employee, if not performing such act, would be required or expected to render in the regular course or hours of his state employment or as a part of his duties as a state officer or employee or, (c) involves the performance of an act in other than his > capacity as a state officer or employee which act may later be subject directly or indirectly to the control, inspection, review, audit or enforcement by such officer or employee or the agency by which he is employed.

> "Each state officer and employee shall during his hours of duty as a state officer or employee and subject to such other laws, rules or regulations as pertain thereto, devote his full time, attention and efforts to his state office or employment."

[4] The 1945 codification of the Civil Service Law in Section 19572 sets forth as one of the grounds or causes for discipline of state civil service employees, "Any other failure of good behavior or acts which are incompatible with or inimical to the public service." In 1949, also effective October 1st of that year, this provision was amended to add the following underlined portions: "Any other failure of good behavior or acts either during or outside of duty hours which are incompatible with or inimical to the public service." The substance of the ruling of the superior court is to the effect that after the effective date of the amendment of Section 19251, Government Code, namely, October 1, 1949, and until appellant received, on October 16, 1951, a copy of the Department of Agriculture's "Incompatibility Statement" incompatible acts were not a ground for discipline; and that, during the interval, all former rules, regulations and instructions, formal or informal, of the Department of Agriculture with respect to incompatible acts were repealed and voided by the adoption and effectiveness of the amended section. Furthermore, by reason of the same amendment, subdivision (s) of Section 19572 quoted above, referring to incompatible acts, was made dependent upon the promulgation of an "incompatibility statement". The result of this concept would be that no employee could be disciplined under Section 19572 for an act otherwise incompatible with state employment unless it was an act specifically enumerated within an "incompatibility statement" issued after October 1, 1949. We hold this concept of the effect of the statutory requirement that incompatibility statements be issued to be erroneous. Of course, it is desirable for the guidance of state employees that an incompatibility list specially applicable to their particular work be issued by the appontive power. But whether the list be issued or not and however long the period between the effective date of the amendment requiring the list and the issuance of such list may be, the obligation of a public servant to refrain from acts incompatible to the public service continues. There is no hiatus.

The decision of the Board is affirmed. The order of remand is annulled.

Wiley Wilson BALTHROP, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

ATCHISON, TOPEKA & SANTA FE RAILWAY COMPANY, a corporation, Coast Santa Fe Lines, Thomas H. Archibald, J. M. Smith, E. H. Baxter, G. H. Nunn, Robert T. Cyr, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 8756.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

July 5, 1956.

Rehearing Denied July 27, 1956.

Hearing Denied Aug. 30, 1956.

Action arising out of a collision between an automobile and a train at a railroad crossing. After a verdict by the jury in favor of the defendants, the Superior Court, Stanislaus County, Sherrill Halbert, J., granted motorist's motion for new trial and the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McMurray, J. pro tem., held that the evidence did not show that motorist was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

Order affirmed.

1. Railroads 🔑350(13)

Where driver of automobile has exercised some care before crossing railroad tracks, the question of whether the care actually exercised is due and sufficient is for the jury.

2. Appeal and Error 🔑977(1)
New Trial 🔑6

The granting of a new trial is a matter within the discretion of the trial court and will not be interfered with by an appellate court unless a manifest and unmistakable abuse of discretion is shown.

3. Railroads 🔑350(16)

In action arising out of automobile-train crossing collision, evidence failed to show that motorist, as a matter of law, was contributorily negligent in respect to looking and listening.

4. Railroads 🔑351(4)

In action arising out of a collision between a train and an automobile at a railroad crossing, where instruction stated that the railroad was under no duty to have any protective equipment at the crossing, trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting motorist's motion for a new trial on theory that instruction did not fully state the railroad's duties.

5. Appeal and Error 🔑978(1)

If an instruction is too broad, an appellate court will not reverse the trial court's decision in granting a new trial upon that ground.

6. New Trial 🔑41(3)

The mere fact that the error or misstatement in the instruction may have been cured by subsequent or other instructions does not constitute it an abuse of discretion for the trial court to grant a new trial, since it is within the trial court's discretion to determine whether or not the principal instruction was so misleading as to constitute an error.

7. New Trial 🔑44(1)

In action arising out of a collision between a train and an automobile at a railroad crossing, the trial court properly granted the motorist's motion for a new trial after the trial court determined that one juror deliberately concealed facts on voir dire.

Brooks & Walker, Los Angeles, and Rutherford, Jacobs, Cavalero & Dietrich, Stockton, for appellants.

Hawkins & Hawkins, Modesto, and Neumiller, Ditz, Beardslee & Sheppard, Stockton, for respondent.

McMURRAY, Justice pro tem.

After a jury verdict in favor of defendants the court granted a motion for a new trial upon the grounds that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the verdict; that there was error in an instruction given by the court; and that facts were concealed by a juror in his answers on voir dire. The action arose out of a railroad crossing accident in which plaintiff's car was struck by defendants' train.

Appellants complain that the order for a new trial should not have been made, that the court abused its discretion, because, appellants urge, the respondent's own testimony and evidence introduced by him established that as a matter of law he was guilty of contributory negligence.

The accident here involved occurred shortly after midnight at a crossing on appellants' mainline tracks. The crossing was a non-obstructed country crossing, and respondent was familiar with it. At the time of the accident there was no wigwag, blinker, or other automatic crossing signal at this crossing, but the highway was posted with a standard highway sign, an advanced disc shaped railroad warning sign and a painted pavement warning sign, some 200 feet south of the crossing. The train consisted of a power unit and 8 cars. The evidence was conflicting as to whether or not the warning whistle was being sounded as the train approached the crossing at an admittedly high rate of speed, estimated up to 85 miles an hour. All parties agree that it was a foggy night, although there is conflicting evidence as to the extent of visibility.

Respondent testified that he stopped his car several hundred feet from the crossing, that he got out, walked around a bit and then re-entered the car and drove almost all the way across the tracks without again stopping before the train hit his car. He testified that he looked to his right and left before he crossed the tracks but did not see anything. His windshield wipers were operating, and the window by the driver's seat was rolled down. The respondent claims that he was driving slowly at all times.

[4–7] The court also granted a new trial upon the ground that a certain instruction given was too broad and should have been qualified as was the instruction approved in Martindale v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, 89 Cal.App.2d 400, 417, 201 P.2d 48. Appellants claim that the instruction given was correct, but that in any event, later instructions cured the defect. The instruction considered by the trial court did not state that the railroad would be held to the standard of a prudent man operating a similar facility, it merely stated that appellant was under no duty to have any protective equipment at the crossing. The instruction did not fully and properly state appellant's duties since the jury could infer from it that lack of equipment could never be negligence since there was no specific statute or duty which required it. If the instruction was too broad, an appellate court will not reverse the trial court's decision in granting a new trial upon that ground. It has been said

"'If the challenged instruction was erroneous in any degree, or even if it was only "fairly debatable" that such instruction may have been misleading, the broad discretion of the trial court may not be disturbed, * * *.'" Sloboden v. Time Oil Co., supra. The mere fact that the error or misstatement in the instruction may have been cured by subsequent or other instructions does not constitute it an abuse of discretion for the trial court to grant a new trial since it is within its discretion to determine whether or not the principal instruction was so misleading as to constitute an error. As a further ground for granting the motion for new trial the trial court determined that one juror deliberately concealed facts on voir dire. That this is a proper reason to grant a new trial is quite apparent. Lindemann v. San Joaquin Cotton Oil Co., 5 Cal.2d 480, 55 P.2d 870.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

Henry I. PRIEN, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 16663.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

July 16, 1956.

Hearing Denied Sept. 13, 1956.

Action by purchasers of personalty from decedent's estate to have a chattel mortgage declared null and void. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Milton D. Sapiro, J., rendered judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal held that where chattel mortgage was void as to the executor of decedent's insolvent estate and decedent's creditors due to lack of recordation, purchasers from executor obtained title free of mortgage, irrespective of whether they had notice.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Chattel Mortgages 🔑192

Unexplained delay of three months in recordation of chattel mortgage caused mortgage to be void as against all creditors of mortgagor who became such prior to recordation, and, where recordation took place only after mortgagor's death, rendered it void against all creditors. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 2957.

2. Executors and Administrators 🔑129(3)

Statute authorizing the representative of an insolvent estate to recover property conveyed by decedent in fraud of creditors discloses legislative intent that such property ought to be an asset of the estate and that the executor should be entitled to it as a trustee for creditors, and the executor must recover possession of such property even in absence of the request of a creditor. West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 579.

3. Executors and Administrators 🔑129(3)

Within statute authorizing the representative of an insolvent estate to recover property conveyed by decedent in fraud of creditors, a conveyance that is void as against creditors is treated the same as a fraudulent conveyance. West's Ann.Prob. Code, § 579.

4. Executors and Administrators 🔑155

Where chattel mortgagee did not record chattel mortgage for three months and, until after mortgagor's death, executor of mortgagor's insolvent estate was entitled to the asset as a trustee for creditors, notwithstanding statute providing that chattel mortgages void for lack of recordation as to creditors may be valid between parties or their representatives. West's Ann. Prob.Code, § 579; West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 2957, 2973.

5. Executors and Administrators ⊂⊃129(3)

Statute providing that the representative of an insolvent estate may recover a fraudulent conveyance by decedent prevails over general provision that conveyances void as to decedent's creditors may be valid as to decedent's personal representatives. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 2973; West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 579.

6. Executors and Administrators ⊂⊃129(1)

The main task of the representative of an insolvent estate in administering assets fraudulently conveyed by decedent is to liquidate the assets. West's Ann.Prob. Code, § 579.

7. Sales ⊂⊃240

One purchasing from a bona fide holder stands in the shoes of the bona fide holder and like him takes free from equities of third persons, irrespective of whether the purchaser had notice.

8. Executors and Administrators ⊂⊃167

Where chattel mortgage was void as to the executor of decedent's insolvent estate and decedent's creditors due to lack of recordation, purchasers from executor obtained title free of mortgage, irrespective of whether they had notice. West's Ann.Prob. Code, § 579.

9. Executors and Administrators ⊂⊃129(3)

William Steinberg, San Francisco, for appellant.

Rhein, Dienstag & Levin, Jay Jackson, Jr., San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

This is an appeal by defendant Prien from a judgment declaring null and void a chattel mortgage recorded by him on certain hotel directory boards and bus schedule boards purchased by plaintiffs-respondents from the executor of the estate of Henry A. Douglas, deceased, together with the directory advertisement business in which deceased had used them, and perpetually enjoining appellant from selling said boards. The facts are undisputed.

On March 3, 1953, appellant loaned Henry A. Douglas $10,000 for which he received a note and the chattel mortgage mentioned above. Prior to the execution of the chattel mortgage the intention to do so was recorded and published in accordance with section 3440.1 of the Civil Code, but the mortgage itself was not recorded at the time it was executed as required by section 2957 of the Civil Code. The mortgage was still unrecorded when Douglas died on April 24, 1953, and when his executor qualified in May, 1953. The recordation took place on June 3, 1953, only. On June 22, 1953, appellant presented to the executor his claim on the note which was allowed. The copy of the note mentioned that the note was secured by a chattel mortgage (unspecified) of the same date, but copy of the mortgage was not filed with the claim or a description given as prescribed by section 706 of the Probate Code, and it is conceded that the claim has been allowed as an unsecured one only. The estate has at all times been insolvent. On August 1, 1953, the executor sold the directory advertising business for $20,100 to respondents inclusive of the boards on which appellant had recorded the mortgage. The sale was confirmed on August 17, 1953. On the same day appellant's attorney notified respondents of the claimed mortgage lien. The attorney had so informed the executor on June 17, 1953.

It is and was the position of plaintiffs-respondents that because of the three months delay in recordation the chattel mortgage under section 2957 of the Civil Code was void as to creditors existing prior to the recording; that said invalidity was extended to the executor of an insolvent estate as trustee for creditors by section 579 of the Probate Code and that as purchasers from said executor they obtained the chattels free of the mortgage irrespective of whether they had notice of the mortgage or not. Appellant mainly contends that even if the mortgage was void as to creditors it was not void as to the executor to whom section 579 of the Probate Code gave a right of action only in a situation not present in this case and certainly not as to respondents who were not creditors but purchasers with notice as to whom the mortgage is valid under section 2973 of the Civil Code. We have concluded that the position of plaintiffs was correctly sustained.

[1,2] There is no doubt that the unexplained delay of three months in recordation caused the chattel mortgage to be void as against all creditors of Douglas who became such prior to said recordation, Wolpert v. Gripton, 213 Cal. 474, 2 P.2d 767; In re Hansen, D.C., 268 F. 904, and, as the recordation took place after Douglas' death only, this includes all his creditors. Although section 579 of the Probate Code, supra, literally contains only a duty of the executor of an insolvent estate to prosecute on application of a creditor an action to recover fraudulently conveyed property or property the conveyance of which is by law void as against creditors, said provision is evidently based on the legislative intent that such property ought to be an asset of the insolvent estate and that the executor is entitled to it as trustee for creditors. In Webb v. Pillsbury, 23 Cal.2d 324, 328, 144 P.2d 1, 3, 150 A.L.R. 504, it is said: "Section 579 of the Probate Code recognizes that the right to recover property conveyed by a decedent in fraud of creditors is an asset of his insolvent estate and that the executor or administrator is a trustee thereof for the benefit of creditors. The primary object of the statute is to enable the trustee to reduce that asset to possession and administer it for the benefit of creditors under the direction and supervision of the probate court." Accordingly the executor of an insolvent estate must recover possession of such property also in the absence of the request of a creditor, 21 Cal.Jur.2d 428; Silva v. Superior Court, 83 Cal.App.2d 521, 533, 189 P.2d 314.

[3–5] Section 579 treats a conveyance "that by law is void as against creditors" in exactly the same manner as a fraudulent conveyance. As section 2957 of the Civil Code expressly declares void as against creditors the chattel mortgage not timely recorded, it is irrelevant, whether, as contended by appellant, the granting of said mortgage was not actually fraudulent. The executor of the insolvent estate is as trustee for creditors entitled to the asset as if the incumbrance invalid as to creditors had not taken place. The mortgage is void as to him in said capacity. Section 2973 of the Civil Code which declares chattel mortgages not made in accordance with the statutory provisions here involved nevertheless valid between the parties, their heirs, legatees and personal representatives need not be considered to conflict with the power given the executor or administrator of an insolvent estate in section 579 of the Probate Code, because said power is given him not as a representative of the decedent but as a trustee for creditors, but even if there were a conflict, the special provision of section 579, supra, restricted to the executor or administrator of an insolvent estate would prevail over the general provision of section 2973, supra, relating to all personal representatives of the parties.

[6–8] The main task of the executor in administering such assets in behalf of creditors is their liquidation. To be able to liquidate the asset in this case no action against the mortgagee was required, as the general possession of the chattels remained in the mortgagor and the executor and the mortgage was by law declared void, not voidable, as to creditors. Cf. Scholle v. Finnell, 166 Cal. 546, 552, 137 P. 241. The possibility of liquidation would be impaired and the invalidity of the mortgage as against the creditors and the executor as their trustee would be of no avail if the purchaser from the executor would not also obtain the chattels free of the mortgage. The position of respondents, as purchasers from the executor, is analogous to the position of one purchasing from a bona fide holder, which subsequent purchaser is held to stand in the shoes of the bona fide holder and like him to take the property free from the equities of third persons, irrespective of whether the subsequent purchaser had notice or not. Old Settlers Investment Co. v. White, 158 Cal. 236, 239, 110 P. 922; 77 C.J.S., Sales, § 296, p. 1110. We hold that on this basis the respondents obtained title free of the chattel mortgage. There is no contention that respondents did not pay the value of the unencumbranced business.

[9, 10] Under these circumstances they were entitled to have their title quieted as against appellant who claimed a valid chattel mortgage interest. Appellant's contention that they could not reach that result in this action because they did not prove the allegations of any count of it and did not expressly pray that their title be quieted is without merit. The first count of their complaint alleged among other things, in substance, that they bought the directory boards from the executor of the estate of Henry A. Douglas; that defendant claims to be the holder of a chattel mortgage on said boards executed by the deceased as security for a note of $10,000; that no such chattel mortgage was recorded when Douglas died on April 15, 1953; that the estate of said Douglas is and at all times has been insolvent; that if defendant is not enjoined from claiming the mortgage to be valid it will be a cloud on plaintiffs' title and they will suffer irreparable injury. The prayer is not only for an injunction but also, for a declaration that the chattel mortgage is of no effect and that plaintiffs are owners of the chattels free from any lien. Although said allegations of the complaint, which were not denied, did not show the length of the delay in recordation and therefore the ground of invalidity, there was no demurrer and the delay was shown by the answer and conceded at the trial, where no witnesses were heard. The one question before the trial court was concededly the one of law, treated hereinbefore, whether the chattel mortgage under the undisputed facts was void as to plaintiffs. In the first count some facts were alleged concerning threats of execution which were denied but said facts were not essential to plaintiffs' cause of action. "In such a case the unnecessary allegation need not be proved and can be treated as surplusage if the defendant is not prejudiced in his defense." Demetris v. Demetris, 125 Cal.App.2d 440, 443, 270 P.2d 891, 894, and cases there cited. The action was of the character of a quiet title action and an injunction from setting up a claim against such title is generally part of the relief afforded. 22 Cal.Jur. 129–130.

Cecil W. BLUMENSTEIN, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

CITY OF LONG BEACH, a municipal corporation, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 21448.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

July 18, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 6, 1956.

Hearing Denied Sept. 13, 1956.

Inverse condemnation case to recover compensation for damage suffered by lot due to street reconstruction which separated lot from street. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Fred Miller, J., rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that evidence was insufficient to sustain a finding as to compensable injury done property.

Judgment affirmed as to liability; reversed as to damages.

1. Eminent Domain ⚷106
Highways ⚷85

The right of ingress and egress attaches to a lot and is a right of property as fully as the lot itself, rather than a mere interest possessed by public in general in the use of public roads, and an act of the municipality for benefit of public which destroys or substantially impairs such easement is damage to the lot itself, and compensable. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 14.

2. Eminent Domain ⚷106

Where road was so rebuilt that property holder's land fronted on a three-lane freeway outlet instead of on a city street as before, separated by an abutment from the street as rebuilt, without interchange for 300 feet, property holder was entitled to compensation for reduction in value of lot attributable to loss of ingress and egress to street. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 14.

3. Eminent Domain ⚷141(1)

Diminution of market value of property caused by construction of a public improvement is a proper measure of damages, but decline in market value must be tempered by an exclusion of loss of value due to noncompensable injury.

4. Eminent Domain ⚷142

Damages resulting from mere diversion of traffic or inconvenience resulting from circuity of travel in reaching property allegedly damaged by a public improvement are noncompensable.

5. Eminent Domain ⚷142

Plaintiff whose lot was separated from street by street reconstruction was not entitled to compensation for a loss of vehicular parking, for rearrangement of traffic, or on account of circuity of travel in attempting to reach plaintiff's property. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 14.

6. Eminent Domain ⚷205

In proceeding for compensation for loss of market value of plaintiff's property due to street reconstruction which separated property from street, evidence was insufficient to sustain a finding as to compensable injury done property. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 14.

Walhfred Jacobson, City Atty., Joseph B. Lamb, Asst. City Atty., Clemons C. Turner, Deputy City Atty., Long Beach, for appellant.

Will H. Winston, Long Beach, for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

The city appeals from a judgment of $5,000 awarded respondent as damages allegedly sustained as a result of the construction of certain highway improvements on the street abutting respondent's parcel of land. Such parcel is a part of the Inner Harbor Tract in the City of Long Beach. The three lots comprising it were purchased in 1946, 1947, and 1948. They are situate at the northeast corner of West Anaheim Street and Harbor Avenue where respondent is now, and for some years past has been engaged in the general auto parts business.

Between August 1950 and July 1953, appellant demolished the old Anaheim Street bridge over the Los Angeles Flood Control Channel located about three blocks to the east of plaintiff's property, and constructed a new bridge. The westerly approaches to the new bridge were constructed in conjunction with the southerly extension of the Long Beach Freeway which runs parallel with and along the westerly edge of the Flood Control Channel.

Prior to the completion of this construction, respondent's property fronted upon, and was known as 1361, West Anaheim Street. That street was approximately 137 feet wide from property line to property line. The front of respondent's property was improved with a curb, located approximately 24 feet south of and out from the property line. Harbor Avenue is 80 feet in width and is adjacent to the west line of respondent's land. The next intersecting streets to the east were Fashion Avenue, Pico Avenue, and the Flood Control Channel, respectively. However, in conjunction with the demolition of the old Anaheim Street bridge, the city constructed a cloverleaf system of outlets from the Long Beach

Freeway which lies to the east of respondent's property. One of these outlets now passes directly in front of such property, emptying into Anaheim Street at Harbor Avenue, immediately to the west of respondent's land. Fashion Avenue, formerly the next street intersecting Anaheim to the east of Harbor Avenue, now no longer intersects Anaheim at all, but rather merges into the aforementioned freeway outlet to the east of respondent's place and north of Anaheim Street. Thus, an automobile proceeding south on Fashion to the north of Anaheim will pass into the freeway outlet and join its traffic flowing westerly past respondent's property and merging with Anaheim Street at Harbor Avenue. The situation now, looking southerly from respondent's property which formerly abutted Anaheim Street, is (1) the property line, (2) a sidewalk 12 feet wide, (3) the 33.7-foot, three-lane freeway outlet, (4) a concrete construction nine inches high and approximately 5 feet wide which separates the merging outlet from Anaheim Street for about 300 feet before they converge at Harbor Avenue, and (5) the three northerly lanes of Anaheim Street which carry its westbound traffic.

Following the construction of these public improvements, respondent brought this action in inverse condemnation (see Rose v. State of California, 19 Cal.2d 713, 123 P.2d 505) for $15,000 damages allegedly caused by the construction of the improvements. After trial of the action, the court awarded respondent $5,000 damages, from which award comes this appeal.

The first assignment is that as a matter of law, respondent did not sustain a compensable damage within the meaning of Article I, § 14 of the State Constitution which reads in part:

> "Private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having first been made to, or paid into court for, the owner * * *."

[1] Since there is no issue of a taking of plaintiff's property, the first question for decision is whether his property has been damaged by the construction of the bridge and freeway outlet in such a manner as to render the detriment suffered compensable under law. The property right assertedly damaged is respondent's easement of access from his property to the abutting highway and to the free and continuous use thereof. This right of ingress and egress attaches to the lot and is a right of property as fully as the lot itself, rather than a mere interest possessed by the public in general in the use of public roads. People v. Ricciardi, 23 Cal.2d 390, 397, 144 P.2d 799; Eachus v. Los Angeles, etc., Ry. Co., 103 Cal. 614, 617, 37 P. 750; Dillon on Municipal Corporations, sec. 712. An act of the municipality for the benefit of the public which destroys or substantially impairs such easement is damage to the lot itself within the meaning of Article I, § 14 of the State Constitution. People v. Ricciardi, supra. Just what is substantial impairment of the easement which will be compensable under law is a problem to be solved by an analysis of the decisions since no statutory or constitutional authority affords an adequate definition.

The identical problem as to the proper factors to be included in evaluating the detriment suffered by reason of public improvements has confronted the Supreme Court on prior occasions. In People v. Ricciardi, supra, the property involved fronted the highway a short distance from a grade crossing constructed by the state agencies on the adjacent highway. In order to eliminate the grade crossing the major portion of the highway was diverted underground a short distance from the intersection, but attained the level of the injured property a short distance beyond it. In order that the owner might not be deprived of access to his property, local "service roads" were constructed on both sides of the underpass. As a result, the property which had formerly fronted directly upon the main highway found itself adjoining a service road 30 feet wide and thereby separated from the main highway. The court affirmed a judgment for damages "based on diversion of the highway from direct access to defendants' property." People v. Ricciardi, 23 Cal.2d 390, 399, 144 P.2d 799, 804.

The "service roads" beside the Ricciardi land were 30 feet wide, or substantially the same as the road which serves as an outlet from the freeway and which blocks Blumenstein from the enjoyment of his easement of access to Anaheim Street. While the service road abutting Ricciardi's premises converged with the main highway on both sides of the underpass, that fact was not sufficient to overcome the diversion of such highway from its former position when contiguous to the injured land. A copy of a relief map of the Ricciardi premises, the intersection and the service roads accompanies the opinion on page 409 of 23 Cal.2d, on page 809 of 144 P.2d. The majority of the court held that the defendant's easement of ingress and egress had been substantially impaired. The rationale of the decision is that there had not been a noncompensable rerouting of traffic away from the highway abutting upon Ricciardi's property; neither was it the construction of a competing highway which siphoned off traffic that would otherwise have proceeded along the abutting highway; but on the contrary, it was a situation in which defendant's property no longer abutted upon the main highway as formerly but rather, following the construction of the underpass and the "service roads" was removed from contact with the main highway. He no longer had access to the highway which had formerly lain immediately contiguous to his property.

If the doctrine announced in the Ricciardi decision is applied to the facts now before us, it clearly applies, a fortiori. Here there was not a "service road" which could under any stretch of the imagination be considered merely a lane of Anaheim Street upon which the property formerly fronted. The freeway outlet enters into Anaheim Street immediately west of respondent's property, but the other end of the outlet connects with the freeway and not with Anaheim Street.

Appellant contends that respondent's property still abuts immediately upon Anaheim Street and as proof thereof points out that the property is yet known as "1361 West Anaheim Street," and is separated from the northerly lane of Anaheim by only a low concrete "island"; however, the photographs introduced into evidence distinctly show that the freeway outlet has no connection whatsoever with Anaheim Street until it merges therein immediately beyond plaintiff's property.

[2] Respondent contended to the trial court and again to this court that the construction of the complained-of public improvements resulted in placing plaintiff's property in a "cul-de-sac"—defined in Beckham v. City of Stockton, 64 Cal.App.2d 487, 496, 149 P.2d 296, 300 as:

> "* * * 'a passage or place with only one outlet, as a blind alley * *' (Webster's New International Dictionary); 'A way, street or alley open only at one end', Ballantine's Law Dictionary; 10 Words and Phrases, Perm. Ed., p. 633; 25 C.J.S., Cul De Sac, p. 20."

If respondent's property had been, indeed, placed in a cul-de-sac by the improvements constructed, recovery would be allowed under the theory of Bacich v. Board of Control, 23 Cal.2d 343, 144 P.2d 818, that blocking access of a property owner from proceeding upon the street upon which his property abuts into the next intersecting street in each direction, by reason of an obstruction rather than mere traffic regulations, substantially interferes with his easement of access. However, disregarding the fact that only one-way westerly traffic was and is allowed on the freeway outlet, the roadway which now abuts upon respondent's property intersects Harbor Avenue immediately to the west of respondent's property and merges with Fashion Avenue to the east. Thus, the Ricciardi decision rather than the Bacich case must be relied upon for recovery.

Notwithstanding respondent's right of recovery is established, we find it impossible to affirm the judgment by reason of the unsatisfactory nature of the evidence which was emphasized by appellant's motion to strike the estimate by plaintiff's only expert witness upon the damage which had been done to plaintiff's easement of access by the construction of the improvement. The estimate of the witness was that the market value of respondent's property had declined to the extent of $15,000 as a result of the construction of the improvement, the property's highest and best use now being industrial rather than commercial. The motion was based on the admission by the witness under cross-examination that he had let factors influence his determination of the decline in market value such as a presumed future loss of vehicular parking in front of subject property due to an anticipated exercise of the police power and a diminution, diversion, and rearrangement of traffic in front of subject property because of the construction of the improvement. Furthermore, the witness indicated that circuity of travel in attempting to reach the southerly portion of plaintiff's property caused by existing traffic regulations was a factor in his determination of market value.

[3, 4] The problem of the measure of damages for a properly compensable injury to the easement of access to an abutting highway is fully and completely covered in Rose v. State of California, 19 Cal.2d 713, 737 et seq., 123 P.2d 505, in which the facts are substantially the same as those present in People v. Ricciardi, supra. It was there held that although diminution of market value of the subject property caused by the construction of the complained-of improvement is in general a proper measure of damages in condemnation actions, direct or inverse, the decline in market value must be tempered by an exclusion of loss of value due to noncompensable injury. Appellate decisions of this state have made it clear that damages resulting from mere diversion of traffic or inconvenience resulting from circuity of travel in reaching the subject property are noncompensable. Rose v. State of California, supra; People v. Ricciardi, supra, 23 Cal.2d at pages 397–400, 144 P.2d at pages 802–804; Beckham v. City of Stockton, supra, 64 Cal.App.2d at page 502, 149 P.2d at page 303; Holman v. State of California, 97 Cal.App.2d 237, 243, 244, 217 P.2d 448; City of Stockton v. Marengo, 137 Cal.App. 760, 764, 31 P.2d 467.

In Rose v. State of California, as here, there was an expert witness "A" whose testimony relative to the decline in market value clearly indicated that he had considered noncompensable items of damage in reaching his estimate of diminution in market value. The State there made a motion to strike the entire testimony of the witness, which was denied in the trial court, and affirmed on appeal. The reasons given by the court on pages 742–744 of that opinion in 19 Cal.2d, on pages 522–523 of 123 P.2d, for the affirmance were that (1) the motion to strike was not directed with precision at the matter sought to be stricken in that the motion was to strike all the testimony of the witness, which happened to include some relevant and proper matter; (2) there were two other expert witnesses "B" and "C" whose estimates of the damage caused were not founded wholly on noncompensable factors; (3) the trial judge awarded an amount less, by about one third, than the damages estimated by "A." Thus the court determined that there was no error because of the breadth of the motion, and at least there was insufficient prejudice for reversal.

[5, 6] In the instant action, the motion to strike was not overbroad and was directed solely to the witness' estimate of damage which was admittedly based on noncompensable factors. Therefore, the trial judge should have stricken the estimate. People v. Dunn, 46 Cal.2d 639, 297 P.2d 964. Furthermore, the testimony of such witness was the only expert testimony offered on behalf of respondent. The only other witness for respondent was himself, and the major portion of his testimony was admittedly based on information not of his own knowledge but that which had been told him by his accountants and by his expert witness. Thus, the trial court had no testimony whatsoever on the question of the amount of compensable damage done to plaintiff's property by the construction of the improvement which was not colored by the inclusion and consideration of noncompensable factors. That the trial judge himself was dissatisfied with the extent of the evidence for respondent on the question of damages is implicit in his award of only one-third of the damages estimated by the expert and was expressed at one stage of the trial where he complained that the evidence on this matter was too "sketchy" for his liking. Respondent earnestly contends that the award of only one-third the damages estimated by the expert witness impliedly indicated that the trial judge excluded from his consideration of the damages all those which were due to such noncompensable injury as that caused by diversion of traffic. However, a close inspection and analysis of the evidence discloses that the trial judge had no competent proof to guide him in computing the extent of the detriment suffered by virtue of compensable injuries and consequently he was not in a position to calculate with a fair degree of accuracy the extent of the damages. Therefore, the evidence on the issue of the amount of compensable injury done to respondent's property is insufficient.

The judgment is affirmed as to the issue of liability; it is reversed as to the amount of the award of damages.

Edgar C. Keller, San Bernardino, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Norman H. Sokolow, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

The defendant was charged with the murder of one Perry Peck on or about June 24, 1955, it being further charged that he was at the time armed with a deadly weapon, to wit, a meat cleaver. Shortly before the conclusion of the case the information was amended by striking out the words "a meat cleaver" and inserting the words "a knife having a blade longer than five inches." A jury found him guilty of murder in the second degree, and also found that he was armed with a deadly weapon. He has appealed from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. He has been most ably represented, at the trial and on this appeal, by the same attorney who was appointed by the courts.

At 6:00 A.M. on June 25, an officer observed the body of Peck, while on a routine patrol in his squad car. The body lay two feet away from a bush, about 30 yards from a street intersection in the outskirts of Needles, and near the edge of an "old ball park" which was used for Little League practice. The area was one in which there were many bushes, and it was regularly patrolled by the officers. The body was also about 20 feet from a path which led across the area to an Indian camp, about three quarters of a mile away. It was not unusual for Indians to be seen lying under bushes in this area, either because they were asleep or because they were drunk. There were a number of bushes between the body and one of these streets. The deceased appeared to have been severely beaten about the head and face, his hair and face were matted with blood, and there was blood on his shirt and trousers. The deceased was barefooted, with his shoes partially underneath his body, and there were footprints indicating that he had walked to that point before taking off his shoes. There were no other fresh footprints, and no marks indicating that the body had been dragged to that location. The officer who discovered the body had last patrolled the area at 3:00 A.M., at which time he had not seen the body. He explained that he would not then have seen it, had it been there, because he was then approaching from the opposite direction and his lights "couldn't have hit him for the brush when I was traveling north."

The officer recognized the body as that of Perry Peck. Peck was an Indian, as is the defendant. The officers went to the Indian village where they found a man who identified the deceased, and also found a man who gave them information as a result of which they went to a home in Needles, about four blocks from the place where the body was found, arriving there about 7:30 A.M. They there found the defendant and John Harrison, another Indian, in the back yard. Before the officers could ask any questions the defendant told them that Peck had ripped the screen in the back door, gone in and stolen a jug of wine from him; that he had caught Peck and given him a good beating; and that he had also hit Harrison with a cleaver before beating Peck. Officers took the defendant and Harrison to the police station and interviewed them. The defendant stated that the owner of this house, who had gone away, had brought him there on June 20 to paint the house and clean the place up; that the owner stated that Peck might help him with the work; that the only way he could get any work out of Peck was to give him wine; that on the morning of June 24 the defendant, Peck and another Indian were drinking wine and the defendant twice sent Peck to purchase wine; that about noon he went into the house, put a jug of wine in the icebox, and then went to sleep; that about 2:00 P.M. he awoke and found the jug was missing; that he became angered and rushed out of the house with the meat cleaver; that he saw Harrison sitting there and "just hauled off and hit him up alongside of his face with the cleaver"; and that he then struck Peck and "beat the hell out of him." When an officer told the defendant that Peck was dead, the defendant said "I don't care about him dying he wasn't any good anyway". After this conversation the appellant was booked and incarcerated.

After this interview the officers took Harrison back to the house and he showed them where he and Peck were at the time of the beating. They found a blood-stained rug in the back yard which Harrison pointed out as the one on which Peck was lying when he was beaten by the appellant, and found a cleaver in the kitchen which Harrison identified as the one with which he had been struck. They took the cleaver and the rug to the station.

On June 28, the defendant was interviewed by the police chief and a deputy district attorney, with a reporter present. The defendant stated that it was about two or three o'clock on June 24 when he awoke and found his wine gone; that "it could be later"; that he did not know how much later it could have been "because when I went in I went to work and worked about a half-hour, maybe an hour, and got my supper"; that when he found his wine gone and the screen door cut he got mad and went outside; that he had nothing in his hand; that he accused Harrison and Peck of stealing his wine; that he hit Harrison with his fist; that Peck was lying down and he went over and hit him as he was getting up; that he had never seen this meat cleaver; that he told Peck never to come around again, and Peck took off and he did not know where he went; and that "I was so dam mad I went in the house and fixed that door."

Harrison testified that he was sitting in the back yard, and that Peck was lying on his back; that the defendant came out of the house and said somebody "stole his jug of wine while he was sleeping"; that the defendant went in the house and came back out, and "he hit me on the face with it, that meat cleaver"; that the defendant then went over to where Peck was lying, told him to get up and hit him on the face twice with the meat cleaver; that Peck was helpless and "didn't fight or anything"; that he (Harrison) was bleeding from his nose and face, and he walked away; that the last thing he saw was the defendant hitting Peck; that he "slapped him two times"; and that "I left then."

An autopsy was performed about 4:00 P.M. on June 25. The autopsy surgeon testified that the deceased was middle-aged, that the left side of his face and lips were bruised and swollen; that across his abdomen were two inflamed bruises, each about an inch wide and six inches long; that there were three similar bruises across his right leg, between the knee and hip; that there were tears in the wall of the stomach directly under the two bruises on the abdomen; that these tears were each around two to three inches long; that there was considerable hemorrhage directly under the two bruises but no hemorrhage elsewhere, and about a quart of blood in the abdominal cavity; that because of the hemorrhage and the tears in the wall the two blows across the abdomen were evidently applied with very severe force; that the actual cause of death "was the rupture of the stomach and consequent hemorrhage", plus such contribution as the shock from other injuries may have made; that a blow on the front of the abdomen could press the stomach against the spine and cause such a rupture; and that this would more easily happen if the stomach was empty, and might happen if the blow was severe enough whether it was empty or not. The doctor stated that death would not be instantaneous and that the abdominal hemorrhage occurred over quite a considerable period of time; that the lacerations in the wall of the stomach would rupture a number of small blood vessels "and the hemorrhage would be over quite a considerable length of time"; that if one of the larger blood vessels were cut death would come quickly; that the deceased could have walked 6½ blocks or a mile and a half; that the blows on the abdomen were produced by an instrument with a flat edge, whose surface could have been from a half inch to nearly an inch in width; that had a sharp edge been used instead of a flat edge the skin would have been lacerated; that the injuries on the leg appear to have been applied by the same instrument; that the blows could not have resulted from a striking with a fist or hand; that "the flat surface where it struck" could have been from one half inch to an inch wide; that the surface that was applied to the skin here was less than an inch wide; and in reply to a question by defense counsel as to whether these bruises could have been made with a 2 x 4 stick, the doctor replied "If it hit on a corner edgeways" it might produce such an injury.

On the stand the defendant testified that on the morning of June 24, he and Peck did some work around the place and also consumed some wine; that in the early afternoon he gave Peck some money to buy a half gallon of wine; that when Peck returned he gave Peck a drink and put the wine in the icebox; that he locked the screen door and went to sleep; that he awoke about two or three P.M. and found there was no wine in the icebox and that the screen door had been cut; that he was mad because someone had broken into the house of which he was in charge; that he grabbed the meat cleaver but not with the intention of using it; that he went outside, saw Peck and Harrison, and accused them of stealing his wine; that he slapped Harrison on the side of the face with the meat cleaver; that Peck started to get up and appellant "busted him one, I hit him on the nose, and the blood just flowed"; that appellant used his fist and Peck went down; that Peck started to get up again and appellant slapped him a couple of times on the cheek with the cleaver; that he then told Peck to "get the heck out of there because he was no good"; that Peck staggered, with his hand to his bleeding nose, and left; and that he did not intend to kill Peck or hurt him badly, he just wanted to run him off the place. When asked whether he thought he had killed Peck he replied: "Well, I don't know about that". When asked whether he recalled hitting Peck more than twice with the cleaver, he replied "I don't know about that because I was pretty mad, you know". When asked whether or not he had hit Peck in the stomach with the cleaver, he replied "I don't know about that, I wouldn't say yes or I wouldn't say no". He then volunteered "I don't remember whether I wiped it off or cleaned it off either." He further testified that the meat cleaver introduced in evidence was the one with which he had hit Harrison and Peck, and that in hitting them he had used the flat side. He also stated that he was not telling the truth when he told the officers, a few days after his arrest, that he had never seen or used the cleaver; and that he was confused and sick that morning and did not want to admit it at that time.

[1] It is first contended that the evidence was not sufficient to show that the appellant caused the death of the deceased. It is argued that the evidence that Peck died as a result of blows struck by the appellant is purely circumstantial; that a conviction on circumstantial evidence alone must be based on circumstances which are not only consistent with guilt but irreconcilable with any other conclusion; that Peck must have died within a few hours at most after he was struck in the stomach; that he was struck by the appellant at 2:00 P.M. and it is obvious that he could not have been lying at the place he was found for any appreciable time during the daylight hours of June 24, or he would have been seen; that it is highly improbable that the blows struck by the appellant were the fatal blows; that a more reasonable theory is that Peck went to the area where he was found sometime during that evening or night, and there became involved in another brawl with another drunken Indian during which he was struck in the stomach with a stick or rod, or other instrument one half inch to one inch in thickness, which caused his death from hemorrhaging shortly afterwards; that this other theory is supported by the testimony of the autopsy surgeon to the effect that the blows to the stomach were inflicted by an instrument the plane of which was from one-half inch to one inch wide; that the surgeon's evidence is incompatible with the theory of guilt; and that the inferences pointing to guilt are less logical than the inferences pointing to innocence.

[2] The evidence is not entirely circumstantial and some of the direct evidence, including his own admissions, justifies the inference that Peck died as the result of blows struck by the appellant. It appears from the appellant's testimony that his attempted attack upon the deceased may have occurred much later than 2:00 P.M., and from the surgeon's testimony that death may have occurred a considerable time after the blows on the abdomen were received, during which time Peck could have walked a very considerable distance. He may have wandered about for a considerable time in the general area before arriving at the point where he died. There is no evidence that anyone else was in that area during the time in question, and none to indicate that the body would have been seen had anyone walked along the path or these streets after dark. The theory that the deceased was later engaged in another brawl in which he received the fatal blows is supported by no evidence, and is not a reasonable conclusion which may be drawn from the evidence received. Under the evidence it cannot be said that the inferences pointing to guilt are less logical than those pointing to innocence. The testimony of the autopsy surgeon is not incompatible with the theory of guilt. While the doctor testified that the plane of the instrument which struck the deceased was from a half inch to an inch wide, he also testified that the only determination which could actually be made was that the surface of the object which had been applied was less than an inch wide; and that the bruises on the abdomen could have been made by a 2 x 4 stick if it hit on a corner edgeways. It would seem equally obvious that these bruises might have been caused by such an instrument as the meat cleaver here involved "if it hit on a corner edgeways"; and that the width of the bruises did not necessarily indicate the total width of the instrument used. If the flat side of the cleaver was applied with equal force on all parts of its area it would, of course, make a wider bruise than here appears. However, in slapping with the flat side of the cleaver, it would be natural for the heavier edge to strike the body with greater force than the thinner edge, and if the blade was tilted the thinner edge would not strike the body at all. This is the more probable here because of the rounded contour of the abdomen, as shown in the picture in evidence. It is necessary only to establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, and not beyond any possible doubt. The evidence as a whole sufficiently shows that the appellant caused the death of Peck, and is sufficient to support the verdict.

[3] It is next contended that there was no sufficient evidence of malice aforethought to justify a verdict of guilty of murder. It is argued that the evidence not only shows there was no intent to kill but affirmatively shows an intent not to kill, and not to seriously injure Peck, since the appellant did not strike Peck with the cutting edge of the cleaver; that no guilty knowledge that the injury to Peck might result appears because the appellant told everyone about beating up Peck and did not flee; and that it is obvious that Tobin had no knowledge that his acts would endanger Peck's life. These are questions of fact, and the question of malice was one for the jury. The implied finding is amply supported by the evidence of the nature and circumstances of the attack, the weapon used, and appellant's admissions with respect to many matters material in that connection.

[4, 5] It is next contended that the court committed prejudicial error by admitting into evidence the meat cleaver which the officers found on the premises after the appellant was incarcerated. It is argued that the cleaver was obtained by an unlawful search and seizure; that the appellant was arrested at the police station and not at the house, and the search was not incidental to an arrest or contemporaneous therewith; and that the appellant did not consent to this search. The constitutional prohibition runs only against unreasonable searches and seizures and it seems highly technical, in view of all of the evidence received in this connection, to assume that this constitutional provision was violated by the officers going in and picking up this cleaver when they went back and locked up the house as they had told the appellant they would do. It is unnecessary to decide that question however, since no prejudice to the appellant appears. There was ample other evidence that the deceased was struck with the meat cleaver, including the admissions of the appellant. The cleaver was not only referred to many times in the testimony but it is an article the appearance of which would be well known to any juror, and it is something which is commonly found in the average home. Assuming that this cleaver itself was inadmissible, the other evidence with respect to its use was amply sufficient and it cannot be said that any possible prejudice to the appellant resulted from its admission.

[6] It is next contended that the court erred in admitting into evidence two photographs showing the face of the deceased as he lay where he was found. These were objected to as being repetitious and irrelevant, and it is argued that other photographs introduced without objection sufficiently show the position of the decedent's body and the bruises on the abdomen which caused death; and that the two photographs objected to served no purpose other than to appeal to the passion of the jury. The autopsy surgeon testified that death was contributed to by shock in which the blows to the face played a part, and no prejudicial error appears. People v. Dunn, 29 Cal.2d 654, 177 P.2d 553.

[7] It is next contended that the court erred in refusing to give appellant's requested instruction on justifiable homicide and self defense. It is argued that there was evidence that the appellant did not strike to kill and purposely tried to avoid seriously injuring Peck, that he was merely trying to drive Peck away, and that this evidence was sufficient to require that instructions be given "relative to justifiable homicide in defense of home and property." There was no evidence of any hostile act on the part of the deceased toward the appellant during the time in question, or anything indicating that the deceased was attempting to enter the house or that he was offering violence to anyone. The instructions being inapplicable under the evidence, were properly refused.

[8] It is next contended that the court erred in denying appellant's motion for advised verdicts in the presence of the jury. No objection was made at the time and no prejudice appears. The court instructed the jury not to be biased against the appellant because he had been brought to trial, and that the jury was to be governed solely by the evidence in the case and the law as stated by the judge.

[9, 10] The final contentions are that the evidence was not sufficient to support the finding that the appellant was armed with a deadly weapon, and that the court erred in allowing the information to be amended after the close of argument by changing the words "a meat cleaver" to the words "a knife, having a blade longer than five inches." It is argued that a meat cleaver does not come within the definition of a deadly weapon, as found in Section 3024 of the Penal Code; that there is some doubt as to whether it comes within the definition of the word "knife"; and that the court erred in permitting the information to be amended in this regard. The information was amended by interlineation. The amendment did not change the nature of the charge, or affect the substantial rights of the appellant. The cleaver in question had a handle and a long steel blade containing a cutting edge and it was, at least impliedly, conceded to be longer than five inches. Webster's New International Dictionary initially defines the word "knife" as an instrument consisting of a thin blade, generally of steel, having a sharp edge for cutting, and fastened to a handle. In 23 Words and Phrases, p. 559, authority is cited for the proposition that the word "knife" is a generic term including within its purview any instrument consisting of a thin blade of steel and having a sharp edge for cutting, connected to a handle. As so defined, this cleaver could properly be termed a knife. Moreover, it may be considered a metal "* * * bar used or intended to be used as a club", within the meaning of Section 3024. Under the evidence it would be unreasonable to hold that the jury was not justified in finding that the appellant was armed with a deadly weapon.

While many technical arguments are raised and argued with great skill the evidence is sufficient to support the verdict of guilt, and we are far from convinced that a miscarriage of justice has occurred.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Tommy N. NEFF, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.
IMPERIAL IRRIGATION DISTRICT, Defendant and Respondent.
Civ. 5155.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.
July 2, 1956.

Action against irrigation district for damages to cotton crop resulting from chemicals which were used by the irrigation district to treat drainage lands and which spread over or were carried by air currents onto the plaintiff's cotton crop causing damage thereto. The Superior Court, Imperial County, L. N. Turrentine, J., entered judgment of nonsuit and the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that where the irrigation district was acting in a governmental capacity, its acts resulting in damage to the plaintiff's cotton crop did not constitute the taking or damaging of private property for public use without just compensation.

Judgment affirmed.

Eminent Domain 🔑2(10)

Where irrigation district, while acting in governmental capacity, spread chemical over district's lands, and some of chemicals drifted or were carried by air currents onto the land of the plaintiff thereby damaging his cotton crop, plaintiff could not recover from the irrigation district for damages on the ground that there was a taking and damaging of his property for "public use" without just compensation. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 14.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Public Use".

MUSSELL, Justice.

Appellant seeks to recover damages for injury to his cotton crop. His complaint contains two causes of action, in the first of which he alleges that on or about June 16 and 22, 1953, the defendant irrigation district, a political subdivision of the State of California, through its employees, sprayed with "2-4-D", or other chemical, or otherwise treated the lands of the Filaree drain and land adjacent thereto in Imperial county; that these chemicals drifted, spread or were carried by air currents onto the lands which plaintiff was farming under lease and killed and injured the cotton plants thereon, to his damage. The second cause of action contains substantially the same allegations as in the first, with the addition of allegations in general terms that there was negligence on the part of the defendant in the use of the chemicals.

It was stipulated by the parties that the Imperial Irrigation District was acting in its governmental capacity, that the question of sovereign immunity be argued first, and that the trial court render its decision on this question before proceeding with a determination of the other issues in the case. The court, after arguments of counsel, stated that judgment would have to be for the defendants on the pleadings and signed and entered a formal judgment of nonsuit. Plaintiff appeals and states that the sole issue in this case is whether the acts of the district resulting in damage to his crop constituted the taking or damaging of private property for public use without just compensation, under Article I, § 14, of the Constitution of the State of California. We conclude that the question must be answered in the negative and that the trial court correctly based its judgment on the decisions in McNeil v. City of Montague, 124 Cal.App.2d 326, 268 P.2d 497 and Miller v. City of Palo Alto, 208 Cal. 74, 280 P. 108, 109.

In the McNeil case the appellant sought to recover damages for property alleged to have been destroyed or damaged by fire which spread from one set by agents of the city while they were burning dry grass near the city hall for the purposes of fire suppression and weed control. It was appellant's contention there, as here, that the facts alleged showed a violation of section 14 of Article I of the state constitution providing that "Private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having first been made to, or paid into court for, the owner, * * *." The demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend and judgment for defendants was entered therein and affirmed on appeal.

In the Miller case, the employees of the defendant city had used a vacant lot near the property of the plaintiff for the burning of garbage and had carelessly permitted the fire to escape and damage the plaintiff's property. It was contended that this constituted the taking or damaging of private property for public use. The court there held that there was no merit in plaintiff's contention and that:

> "A public use is 'a use which concerns the whole community, as distinguished from a particular individual or a particular number of individuals; public usefulness, utility, or advantage, or what is productive of general benefit; a use by or for the government, the general public, or some portion of it.'"

We are of the opinion that appellant's contention herein is without merit for the same reasons as those stated in the two cases cited. These cases have been cited and approved in Bauer v. County of Ventura, 45 Cal.2d 276, 286, 289 P.2d 1. In that case the action was for damages to property resulting from overflow of water from a ditch constructed by the defendant county and a storm drain maintenance district, and the court reversed a judgment of dismissal as to the defendant county. The damage to plaintiff's property resulted from the raising of the ditch bank and the placing thereon of debris and a pipe which caused water to overflow on plaintiff's land. The court said that the raising of the ditch bank appeared to be a deliberate act carrying with it the purpose of fulfilling one or another of the public objects of the project as a whole and that the damage to plaintiff's property resulted not from immediate carelessness but from a failure to appreciate the probability that, functioning as deliberately conceived, the public improvement as altered and maintained did result in some damage to private property. The court further said, 45 Cal.2d at page 286, 289 P.2d at page 7:

> "Damage resulting from negligence in the routine operation having no relation to the function of the project as conceived is not within the scope of the rule applied in the present case. See Miller v. City of Palo Alto, 208 Cal. 74, 280 P. 108; McNeil v. City of Montague, 124 Cal.App.2d 326, 268 P. 2d 497; Western Assurance Co. v. Sacramento & San Joaquin Drainage Dist., 72 Cal.App. 68, 237 P. 59; Annotation 2 A.L.R.2d 677.
> "The plaintiffs, as stated, also allege that the collection of debris and stumps in the ditch raised an obstruction which caused the water to back up on their land. If this was due to the mere negligent operation of the ditch system, it is not within the scope of liability as a taking or damaging for a public use under section 14. If, on the other hand, the obstruction of the ditch was in some way part of the plan of maintenance or construction, then liability would attach because the means of carrying out the plan of construction and maintenance are immaterial." (Citing cases.)

In the instant case it appears that the damage to plaintiff's crop was the result of careless application of the chemical used to exterminate weeds on defendant's property and did not amount to taking of plaintiff's property for a public use. As is said in the Bauer case, 45 Cal.2d at page 284, 289 P.2d at page 6:

> "'Public use' within the meaning of section 14 is defined as a use which concerns the whole community or promotes the general interest in its relation to any legitimate object of government. Gilmer v. Lime Point, supra, 18 Cal. 229. To make a use public in character, a duty must fall on the person or corporation holding the property appropriated by eminent domain to furnish the public with the use intended and the public must be entitled to use or enjoy the property taken." (Citing cases.)

In Harris v. United States, 10 Cir., 205 F.2d 765, the United States Fish and Wildlife Service caused an area under its control to be sprayed with a chemical herbicide by airplane and some of the chemical drifted onto plaintiff's crops, causing damages. The court there said, at page 767:

> "And the adjudicated cases have steered a rather uneven course between a tortious act for which the sovereign is immune except insofar as it has expressly consented to be liable, and those acts amounting to an imposition of a servitude for which the constitution implies a promise to justly compensate. Generally it is held that a single destructive act without a deliberate intent to assert or acquire a proprietary interest or dominion is tortious and within the rule of immunity." (Citation.)

Appellant cites Tormey v. Anderson-Cottonwood Irr. Dist., 53 Cal.App. 559, 200 P. 814, for the proposition that an irrigation district may be held liable for damage to private property resulting from seepage from an irrigation ditch constructed by an irrigation district, and states that this is true whether the damage results with or without negligence on the part of the district. Citing Hume v. Fresno Irrigation District, 21 Cal.App.2d 348, 69 P.2d 483, and Ketcham v. Modesto Irrigation District, 135 Cal.App. 180, 26 P.2d 876. The Tormey case and the Ketcham case were both commented upon in McNeil v. City of Montague, supra, and the court there said, 124 Cal.App.2d at page 328, 268 P.2d at page 498:

> "In those cases the plaintiffs sought damages because the defendant irrigation districts were operating canals > in such a manner that seepage water was escaping and depriving the plaintiffs of the full use of their lands adjoining the canals. The lands used for the canals had admittedly been acquired and were being used for public purposes and the extension of the use through the seepage of water to the lands adjoining was also clearly for a public use and it was so held. It may be noted here also that upon a proper showing the lands covered by seepage water could have been condemned for the use of the districts."

In the Tormey case [53 Cal.App. 559, 200 P. 815] the action was brought to restrain the defendant from permitting seepage water from its canal to flow upon plaintiff's lands, to his damage, and it was alleged:

> " 'That said ditch or canal was negligently and carelessly constructed by defendant, and that because of such construction by defendant water has constantly escaped and seeped through the bottom and banks of said canal, and said defendant, ever since the use by it of said canal or ditch for conducting water has negligently, carelessly, and without right allowed said water to flow to and upon the said lands of plaintiffs.' "

In that case the seepage was a natural and necessary consequence in the construction of the canal and the defendant was properly restrained from permitting such seepage. The facts therein are quite different from those in the instant case. The damage to plaintiff's crops herein did not arise in any way from the construction of defendant's drains nor was it necessary that the defendant should cause the chemical to be deposited on plaintiff's land in the maintenance of said drains.

Since it was stipulated by the parties that the irrigation district was acting in its governmental capacity, we are not here concerned with the question of acts of an irrigation district performed in a proprietary capacity.

The judgment is affirmed.

M. Murray LAWTON and Lawton School for Medical Assistants, Inc., Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

BOARD OF MEDICAL EXAMINERS of the State of California, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 21414.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

July 18, 1956.

Hearing Denied Sept. 13, 1956.

Action against Board of Medical Examiners to prevent further criminal prosecutions of plaintiffs by Board for violation of statute prohibiting use of term or letters falsely indicating right to practice medicine. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Bayard Rhone, J., sustained general demurrer to complaint and entered judgment of dismissal, and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that the statute is a valid statute calculated to protect the public welfare, and, therefore, an injunction would not issue to prevent its enforcement.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Constitutional Law 🔑48, 70(1)

Enactment of measures for protection of society is the exclusive prerogative of the legislature, and courts are not to be concerned with such statutes unless it is made to appear that the litigant's constitutional right is clearly violated, and, if it does not so appear, the statute will be regarded as one intended by the lawmakers to promote the general good, and it is beyond scope of appellate review to penetrate legislative findings to determine that there did not exist conditions which would justify the enactment.

2. Constitutional Law 🔑48

The constitutionality of a statute must be upheld unless its nullity is clearly apparent and all presumptions and intendments are in favor of its validity.

3. Physicians and Surgeons 🔑6(1)

Person, who holds himself out to public as a licensed physician, and who purports to teach in California the science of medicine and art of its practice to students to enable them to pass California examinations, is liable under statute prohibiting use of term or letters falsely indicating right to practice, and the public is aggrieved by the representation of such person in manner forbidden by the statute. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 2142.

4. Physicians and Surgeons 🔑6(1)

Under statute prohibiting use of term or letters falsely indicating right to practice medicine, legislature intended every person engaged in professional activities properly to represent himself in his true capacity by appropriate title. West's Ann. Bus. & Prof.Code, § 2142.

5. Constitutional Law 🔑48

Statute, which is designed to protect the public good, must be upheld unless its nullity clearly, positively and unmistakably appears.

6. Constitutional Law 🔑48

Where doubt arises as to correct construction of a statute, such doubt must be resolved, if possible, in harmony with the constitution, and the statute cannot be held void for uncertainty if any reasonable and practical construction can be given to its language.

7. Constitutional Law 🔑70(3)

Wisdom of measures enacted for protection of the general public is for the legislature, not for the courts, unless a constitutional right is clearly violated by the statute.

8. Constitutional Law 🔑90
Physicians and Surgeons 🔑2

Statute, which prohibits use of term or letters falsely indicating a right to practice medicine, does not infringe upon freedom of speech and press of person who was graduate of school of medicine in another state but who was not a licensed physician in California. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 2142.

9. Physicians and Surgeons 🔑6(1)

Person's advertisement of himself as a "M.D." was equivalent of holding himself out as a practicing physician. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 2142.

10. Constitutional Law 🔑83(1)

Fact that obedience to law might be inconvenient or expensive is not a valid excuse for flouting a statute.

11. Statutes 🔑109.1

All that is required of a title of any act is that it be reasonably indicative of the legislation contained within the provisions of the statute, and it is not essential that an accurate title be employed so long as it is suggestive in any sense of the legislative purpose nor is it required that the title contain either a catalog or an abstract of the statute.

12. Statutes 🔑211

Title of act may be relied upon in ascertaining legislature's intention, but it cannot be used for purpose of restraining a positive provision of the statute.

13. Injunction 🔑85(1)

Except where the statute is unconstitutional or the officer of the law is acting illegally, injunction will not lie to prevent execution of a public statute for public benefit by officers of the law.

14. Statutes 🔑114(3)

Title, which related to the practice of medicine, was of sufficient clarity to attract attention of any medical graduate and was sufficient title for statute prohibiting use of terms or letters falsely indicating right to practice medicine.

West's Ann.Const. art. 4, § 24; West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 2142; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 526, subd. 4.

15. Injunction ⟹85(1)

Statute, which prohibits use of terms or letters falsely indicating right to practice medicine, is a valid statute calculated to protect the public welfare, and, therefore, an injunction would not issue to prevent its enforcement. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 2142.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Howard S. Goldin, W. B. Thayer, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

A general demurrer to the complaint for injunction having been sustained, judgment of dismissal was duly entered, The questions posed by the appeal are whether an instructor in a school for training dental and medical assistants may have "M.D." after his name wherever it appears on the doors of the school or on printed matter, although he is not a licensed physician in the State of California? Is the deprivation of his right thus to advertise his name actionable? Does such deprivation infringe upon his freedom of speech and press? Does section 2142 of Business and Professions Code[1] contravene section 24, Article IV of the State's Constitution?

M. Murray Lawton, appellant, is a graduate of an Ohio school of medicine. He practiced medicine in Ohio for a number of years prior to his founding the Lawton School for Medical Assistants in California. On October 23, 1952, the Board of Medical Examiners caused to be filed in Beverly Hills Municipal Court a complaint alleging violation of section 2142 by appellant by reason of his having used the letters "M.D." following his name in advertising matter put out by the "Lawton School" where medical and dental assistants were being instructed. He was found guilty and a fine was imposed. An affirmance of the judgment by the appellate department of the superior court was followed by this action for injunction against the Board of Medical Examiners to prevent further such criminal prosecutions by the Board. A judgment of dismissal having been entered, he now seeks a reversal.

[1] Contending that because he was not engaged in the practice of medicine section 2142 could not in reason apply to him, he argues that it is unconstitutional as to him inasmuch as it deprives him of a valuable property right, to wit, the right to the use of the letters "M.D." to indicate the area of his professional training. Conceding, arguendo, that appellant has a property right in the significant letters, yet it must be acknowledged that such right does not

"Every act shall embrace but one subject, which subject shall be expressed in its title."

Chapter 414 of the Statutes of 1937 was:

"An act to add Chapter 5, comprising sections 2000 to 2496, inclusive, to Division II and to add section 30003 to Division XXX of the Business and Professions Code, relating to the practice of medicine and surgery and other modes of treating the sick or afflicted and repealing acts and parts of acts specified herein."

This chapter 414 became effective in 1937 when the 52nd Legislature enacted the Business and Professions Code.

Section 2142, B & P Code as amended by Statutes of 1951: "Section 2142. Unauthorized use of word 'doctor,' etc., a misdemeanor. Any person, who uses in any sign, business card, letterhead or in an advertisement the word 'doctor', the letters or prefix 'Dr.', the letters 'M.D.', or any other term or letters indicating or implying that he is a physician and surgeon, physician, surgeon or practitioner under the terms of this or any other law, or that he is entitled to practice hereunder, or under any other law, without having at the time of so doing a valid, unrevoked certificate as provided in this chapter, is guilty of a misdemeanor."

take precedence over the public welfare which the section seeks to conserve. It is plainly apparent that the Legislature may well have deemed it wise that those who instruct in the science of medicine should be forced to disclose their educational backgrounds and that they should not be allowed to mislead students into thinking their instructors are licensed to practice medicine in California. If in fact the teachers have had excellent medical training, there is nothing in the law that prevents them from indicating such fact. Medical schools do not uphold equally the same high standards, nor does California maintain reciprocity in the medical field with all other states. The student and the public are entitled to know the qualifications of those who indirectly or directly affect the public welfare as does the medical profession. Neither graduation from a reputable institution nor want of sufficient education will excuse the necessity of being certified before a person may advertise his right to adorn his name with Dr. or M.D. Such letters are false insignia when a physician attempts to tell the world he is licensed when in fact he is not. Whether or not they actually practice here is immaterial. The intent of the Legislature was to shield the public against those who for any reason have not been duly licensed. A similar situation was involved in Garfield v. Board of Medical Examiners, 99 Cal.App.2d 219, 223, 221 P.2d 705. There the doctors in question had each been licensed to practice medicine in another state. Question arose as to whether they were mere interns or residents, but the court ruled their exact status was immaterial. So long as they did not possess current, valid licenses, they were not entitled to use the letters "M.D." Appellant herein attempts to distinguish this case by contending that those convicted in the Garfield case were "practicing" medicine whereas he, appellant, had made no attempt to do so. The purpose of section 2142, supra, is to protect the public; it is not primarily concerned with what the doctor does with his time. There is no contention on the part of the State that Lawton was practicing medicine. His offense lay in holding himself out as a physician in this state although he does not possess a valid license to do so. The enactment of measures for the protection of society is the exclusive prerogative of the legislature. Courts are not to be concerned with such statutes unless it is made to appear that the litigant's constitutional right is clearly violated. If it does not so appear, the statute will be regarded as one intended by the lawmakers to promote the general good. It is beyond the scope of appellate review to penetrate the findings of the legislature to determine that there did not exist such conditions as would justify the enactment. People v. George, 42 Cal.App.2d 568, 573, 109 P.2d 404.

[2–7] Appellant contends that the so-called invasion of his rights cannot be justified under the police power of the State. The constitutionality of a statute must be upheld unless its nullity is clearly apparent, Bernstein v. Bush, 29 Cal.2d 773, 778, 177 P.2d 913 and all presumptions and intendments are in favor of its validity. Ray v. Parker, 15 Cal.2d 275, 280, 101 P.2d 665. Appellant contends that section 2142 has no relation to the public health or safety as applied to him, and is for that reason unconstitutional. The purpose of the section is defined above. A person in California who holds himself out to the public as a licensed physician and purports to teach here the science of medicine and the art of its practice to students to enable them to pass California examinations is clearly liable under section 2142 and the public is aggrieved by his representing himself in the manner forbidden by the statute. The legislature intended every person engaged in professional activities properly to represent himself in his true capacity by appropriate title. Berry v. Alderson, 59 Cal.App. 729, 732, 211 P. 836, 838. "This simple requirement, so easily complied with, was not aimed particularly at the person who was willing to incur the odium of actual fraud, but was designed to offer a much wider protection to the public by assuring to it a reasonable certainty of knowing in every case precisely with whom it was dealing". (Ibid.) A statute designed to protect the public good must be upheld unless its nullity clearly, positively and unmistakably appears. People v. Darby, 114 Cal.App.2d 412, 428, 250 P.2d 743; Denny v. Watson, 114 Cal.App.2d 491, 495, 250 P.2d 692. Where doubt arises as to the correct construction of a statute, such doubt must be resolved if possible in harmony with the constitution and it cannot be held void for uncertainty if any reasonable and practical construction can be given to its language. Lockheed Aircraft Corporation v. Superior Court, 28 Cal.2d 481, 484, 171 P.2d 21, 166 A.L.R. 701. The wisdom of measures enacted for the protection of the general public is for the legislature and not for the courts unless a constitutional right is clearly violated by the statute. Werner v. Southern California Associated Newspapers, 35 Cal.2d 121, 129, 216 P.2d 825, 13 A.L.R.2d 252; People v. George, 42 Cal.App.2d 568, 573, 109 P.2d 404.

[8] Appellant contends that section 2142, supra, infringes upon his freedom of speech and press. Such contention is effectively answered by Lewis Food Company v. State of California, 110 Cal.App.2d 759, 762, 243 P.2d 802, 804. "To conserve and protect the health of its citizens is a paramount duty of the state, and a fair and reasonable exercise of the sovereign power. * * * it is true that in its legitimate exercise the police power at times works damage to property and even injustice to individuals. Indeed, in its exercise property may in some instances be utterly destroyed. Always the question in every case is whether the statute is within or without the legitimate purview and scope of the power. Is it reasonable? Does it have 'a substantial relation to a legitimate object to be accomplished'?" See Dribin v. Superior Court, 37 Cal.2d 345, 351, 231 P.2d 809, 24 A.L.R.2d 864.

[9, 10] In re Porterfield, 28 Cal.2d 91, 168 P.2d 706, 167 A.L.R. 675, is not in point. It involved an ordinance forbidding solicitation for compensation of memberships in a labor organization. The court there stated that such solicitation may incidentally involve some discussion of questions of a social or economic nature not ordinarily involved in the conduct of other professions. Such activities are a far cry from the facts at bar. Here appellant advertised himself as an M.D., the equivalent of holding himself out as a practicing physician. If he should be permitted to ignore the statute because he thinks his situation is exceptional, every other violator would render his excuse and soon the courts would be engrossed in hearing both honest men and dishonest men explaining why they have violated the law. There is no provision in any constitution that suggests the unrestricted privilege of conducting one's business as he pleases to the detriment of the public welfare or of what the legislature deemed the general good. Because obedience to the law might be inconvenient or expensive is not a valid excuse for flouting a statute. In re Maki, 56 Cal.App.2d 635, 643, 133 P.2d 64.

Appellant contends that the section is violative of section 24 of Article IV of the Constitution in that its provisions are not germane and cognate to the subject to which the act applies. Section 24 reads in part: "Every act shall embrace but one subject, which subject shall be expressed in its title." Appellant contends that the title to chapter 414, Statutes of 1937, (see footnote, supra) does not indicate an inhibition of the type of advertising done by appellant. But the title does relate to the "practice of medicine" with sufficient clarity to attract the notice of any medical graduate. Moreover, since the first Act, Stats. 1907, ch. 212, p. 257, relating to the practice of medicine, the Acts pertaining to the healing arts have been codified and every section whose contents concern any activity of the physician has been so indexed that a person interested can more readily ascertain the provision that concerns him than one could have done by reading the titles of acts as formerly published and with more assurance of success. The code section here involved is simple and its key words clearly indicate the contents of what follows. As to the title of the Act of 1937, it cannot be accused of being a model for suggesting to a person the vice of annexing "M.D." or "Dr." to his name for publicity purposes, unless he shall first be licensed as a practitioner. But by use of the indices to the Business and Professions Code, he will turn to the very sections that concern him.

[11, 12] The strict and narrow interpretation given by appellant to the title of the Act of 1937 is not justified. All that is required of a title of any act is that it be reasonably indicative of the legislation contained within the provisions of the statute; it is not essential that an accurate title be employed so long as it is suggestive in any sense of the legislative purpose. It is not required to contain either a catalog or an abstract of the statute. Where the title suggests simply the field of legislation included in the text, it will be held sufficient. People v. Jordan, 172 Cal. 391, 394, 156 P. 451; Matter of Lake, 89 Cal.App. 390, 394, 265 P. 325. The title of an act may be relied upon in ascertaining the intention of the Legislature, but it cannot be used for the purpose of restraining a positive provision of the statute. Heron v. Riley, 209 Cal. 507, 510, 289 P. 160.

[13–15] Furthermore, in California an injunction will not lie to prevent the execution of a public statute by officers of the law for public benefit. Code Civ.Proc. § 526, subd. 4; Downing v. California State Board of Pharmacy, 85 Cal.App.2d 30, 36, 192 P.2d 39; Skinner v. Coy, 13 Cal.2d 407, 424, 90 P.2d 296. The only exceptions to this rule are where the statute itself is unconstitutional or where the officer of the law is acting illegally. Such is not the case here. Inasmuch as section 2142 is a valid statute and is calculated to protect the public welfare, an injunction may not issue to prevent its enforcement

143 Cal.App.2d 277

Anita H. ASCHERMAN, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Ernest M. McKEE, Jr., Patricia Ann McKee, and Stoll Lumber Company, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 8769.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

July 18, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 13, 1956.

Hearing Denied Sept. 13, 1956.

Action for declaratory relief. The Superior Court, Mendocino County Hale McCowen, J., rendered a judgment from which the plaintiff landowner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that the trial court's action in declaring that the landowner's attempt to cancel a contract with defendant timber buyers was void even though the timber buyers had breached certain covenants was, in effect, a relieving from a forfeiture provision in the contract, and that accordingly the trial court had erred in failing to assess damages for such breaches and in failing to require payment of such damages as a condition of relief from forfeiture.

Affirmed in part; reversed in part and cause remanded with instructions.

1. Assignments ⚷31

As properly construed, contract between timber buyer and lumber company which removed the timber amounted to resale of the timber and did not constitute assignment of contract between seller and the buyer, and there was no breach of the covenant, in contract between seller and buyer, against assignment without seller's consent.

2. Assignments ⚷137

In action for declaratory judgment, evidence sustained trial court's finding that timber buyers did not breach their covenant not to assign timber contract or their rights thereunder without consent of landowner.

3. Logs and Logging ⚷3(5)

Where landowner's attempted cancellation of timber buyers' rights under contract with the landowner bore no reasonable relation to injuries landowner had received from timber buyers' breach of covenants and would have worked extremely heavy loss on the buyers, relief from forfeiture could be granted. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3275.

4. Logs and Logging ⚷3(5)

By bringing action for declaratory relief after claiming she had terminated contract and cancelled out rights of timber buyers therein, landowner was seeking aid of court to enforce forfeiture she had declared, and trial court properly refused to enforce the forfeiture. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 3369.

5. Declaratory Judgment ⚷388

In landowner's action for declaratory judgment, wherein defendant timber buyers asked that damages be ascertained with respect to any breach by them of covenants in their timber contract with landowner, trial court's action in declaring that landowner's attempt to cancel contract was void even though timber buyers had breached certain covenants was, in effect, a relieving from forfeiture provision in contract, and court erred in failing to assess damages for breach and in failing to require payment of such damages as condition of relief from forfeiture. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3275.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff brought this action for declaratory relief, and she appeals from the judgment rendered.

In August of 1951 plaintiff entered into a contract with Ernest M. McKee, Jr. and Patricia Ann McKee, his wife, for the purchase and sale of the right to cut and remove, on or before July 31, 1956, all fir and pine timber 20 inches and larger in diameter standing on certain described real property owned by plaintiff. The contract price was $20,000, payable $5,000 on execution of the agreement and the balance at the rate of $5 per thousand for timber removed with minimum annual payments of $5,000 until the total price should have been paid. It was provided that all timber which had not been removed from the property by July 31, 1956, should remain the property of Mrs. Ascherman. As additional consideration, the McKees agreed to widen and improve an existing road on the property. They were given the right to construct access roads to be laid out entirely in the timber. There were covenants against cutting timber within 50 feet of any spring without written permission, for indemnifying Mrs. Ascherman against claims for injury or death of any person, for damage to property which might result from the McKees' operations, and for keeping insurance in force protecting Mrs. Ascherman from such liabilities. Mrs. Ascherman agreed that if she decided to sell small trees for piling, or if she purchased adjacent standing timber, she would give the McKees the first right to purchase from her. There was a covenant against the assignment of the contract or the assignment of any right to remove timber thereunder without Mrs. Ascherman's written consent. It was provided that on breach of any covenant by the McKees, Mrs. Ascherman could, at her option, terminate the contract.

The McKees began logging the land and continued to do so for about two weeks, at which time they entered into a contract with defendant Stoll Lumber Company, a copartnership, hereinafter called Stoll, wherein the copartnership agreed to buy from the McKees the right until July 31, 1956, to cut and remove from the land all fir and pine timber thereon 20 inches or larger in diameter. This contract followed closely, but not exactly, the pattern of the Ascherman-McKee contract, but the purchase price differed materially. Stoll agreed to pay the McKees $7 per thousand for "all pine sawlog timber", $5 per thousand for all "fir sawlog timber" and $1 per thousand for all fir and pine timber unsuitable for sawlogs and designated as "pulp" logs. The price was payable $10,000 on execution of the agreement, and thereafter logs were to be paid for at the agreed rate per thousand as they were removed from the land. The total purchase price was to be determined by a cruise of the timber stipulated to be "a hundred percent cruise for timber which can be economically removed", and a price was then to be determined by multiplying "the timber shown by the cruise times the amount shown as the purchase price per thousand feet".

Stoll went upon the land and proceeded to log. Roads were improved and constructed, and there appears to have arisen throughout no dispute between the McKees and Stoll concerning the performance by Stoll of its agreement with the McKees. The McKees continued to account to Ascherman for timber removed in accordance with the requirements of their contract and continued to make payments based on such accounts, with the result that by July 10, 1952, the total purchase price of $20,000 had been paid to Mrs. Ascherman. Mrs. Ascherman, however, did make complaints that in various particulars the McKees were failing to keep their covenants; and, finally, on September 11, 1952, after receiving the last of the purchase price, she wrote to the McKees declaring the contract terminated. She charged that the insurance provisions of the contract had not been met; that the existing road on the property had not been improved as agreed; that timber had been cut nearer than 50 feet from a spring; that roads had been located through open land; and that the contract had been assigned. She forbade further removal of timber and asserted that she would hold the McKees liable in damages if they did so.

The McKees continued to assert their right to cut and remove timber and Stoll continued to log the land. On October 7, 1952, Mrs. Ascherman began this action. In her pleading she charged the same violations of contractual covenants that she asserted in her written notice. She further alleged the McKees claimed they were entitled to continue to remove timber from the land notwithstanding the termination of the contract and that Stoll, whom she made a codefendant with the McKees, claimed some right to cut and remove timber. She alleged that an actual controversy had arisen concerning the rights of the parties under the contract, and she prayed for declaratory relief with incidental award of damages and for injunction restraining further entry on her land. The McKees and Stoll answered, admitting that there was a controversy, but denying that the McKees had breached the contract. They asked that if it should be determined, however, that in any respect such breaches had occurred, the McKees be relieved from forfeiture of the contract on account thereof, and that in lieu of forfeiture damages for such breaches as were ascertained to have occurred be fixed "in accordance with the provisions contained in Section 3275 of the Civil Code".

The court made the following findings: That the McKees had not breached their agreement as to improving the existing road; that they had cut some trees within 50 feet of a spring without consent, but that Mrs. Ascherman had thereby suffered only nominal damage; that the McKees had located some roads across open land, and that this breach of their covenant had caused damage to Mrs. Ascherman for which she should be compensated; that the contract and the rights accruing to the McKees thereunder had not been assigned to Stoll; that the covenants as to insurance had been partially but not wholly kept, but that Mrs. Ascherman had suffered no injury thereby; that none of the covenant violations taken singly nor all taken together gave to Mrs. Ascherman any right to terminate the rights and interest of the McKees, and that Mrs. Ascherman's attempt to do so had been void and without effect. The court found that the McKees were the owners of and entitled to the continued enjoyment of the benefits accruing to them under their contract. It made no ascertainment or award of damages, but preserved the rights of Mrs. Ascherman to recover them. The court made no express decision concerning the rights of Stoll.

Although by the specific wording of the contract, the subject of the sale is described as being the right to cut and remove timber, meeting a certain specification over a period from the date of the contract to July 31, 1956, it is apparent from the contract that the principal object of the parties was to make a sale of all of the trees upon the land described which met certain specifications and to give the incidental right to the buyer for a limited time to enter upon the land and remove those trees. The following matters appearing in the contract make this clear. The parties agreed upon a total price of $20,000 for all trees growing upon the described land which were 20 inches or more in diameter and set up a schedule of minimum annual payments whereunder the whole would be paid in three years even though not a tree was cut. The parties contemplated, however, that logging would begin immediately as is shown by the clause in the contract requiring the buyers to account each month for timber cut during the preceding month. Acting under the contract the buyers immediately began logging, and the logging continued without letup until, shortly before the first year had elapsed, the full purchase price had been paid. Throughout the contract the parties referred to the total purchase price of $20,000 even to providing that the total payments to be made under the accounting schedule adopted should not exceed that sum. It was agreed that if there should be any violation of any of the covenants entered into by the McKees with respect to the manner of removing the trees Mrs. Ascherman could, at her option, declare the entire remaining sales price, together with damages for the breach, due and payable forthwith. In 7 A.L.R.2d at page 517, is an annotation to the reported case of Rankin v. Ridge, 53 N.M. 33, 201 P.2d 359, 363, wherein it is said that, while there is no unanimity of opinion upon the subject, nevertheless the majority rule is that where it is apparent from the contract that the prime object is the severance of the trees within a reasonable time or within such time as may be fixed, rather than the use of the land to increase the growth of timber, the sale is one of goods and not of an interest in real property. In Rankin v. Ridge, supra, quoting from Tiffany on Real Property, Section 595, the court said:

> "'Any growth of the soil, even though not produced by annual labor, is personalty after its actual severance from the soil by the owner of the land, as in the case of timber cut by him. Furthermore, by the weight of authority, there may be constructive or legal severance of vegetable products while still growing or standing in the soil. Thus, it has been decided that, upon a conveyance by the landowner of growing trees apart from the land, they become personalty, and the same effect has been given to an exception of the trees on a conveyance of the land.'"

In Palmer v. Wahler, 133 Cal.App.2d 705, 711, 285 P.2d 8, 12, this court said:

> "* * * In California, under the provisions of Civil Code, sections 658 and 660, standing timber purchased separately from the land under a contract for severance, thereby becomes personalty for all purposes depending upon the contract of purchase. As pointed out by both parties in their briefs, the legal status of standing timber is not uniform throughout the several states, and in California there are no decisions directly upon the point involved here. However, the language of Civil Code, sections 658 and 660, is in our opinion quite clear and explicit, and regardless of what the rule is elsewhere, we are satisfied that as to those claiming under or by reason of a contract of sale, the California rule is that where standing timber is purchased separately from the land for the purpose of severance, it must thereafter be considered as

'goods' or personal property. See also Davis v. MacFarlane, 37 Cal. 634 [99 Am.Dec. 340]."

When the contract is viewed as one for the sale of the timber, the covenants therein on the part of the buyers are seen to be covenants which govern only the manner in which the buyers were to remove the timber they had purchased. The covenants found by the court to have been breached, such as those having to do with insurance, with the method of constructing access roads and the covenant against cutting timber near springs, were intended for the protection of the seller, and the option given to terminate the contract for breach was to force the buyers to keep those covenants.

[1, 2] The trial court found that the McKees had not violated the covenant against assignment, and in this we think the trial court was correct. The McKee-Stoll contract did not purport to be an assignment of the Ascherman-McKee contract nor of any rights thereunder. On the contrary, it purported to be a contract for the sale of the timber which the McKees were in process of paying for, with the right, so far as the McKees could give it to Stoll, to remove the timber. Although the same covenants governing the method of removal and the insuring of the McKees against claims arising from Stoll's operation were contained in the McKee-Stoll contract as were contained in the Ascherman-McKee contract, that fact did not make the contract one of assignment. There was nothing in the Ascherman-McKee contract which forbade the McKees from selling the timber they were purchasing from Ascherman. Nor was there anything to forbid the McKees from having the land logged by others for them in order to get the timber they were buying. It was not stipulated that the McKees should personally log the area. What happened, therefore, when the McKee-Stoll contract was executed was this: The McKees resold the timber to Stoll, and, as a part of the agreement, Stoll was to remove the timber, obeying in all matters, however, the restrictions which the Ascherman-McKee contract placed upon the McKees. This was a resale and not an assignment. Furthermore, while similar in many of its terms, the McKee-Stoll contract did not cover the full subject matter of the Ascherman-McKee contract. It omitted the right of the McKees under the latter contract to continue to use the access roads to reach timber on lands not owned by the Aschermans, but adjacent thereto, and this for a term of two years beyond the time within which they had the right to remove the Ascherman timber. Also omitted was the first right to purchase given the McKees by Mrs. Ascherman if she should proceed to sell the sub-standard trees on her land for poles and piling, and the first right to purchase if she should obtain adjacent timber and proceed to sell the same. We hold that the record supports the trial court's finding that there was no violating by the McKees of their covenant not to assign the Ascherman-McKee contract or their rights thereunder. They remained fully liable to Ascherman for the violation of any covenants of their contract with her, and there was not attempt to substitute another in their place in this respect.

The contract provided that the McKees would hold Mrs. Ascherman harmless from loss on account of any claims or causes of action for injury to person or property which might result from the McKees' operations on the land; and they further agreed to keep in force during the term of the agreement, insurance protecting Mrs. Ascherman against such liability in an amount of not less than $200,000. The court found that this covenant to furnish insurance was not strictly observed. However, it was partially observed, and substantial insurance was at all times kept in force protecting Mrs. Ascherman. As covering the first year of their proposed operations the McKees had insurance issued protecting them and Mrs. Ascherman as an additional insured against liabilities for injury or death to persons in the amounts of $100,000 for one person and $300,000 for persons injured in one accident, for property damage to the property of any person in the sum of $5,000 and for property damage arising from any one accident in the sum of $25,000. The McKees caused a certificate of this insurance to be issued to Mrs. Ascherman and delivered to her. Though the insurance did not meet the contract requirements with exactness, nevertheless Mrs. Ascherman made no protest as to the variance and continued to receive the payments for the timber until the whole price had been paid. Thereafter, other insurance in varying amounts was procured, and, generally, Mrs. Ascherman was named as an additional assured. The court held that the failure to comply strictly with the contract requirements as to insurance were insubstantial, had caused no damage, and by reason of her failure to make timely objections Mrs. Ascherman was not entitled to claim a breach of the insurance covenant.

As to the claim that timber had been cut within 50 feet of springs without permission, the court found that some trees had been cut nearer to one spring than 50 feet and that Mrs. Ascherman could be compensated in damages for such violation of the covenants as to removal of timber, saying that the breach was not substantial. The court found that the covenants as to the location of access roads in timber rather than across open land had been violated and that damage had been caused to the real property thereby. It found that the injury could be and should be compensated in damages, but it made no ascertainment of the amount of damages to be paid to Mrs. Ascherman.

[3] Defendants had asked that, pursuant to Section 3275 of the Civil Code, they be relieved of any forfeiture if covenant violations were found to have occurred. The trial court found that it was proper to so relieve them, and declared that the action of Mrs. Ascherman in attempting to terminate the contracts and the rights of the McKees to enter upon the land and remove timber had been ineffectual; that the McKees were still the owners of the rights which had accrued to them under the contract, including the right to go upon the land during the specified term and remove the timber they had bought and paid for. We think this action was well within the power of the court. The Ascherman-McKee contract provided that upon breach by the McKees of any covenant contained therein, Mrs. Ascherman should have all remedies provided by law and could, at her option, declare the contract terminated. Within about two months after she had received the full payment for the timber, Mrs. Ascherman notified the McKees of claimed violations of covenants. She stated she had elected to terminate the contract and stated she would hold them liable for any further entry upon her land and for any trees thereafter removed. That this termination, if successful, would result in a forfeiture is sufficiently shown by what has heretofore been said. The contract provision under which she acted was a typical forfeiture provision. The action could be taken for any breach of any covenant, however insubstantial, even though it could result in severe loss to the buyers. As found by the trial court, the cancellation of the McKees' rights which Mrs. Ascherman attempted bore no reasonable relation to the injuries she had received and would have worked an extremely heavy loss on them. Under such circumstances, relief from forfeiture can be granted. As said by the Supreme Court in Ebbert v. Mercantile Trust Company of California, 213 Cal. 496, 499–500, 2 P.2d 776, 777:

> "* * * This section [sec. 3275, Civ.Code] codifies the equitable rule, * * *: 'Wherever a penalty or a forfeiture is used merely to secure the payment of a debt, or the performance of some act or the enjoyment of some right or benefit, equity, considering the payment, or performance, or enjoyment to be the real thing intended by the agreement, and the penalty or forfeiture to be only an accessory, will relieve against such penalty or forfeiture by awarding compensation instead thereof, proportionate to the damages actually resulting from the non-payment, or non-performance, or non-enjoyment, according to the stipulations of the agreement." See also Bolln v. Petrocchi, 95 Cal. App.2d 589, 213 P.2d 513; Bedell v. Barber, 80 Cal.App.2d 806, 182 P.2d 591; Gonzalez v. Hirose, 33 Cal.2d 213, 200 P.2d 793.

[4] The remedy of relief from forfeiture could also, in this case, have been granted under Section 3369 of the Civil Code which provides that neither specific nor preventive relief can be granted to enforce a forfeiture in any case. By bringing her action for declaratory relief after she claimed she had terminated the contract and cancelled out the rights of the McKees, Mrs. Ascherman was seeking the aid of a court to enforce the forfeiture she had declared. The action of the trial court in refusing to enforce the forfeiture and/or in relieving therefrom is well sustained by the record here.

[5] Appellant contends that, even if the action of the trial court in granting relief from forfeiture be upheld, still the cause must be returned to the trial court to ascertain the compensatory damages to which she is entitled in lieu of her right to terminate. Treating the action as an ordinary one either to obtain relief from or to enforce a forfeiture under the respective code sections, this contention must be upheld. The obligation to pay compensatory damages caused by a breach of contract which has resulted in the accrual of a forfeiture is a condition for the granting of the relief sought and, equally, denial of enforcement of a forfeiture accrued from breach of covenant will not be declared except upon condition that compensatory damage for breach be first ascertained and paid as a condition for such denial. That relief from forfeiture will be granted only upon condition that the one relieved make full compensation to the other party for such damage as his failure to perform his covenants may have caused, is expressly stated in Section 3275 of the Civil Code; and is universally required as a condition for denying enforcement of a forfeiture at the suit of the creditor. Ebbert v. Mercantile Trust Company of California, 213 Cal. 496, 2 P.2d 776; Odd Fellows' Savings Bank v. Brander, 124 Cal. 255, 56 P. 1109. Is the rule any the less applicable because the action is brought in the form of one for declaratory relief? We think not. When, in an action for a declaratory judgment, the court proceeds beyond a declaration of existing jural relations, and grants remedies obtainable in ordinary actions, it follows the rules of law generally governing the granting of such remedies. Here the court in effect granted the remedy of relief from forfeiture. It reinstated the Ascherman-McKee contract and adjudged the attempt to terminate to have been void. The relief it gave the McKees could have been granted them in an ordinary action brought by them for that purpose. But in such an action the court would have ascertained the damage they had inflicted upon Mrs. Ascherman and would have required compensation to be paid as a condition for relief. It was error to grant that relief unconditionally. The form in which the action was brought wrought no change in the requirements for the relief granted.

The court did not expressly declare what were the rights of Stoll, but by implication it disposed of all issues pertaining thereto. Appellant contends she is entitled to such a declaration. We do not find substantial error here. Stoll has the right, so long as the McKees' right to remove timber endures, to log the land, while obeying in all things the requirements of the Ascherman-McKee contract as to the methods by which the logging should be accomplished. Under their contract of purchase the McKees could, as they did, resell the timber to Stoll. Stoll could, under and in accordance with the right of the McKees, go upon the land and obtain that which they were buying. These matters go along with the reinstatement of the Ascherman-McKee contract. No express declaration of the rights of Stoll was necessary.

What we have said does not require such a reversal of the judgment as will set the matter at large.

That portion of the judgment declaring the rights of the parties is affirmed; that portion of the judgment granting relief from forfeiture is reversed, only, however, because such relief was not properly conditioned and not because such relief should not have been granted. The cause, therefore, is remanded with instructions to the trial court to proceed to ascertain the amount of damages suffered by Mrs. Ascherman from the violation of covenants found to have occurred and, having fixed the same, to enter judgment relieving the McKees from forfeiture of their rights on condition that within such time as the court deems reasonable they pay the damages so fixed, and in the alternative, if the damages be not so paid, to declare and enforce the forfeiture inflicted by Mrs. Ascherman for breach of covenants, together with such further relief as is proper in the premises.

Alexander L. GREITZ, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Dmitri Y. SIVACHENKO, also known as Dmitry J. Sivachenko, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 16784.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

July 16, 1956.

Action by employee against employer for injuries sustained in course of employment. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Preston Devine, J., entered judgment for employee, and employer appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, J., held that medical evidence was sufficient to connect employee's injuries with the accident described by employee.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Master and Servant 🔑276(2)

In action by employee against employer for injuries sustained in course of employment, medical evidence was sufficient to connect employee's injuries with the accident described by employee.

2. Appeal and Error 🔑1069(3)

Where, in personal injury action, jury was called back to courtroom to hear instruction which trial judge had intended to give but which he had omitted, defendant was not prejudiced by the subsequent giving of the omitted instruction, in view of fact that trial judge, before and after giving such instruction, stated that the giving of instruction was not meant to emphasize anything and that jurors were not to speculate that because instruction was given at such time they were to give plaintiff damages.

3. Evidence 🔑470, 570

Expert's opinion may be received in evidence, and jury may weigh reasons given for the opinion, but are not bound by the opinion, and may give opinion whatever weight they decide it merits.

4. Trial 🔑253(8)

Fact that instruction, which pertained to opinion of expert witness and weight to be given it by jury, did not point out to jury that doctor, who testified as expert witness, saw plaintiff for first time several days after the accident had occurred did not cause the instruction to be improper or make giving of it improper, since question raised was one concerning weight of the evidence.

5. Master and Servant 🔑265(2, 3)

In action by employee against employer for injuries received in course of employment, presumption was that employer was negligent and that such negligence proximately caused employee's injury. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 3708.

6. Master and Servant ⚿265(2, 3)

If, in action by employee against employer for injuries received in course of employment, there is no evidence offered at all except fact of accident, jury would have duty to bring in verdict for employee after finding of how much his damage is worth, but employer would have right of producing evidence which might controvert or overcome presumption that employer was negligent and that such negligence proximately caused employee's injury, and employer would have the burden of proof. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 3708; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1981.

7. Appeal and Error ⚿216(1)

In personal injury action, defendant would not be heard to complain of failure to give instruction on self-inflicted injury or wilful injury to self or property in absence of showing that such instruction was offered and refused.

8. Workmen's Compensation ⚿2110

In action by employee against employer, who was wilfully uninsured, for personal injuries sustained in course of employment, contributory negligence, assumption of risk, or injury caused by negligence of fellow servant was not a defense. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 3708.

9. Trial ⚿388(2)

Where action by employee against employer for injuries sustained in course of employment was tried before a jury, employer would not be heard to assert that it was necessary to make findings. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 632.

10. Appeal and Error ⚿901

Burden was on appellant to point out to the District Court of Appeal errors upon which appellant relied for a reversal, and the court was not bound to make an independent search of the record to determine if error had been committed.

Horace S. King, San Francisco, for appellant.

Alexander Riaboff, San Francisco, for respondent.

KAUFMAN, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff while employed by defendant, the appellant herein. The jury rendered a verdict for damages in the sum of $9,500. Thereafter the court made an alternative order granting a new trial for insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict unless plaintiff filed his consent to remission of said verdict in excess of $7,500. This consent was filed on March 14, 1955.

Respondent Alexander Greitz, a carpenter and painter, was employed by appellant Dmitri Sivachenko, to do certain repair work on an apartment building owned by appellant. He was engaged in repairing the back stairway between the second and third floors, when the stairs collapsed under the weight of a woman, Mrs. Meyer, the apartment house manager, who was attempting to ascend the third flight of stairs. Respondent sustained injuries to his back and ribs when the stairs fell upon him. Respondent helped her up. He then boarded up the gap in the stairs and went to see Mrs. Meyer. Both Mrs. Meyer and respondent had scratches and bruises, but did not immediately feel that they had been seriously injured. Later, it was discovered that each of them had two broken ribs.

Respondent was seen by his family doctor on the day of the accident who bandaged him and gave him some medicine. He stayed in bed for several days because of the pain in his chest and on October 5, 1953, was taken to St. Joseph's Hospital where he was x-rayed, and it was learned that the fifth and sixth ribs were broken. Dr. Haldeman, an orthopedist, prescribed a back brace for the severe back pain which respondent was suffering. Because his condition did not improve, he was hospitalized again in November, 1954, and treated with traction. Further examination by Dr. Haldeman in December revealed that respondent was suffering from a low back pain that was either the effect of the back strain occurring at the time of the accident, or a protrusion of the invertebral disc in the lower back. An accident such as that suffered by respondent could, according to the doctor, also have caused the gradual protrusion of the disc. This condition could be at least partially relieved by surgery. Recovery would probably not be complete in a patient of respondent's age, and if such surgery were done, it was the doctor's opinion that respondent would not be able to return to his former type of work.

The present action was brought under the provisions of section 3706 of the Labor Code. The complaint alleged that appellant had failed to secure the payment of compensation to employees by either method prescribed by section 3700, Labor Code. The Industrial Accident Commission award relating to the accident here involved was introduced in evidence as plaintiff's Exhibit No. 2. The Industrial Accident Commission had found that respondent was an employee of appellant at the time of the accident, that respondent was injured in said accident, and that appellant was wilfully uninsured.

[1] Although appellant's first contention on appeal is not clear, it appears that he is arguing that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment. He attacks the medical evidence on the ground that Dr. Woeltz, the family physician, who treated respondent immediately after the accident, was not called to testify. The record shows, however, that a few days after the accident respondent entered the hospital where x-rays were taken, which were discussed by Dr. Haldeman in his testimony. This doctor also testified to the history of the injury as related to him by respondent. The medical evidence therefore is sufficient to connect respondent's injuries with the accident which he described.

Appellant's theory at the trial and on appeal was and is that there was only one accident on the stairs, that this accident happened to the witness, Mrs. Meyer, and that respondent faked his injury. Suffice it to say, that respondent's own testimony is sufficient to support a finding that he was injured in the manner testified to by him. Since Mrs. Meyer was seriously injured in the same accident, it is not suprising that she might fail to notice what was happening to respondent at the same time. The fact that she recalls having seen him standing both before and after her accident, does not make his testimony inherently improbable.

[2] Appellant contends that error was committed in emphasizing an instruction on damages. The jury retired from the courtroom at 2:45 p.m. on January 12, 1955, to begin their deliberations. At 2:50 p.m. they were called back to the courtroom because the trial judge had left out one instruction on damages which he had intended giving. It related to reimbursement for medical and hospital expenses in the event of a verdict for plaintiff. The trial judge before giving the instruction stated that "the fact that I give it now is not meant to emphasize anything, but it should have been in its proper place." And again after giving the instruction he admonished the jurors that "you are not to speculate because I gave it to you at this later time that you are to give the plaintiff damages just because I brought this to your attention." Clearly, there is no merit in the claim that appellant was in any way prejudiced by the giving of this omitted instruction a few minutes after the jury had retired.

[3, 4] It is urged that the trial court gave unmerited weight to the testimony of Doctor Haldeman. The instruction referred to by appellant is a correct instruction explaining that an opinoin of an expert witness may be received in evidence, that the jury may weigh the reasons given for the opinion, that they are not bound by it, but may give it whatever weight they decide it merits. Appellant does not criticize the content of the instruction but complains that the court failed to point out to the jury that this doctor saw respondent for the first time several days after the accident occurred. This argument is concerned with the weight of the evidence and has nothing to do with the correctness of the instruction of the propriety of giving it in this case.

[5] Appellant maintains that the trial court erred in stating "but it is presumed here that the employer was negligent and that proximately caused injury to plaintiff," placing on defendant the burden of proving that the accident did not happen. The trial court was at this point explaining to the jury the statutory presumption that obtains in this type of action. Section 3708 of the Labor Code provides that in such an action "it is presumed that the injury to the employee was a direct result and grew out of the negligence of the employer." The instruction therefore accurately stated the applicable law.

[6] It is asserted that a subsequent instruction referring to the above presumption was erroneous. The court stated: "Now, that may be rebutted how? By a preponderance of the evidence. That is to say, if there were no evidence offered at all except on the fact of the accident, it would be your duty to immediately bring in a verdict for the plaintiff after finding how much his damages were, but the defendant has the right of producing evidence which may controvert or overcome the presumption. He has the burden of proof." This instruction is in accord with Section 3708, Labor Code, which states that "the burden of proof is upon the employer, to rebut the presumption of negligence." Appellant again argues the weight of the evidence, contending that it was for the jury to determine whether or not respondent was injured as he pretended, and that the burden of proof was upon him because he had the affirmative of the issue, citing Section 1981, Code of Civil Procedure. However, the Labor Code has, in this type of case, expressly placed the burden of proof upon appellant.

[7] Appellant complains that no instruction was given on self inflicted injury or wilful injury to self or property. It is a sufficient answer to this contention that appellant has made no showing that such an instruction was offered and refused.

[8] The court's instruction that in this type of action contributory negligence, assumption of risk, or injury caused by negligence of a fellow servant is not a defense was correct, for section 3708, Labor Code, so provides.

[9] It is unnecessary to review the authorities cited by appellant in regard to the necessity for making findings, for this was a jury case. (See, § 632, Code of Civ.Proc.)

[10] Finally, appellant cites several authorities to the effect that where the jury were given both correct and incorrect instructions, and it cannot be ascertained which instructions were followed a reversal may be ordered. He says that a reading of the instructions shows that contradictory instructions were given, but he gives no transcript references nor does he state in what respect they were conflicting. The burden is on appellant to point out to this court the errors upon which he relies for a reversal and this court is not bound to make an independent search of the record to determine if error may have been committed. (4 Cal.Jur.2d 309–310, § 480). It may be said, however, that a review of the instructions herein in their entirety disclose that they were comprehensive, and clearly and accurately presented all legal principles necessary to an intelligent and fair determination of the case by the jury.

No prejudicial error appearing in the record before us the judgment must be affirmed.

In the Matter of the ESTATE of Andrew Prall CLAUSONTHUE, Deceased.

Norman Cameron CLAUSONTHUE, Individually, and as Trustee, Contestant and Appellant,

v.

SECURITY-FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF LOS ANGELES and Donald John Clausonthue, Petitioners and Respondents, Donald John Clausonthue, Respondent.

Civ. 21524.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

June 29, 1956.

Rehearing Denied July 24, 1956.

Hearing Denied Aug. 21, 1956.

Co-executors of the will of the deceased filed their final account and petition for construction of the will and final distribution of the estate. From an order of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Kenneth C. Newell, J., settling the final account of the co-executors decreeing distribution of the estate and dismissing exceptions to the account and from an order denying the appellant leave to file amended exceptions to the account the appellant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that evidence failed to establish that deceased acted under a mistake as to the legal effect of joint tenancy agreements with the son, or to prove that he intended to create joint tenancy interest in the son merely as a trustee for the estate and that the evidence did not establish an abuse of discretion by the trial court in denying appellant leave to amend his exceptions to charge undue influence.

Order affirmed. Purported appeal from order denying leave to amend dismissed.

1. Wills ⚷166

In proceeding for construction of will and distribution of the estate of the testator, substantial evidence failed to establish that testator acted under a mistake of fact as to the legal effect of joint tenancy agreements with a son or to prove that he intended to create joint tenancy interests in such son merely as a trustee for his estate.

2. Executors and Administrators ⚷504(7)

In proceedings for construction of will and final distribution of the testator's estate, motion denying contestant leave to amend exceptions to the account of executors by adding thereto a charge of undue influence by the beneficiary's son was addressed to discretion of the trial court and evidence did not establish that in the denial thereof there was any abuse of discretion where it was expressed judgment of court that evidence to which the contestant sought to conform his pleadings was insufficient to justify findings in accordance with the allegations of the amendment.

3. Wills ⚷1

It is for parents willing property to their children to determine the measure of their obligations and it is their right to express their feelings of appreciation in a tangible form and their wishes are not to be defeated upon trivial grounds such as blood relationship.

4. Wills ⚷166(1)

In proceeding to contest will evidence failed to establish any fraud or undue influence or activity on part of the favored son's part.

5. Joint Tenancy ⚷3

Fact that son had ample opportunity to influence his father's decision in creating joint tenancy in the father's property with the son was not sufficient to establish invalidity of the joint tenancies.

Hanley & Lawrence, Monrovia, for appellant.

John P. Hoffman, Rinehart, Merriam, Parker & Berg, Pasadena, for respondents.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from an order settling the final account of co-executors, decreeing distribution of a deceased's estate and dismissing exceptions to the account, and a purported appeal from an order denying appellant leave to file amended exceptions to the account.

The respondents, Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles and Donald John Clausonthue, as co-executors, filed their report, first and final account, and petition for construction of will and for final distribution of the estate of Andrew Prall Clausonthue, deceased.

The exceptions charged that the executors had failed to account for $19,537.38 in two savings and loan association accounts, and in a commercial and savings bank account; at the death of the decedent these moneys were in his name and in the name of respondent, Donald Clausonthue, son of decedent, as joint tenants. By the exceptions appellant sought to charge the executors with four sums of money, namely: A savings account with Pasadena Savings and Loan Association, $6,297.68, a commercial account with Security-First National Bank $2,771.68, a savings account in Security-First National Bank $5,082.40, and a savings account in First Federal Savings and Loan Association of Altadena $5,385.62, these being the accounts decedent placed in joint tenancy with Donald. The effect of the order settling the account and for distribution was that Donald succeeded to the accounts as the surviving joint tenant with his father. The property of the estate that remained for distribution was valued at $5,346.

It was alleged in the exceptions that decedent had executed a will on August 2, 1949 and upon information and belief that the joint tenancies were created by decedent "with the intention that upon the death of the decedent the transferee should distribute said property in accordance with the terms and provisions of his said Will; * * * the decedent was under the mistaken notion and belief that said property, by reason of his having named his said son Donald as one of the co-executors of his Will, would, upon the death of the decedent, be acquired by his said son Donald, not individually, but as such co-executor; and that as such co-executor said son would be by law obliged to distribute the same in accordance with said Will." The substance of these allegations was that the joint tenancies were created as a result of mistake. There was no allegation of a confidential or fiduciary relationship and no charge of the exercise of undue influence. The exceptions were heard by the court on March 1, 1955, and on the trial appellant offered evidence to sustain the same. At the conclusion of appellant's case, the executors moved to dismiss the exceptions, viz., moved for a nonsuit on the ground there was no evidence that decedent created the joint tenancies under mistake as to their legal effect and no evidence that he intended the interests of Donald to be held in trust. Appellant's counsel then moved orally to amend the exceptions to conform the pleadings to the proof. It is sufficient to say at this point that the proposed amendment alleged the existence of a confidential relationship between Donald and decedent and accused Donald of having exercised undue influence and fraud in the creation of the joint tenancies. The court took the motions under submission and fixed the time for filing briefs. Appellant gave written notice of a motion for leave to file amended exceptions. On August 11, 1955, the court denied the motion to amend, granted respondents' motion to dismiss the exceptions, and thereupon approved and settled the account and ordered distribution.

The court first denied leave to amend the exceptions which was sought upon the ground that the amendment would conform the exceptions to the proof. Secondly, the court, having denied the motion to amend, granted a nonsuit for the reason there was no evidence whatever to sustain the allegations of the exceptions. It is necessary to review the evidence upon which these rulings were made.

The evidence of appellant consisted of testimony given by Donald and his wife, called as witnesses under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that of certain other witnesses, together with some documentary evidence. Mr. McEachren, Vice President of the First Federal Savings and Loan Association, Mr. Milholland, Assistant Manager of a branch of the Security-First National Bank, Ruth McKirby, a clerk of the same bank, Louise McAllister, secretary of the Pasadena Savings and Loan Association, were called as witnesses and produced the records of the institutions which evidenced the creation of the joint tenancies. John P. Hoffman, an attorney, testified as to the execution of a will by the decedent. All the joint tenancies were created by writings on printed forms of the institutions, which are customarily used and are adequate for that purpose. The writing which placed in joint tenancy the account with the Pasadena Savings and Loan Association was executed January 9, 1947; the account with First Federal Savings and Loan Association was placed in joint tenancy January 7, 1948. On each of these occasions decedent took Donald to the Oak Knoll branch of the Security-First National Bank where he was made a co-signer on decedent's signature card for a safe deposit box. In April 1953, Donald, at decedent's request, brought some stock certificates from the safe deposit box to decedent. These were endorsed and given to Donald who had the shares transferred to himself and his wife jointly (title to this stock is not questioned). At approximately the same time decedent and Donald executed joint tenancy signature agreements upon the bank's cards by which the accounts in the Security-First National Bank were placed in joint tenancy. The witnesses were examined at length as to the circumstances under which the several instruments were executed.

The father died August 4, 1953. He was born in England in 1862, came to this country in 1903 with his wife and two sons. In 1936 Donald came to California where he married his present wife. Decedent came to live with them in 1938 and he continued to live with them to the time of his death. He had a pension of $297 per month. He paid his son $50 a month to apply on their living expenses. His wife died in January 1947 and it was shortly after that when decedent conceived the desire to place some of his properties in joint tenancy. Donald is 64; Norman who is somewhat younger, lives in Oak Park, Illinois. Soon after coming to this country decedent became assistant controller of the Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit Corporation, was employed in similar capacities by various railroads and for over 35 years of his active business experience was engaged in accounting and financial work. He handled his own business affairs and kept them to himself. He made regular monthly deposits in the accounts. He did not discuss them with Donald except upon the occasions when he made arrangements to dispose of his holdings in the manner heretofore indicated. Donald made no inquiries and had no knowledge as to the sums involved in the accounts.

Decedent made a will August 25, 1949, which was prepared by Mr. Hoffman. By it he left his automobile, jewelry and other personal property to Donald, if living, and, if not, to Norman. To Donald he left all stocks, bonds, other securities and any real property he owned, provided Donald survived him and, if not, to Donald's wife. He left $2,000 to Norman in trust for Norman's two boys. He forgave any debts his sons might owe him and the residue of his estate he left 60 per cent to Donald and 40 per cent to Norman, or to the living issue of either who might predecease him. Donald and Security-First National were named as executors, the son to act without bond. It was in evidence that after the death of the testator Norman wrote to Donald making inquiry as to the various accounts and that Donald did not reply until after Norman had again made inquiry.

There was no evidence that Donald or any one else solicited or advised or encouraged decedent to create the joint tenancies. There was no evidence that decedent acted under any misapprehension or want of understanding as to the contents of the several writings which he executed nor as to their meaning and legal effect. There was no evidence of any activity on the part of Donald in connection with the creation of the joint tenancies nor any evidence that Donald at any time was consulted by decedent with respect to or that he volunteered any advice concerning matters of business.

Two questions are presented for decision, namely, whether appellant produced any substantial evidence in support of his exceptions and also whether it was an abuse of discretion for the court to deny his motion for leave to amend his exceptions by adding thereto a charge of undue influence.

[1] Considering the allegations of the exceptions and the evidence pertaining thereto, which were challenged by respondent's motion, it is manifest there was an entire want of evidence to establish that decedent acted under a mistake as to the legal effect of the joint tenancy agreements or to prove the allegation that he intended to create joint tenancy interests in Donald merely as trustee for his estate. Appellant had created specific issues to be tried, had endeavored to sustain his allegations and had failed. It would have been error to decide those issues in his favor.

The second question is whether it was an abuse of discretion to deny appellant leave to amend the exceptions. As we have said, the exceptions did not charge the exercise of undue influence by Donald. They did not allege that decedent was not in full possession of his faculties nor that he was given to consult with or rely upon the advice of Donald nor that the latter had any influence over him. The only relationship alleged was that of father and son. Of course, the mere allegation that in a transaction between father and son one derived an advantage or profit is not an accusation of the use by him of undue influence. The proposed amendment alleged that decedent often advised and consulted with Donald, suffered a gradual deterioration of his mental and physical powers, came to be dependent upon Donald; Donald knew that his father was intending to create a trust as to Donald's joint tenancy interest and knowing that his father had that intention Donald failed to advise him as to the effect of the joint tenancy agreements; he had a duty to advise his father as to the significance of the agreements and a duty to see that his father received independent legal advice and that he failed in all those duties. It was alleged that said acts and omissions of Donald were fraudulent. In other words the amended exceptions in addition to accusing Donald of using undue influence also accused him of fraud.

Appellant did not seek to have his case reopened for further evidence if his amendment should be permitted. It was his theory that the evidence he had introduced was sufficient to establish the truth of the allegations of the amendment. By his application to amend to conform to the proof he submitted to the court the question whether in the judgment of the court the evidence would support his allegations of the use of undue influence and fraud. Upon this question the court during argument on the motions expressed itself freely and in part as follows: "In the first place, I don't think there is any showing of any fraud as far as the son is concerned, the son executor. I don't think there is any showing of any undue influence on his part. So that I think, as far as your confidential relationship is concerned, it would avail the opposition nothing, because there is no evidence of any undue influence. I think the whole thing was a voluntary proposition on the part of the decedent. * * * I don't think there is any showing that anything out of line took place in the creation of these joint tenancies. I think they are, on their face, legitimate. I think they were the desire of the decedent. It was his desire to have them set up that way. Frankly, I don't see where there is any basis upon which the court can set aside these joint tenancies." The court proceeded to state the belief that the provision that was made for Donald was a natural one in view of the fact that he had taken care of his father and mother in his home for the last eight or ten years of their lives. These remarks of the court were made in reply to the argument that the amendment should be allowed because the evidence was sufficient to prove the allegations of undue influence and fraud. Inasmuch as there was no evidence of the actual use of influence by Donald, appellant could claim only that the facts in evidence established the existence of a confidential relationship which gave rise to a presumption of the use of undue influence, and that the existence of a confidential relationship alone necessitated allowance of the amendments even if the court was convinced from the entire evidence that decedent conceived and executed the plan to place the accounts in joint tenancy free from any outside influence or advice.

[2] Appellant's motion was addressed to the discretion of the court and we are unable to discover in the denial any basis for a claim of abuse of discretion. It was the expressed judgment of the court that the evidence to which appellant sought to conform his pleading was insufficient to justify findings in accordance with the allegation of the amendment. In reaching this conclusion the court properly took into consideration all the evidence and not merely such parts of it as may have been favorable to appellant. If perchance, notwithstanding the court's conclusions as to the factual questions, it had nevertheless permitted the amendment to be filed, the course of the trial thereafter would have been that respondents, knowing the facts had been decided contrary to the allegations of the proposed amendment, would have submitted the case on the merits, and the findings would have been in accordance with the court's announced factual conclusions.

The rule invoked by appellant that it is error to grant a motion for nonsuit if the evidence of the party resisting the motion would warrant a judgment in his favor has application here only to the extent that if the evidence of appellant had furnished substantial support for the allegations of his exceptions of mistake on the part of decedent or the existence of some undisclosed purpose or understanding with respect to the creation of a trust a nonsuit should not have been granted. The nonsuit was properly granted upon the ground of failure of plaintiff's proof to sustain those allegations.

Appellant discusses the evidence at some length but his argument consists only of inferences of fraud and the use of undue influence which he contends might have been drawn from the evidence, all of which are directly opposed to the inferences drawn by the trial court, as quoted earlier in our opinion. He says the court could have disbelieved Donald's testimony that he did nothing to induce his father to create the joint tenancies but, even so, doubt as to whether Donald was telling all he knew would not be evidence of what he was withholding. It would not be affirmative evidence of activity upon his part. In re Estate of Stone, 59 Cal.App.2d 263, 268, 138 P.2d 710.

[3] Decedent had a right to reward Donald for favors received during the many years he and his wife had lived in Donald's home. He had an income that would have enabled them to live elsewhere, but he was content to stay on. It is but just that a child who provides a home for aged parents and cares for them for many years should be rewarded. It is for the parents to determine the measure of their obligation and it is their right to express their feelings of appreciation and love in tangible form. Their wishes are not to be defeated upon trivial grounds, certainly not upon the sole ground of blood relationship.

[4] The court concluded there was no fraud or undue influence or activity on Donald's part and that he had not been unduly rewarded. Having determined that the facts were contrary to the allegations of the proposed amendment it would have been futile to allow it to be filed.

[5] Granting that Donald had ample opportunity, and perhaps the ability, to influence his father's decisions this was not sufficient to establish invalidity of the joint tenancies. In re Estate of Bould, 135 Cal.App.2d 260, 273, 287 P.2d 8, 289 P.2d 15. It is not questioned that if they were validly created Donald took title as surviving joint tenant.

The order is affirmed; the purported appeal from the order denying leave to amend is dismissed.

George KATEMIS and Tula Katemis, Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

Ione M. WESTERLIND, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 21465.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

July 3, 1956.

Rehearing Denied July 24, 1956.

Hearing Denied Aug. 30, 1956.

Specific performance action by purchaser against the vendor for specific performance of contract for sale of realty and for damages. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Aubrey N. Irwin, J., entered judgment adverse to vendor, and vendor, appealed. The District Court of Appeal Vallée, J., held that, where time was not of the essence of the escrow contract, and bank, which was escrow holder, was closed on Saturday on which purchaser was required to make a deposit in escrow and also on the following Sunday, purchaser, who made the deposit in the bank before it opened for business on the following Monday morning, performed within a reasonable time.

Affirmed.

1. Contracts 🔑211

In equity, general rule is that time is not of the essence unless it is made so by express terms or is necessarily so from nature of the contract.

2. Evidence 🔑417(19)

Where time for performance is stated, but time is not expressly made of the essence by a written contract, extrinsic evidence is admissible to show that time was considered by the parties as of the essence, and such evidence does not contradict or vary the writing but confirms it by showing that it means just what its terms provide. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1492.

3. Appeal and Error 🔑1097(1), 1195(1)

Where reviewing court, in deciding a case, states in its opinion a principle or rule of law necessary to the decision, such principle or rule, whether right or wrong, becomes law of that case and must be adhered to throughout its later progress both in the trial court and on any succeeding appeal.

4. Appeal and Error 🔑1097(1)

Where there is no substantial difference in facts in record on a prior appeal and record on a subsequent appeal, doctrine of law of the case is applicable.

5. Appeal and Error 🔑1097(1)
Evidence 🔑417(19)

Where contract, which was before the court on subsequent appeal, was in issue and was construed on prior appeal, construction, on prior appeal, that the contract specifically provided that time was not of the essence was law of the case and binding at second trial and upon subsequent appeal, and to permit extrinsic evidence for purpose of showing that time was not of the essence would be to contradict and vary express terms of the contract. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 1492.

6. Evidence 🔑417(19)

Extrinsic evidence is admissible to show that time was considered by the parties as essence of the written contract for sale of realty only when it does not tend to contradict or vary terms of such contract. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1492.

7. Contracts 🔑211

Time is not of the essence of contract which provides for a reasonable time. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1492.

8. Specific Performance 🔑92(1)

Where contract shows time was not deemed to be of the essence, equity may decree specific performance although act was done after date fixed in the contract. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1492.

9. Vendor and Purchaser 🔑75

Where time was not of essence of contract for sale of realty, purchaser had reasonable time within which to perform. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1492.

10. Vendor and Purchaser 🔑75

Where time was not of the essence of the escrow contract, and bank, which was escrow holder, was closed on Saturday on which purchaser was required to make a deposit in escrow and also on the following Sunday, purchaser, who made the deposit in the bank before it opened for business on the following Monday morning, performed within a reasonable time.

11. Appeal and Error 🔑743(2)

Where, upon appeal in specific performance action, defendant asserted that court had erroneously excluded evidence offered by her to show that she had suffered great damage by purchaser's delay but did not refer to the record in support of such claim, the District Court of Appeal would not search the record to find such error.

Appeal by defendant from an adverse judgment in a suit for specific performance of a contract for the sale of realty and damages. On a prior trial a judgment of nonsuit was rendered. On appeal that judgment was reversed. Katemis v. Westerlind, 120 Cal.App.2d 537, 261 P.2d 553.

Defendant was the owner of a parcel of realty in Los Angeles improved with a furnished apartment house. The instrument provides that the balance of the purchase price be placed in escrow "within 2 days from date hereof" and that "[t]ime is the essence of this contract; but the time for any act required to be done may be extended not longer than thirty days by the undersigned agent [Solaris]."

There were 29 days in February 1952. Thus plaintiffs agreed to deposit the $20,100 in escrow within 4 days after signing the instructions.

Defendant complied with all terms of the instrument of February 23, 1952 and of the escrow prior to March 1.[3] Plaintiffs' check for $1,000 was deposited in the escrow on February 25. On February 29 plaintiffs mailed $19,350 from Chicago to the escrow holder. The $19,350 was received by the escrow holder on March 3. In all other respects plaintiffs complied with all the terms of the instrument of February 23 and of the escrow prior to March 1. On March 5 defendant, in writing, instructed the escrow holder to cancel the escrow because "purchasers did not comply with their agreement in said escrow to deposit with you the sum of $20,100 prior to March 1, 1952."

The court found the facts as related and: 1. The instrument of February 23 and the escrow instructions constitute a written contract whereby plaintiffs agreed to buy and defendant agreed to sell the property. 2. Time was not made of the essence of the contract. 3. On March 5 defendant repudiated the contract. 4. The consideration was the fair and reasonable value of the property. 5. The contract was fair and equitable and the consideration adequate. 6. There was no change in the fair and reasonable value of the property between February 23 and March 3, 1952. The conclusion was that plaintiffs are entitled to specific performance of the contract and judgment was entered accordingly. Defendant appeals.

The specifications of error are that the court erred in excluding extrinsic evidence to prove time was of the essence of the contract and in rendering judgment for specific performance "where there was no pleading, no proof, no finding that plaintiffs' default by delay was excusable, nor immaterial, nor without prejudice, to defendant."

At various times throughout the trial defendant offered to prove by witnesses on the stand that prior to signing the instrument of February 23, 1952 she told plaintiffs she had another deal pending, the balance of the purchase price had to be paid before March 1, she had to have the money fast, that that was the only reason for making the sale; and it was understood by the parties that time was of the essence—in effect that the benefit to accrue to defendant from the consideration to be paid materially depended on strict payment of the purchase price in point of time. The court excluded the evidence on the ground it was an attempt to vary the written contract by parol.

[3] At the former trial it appeared that defendant did not deposit the termite clearance in the escrow until March 3; at the second trial the evidence was that it was deposited prior to March 1.

[1, 2] In equity the general rule is that time is not of the essence unless it is made so by express terms or is necessarily so from the nature of the contract. Civ.Code, § 1492; Miller v. Cox, 96 Cal. 339, 345, 31 P. 161; 12 Cal.Jur.2d 380, § 162; 3 Williston on Contracts (rev.ed.1936) 2385, § 852. If it clearly appears from the contract that time is of the essence, it will be so regarded in equity. (12 Cal.Jur.2d 382, § 163.) Where the time for performance is stated and if time is not expressly made of the essence by a written contract, it is held that extrinsic evidence is admissible to show time was considered by the parties as of the essence; and that such evidence does not contradict or vary the writing, but confirms it by showing that it means just what its terms provide. 81 C.J.S., Specific Performance, §§ 106 c, 141, pp. 629, 720; 55 Am.Jur. 589, § 113; 3 Williston on Contracts (rev.ed.1936) 2372, § 846, note 4; annotation, 89 A.L.R. 920. Defendant maintains the contract specifically provides that time is not of the essence, and that to permit extrinsic evidence to show that time is of the essence would be to contradict and vary the terms of the contract. The question therefore is: Does the contract specifically provide that time is not of the essence?

The question is settled by the decision on the prior appeal. On the same evidence the court on the prior appeal held that: the instrument of February 23, 1952 and the escrow instructions were to be construed together; the fact that funds reached the escrow holder on March 3, 1952 and not prior to March 1, did not defeat plaintiffs' right to specific performance; and "[i]n examining the instrument prepared on February 23, 1952, by Mr. Solaris containing the buyers' offer, which was accepted by defendant, the following time-clause appears: 'Time is the essence of this contract, but the time for any act required to be done may be extended not longer than thirty days by the undersigned agent.' Here we are confronted with an unmistakable indication that performance by the vendee, on the day nominally appointed, cannot be of crucial significance to the vendor, since Mr. Solaris, the agent of the plaintiffs in this case and under accustomed principles of agency susceptible to direction by his principal, is given the right to defer the performance of any act for an additional thirty days, without even a provision for notice. Under such circumstances, it hardly lies in the mouth of defendant to assert that payment by the vendee before March 1, 1952, was essential or of compelling materiality when the buyers' agent was empowered to extend the performance of this or any other act to a time beyond the dates here involved. To lodge such authority in the buyers' agent is inconsistent with the supposition that the precise time specified for the buyers' performance is of the essence of the contract." Katemis v. Westerlind, 120 Cal.App.2d 537, 261 P.2d 553, 558.

[3, 4] The doctrine of the law of the case applies. The doctrine is applied to the principles of law laid down by the court on appeal as applicable to a retrial of fact. Moore v. Trott, 162 Cal. 268, 273, 122 P. 462. When a reviewing court in deciding a case states in its opinion a principle or rule of law necessary to the decision, that principle or rule, whether right or wrong, becomes the law of that case and it must be adhered to throughout its later progress both in the trial court and on any succeeding appeal. Allen v. California Mutual B. & L. Ass'n, 22 Cal.2d 474, 481, 139 P.2d 321; In re Estate of Baird, 193 Cal. 225, 234, 223 P. 974. Where there is no substantial difference in the facts in the record on a former appeal and in the record on a later appeal, the doctrine is applicable. In re Estate of Baird, 193 Cal. 225, 235, 223 P. 974.

[5] The law of the case was settled by the opinion on the former appeal. The facts are the same. The same contract that was before the court, in issue, and construed on the former appeal was before the court on the second trial and is before us now. The court's construction of the contract on the former appeal is the law of the case. It was binding on the court at the second trial and is binding on us. It was that the contract specifically provides that time is not of the essence. To permit extrinsic evidence for the purpose of showing that time was of the essence would be to contradict and vary the express terms of the contract.

[6–8] Extrinsic evidence is admissible to show that time was considered by the parties as of the essence of a written contract for the sale of realty only when it does not tend to contradict or vary the terms of the contract. (55 Am.Jur. 589, § 113.) Johnson v. Schuchardt, 333 Mo. 781, 63 S.W.2d 17, 89 A.L.R. 914, was for specific performance of a contract for the sale of realty. The contract provided that if the buyer should object to the title, the vendor should have a reasonable time within which to perfect the title. The buyer sought to show by extrinsic evidence that the vendor was to furnish an abstract showing merchantable title to the property and complete the contract within 60 days. The court held, 63 S.W.2d 19:

> "The written contract provided that, if upon examination of the abstract the buyer should find defects therein, he should furnish to the seller a statement of such defects in title and objections to the abstract, whereupon the seller should remedy such defects and objections, provided that same could be done within a reasonable time and at a reasonable expense. What would be a reasonable time in which to correct a defective title in any case would necessarily depend upon the character of the defect and the acts necessary to be performed in order to correct it. The parol evidence upon which appellant relies to support his contention that respondents were to furnish an abstract showing merchantable title to the property, and complete the contract of sale within sixty days, or within any specified time, contradicts the plain terms of the written contract which gave respondents a reasonable time in which to correct defects in title. It is settled law that the terms of a written contract may not be varied or contradicted by parol evidence. Appellant's contention amounts to an attempt on his part to substitute the prior verbal understanding between the parties for the written contract which was later entered into. If appellant desired the contract of sale to be completed within sixty days, or within any specified time, he should have so provided in the contract."

To the same effect, Lindberg v. Brandt, 350 Ill.App. 317, 112 N.E.2d 746. Cf. Benson v. Meacham, Tex.Civ.App., 263 S.W.2d 188, in which it was held extrinsic evidence was not admissible to show that an option period was 3 months when the written contract specified 18 months. Time is not of the essence of a contract which provides for a reasonable time. Colorado Woman's College v. Bradford-Robinson, etc., 114 Colo. 237, 157 P.2d 612, 616; Boswell v. United States, 5 Cir., 123 F.2d 213. Where the contract shows time was not deemed to be of the essence, equity may decree specific performance although the act was done after the date fixed in the contract. 17 C.J.S., Contracts, § 502, p. 1052.

The court did not err in excluding evidence proffered for the purpose of showing that time was of the essence of the contract.

[9, 10] The specification that there was no pleading, no proof, and no finding that the delay in making the deposit in escrow was excusable, immaterial, or without prejudice to defendant is without merit. Since time was not of the essence of the contract, whether there was pleading, proof, or finding in these respects is of no consequence. Plaintiff had a reasonable time within which to perform. The 29th of February 1952 was a Friday. The bank closed at the usual hour that day and was closed the following Saturday and Sunday. The balance of the purchase price was in the bank before it opened for business the following Monday morning. It is manifest that plaintiff performed within a reasonable time.

[11] Lastly, defendant says the court erroneously excluded evidence offered by her to show she suffered great damage by the delay. She does not refer to the record in support of this claim. We do not search the record to find error.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.
July 11, 1956.

Prosecution for unlawful possession of heroin. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, David Coleman, J., granted defendant's motion to set aside the information and the state appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Parker Wood, J., held that where arresting officers observed defendant and another person leaving the house of a person whom they had arrested previously on a narcotics charge, and whose house they had under surveillance, and knew the person accompanying defendant was an associate of the person whose house they had under surveillance, they were justified, under the circumstances, in detaining defendant based upon reasonable cause that he was aiding and abetting others in dealing with, or in possessing narcotics.

Order granting motion reversed.

1. Arrest ⚷63(4)

In order for there to be "reasonable or probable cause" to justify an arrest there must be such a state of facts as would lead a man of ordinary care and prudence to believe, or entertain an honest or strong suspicion that a person is guilty.

By information defendant was charged with violating section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code, in that, he unlawfully had heroin in his possession. At the time set for entering a plea to the charge, the defendant made a motion "under Section 995 Penal Code." That section provides: "The indictment or information must be set aside by the court in which the defendant is arraigned, upon his motion, in either of the following cases: If it be an indictment: * * *. If it be an information: 1. * *. 2. That the defendant had been committed without reasonable or probable cause." The motion was granted. The People appeal.

The transcript of the preliminary examination shows that Officer Nall, a police officer of the city of Los Angeles, testified that he was one of the arresting officers; the arrest was made on October 10, 1955, at 8:30 p. m., at the intersection of 60th Street and Central Avenue; at the time of the arrest defendant was with one Kimble; prior to that time he (officer) had received information concerning possession of narcotics by Kimble; he had received that information several times, and the last time was about two weeks before the arrest; on the day of the arrest the officer (witness) was watching a house on 43d Street in which Joe Taylor lives, and "I had arrested him [Taylor] previously on narcotics and talked to him since his release from jail and he told me he would continue to deal with narcotics because he was safe in his house"; the officer went there for the purpose of "making a surveillance of the house in regard to narcotics"; about 8:10 p. m. he saw defendant go into the house; a few minutes later he (officer) saw defendant come out of the house with Kimble; he saw them get in a car; he and Officer Beckman followed the car and kept them under surveillance until they arrived at 60th and Central, when the officers stopped them; defendant and Kimble had stopped there for a red light, and the officers blocked their path with the officers' car; the officers removed them from the car and told them they were under arrest for suspicion of narcotics; the officers searched them for weapons and narcotics but did not find any; defendant, who was driving the car, did not have a driver's license, and the officer (witness) told him that they would have to arrest him "for suspicion of grand theft auto" and take him to the police station; the officer said to defendant, "I can't see how you came out of that house without some narcotics on you"; defendant laughed, and the officer said, "Well, take your shoes off"; defendant took his shoes off, and the officer found a bindle of powder in defendant's sock; the officer delivered the bindle to the property section of the police station; defendant said that he bought the bindle about four hours previously for a friend and he paid $4 for it. On cross-examination, the officer testified that he knew that Kimble was an associate of Taylor; after defendant came out of Taylor's house with Kimble, defendant and Kimble drove about two miles before the officers stopped them; the car was registered in a name which was different from the name of defendant; the officer was told that the car was registered in the name of defendant's mother.

The transcript of the preliminary examination also shows that Officer Allen, an expert chemist, testified that the bindle contained heroin.

At the preliminary examination on October 17, 1955, the prosecution offered the bindle in evidence. Defendant did not object thereto. The bindle was received as Exhibit 1.

Appellant asserts that defendant was committed for trial in the superior court with reasonable and probable cause.

The committing magistrate could have found: That Officer Nall had received information several times concerning possession of narcotics by Kimble, and the last time he had received such information was two weeks before Kimble and defendant were arrested. That Officer Nall knew that Kimble was an associate of Taylor. That Taylor had been arrested previously by Officer Nall for a crime involving narcotics, and that Taylor, after his release from jail, had told Officer Nall that he would continue to deal with narcotics because he was safe in his house. That, preceding the arrest, Officer Nall was watching Taylor's house "in regard to narcotics," and he saw defendant go into Taylor's house and, a few minutes thereafter, he saw Kimble and defendant come out together and get in an automobile, which defendant drove to the place of arrest.

[1] The evidence in the present case was sufficient to justify the officers in believing that defendant Hickman was aiding and abetting Taylor in continuing "to deal with narcotics," or was aiding and abetting Taylor and Kimble in dealing with or possessing narcotics. A rule as to what constitutes reasonable or probable cause is stated in People v. Kilvington, 104 Cal. 86, at page 92, 37 P. 799, at page 801, as follows: " 'There must be such a state of facts' * * * 'as would lead a man of ordinary care and prudence to believe, or entertain an honest and strong suspicion, that the person is guilty.' " In Brinegar v. United States, 338 U.S. 160, at page 175, 69 S.Ct. 1302, at page 1310, 93 L.Ed. 1879, it is said: " 'The substance of all the definitions' of probable cause 'is a reasonable ground for belief of guilt.' " "[R]easonable cause to justify an arrest may consist of information obtained from others and is not limited to evidence that would be admissible at the trial on the issue of guilt." People v. Boyles, 45 Cal.2d 652, 656, 290 P.2d 535, 537. In People v. Rodriguez, 140 Cal.App.2d 865, 296 P.2d 38, wherein the question was whether the arrest and search were lawful, the officers, who had received no information about defendant, observed the defendant standing and looking at an excavation; the defendant walked toward the police car and appeared to be nervous, and one of the officers, while talking to defendant, noticed that the defendant's eyes seemed to be pin-pointed; the officer asked him if he would sit in the police car while they carried on a conversation with him; defendant said that he would; the officers gave him a "frisk" for weapons, and then placed him in the automobile, went to a call box and "ran a warrant on him"; there was no warrant, and they told defendant he could go; as he was leaving, one of the officers noticed a newspaper sticking out of the cuff of defendant's pants; the officer stopped defendant and took the newspaper from the cuff; heroin was in the newspaper. In that case, a police officer testified that the area where defendant was arrested is an area " 'that we have known users and pushers of narcotics.' " The court held therein, 140 Cal.App.2d 868, 296 P.2d at page 40, that when all the circumstances are considered together they authorized a lawful detention of the defendant based upon reasonable cause; that the search, as an incident of the arrest, was reasonable; and that the heroin obtained in the search was admissible in evidence.

[2] In the present case, the circumstances justified the detention of Kimble and defendant based upon reasonable cause, and the search of defendant was an incident of the arrest and was reasonable.

The order granting the motion (made under section 995 of the Penal Code) is reversed.

Madeline S. DRAPER, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 8859.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

July 13, 1956.

Hearing Denied Sept. 6, 1956.

First motorist brought action in Justice Court against second motorist and two fictitious defendants for property damage to automobile which was driven by second motorist and in which his wife was passenger. Second motorist and wife filed document denominated as answer, cross-complaint, complaint and plaintiff answered. In view of fact that demands of second motorist and wife exceeded jurisdiction of court, matter was certified to the Superior Court of Sacramento County, James H. Oakley, J., which entered a judgment adverse to plaintiff and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McMurray, J. pro tem., held that in view of fact that plaintiff waited until morning action was called for trial in Superior Court to object to fact that wife of second motorist had never been given permission to intervene, court was within powers in overruling objection and allowing matter to go to trial as to second motorist's wife, when limitation had run against her action subsequent to her filing and before time action was called for trial in Superior Court.

Horace E. Dunning, Sacramento, for appellant.

Virgil O'Sullivan, Colusa, for respondents.

McMURRAY, Justice pro tem.

Madeline S. Draper filed a complaint in the Fair Oaks Justice Court, alleging property damage to her automobile in the sum of $189.42, alleged to be the result of a collision between the automobile which she drove with that driven by W. S. Traweek, in which his wife, Laura M. Traweek, was riding. W. S. Traweek and two fictitious defendants were named in that action; he was the only one served. Thereafter, Mr. and Mrs. Traweek filed a pleading in the justice court under the same docket and case number entitled "Answer, Cross-complaint, Complaint" in the name of W. S. Traweek, John Doe and Jane Doe as "defendants", W. S. Traweek as "defendant and cross-complainant", and Laura M. Traweek and W. S. Traweek as "plaintiffs". The amount sought by this cross-complaint and so-called complaint exceeded the jurisdictional limits of the justice court, and on the same day that this document was filed the whole case was certified to the superior court on that basis. Thereafter, Madeline S. Draper's "Answer to Cross-complaint and Answer to Complaint" was filed in the justice court and was forwarded to the superior court. Subsequently, pursuant to stipulation there was filed in the superior court Madeline S. Draper's "Amended Answer to Complaint", and counsel for both parties also entered into a written stipulation permitting the amendment of the Traweeks' complaint as to its prayer for damages.

On the morning the action was called for trial in the superior court it was for the first time called to the attention of the parties that the record of the case failed to show any order of court, stipulation, or other evidence in the file permitting Laura M. Traweek to become a party to the action. Appellant immediately orally moved the court to strike the complaint of Laura M. Traweek and W. S. Traweek from the record and to dismiss Mrs. Traweek from the action. The court postponed ruling on this motion at that time and made an order taking the case off the trial calendar and placing it on the law and motion calendar. Appellant filed a formal written motion to strike out or to dismiss the pleading of Laura M. Traweek. This motion was denied, and the case was reset and tried before a jury. At the time of trial the court announced that it would consider and assume that the Traweeks were the plaintiffs and that Madeline S. Draper was the defendant. A jury subsequently returned a verdict awarding $1,050 damages in favor of W. S. Traweek and $10,000 in favor of Laura M. Traweek.

[1, 2] Appellant contends that when the superior court denied her motion to strike and proceeded to hear the case, Laura M. Traweek was not a party to the action, and the superior court had never acquired jurisdiction of her person; and, therefore, the court acted without or in excess of its jurisdiction in so far as rendering judgment in favor of Laura M. Traweek is concerned; and that, therefore, that portion of the judgment is void. She further urges that by reason of such judgment against her, the appellant is an aggrieved party, because the statute of limitations had run against the cause of action of Laura M. Traweek before the trial of the action; and that within the period of the statute of limitations she had never become a party to the action. Admittedly, this is an extremely casual method of pleading and poses some difficulties even with the familiar California rule in mind that formality of pleadings is not required. We think, however, that the court was well within its powers in allowing the matter to go to trial as to Laura Traweek in view of the fact that appellant never questioned her right to appear in the matter before the day upon which it was to go to trial and did, in fact, by particular answer deny all of the allegations contained in the so-called complaint of Laura M. Traweek.

[3] Code of Civil Procedure, § 387, which governs the right to intervene in a pending action, would certainly have given respondent Laura Traweek a right to intervene had she proceeded properly. This right is one which must be availed of in a timely manner and is customarily accompanied by leave of court to intervene. Where, as here, however, the adverse party raises no question as to the right to intervene but treats the complaint which is filed as a valid complaint and joins issue thereon, it would appear that the failure to obtain the court's permission to intervene was a mere informality. Furthermore, the hearing upon the so-called motion to strike after the answer to the complaint had been filed would appear to be tantamount to a motion to strike upon an intervention improperly granted; and the court's action in denying the motion to strike may well be taken to be the same thing as allowing the complaint in intervention to be filed.

[4] Whether or not the language "at any time before trial" contained in Section 387 of the Code of Civil Procedure means that the complaint in intervention must be filed before the commencement of the trial, or otherwise, it would appear that here the complaint in intervention would be timely filed as of the morning of trial. See Coburn v. Smart, 53 Cal. 742, at page 744. An irregularity in intervention or the propriety of granting an order in intervention may not be attacked after demurring to a complaint or petition for intervention. (163 A.L.R. 917.) In that annotation it appears that interposing a demurrer to a complaint or petition in intervention is a waiver of the right to stand upon a motion to strike. Here the filing of an answer should have the same effect. In Bloom v. Waxman, 48 Cal.App.2d 646, 120 P.2d 509, it is held that in the absence of an objection to the filing of a complaint in intervention, by demurrer, motion to strike, or other appropriate proceeding, a party may not for the first time on appeal raise the objection that the order of the trial court permitting the intervention was improper. This persuades us that the allowance of an improper intervention is not jurisdictional. There would seem to be no reason that where the same accident gave rise to the intervenor's cause of action as gave rise to the other respondent's and appellant's cause of action, she should not be allowed to intervene. The belated attack upon the complaint filed by Laura M. Traweek we believe was barred by appellant's having filed an answer specifically traversing the allegations of that complaint. 163 A.L.R. 917. The mere fact that the statute of limitations had run as against Laura Traweek before the commencement of the trial of the action does not, we believe, affect the court's action in this matter, as her so-called complaint was filed well within the statutory period as was the appellant's answer and amended answer thereto.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Action by beneficiaries under trust deed against subsequent purchaser. The Superior Court, Santa Clara County, M. G. Del Mutolo, J., sustained demurrers, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Agee, J. pro tem., held that where trust deed stipulated that recitals in any deed executed by trustee were conclusive proof of matters recited, and trustee's deed of reconveyance stated that indebtedness had been paid, subsequent good faith purchasers and encumbrancers who relied upon recordation of reconveyance deed prevailed over beneficiaries under trust deed, notwithstanding that deed of reconveyance had been issued without authority and indebtedness had not been paid.

This is an appeal from a judgment against plaintiffs entered upon failure to amend their first amended complaint after the sustaining of the demurrers thereto of those defendants who are the respondents herein. Although the demurrers are general and special, and the order sustaining them does not state the ground or grounds thereof, our decision herein is confined to the sustaining of the general demurrers. The allegations of the amended complaint follow.

On June 20, 1947, L. B. Tuttle and Beulah L. Tuttle, his wife, owned the real property involved herein. On said date, Carlo Firato and Salino Firato, his wife, loaned to them the sum of $8,500 and took back a promissory note secured by a deed of trust on said property wherein one Gladys E. McCormick was named trustee. The deed of trust was recorded on the same date and the terms thereof are expressly incorporated in the complaint by reference. (For the convenience of this court and pursuant to stipulation, a copy of the deed of trust has been included in the record.)

On July 1, 1949, the Tuttles deeded the property to Pietrina Sardina. On this same date, Gladys E. McCormick, as said trustee, without authority and without said note having been fully paid, or anything paid thereon on said date, executed a deed of reconveyance of the property. This deed of reconveyance and the deed from the Tuttles to Sardina were recorded on the same date, July 1, 1949.

On March 24, 1950, Sardina conveyed the property to Orville B. Stanger and Virgie R. Stanger, his wife. On the same date, the Stangers executed a deed of trust on the property to respondent Howard D. Edelen, as trustee, to secure payment of $8,400 loaned to them by respondent Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co. On October 21, 1953, the Stangers conveyed the property to respondents Chester A. Berry and Mabel Berry, his wife.

On April 8, 1954, appellant Raymond Firato was substituted in the place of Gladys E. McCormick, as trustee under the Firato deed of trust.

The relief prayed for is that the deed of reconveyance be cancelled and that appellants' deed of trust be declared superior to the respondent insurance company's deed of trust. The four respondents on this appeal are the Berrys, the insurance company and the trustee under its deed of trust.

Appellants do not contend that respondents are not bona fide purchasers and encumbrancers. They state "the issue" to be as follows: "Is Civil Code Section 870 limited to application only against non-bona fide purchasers and encumbrancers?" (Appellants apparently concede that if this section does not apply to the instant situation, then respondents would be protected by the record title.) Section 870 of the Civil Code provides: "Where a trust in relation to real property is expressed in the instrument creating the estate every transfer or other act of the Trustees, in contravention of the trust, is absolutely void." Appellants point to clause "Fifth" of their deed of trust, which provides in substance that the trustee can reconvey the trust property only if the loan secured by the deed of trust is paid in full or the beneficiary thereunder requests such reconveyance. Appellants contend that, under the facts as alleged, the reconveyance in question is absolutely void under said section 870.

The issue in the instant case is substantially the same as that in Mersfelder v. Spring, 139 Cal. 593, 73 P. 452, which is cited by appellants on another point. The cited case was an action to recover possession of real property where the only issue was the plaintiff's legal title. Plaintiff derived his title through a deed executed by the trustee under a deed of trust on said property. The trustee's deed recited default in payments, demand by the beneficiary to sell, publication of time and place of sale, and sale by the trustee. The deed of trust expressly provided that the recitals in such a deed of default and publication " 'shall be conclusive proof of such default and of the due publication of such notice' ". 139 Cal. at page 594, 73 P. at page 453. The only contention made by defendant was that it devolved upon plaintiff to prove that the conditions on which the trustee was authorized to sell had been complied with. At pages 594 and 595 of 139 Cal., at page 453 of 73 P., the Supreme Court stated defendant's position as follows: "* * * it is urged that, under section 870 of the Civil Code, the deed of the trustee of an express trust in contravention of its terms is absolutely void, the rule at common law being thus abolished, which, in cases involving the legal title only, was to the contrary [citations], and hence that in legal as well as in equitable cases the validity of the trustee's deed must, under our law, depend upon a compliance with the terms and directions of the deed, which are conditions precedent to his power to sell [citations]; that with regard to these the effect of the trustee's deed, or of his recitals therein, is the same as in the case of the acts of other agents [citations]; and hence that, in the absence of authority, given by the instrument to the trustee, to bind his principal by his recitals or acts, these conditions must be proved. [Citations.] * * * But, whatever may be the force of the argument as noted, these questions, though interesting, can arise only in cases where no authority is given by the deed to the trustee to bind his principal by his recital or by his deed, or, to use the language of the counsel, only 'in the absence of a stipulation in the trust deed making the trustee's deed evidence of its own validity.'" (Emphasis added.)

Clause "Sixth" of the appellants' deed of trust provides, in part, as follows: "In any deed executed under these trusts, the recital of amount of indebtedness, default, recording, application of Beneficiary, posting, publication, sale, purchase price, and of any other matters, shall be conclusive proof of such indebtedness, default, recording, application, posting, publication; sale purchase price, and all other matters recited, * * *" (Emphasis added.) The entire clause is very lengthy and deals almost entirely with foreclosure proceedings after default by the trustor. However, the quoted portion is the only reference in the deed of trust to a deed from the trustee and a deed of reconveyance must be held to be included within the phrase, "In any deed executed under these trusts."

[1, 2] The deed of reconveyance is described in the complaint as to date and recordation (including recorder's serial number) but it was not expressly incorporated therein. However, it is common knowledge that a deed of reconveyance, in a lending transaction of the type involved herein, customarily contains a recital that the indebtedness for which the deed of trust was given has been satisfied. Judicial notice may be taken of matters of common knowledge. In Gauchet v. McGinnis, 13 Cal.App.2d 7, 55 P.2d 1255, a contract to purchase real property was reformed to include a provision that the vendee execute a promissory note for the unpaid balance, secured by a deed of trust on the property. There was no pleading or testimony that the parties had ever discussed or agreed upon the execution of a promissory note. The court said, at pages 10 and 11 of 13 Cal.App.2d, at page 1257 of 55 P.2d: "There is no merit in the contention that there is a fatal variance between the evidence or the pleadings and the findings and judgment with respect to the omission of the clause regarding the trust deed because Mrs. McGinnis did not specifically say that the trust deed was to be accompanied by a promissory note for the balance of the purchase price of the property which it was to secure. * * * A trust deed is understood to be substantially a mortgage on real property to secure an indebtedness, with the power of sale for default of the terms thereof. 25 Cal.Jur., p. 15, §§ 3–6. It is common knowledge that both a mortgage and a trust deed are customarily given to secure a promissory note representing the amount and terms of the indebtedness." (Emphasis added.) See also Klett v. Security Acceptance Co., 38 Cal.2d 770, 780, 242 P.2d 873, and Quan v. Kraseman, 84 Cal.App.2d 550, 551, 191 P.2d 16. "An appellate court may properly take notice of any matter of which the court of original jurisdiction may properly notice." (10 Cal.Jur., 699.)

Appellants cite Phelps v. American Mtg. Co., 6 Cal.2d 604, 59 P.2d 95, but this case is not in point. The demurrer of defendant Mortgage Guarantee Company to the complaint had been sustained without leave to amend. The judgment thereupon entered against plaintiff was reversed, the Supreme Court saying at page 608 of 6 Cal. 2d, at page 97 of 59 P.2d: "There is, however, support for our conclusion that the facts alleged constitute a cause of action to cancel the unauthorized deed of reconveyance and release and to quiet or establish the plaintiffs' prior rights as lienholders under the $125,000 deed of trust as against the adverse claims of subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers which are without right, i. e., as against such purchasers and encumbrancers taking with knowledge of the unauthorized and voidable nature of the deed of reconveyance, or who have paid no consideration." (Emphasis added.) The complaint in the cited case specifically alleged that the defendant Mortgage Guarantee Company had knowledge of the unauthorized character of the reconveyance. At the trial which followed, however, the court found that the Mortgage Guarantee Company was an encumbrancer for value, without notice that the reconveyance had been obtained by fraud. Judgment in its favor was affirmed on appeal. Phelps v. American Mortgage Co., 40 Cal.App.2d 361, 104 P.2d 880. Mortgage Guarantee Company had loaned $80,000, secured by a deed of trust on the property, in reliance upon the trustee's reconveyance of the earlier deed of trust. This reconveyance had been obtained by fraudulent means and the issue to be decided was whether the Mortgage Guarantee deed of trust was subordinate to the deed of trust so reconveyed or to any claims arising thereunder. The court said, 40 Cal.App.2d at page 373, 104 P.2d at page 887: "As already pointed out, Mortgage Guarantee Company, and respondents who claim through that company, are bona fide purchasers. Although it is the law that a transfer by a trustee in contravention of the express provisions of the trust is void (Civ.Code, sec. 870), that rule has no application to the factual situation here presented. Where circumstances creating an estoppel are present, as here, a purchaser taking title without notice of the breach of trust secures an unimpeachable title. 65 Cor.Jur. p. 774, sec. 644; 65 Cor.Jur. p. 776, sec. 647; 27 R.C.L. p. 694, sec. 458."

In the cited case, appellants were the holders of promissory notes secured by a deed of trust on real property They endorsed the notes in blank and delivered them to the payee, American Mortgage Company, for collection. Without receiving any payment on the notes this company fraudulently delivered them to the trustee under the deed of trust and requested a reconveyance.

[3] In the instant case the maxim codified in section 3543 of the Civil Code applies. This section provides: "Where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, he, by whose negligence it happened, must be the sufferer." As Justice Peters said, in the second Phelps case, supra, 40 Cal.App.2d at page 366, 104 P.2d at page 883: "It is to be noted that the Civil Code section uses the term 'negligence'. It is appellants' theory that they are not chargeable with negligence, but only with misplaced confidence in a trusted agent, and that misplaced confidence is not negligence. * * * Such misplaced confidence must be held to be negligence within the meaning of the maxim above referred to."

[4] The deed of trust in the instant case stipulated that the recitals in any deed executed by the trustee were conclusive proof thereof. Here we know, as a matter of common knowledge, that the deed of reconveyance recited payment of the indebtedness. Appellants do not dispute the fact that respondents are good faith purchasers and encumbrancers who relied upon the recordation of such reconveyance. We hold that the respondents are therefore protected. This conclusion makes it unnecessary to pass upon the question as to whether section 870 of the Civil Code is applicable to deeds of trust on real property which are given to secure the payment of money.

The judgment is affirmed.

Charles Thomas Akers, in pro. per.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Defendant and appellant, aged 42, was convicted by a jury on a charge of committing lewd and lascivious acts on a boy, 11 years old, in violation of section 288 of the Penal Code, in one count, and in a second count of the crime of sex perversion (oral copulation) in violation of section 288a of the Penal Code. He was sentenced to State's Prison, sentences to run concurrently on each count.

[1] It does not appear from the record that a motion for new trial was made. Accordingly, the attempted appeal from an order denying such a motion must be dismissed.

The boy, Michael, here involved, testified, generally, that he was selling newspapers at a prominent corner in San Diego, near an inn or beer parlor, about 4:30 p. m., and that he solicited a sale of one of his papers to defendant, who was just entering the inn to buy a drink of beer; that after defendant came out, the boy, not recognizing him, again asked him to buy a paper and defendant remarked "Come over to my room (across the street) and I will buy all of your papers." Michael picked up about 20 papers and started to follow the defendant. Defendant remarked, "Walk a little ways behind, about six paces." When they arrived, defendant unlocked the door to his room and asked the boy to let him see his penis. The boy then described in particular defendant's conduct. In general, it consisted of helping the boy unzip his trousers and expose his penis and, for about five minutes, he committed the act of copulating the boy's penis with defendant's mouth. Thereafter the defendant told the boy to take off his clothes and sit on the bed and a similar act occurred for the next five minutes. Defendant then got up and went over to a drawer in the dresser, secured some pictures of nude women, and showed them to the boy. Defendant undressed himself except for his socks and then asked for the boy to pick out one of the pictures he liked best and made a vile suggestion as to it. Another similar act of copulation took place while they were in the nude on the bed and then defendant changed his position and started kissing Michael on the lips, sucking his nipples on his chest, and hugging him. He placed Michael's hand on defendant's private parts. He told Michael not to tell anyone and asked him if he would like to be his son and if he would, he would not have to sell newspapers any more and he would buy him a new bicycle. Michael described the sensation he felt during these occurrences and said he had never had such acts committed on him before. Defendant gave the boy only $1.50 for his 20 papers, which sold for 10¢ each, and said he had no more money left but if Michael would come back at 7:00 o'clock, he would give him $5.00. Finally, the boy told defendant he wanted to leave and defendant committed another similar act of copulation. Thereafter the boy dressed, opened the door and left with his 20 papers. Defendant was, at the time, still undressed except for his socks. Michael crossed the street and told the police, who had been called at the suggestion of another news boy who saw the early part of this episode and was curious about the absence of Michael from the corner at that hour. He testified he first saw Michael walking "sort of behind Mr. Akers toward the rooming house" and that Michael had previously told him the defendant was going to buy all of his papers.

Two police officers heard the story above related by Michael and proceeded with him to the room, knocked on the door, and defendant inquired as to who was there. They replied, "police officers", and defendant opened the door. Defendant was nude at the time and before accusation was made, defendant remarked that it was a "bum rap" and that someone was trying to "frame" him. One officer took Michael out of the room. The other officer then noticed the nude pictures, some on the floor and others on the bed. Defendant was then informed of the boy's story and the nature of the charge. He admitted the boy had been in the room and that he had given him some money. Defendant was taken to jail and later stated he saw the boy at the corner that evening and told him he would buy all of his papers and that the boy later came to his room while he was dressing and he gave him $1.00 and told him to sell his papers to someone else; that the door was open or left ajar about one foot all of this time. He testified showing the boy the pictures and denied the acts. Later he signed a written statement that he had been drinking quite heavily; that after he agreed to buy all of the boy's papers, the boy followed him to his room where the boy became interested in some art pictures that defendant had.

Defendant testified that he agreed to buy all of the boy's papers and the boy went down the street and gathered up some more; that he did not have sufficient change to satisfy him; that he invited him to his room where he thought he had enough money to pay him and found that he had only $1.00 and that the boy argued with him about his refusal to buy all his papers and he told him to come back at 7:00 o'clock and he would have the money. He further testified that at all times the blinds on the porch window were up. In rebuttal, the landlady said she noticed that about this time the blinds had been pulled down in defendant's room, that the door to his room was closed and that when she previously made defendant's bed there was no evidence of pictures in the room or on the bed.

[2] As we construe the contentions of appellant on this appeal, he claims that the two charges in the information constituted but one act and accordingly, he suffered double jeopardy in being tried and convicted on the two counts indicated. He cites such authority as People v. Nor Woods, 37 Cal.2d 584, 233 P.2d 897 and People v. Greer, 30 Cal.2d 589, 184 P.2d 512.

People v. Slobodion, 31 Cal.2d 555, 191 P.2d 1 is factually so similar to the instant case no further consideration of the point is required. It is clear that the evidence shows certain acts denounced by section 288 of the Penal Code were committed independent of the acts denounced by section 288a, which acts would not be necessarily or normally associated with each other. The defendant was properly charged and convicted of the two crimes and he did not suffer double jeopardy. In re Chapman, 43 Cal.2d 385, 389, 273 P.2d 817.

[3-5] It is next argued that the testimony of the boy was "inherently improbable". Evidence which discloses circumstances that are unusual cannot be said to be inherently improbable. People v. Klinkenberg, 90 Cal.App.2d 608, 204 P.2d 47, 613. In the instant case the jury had before it all the circumstances bearing on the matter and undoubtedly concluded that the offense was not only possible but was in fact perpetrated as related. The credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be accorded to their testimony are matters left solely to the discretion of the trier of fact. People v. Leete, 130 Cal.App.2d 725, 279 P.2d 769; People v. Shevette, 98 Cal.App.2d 782, 786, 221 P.2d 227. The evidence of guilt was ample and the determination as to the truth or falsity of the testimony has been determined adverse to defendant's contention by the constitutional arbiter of the matter.

[6] Claim is made that defendant was denied a speedy trial in not having his trial within sixty days after the filing of the information. Pen.Code, § 1382. He was arraigned on September 2, 1955, and on his motion the court continued the time to plead to September 7. On that date defendant presented a motion to set aside the information and the district attorney was properly allowed to file an amended information. He was arraigned on the amended information and entered a plea of not guilty to both counts and the court set October 5 as the time of trial. No protest was made as to the date or time. No objections to the trial on that date were indicated nor was such contention made until this appeal was perfected. It was affirmatively held in People v. O'Leary, 130 Cal.App.2d 430, 436, 278 P.2d 933, that if a defendant intends to stand on his right to criminal trial within the sixty-day period, he must take some action to inform the court, within that period, that he does not waive his right and that failure to object is equivalent to consent.

[7] Defendant next contends that the "evidence used was illegal, with no search warrant". The testimony against defendant was, for the most part, furnished by the little boy who described the acts committed on his body by the defendant. There was ample evidence to sustain the verdicts of the jury aside from any evidence obtained by the officers at the time of defendant's arrest. There was no objection made at the time of trial that the evidence was obtained as a result of an unreasonable search and seizure with the exception that when the pictures were identified by the boy and offered in evidence his counsel stated, "For the record, I would like to object to the materiality of these things being received in evidence." The admission of the pictures in evidence was material as being corroborative of the boy's testimony and as bearing on the intent of defendant. No particular or proper objection was otherwise then and there made indicating that the evidence had been improperly obtained by unreasonable search or seizure and apparently the court was not called upon to pass upon that particular claim. People v. Kitchens, 46 Cal.2d 260, 294 P.2d 17. Even though it may be assumed, which we do not, that the objection thus stated was a proper and sufficient objection, the evidence in relation to the facts was only incidental and corroborative of the boy's direct testimony which completely described the acts committed on his body and which was sufficient in and of itself to show the commission of the offenses without the aid of that evidence. The testimony of the officers and of the complaining witness in reference to the pictures was admitted without objection and defendant admitted their presence in his room. No prejudicial error resulted and there was no sufficient objection or showing made that there was an unreasonable search and seizure. People v. Spellings, 141 Cal.App.2d 457, 296 P.2d 889.

Defendant makes other broad statements as to the claimed unfairness of his trial. We have carefully examined the entire record and find no justifiable grounds for this claim.

The attempted appeal from the claimed order denying a new trial is dismissed. The judgment is affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Edward Lee RADER and William Burton Trussell, Defendants and Appellants.

Cr. 5577.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

July 11, 1956.

Prosecutions on four counts including the crime of armed burglary. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Joseph M. Maltby, J., entered judgments of conviction of armed burglary and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that any errors made in admission of testimony on counts upon which the defendants were not convicted was not prejudicial with reference to count upon which they were convicted, and because of the positive evidence of guilt, other alleged errors in admission of testimony were not prejudicial.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⚷1169(6)

In criminal prosecutions based upon four counts, any alleged error in admission of testimony upon the first three counts of which the defendants were found not guilty, was not prejudicial with respect to the fourth count upon which the defendants were convicted.

2. Criminal Law ⚷1169(1)

In criminal prosecutions for armed burglary, where there was positive evidence of guilt of the defendants who were caught in the act, alleged errors in admission of testimony were in no sense prejudicial. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 211, 459.

Robert H. Lund, Long Beach, for appellants.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Rudolph Pacht, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

Appellants, together with Leo Earl Rader, were charged by information with conspiracy to violate Section 211 and 459 of the Penal Code; Counts II and III with the crime of Robbery, and Count IV with the crime of Armed Burglary. Each pleaded not guilty and denied being armed. Earl Rader and William Trussell admitted alleged prior convictions. The jury adjudged appellants guilty of violating Section 459 as charged in Count IV. The allegation of being armed was found true. The offense was found to be first degree burglary and the prior conviction against Rader was found true. Neither defendant testified.

As recited in appellants' brief, "At approximately 2:40 a. m. of June 25, 1955, one Charles Severs, a deputy sheriff of Los Angeles County with the assistance of one deputy Stone of Los Angeles County, was making a routine check in the vicinity of 214th and Norwalk Boulevard in Artesia, Los Angeles County. On the southwest corner of the aforementioned intersection, the F & W Market is located. The testimony was given in approximately 10 court days, among which there was as follows:

"Severs testified that he heard the burglar alarm ringing, Stone and he covered the building, Stone going to the front, Severs to the rear of the building. Severs climbed to the roof, found a hole in the roof and some tools lying nearby; he called to Stone to radio for assistance. Severs took a position at the rear of the market and Stone took position at the front of the market. Severs testified that a large sliding type door moved and Edward Rader stepped out. At Severs' request Edward Rader raised his hands and Severs saw a gun fall from his belt onto the ground. Severs asked if anyone was with him and Edward Rader looked over his shoulder and made some remark, 'Come on out,' whereupon Edward Rader stepped to the ground and Trussell followed.

"At approximately 2:45 A.M., on June 25, 1955, Paul McCracken, a deputy sheriff of Los Angeles County and a fellow officer named Bibee, responded to a radio order to go to the F & W Market in the Artesia District. McCracken testified they took two prisoners into custody (the appellants) and transported them to the Norwalk Station. McCracken testified that the conversation with Trussell related to 'another crime.' McCracken testified that the conversation with Rader was as follows:

"'I asked what they were doing in the market and Rader answered, he said they were after the safe and he said if they had known what type of safe it was they wouldn't have gone in.'

"Newton LaFever, a deputy sheriff of Los Angeles County, testified that certain conversations took place. In the first conversation with Edward Rader, Rader said:

"'Me and Bill Trussell had gone through the roof by means of a brace and bit, boring holes and taking a section out of the roof and crawling between the roof portion and the ceiling portion for some distance over towards the meat counter, and then knocked a hole through the plaster in the ceiling and dropped to the floor of the store.'

"There followed other conversation about where certain items found at the scene of arrest came from."

It is contended on appeal that "the court erred in the decision of questions of law during the course of the trial". Appellant then specifies seven errors relating to the trial judge's rulings on objections and motions as to the introduction or exclusion of evidence and also the ruling on a motion for a mistrial as well as the court's ruling on refusing to cite the district attorney for misconduct.

Respondent argues, in reply to appellants' contentions, that "The testimony Appellants contend was admitted erroneously and should have been stricken, could not have prejudiced them. They were not convicted on Counts I, II or III, which have been dismissed. The jury, therefore, was not swayed by this evidence sufficiently to find Appellants guilty on any of the first three counts. If error was committed in admitting or in refusing to strike this testimony, therefore, it was not prejudicial to Appellants as to Counts I, II or III.

[1] "As to Count IV, it is unreasonable to believe that any such error, if error there was, could have influenced the jury. Appellants were caught 'red-handed'—coming out of a market, armed, at about 2:45 o'clock a. m. while the burglar alarm was ringing and after holes had been cut in the roof and ceiling. They were carpenters or cabinetworkers by trade and the tools of that trade were found at the scene and apparently used in making the entry. Appellant Rader admitted that appellants 'were after the safe' and surmised that their tools were 'still on the roof'.

"More positive evidence of guilt is rare indeed. In the light of such evidence it is fantastic to claim that the jury could have found appellants guilty because it was permitted to consider evidence of crimes not charged, some purportedly committed by appellants and some purportedly committed by others, or because it was permitted to consider evidence of appellant Trussell's admitted prior conviction or because it was allowed to consider testimony that appellants refused to utter a sentence which might have served as a basis for an identification. The other evidence was ample to support the jury's finding.

"That the jury was not swayed by this testimony appellants claim was prejudicial is evidenced by the fact that the jury did not convict on the counts as to which there was no direct evidence. Indeed, it is at least possible that convictions were not obtained on the first three counts because of the testimony of which appellants complain. That this testimony could have caused the jury to find appellants guilty of Count IV, however, is far-fetched and fantastic. The jury would have had to reject the testimony of Officers Severs and McCracken and several other witnesses in order to have acquitted appellants on that count. In short, it cannot be said that had the jury not had before it the evidence of which appellants complain, appellants might not have been found guilty as to Count IV.

"It was the jury's function, of course, to choose between the testimony of said officers, plus all the other evidence tending to prove appellants' guilt, and the alibi evidence appellants presented—that they wandered onto the scene out of curiosity and were arrested for no apparent reason."

[2] A review of the record reveals that respondent's argument is abundantly supported by the law and the evidence. The judge's rulings were in no sense prejudicial and so far as the law is concerned were correct.

The judgment therefore is affirmed.

Vivienne L. DOUGAL, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

H. Edward DOUGAL, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 21638.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

July 18, 1956.

Divorce action wherein divorced wife sought to require former husband to, among other things, reimburse her for orthodontic and dental care for the children of the parties. Former husband procured an order to show cause respecting modification of divorce decree with reference to custody of one child. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, LeRoy Dawson, J., denied modification of decree and required former husband to reimburse former wife for orthodontic and dental expenses, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that order entered requiring reimbursement of expenses voluntarily paid by former wife for dental and orthodontic care of children was erroneous.

Order reversed and new order entered.

1. Divorce 🔑298(1)

In determining to whom custody of minor children should be granted in a divorce action, the primary consideration is the welfare of the minors.

2. Divorce 🔑312.6(3)

In hearing on former husband's order to show cause respecting modification of divorce decree with reference to custody of minor son of parties, it was presumed, in absence of evidence to the contrary, that the court did its duty in conferring with minor son in private and in subsequently denying husband's motion to have son's custody awarded to him.

3. Divorce 🔑298(4)

Mere fact that the wife had misjudged the force and effect of her interlocutory divorce decree and remarried before entry of final decree, did not defeat her right to custody of son.

4. Marriage 🔑40(1)

Where man and wife contracted a marriage, solemnized it after the forms of law and thereafter lived together as man and wife, they were presumed to have been married.

5. Divorce 🔑309

In former wife's proceeding to secure a modification of support award and require husband to pay cost of medical expense, order requiring former husband to pay the cost of a diagnosis of minor child by an endocrinologist and for any necessary treatment was reasonable.

6. Divorce 🔑227(1)

Court order requiring former husband to pay $200 to former wife's attorney for services in obtaining an order modifying support award, and for opposing former husband's motion for modification of interlocutory decree, was reasonable. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 137.

7. Divorce 🔑324

Except as specified in a court order, after entry of divorce a father is not liable to the mother for the care of minor children whose custody has been awarded to her.

8. Divorce 🔑309

After entry of a decree of divorce, the retention of jurisdiction by the court relative to modifying a judgment with reference to the custody and education of the minor children is not for the purpose of reimbursing the wife for any expenditures she may voluntarily make in their behalf, but retention of jurisdiction is to provide for such expenditures as may be subsequently incurred by reason of a direction that may be given regarding such care and education.

9. Divorce 🔑312.6(3)

The trial court in awarding a monthly sum for child support presumably included an amount sufficient for medical and dental care.

10. Divorce ⚿309

Court had no power to require former husband to reimburse former wife for amounts she expended voluntarily for dental and orthodontic care of minor child whose custody had been previously awarded her under divorce decree.

Monta W. Shirley, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Grudd & Grossman, North Hollywood, for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

The primary question for decision is whether it is just and proper to require the defendant to reimburse plaintiff for sums voluntarily paid by her for orthodontic and dental care of the two sons of the parties.

An interlocutory decree of divorce was entered in favor of plaintiff Vivienne, September 27, 1951. She was awarded custody of the children, defendant to pay $100 monthly for their joint support. Also, he was ordered to pay $1,298.90 due and owing to Mrs. Rogers, plaintiff's mother, and other debts, and to name the two children as beneficiaries of a Prudential Life Insurance policy; to pay plaintiff her interest in the community property in the sum of $2,080 and to pay plaintiff's counsel $160.

In March 1952 plaintiff obtained an order for defendant to show cause in re modification of the interlocutory decree and she then averred that the "Plaintiff, as well as the minor children * * * is in need of dental and medical services, and your Plaintiff is not financially able to pay the same." She declared also that the sum of $1298.90 had not been paid to Mrs. Rogers, and that $100 per month was not sufficient for the support of the boys. Such order to show cause was abandoned and on motion of defendant it was dismissed.

In April 1955 plaintiff caused a writ of execution to be issued. It was levied upon defendant's bank account to collect the delinquent sum of $626.55. A hearing followed whereupon plaintiff was permitted to take $250 on account of defendant's delinquency as to child support, the balance of $238 to be payable in $25 monthly installments.

May 11, 1955, plaintiff undertook again to effect a modification of the interlocutory decree and obtained an order to show cause. In her affidavit she averred that "the minor children * * * are in need of dental and medical services, and plaintiff is not financially able to pay same"; that defendant has not paid Mrs. Rogers the $1,298.90; that $100 monthly is insufficient for the support of the children, due to the increase of living costs. She demanded (1) increase of allowance to $100 monthly each for the boys' support; (2) an itemized report of the money received for the home place; (3) the balance due her on the interlocutory decree; and (4) that "defendant be ordered to pay all medical and dental bills which have been incurred by plaintiff for medical and dental treatment furnished or to be furnished to the children of the parties hereto."

She averred that from 1951 to the date of her last petition she had paid a total of $1,070.12 for dental and orthodontic treatments for the children.

Thereafter, July 13, 1955, defendant procured an order to show cause re modification with reference to custody. He averred that: (1) he had remarried; (2) he resides with his wife and her two minor children in a three bedroom house; (3) his son Roger Jeffrey, fourteen years of age, wishes to live with defendant and wife and had said so; (4) defendant and wife desire Roger Jeffrey to live with them; he prays that the custody of Roger be awarded to him.

At the joint hearing of both orders to show cause July 20, 1955, the trial judge interviewed the two boys; made no report or specific finding as to the wishes of Roger, but after hearing both parties testify made its order on August 5, 1955, as follows:

"OSC's re modification, heretofore submitted July 27, 1955:

"Defendant's OSC re modification denied. Plaintiff's OSC granted in part. The judgment is ordered modified to order the defendant to pay all reasonable medical and dental bills for the minor children, including the sums all ready [sic] expended by the plaintiff in the sum of $1,070.12. The plaintiff is ordered to take the minor child, Jeffrey, to an endicrinologist [sic] and the defendant is ordered to pay the bills for the diagnosis and treatment of any glandular disorder that may exist. The back medical bills are to be paid to the plaintiff by the defendant at the rate of $80 per month, commencing September 1, 1955 and continuing until the full amount is paid. It is further ordered that the defendant pay the sum of $200 additional attorney's fees direct to the attorney for the plaintiff, payable $20 per month commencing September 1, 1955 and continuing until the full amount has been paid."

Defendant's motion was denied in its entirety and in behalf of his appeal he contends that it was an abuse of discretion for the court to deny his request to have Roger Jeffrey live with him and his wife for two reasons, to wit: (1) Roger is 14 years of age and by reason of the divorce of the parents entitled to choose the parent with whom he is to live; (2) respondent is living in an illicit relationship with another man.

[1, 2] In support of his claim that Roger Jeffrey has the right to choose his place of abode, appellant cites Probate Code, § 1406 and Ludlow v. Ludlow, 89 Cal.App.2d 610, 201 P.2d 579. The cited case fully recognizes the doctrine that in determining the custody of minor children, the primary consideration is the welfare of the minors. At page 617 of 89 Cal.App.2d, 201 P.2d 579 the court discusses section 1406, supra, which relates to appointment of a guardian of a minor; but there is no question of guardianship before us and the cited case and statute are not controlling here. Not only is there no testimony of Roger that he preferred to reside in the home of his father, but pursuant to appellant's request, the court conferred alone with the boys and thereafter denied appellant's motion. It is presumed that the court did its duty in conferring with Roger, in subsequently denying appellant's motion and in deciding for the best interests of the son.

[3, 4] The second basis of his objection to respondent as custodian of Roger is that she is not legally married to her new husband. The facts are that while the final decree had not wholly dissolved respondent's marriage to appellant when she embarked in her new venture, she had apparently done her best to qualify for a second marriage. She first contracted with her new husband and celebrated a ceremonial marriage in Mexico. She thereby evidenced no abandonment of the moral code, but sought to conform with its precepts. Her judgment was not good but she believed and people around her believed she was married. Thereafter, she evidently acquired new knowledge of the law and tried to comply. Four years after her interlocutory, she was again married to her second husband in the state of Nevada. She had, again, neglected to have her final decree entered, but she and her new husband believed they had contracted a valid marriage. Because she had misjudged the force and effect of her interlocutory decree, she is not to be condemned as a bad woman. Such censure is not wholly deserved. Erroneous action too frequently occurs due to the ubiquitous advisors who talk before seeking the correct advice. By reason of respondent's contracting a marriage, solemnizing it after forms of law and thereafter living with her as his wife, they were presumed to have been married. Hamburgh v. Hys, 22 Cal.App.2d 508, 71 P.2d 301.

[5] But, turning now to those parts of the order requiring affirmative action by appellant, it appears that the obligation imposed upon appellant to pay the cost of a diagnosis of Roger Jeffrey by an endocrinologist and for the necessary treatments "of any glandular disorder that may exist" is a reasonable order. The very health and normal growth and development of the child may depend wholly upon the maintenance of the proper relationship of the glands of his body. A neglect of their care and treatment could prove fatal. There was no abuse of discretion in the making of such order.

[6] Also, the order for appellant to pay a reasonable fee for the service of respondent's counsel is in accordance with the statute, Civ.Code, § 137, and with the customary practice in such cases. Two hundred dollars is a fair charge for an attorney's services in obtaining the order of August 5, 1955 (supra). The payment of $200 in monthly installments of $20 each is a fair disposition of respondent's claim for his services in presenting her motion and for opposing appellant's motion for a modification of the interlocutory decree.

[7–10] That part of the order alluded to above requiring "defendant to pay all reasonable medical and dental bills for the minor children, including the sums all ready [sic] expended by the plaintiff, in the sum of $1070.12" is erroneous. There is no statutory authority for requiring a husband to pay bills that have already been paid by the wife for the care of their minor children, except by way of enforcing an order previously made but ignored by the husband. Except as specified in a court order, the father is not liable to the mother, and an action against him cannot be maintained by her for the support of his children after a decree of divorce and custody has been awarded to the mother. The jurisdiction the court retains is to modify its judgment with reference to the custody and education of the minor children, or to make a new order with reference thereto. But such jurisdiction "is not for the purpose of reimbursing her for any expenditures she may have voluntarily made in that behalf." Such jurisdiction is to provide for such expenditures " 'as may be subsequently incurred by reason of the direction that may be given regarding such care and education.' " Dimon v. Dimon, 40 Cal.2d 516, 524, 254 P.2d 528, 532. The trial court in 1951 considered the demands of respondent for medical and dental treatments for the children and presumably included in its award of monthly child support an amount sufficient for medical and dental care. It thus appears that the demand for payment of such orthodontic and dental treatments was adjudicated by the original order pendente lite, and was therefore illegally adjudged by the court on August 5, 1955.

While the evidence shows that appellant's earning power was increasing during 1955, he has not yet gained such headway as to require of him such a demonstration of chivalry as would operate a substantial injustice. He stands squarely upon his legal rights and this decision is an attempt to declare them as to the issues presented and nothing more.

It is therefore ordered that the order of August 5, 1955, is reversed; that it be and is stricken and, in lieu thereof, the following be entered, to wit:

The orders to show cause re modification of the interlocutory decree having duly come on for hearing and witnesses on behalf of the parties having been sworn, and having testified and argument of counsel having been made, it is ordered:

That the transfer of the custody of Roger Jeffrey to appellant is hereby denied;

That plaintiff shall conduct the son Roger Jeffrey to an endocrinoligist for diagnosis and treatments and defendant is ordered to pay reasonable bills thereby incurred for the treatment of such glandular disorder as may exist;

That defendant pay the sum of $200 to plaintiff's counsel for their services in preparing and presenting plaintiff's cause; $100 payable forthwith, the balance in monthly installments of $20 each commencing September 1, 1956.

Plaintiff shall have no other or further relief than that herein specified.

v.

Joseph C. STURGIS, Yellow Cab Company, a corporation, et al., Defendants, Cross-Complainants and Appellants.

Civ. 16764.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

July 9, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 8, 1956.

Hearing Denied Sept. 6, 1956.

Reciprocal negligence actions arising from intersectional collision between taxicab and another automobile. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Theresa Meikle, J., entered judgment denying recovery to both sides, and owner and operator of taxicab appealed. The District Court of Appeal held that admission, over objection of owner and operator of taxicab, of police officer's testimony that other motorist, during investigation at scene of accident, told the police officer that he saw taxicab coming but that he thought taxicab operator would stop for the arterial sign was, if error, not prejudicial, in view of other testimony given by other motorist.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Automobiles ⚷171(5)

Where street is protected by stop sign at only one side of intersection, such street does not become a through highway only for traffic intended to use that side of street. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 511 (a) (4), 582.

2. Appeal and Error ⚷882(12), 928(4)

Where showing was not made as to who had requested complained of instruction or whether court gave such instruction without a request, it would be presumed to have been given at request of appellants, and appellants would not be heard to complain of giving of an instruction which they had requested.

3. Automobiles ⚷171(9), 246(47)

Where taxicab driver was confronted by stop sign and other motorist was not, and there were no other automobiles in intersection in which taxicab and other motorist's automobile collided, taxicab driver, who allegedly had stopped pursuant to the stop sign, should not have moved into the intersection when motorist's vehicle, which was not confronted by a stop sign, was so near as to constitute an immediate hazard, and therefore giving of instruction pertaining to the yielding of right of way at intersection to other vehicles which constitute an immediate hazard was not error. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 471(b), 552.

4. Witnesses ⚷268(3)

Where part of conversation is given in evidence by one party, whole of conversation, in so far as it is material to the same subject, may be inquired into by the other party, even though conversation given in evidence by other party embraces other party's self-serving declarations. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1854.

5. Appeal and Error ⚷1051(1)

In reciprocal negligence actions arising from intersectional collision between taxicab and other automobile, admission, over objection of owner and operator of taxicab, of police officer's testimony that other motorist, during investigation at scene of accident, told the police officer that he saw taxicab coming but that he thought taxicab operator would stop for the arterial sign, was, if error, not prejudicial, in view of other testimony given by other motorist. PER CURIAM.

These are reciprocal negligence actions with relation to an intersection collision. The jury denied recovery to both sides. Only Sturgis, the driver of a taxicab involved in the collision and Yellow Cab Company, the owner of the cab and employer of Sturgis, have appealed from the judgment which denies them recovery against Davis, the owner and operator of the Buick with which the cab collided. The appeal is not based on insufficiency of the evidence but solely on alleged errors in instruction and admission of evidence.

The accident happened on January 26, 1952, in full daylight at the intersection of Jones Street and North Point Street in San Francisco. Jones Street runs generally north and south; North Point Street east and west. Appellant Sturgis was driving his cab north on Jones Street in the direction of North Point Street. The entrance to the latter street is there controlled by a stop sign on the southeast corner of the intersection. This was the only stop sign controlling the intersection from any side. Davis was driving his Buick westerly on North Point, nearing the intersection from the east. Sturgis testified in substance that he made a stop at the stop sign; he saw the Davis car then an estimated 150 feet away going approximately 30 or 25 miles an hour. Having quickly looked in the other directions and seeing no vehicles he drove into the intersection about three car lengths going 10 to 12 miles an hour. He then saw Davis about 100 feet away. Sturgis then drove on straight with nothing in front of him and he does not remember anything further until he awoke in an ambulance. (The right front of the taxicab had been hit by the front of the Davis car.) Davis testified that he was approximately 50 feet east of Jones Street going 25 miles an hour when he saw the taxi coming down Jones about 30 feet south of the stop sign, going 30 to 35 miles. Davis then looked in the other directions and he was about 30 feet from Jones, still going 25 miles, when he saw the taxi with its front part in the intersection driving the same speed as before, about 35 miles. He then braked but could not prevent the collision.

Appellants predicate error on the refusal of the court to give the following instruction offered by them:

"There was no arterial stop sign on the North side of North Point Street. The only stop sign at the intersection of Jones and North Point Street was at the South East corner. You are instructed that the stop sign on the Southeast corner made the intersection a through highway only for eastbound traffic. Vehicles on the North side of North Point Street going West across the intersection of Jones Street, the direction in which Mr. Davis was proceeding, were not on a through highway. The speed limits for Mr. Davis' automobile under those circumstances in traversing the intersection was 15 miles per hour."

[1] The refusal was justified because the instruction did not correctly state the law. There is no authority for the stated rule that when a street is at one side only protected by a stop sign that street is a through highway for the traffic only intended to use that side of the street. Casselman v. Hartford Acc. and Indem. Co., 36 Cal.App.2d 700, 98 P.2d 539 on which appellants rely does not so hold. In the Casselman case the plaintiff tried to cross an east west highway coming from the north from a small road not blocked by a stop sign. His car was hit in the southern part of the highway by the car of defendant coming from the west. The court held that the highway at the point of the collision was not a through highway because there was no stop sign at the point where the road on which plaintiff was driving entered it. 36 Cal.App.2d at page 706, 98 P.2d 539. It was evidently held that in the relation of the parties there involved no part of the highway could be considered a through highway to which the rule of section 582 of the Vehicle Code as to a vehicle entering a through highway applied. Neither is section 511 of the Vehicle Code authority for a speed limit of 15 miles per hour in an intersection on a street which is not a through highway. A prima facie speed limit to that effect is given in section 511(4) only for intersections with obstructed view. Both the prima facie character of the limit and the condition of an obstructed view are omitted in the instruction. No contention had been made at the trial nor evidence offered that the view at the intersection was obstructed.

Appellants also complain of the giving of an instruction in the words of section 552 of the Vehicle Code as follows:

"Section 552 of the Vehicle Code of the State of California, in full force and effect at the time of the happening of said accident, provides as follows:

"Subdivision a. 'The driver of any vehicle shall stop as required by Section 577 of this code at the entrance to a through highway and shall yield the right of way to other vehicles which have entered the intersection from the through highway or which are approaching so closely on the through highway as to constitute an immediate hazard.'

"Subdivision b. 'Said driver having so yielded may proceed and the drivers of all other vehicles approaching the intersection on the through highway shall yield the right of way to the vehicle so about to enter or cross the through highway.'"

[2, 3] Appellants are not in a position to complain of the giving of said instruction because it does not appear from the record who requested the instruction or whether the court gave it without a request. It is then presumed to have been given at the request of appellants who cannot complain of the giving of an instruction they requested. Lynch v. Birdwell, 44 Cal.2d 839, 847, 285 P.2d 919; Smith v. Pellissier, 134 Cal.App.2d 562, 570–571, 286 P.2d 66. Moreover we do not think that the giving of the instruction was prejudicial even if North Point street at this intersection should not be considered a through highway because it was not protected to the north by a stop sign. (There may have been here a "stop intersection" as meant in section 471(b) of the Vehicle Code; No clear rule governing the crossing of such intersection is found in the Vehicle Code.) The relations of the parties was analogous to the one which would have existed if North Point was a through highway, appellant Sturgis being confronted by a stop sign, respondent not. No other cars were in the intersection. It seems the only sensible rule that a party who has in such situation stopped pursuant to a stop sign should not move into the intersection when other vehicles not opposed by a stop sign are so near as to constitute an immediate hazard. It is evidently not true, as contended by appellants, that the instruction would give Davis the right of way even when he was still 150 feet away when Sturgis had already proceeded through most of the intersection. (See subd. b of the instruction.)

[4, 5] Finally appellants complain of the admission over their objection of testimony by police officer Walsh, who investigated the accident, that Davis during the investigation at the scene of the accident told him that he saw the other vehicle coming from the left and that he thought that the operator of that car would stop his car for the arterial sign, which statement according to appellants is inadmissible self-serving hearsay. Respondent contends that the evidence though hearsay was admissible under the rule of section 1854 of the Code of Civil Procedure that when part of the conversation is given in evidence by one party, the whole of the conversation, insofar as it is material to the same subject may be inquired into by the other, because appellants had elicited from the witness Walsh on direct Davis' statement to him that he had driven 30 miles an hour and had braked only when the front of the taxicab was in the intersection. The rule stated applies also when the conversation given in evidence by the other party embraces the latter's self-serving declarations, Hinton v. Welch, 179 Cal. 463, 466, 177 P. 282; Wescoatt v. Meeker, 63 Cal.App.2d 618, 627 et seq., 147 P.2d 41; 18 Cal.Jur.2d 573, Evidence § 129. In Risdon v. Yates, 145 Cal. 210, 213, 78 P. 641, 642 it is said: "If an admission is testified to by a witness against a party, such party has the right, in cross-examination, to bring out the whole of what was said in direct connection with, and pertaining to, the admission." The trial court could consider the expectation that Sturgis would stop as directly relating to the admission of the driving on at a speed of 30 miles, elicited by appellants. What actually makes the self-serving statement objectionable to appellants is the intimation, not definitely expressed, that Sturgis did not stop. The trial court would have been entitled to exclude the statement if it thought this effect prejudicial. Avery v. Wiltsee, 177 Cal. 484, 486 et seq., 171 P. 95. Under the circumstances of this case, however, even if the admission would have been error, the effect could not have been sufficiently prejudicial to justify a reversal. The testimony of Davis stated before had already told the jury that Davis saw the taxi within so short a time driving at a speed of 30 miles to the intersection and at the same speed within the intersection as to indicate that Sturgis did not make a stop at the stop sign, although at the exact moment at which the taxi was at said stop sign Davis according to his testimony was looking in another direction. The same intimation in the statement made to officer Walsh can then not have had a seriously prejudicial effect.

Judgment affirmed.

Civ. 5402.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

July 3, 1956.

Hearing Granted Aug. 30, 1956.

Proceeding wherein the Superior Court, San Diego County, L. N. Turrentine, J., entered an order fixing an inheritance tax. The executrix and her attorney appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that executor's commissions and attorney's fees to be deducted in computation of inheritance tax were those provided by a section of the Probate Code as in effect at time of death and not as provided by such section after amendment which became effective on a date after date of death but before filing of the report of the inheritance tax appraiser.

Order affirmed.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from an order fixing an inheritance tax. The decedent died on July 19, 1955. Her will was probated and an executrix appointed on August 5, 1955. The report of the inheritance tax appraiser was filed December 9, 1955, showing a tax due of $20,734.49. The executrix and her attorney filed an objection to the report on the sole ground that the deductions allowed for executor's commissions and attorneys fees were not in accordance with Section 901 of the Probate Code, as amended by the 1955 legislature. After a hearing the court found that these commissions and fees were computed in the report in accordance with Section 901 as those provisions were in effect on the date of the decedent's death, but not in accordance with those provisions under the amendment which became effective on September 7, 1955; and that these commissions and fees were correctly computed in the report filed by the inheritance tax appraiser. An order was entered overruling the objection made, and fixing the inheritance tax at $20,734.49. The executrix and her attorney have appealed from this order.

* Opinion vacated 303 P.2d 745.

The appellants contend that the amendment to Section 901 which became effective on September 7, 1955, affected a matter of procedure only; that procedural amendments apply to pending cases; that an application for legal fees is a separate proceeding begun after probate proceedings have begun, and should be governed by the law in force when the fees are allowed; that there is no vested right to the fees, and the right thereto does not accrue, until they are finally fixed by the court; that the legatees take the property subject to all expenses of administration, of which such commissions and fees are a part; and that the legatees have no vested right in a limitation of such fees.

The appellants rely on McClurg v. McClurg, 212 Cal. 15, 297 P. 27, and In re Estate of Spires, 126 Cal.App. 174, 14 P.2d 340. They also argue that certain statements made in Re Estate of Parker, 200 Cal. 132, 251 P. 907, 911, 49 A.L.R. 1025 are not controlling because they are dicta since the amendment there in question was passed after the order appealed from was made. It is also pointed out that six years after the Parker case was decided the Supreme Court denied a hearing in the Spires case.

The McClurg case held that the rule that a new law will not be presumed to be retroactive in effect has no application to purely procedural matters arising in the course of litigation begun before the amendment. In the Parker case, the trial court had applied an amendment allowing increased fees for extraordinary services, the amendment having been passed after the order appealed from was made. The order was reversed on the ground that the amendment could not be given a retroactive effect. The court also said: "A statute will not be given a retroactive construction by which it will impose liabilities not existing at the time of its passage. 'Laws which create new obligations, or impose new duties, or exact new penalties because of past transactions have been universally reprobated * * * and it is to be presumed that no statute is intended to have such effect unless the contrary clearly appears.'" Similar statements appear in Re Estate of Benvenuto, 183 Cal. 382, 191 P. 678, 679, where the court said: "But the Legislature cannot, by amending the law after his death, impose upon the property of a decedent any new or additional burdens". While these statements may be dicta in those instances, they state a well recognized principle of law. In the Spires case the trial court had refused to apply an amendment allowing increased fees for extraordinary services which became effective before the application for fees were considered. The order was reversed, it being held that the heirs take at the time of death subject to expenses of administration, of which compensation to the executor is a part; that the right of the executor to such compensation does not vest or accrue until the amount of his compensation is determined and allowed; and that the law at the time the order fixing the compensation was made was the law to be applied. It may be noted that the Spires case involved extraordinary fees which are not only discretionary but depend upon unusual matters arising during the probate proceedings. The allowance of such fees is naturally more procedural in character than the allowance of fixed statutory fees, which is a matter of clerical computation.

The Spires case seems to lend some support to the contention here made that the 1955 amendment to Section 901 would apply in this case, insofar as the allowance of fees is concerned. However, this view would seem to conflict with the principles stated in the Parker and Benvenuto cases that a new law will not be applied where it imposes new burdens with respect to a past situation, and will be presumed not to have been intended to have such an effect unless the contrary clearly appears. While the allowance of ordinary executor and attorney fees may be a part of the expense of administration, and while the right thereto may not become vested until they are allowed, the allowance of new increased fees would seem not to be a mere matter of procedure but one which will, necessarily, impose a new or additional burden upon a preexisting situation. It is hardly logical to consider an increase in such fees as merely procedural when it conclusively appears that it is something which will necessarily result in an increased burden on the estate by imposing a further liability which did not exist at the time the new law was passed. In considering another phase of this inheritance tax it has been held that the transferees acquire a vested right, in both the tax rates and the amounts which are to be exempted from the tax, as of the time their interests are vested, (which would here be the time of death) and that neither of these elements can be thereafter changed. In re Estate of Potter, 188 Cal. 55, 204 P. 826.

However the conflict in legal principles thus suggested may be finally resolved, the result is not controlling here. The Spires case involved only the allowance of fees under an amendment to the probate law. No fees have as yet been allowed or refused in the instant case, and the question as to what fees should eventually be allowed is not directly involved here and need not be decided. If it be assumed that such increased fees may properly be allowed, it would not necessarily follow that such higher fees are allowable as deductions for inheritance tax purposes. The question here is as to the proper interpretation of pertinent sections of the Revenue and Taxation Code, and whether increased fees, if eventually allowed, are allowable as deductions for inheritance tax purposes.

[1, 2] The right to the inheritance tax vests in the state at the time of death, or at the time of the transfer in question. A new law which reduces the tax which would otherwise be due is not a mere matter of procedure, but is one involving a substantive right of the state with a corresponding burden imposed on the estate and heirs. Since substantive rights and duties are affected, the mechanics of fixing the amount of the tax should not be changed by a new law, at least in the absence of a clear intention to that effect. It has long been considered in this state, in general, that inheritance taxes are fixed and determined as of the date of death. In considering a transfer before death the court said in Riley v. Havens, 193 Cal. 432, 225 P. 275, 276: "It is the settled law of this state that the taxability of such transfers must be determined by the law in effect at the time the transfer is made, * * * and no subsequent act of the Legislature can thereafter add to or diminish the tax or otherwise disturb it." The same principles should be applied in construing the provisions of the inheritance tax law now found in the Revenue and Taxation Code.

Section 13988 of that code provides that expenses of administration shall be deducted from the appraised value of the property, including ordinary commissions under section 901 of the Probate Code and ordinary attorneys fees under section 910, both of which are to be "computed on the value of the decedent's estate as of" the date of death. This clearly provides that the amounts to be deducted are to be computed on the value of the property at the time of death, and the reasonable inference is that the intention was that these amounts be also computed on the fee schedules then in effect. That this was the intention is indicated by the general policy long followed with respect to such taxes, and is confirmed by other sections of the Revenue and Taxation Code relating the amount of the taxes to the date of death. Section 13402 provides that the tax is to be computed upon the value of that portion of the property "in excess of the exemptions allowable" on the date of death, and at the rates then in effect. Section 13408 provides that several transfers are to be treated as a single transfer as of the date of death. Section 13951 provides that the value of the property is to be taken as of the date of death no matter when the transfer occurred. Section 13952 provides that a transfer determinable upon any future event is to be valued as of the date of death. Section 13956 provides that in determining the value of any estate or interest no allowance shall be made for any contingency which might defeat the interest. Section 13983 provides that debts owed by the decedent at the time of death are deductible. Section 13987 provides that general taxes which are a lien at the time of death are deductible. And section 14102 provides that the tax is due and payable at the time of death.

That this was the intention of Section 13988 is further confirmed by other sections outlining the proceedings for determining the tax. An inheritance tax appraiser must be appointed to ascertain and submit a report on the amount of the tax, if any, which is due, 14501. The appraiser must file such a report, 14506, and the clerk must give notice thereof, 14508. If no objections are filed the court may make an order confirming the report and "fixing the tax". 14509. If objections are filed a hearing date must be fixed with notice, 14511, and for the purpose of the hearing the report is presumed to be correct, 14512. Upon completion of the hearing the court may make an appropriate order, 14513.

Section 1024 of the Probate Code further provides that before any distribution is made all inheritance taxes must be paid. Section 922 provides that the executor must render a final account when the estate is in condition to be closed. Sections 901 and 910 provide for the allowance of fees based upon "the amount of estate accounted for" by the executor. Under the procedure thus provided, the amount of the inheritance tax is usually determined before the amount of the commissions and attorneys fees is to be fixed and allowed.

All of these considerations strongly indicate that it was the intention of Section 13988 to provide that the fees to be deducted pursuant to Sections 901 and 910 were those provided for in those sections as they were in effect at the time of the death, and we so hold. To change the amount of the deductions allowed would have the practical effect of changing the rates, which may not be done. In re Estate of Stanford, 126 Cal. 112, 54 P. 259, 58 P. 462, 45 L.R.A. 788. Whatever was meant by the 1955 amendment to Section 901 of the Probate Code, with respect to its application to pending cases, it must be held that it was not intended to affect or reduce the inheritance tax as provided for in the Revenue and Taxation Code. It follows that the court did not err in overruling the objection made, and in fixing the inheritance tax in accordance with the law in effect at the time of death.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

Milton KIND, Petitioner,

v.

The SUPERIOR COURT of the State of California, in and for the COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES, Respondent.

Civ. 21843.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.
July 13, 1956.

Proceeding for writ of prohibition to prevent prosecution of petitioner for willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously soliciting certain person to commit and join in commission of crime of robbery on ground that testimony of person so solicited was not sufficient of itself to support the information. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, J. pro tem., held that uncorroborated testimony of person solicited to commit crime was sufficient to make it appear that offense had been committed and that there was probable cause to believe that petitioner committed it.

Writ of prohibition denied and restraining order discharged.

1. Criminal Law ⚷238

In order that person charged with a crime may be held to answer for it by committing magistrate, it is not necessary that commission of offense be proved but only that the evidence, rationally viewed, be sufficient for it to appear that the offense charged has been committed, and that there is sufficient cause to believe that the defendant is guilty of that offense. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 653f, 995.

2. Criminal Law ⚷238

Under Penal statute providing that if it appears from examination that public offense has been committed and there is sufficient cause to believe that defendant is guilty thereof defendant must be held to answer, the word "appears" merely requires that the people present evidence sufficient to make it reasonably probable that crime has been committed and is not synonymous with "prove" and does not require establishment of crime as on trial of action. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 653f, 871, 872.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Appears" and "Prove".

3. Criminal Law ⚷238

In prosecution for willfully, unlawfully and feloniously soliciting certain person to join in commission of crime of robbery, testimony of person so solicited was amply sufficient to make it appear that offense had been committed and that there was probable cause to believe petitioner had committed it. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 653f, 995.

S. Ernest Roll, Dist. Atty., Jere J. Sullivan, Lewis Watnick, Fred N. Whichello, Deputy Dist. Attys., Los Angeles, for respondent.

NOURSE, Justice pro tem.

Petitioner is charged by information filed by the District Attorney of the County of Los Angeles with violation of section 653f of the Penal Code. His motion made pursuant to section 995 of the Penal Code to dismiss the information upon the grounds that the evidence before the committing magistrate was insufficient to prove the offense having been denied, he seeks a writ of prohibition from this court.

The information charges petitioner with willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously soliciting one M. E. Buckner to commit and join in the commission of the crime of robbery in violation of the provisions of section 653f of the Penal Code.

Section 653f reads in part as follows: "Every person who solicits another * * to commit or join in the commission of * * * robbery * * * is punishable by imprisonment in the county jail not longer than one year or in the state prison not longer than five years * * *. Such offense must be proved by the testimony of two witnesses, or of one witness and corroborating circumstances." [Emphasis added.]

At the preliminary hearing the only evidence produced by the People was the testimony of Buckner. He testified in detail as to his solicitation by petitioner to commit an armed robbery in the place of business of petitioner's employer.

Petitioner does not question the sufficiency of Buckner's testimony to show all of the essential elements of the crime charged, nor does he contend that the evidence was insufficient to give reasonable cause to believe petitioner guilty thereof; but contends that inasmuch as no other witness was called and no evidence of corroborating circumstances connecting petitioner with the crime charged was produced by the People, the evidence received by the committing magistrate was insufficient to support the information.

[1] In order, however, that a person charged with a crime may be held to answer for it by a committing magistrate, it is not necessary that the commission of the offense be proved but only that the evidence, rationally viewed, be sufficient for it to appear that the offense charged has been committed, and that there is sufficient cause to believe that the defendant is guilty of that offense. Section 872, Penal Code, provides in part, "If, however, it appears from the examination that a public offense has been committed, and there is sufficient cause to believe the defendant guilty thereof," the defendant must be held to answer. [Emphasis added.] The People were not required to produce that quantum of evidence which section 653f requires be produced at the trial to prove the offense, but only sufficient evidence to give a rational appearance that the offense charged had been committed.

Without discussing sections 871 or 872 of the Penal Code, our Supreme Court has in two recent cases held that an indictment or information will not be set aside or a prosecution thereof prohibited if there is rational ground for the conclusion that an offense has been committed and that the accused is guilty of it. Calhoun v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 18, 291 P.2d 474; Bompensiero v. Superior Court, 44 Cal.2d 178, 183, 281 P.2d 250, 254.

In Bompensiero v. Superior Court, supra, the Supreme Court said, "Probable cause is shown if a man of ordinary caution or prudence would be led to believe and conscientiously entertain a strong suspicion of the guilt of the accused. [Citation.] An indictment will not be set aside or a prosecution thereon prohibited if there is some rational ground for assuming the possibility that an offense has been committed and the accused is guilty of it. [Citations.]" [Emphasis added.]

[2] The verbs to prove and to appear are not synonymous. Under section 872 of the Penal Code the People need not demonstrate that the offense charged has been committed, but need only present evidence sufficient to make it seem reasonably probable that the crime has been committed; while at the trial of the action the People must establish beyond a reasonable doubt the commission of the crime and, in crimes such as that charged here, must produce the quantum of evidence required by the statute.

The situation here is no different from a proceeding before the committing magistrate where the People, to prove the commission of the crime and the defendant's connection therewith, produce only the testimony of an accomplice. In such a case the evidence of the accomplice is insufficient to support a conviction. Yet it has been uniformly held that the testimony of an accomplice before the committing magistrate is sufficient to support an information based thereon. People v. McRae, 31 Cal.2d 184, 187 P.2d 741; In re Schwitalla, 36 Cal.App. 511, 172 P. 617.

[3] In the present case the testimony of Buckner was amply sufficient to show both the offense and probable cause to believe that petitioner had committed it. We must therefore deny the petition.

The writ of prohibition is denied and the restraining order heretofore issued is discharged.

2. Dismissal and Nonsuit 🔑45

Statute requiring trial within five years from the date an action is begun is mandatory where applicable. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 583.

3. Dismissal and Nonsuit 🔑60(1)

Purpose of statute requiring trial within five years from the date an action is begun is to prevent avoidable delay for too long a period, but it is not designed arbitrarily to close the proceedings in all events in five years in view of fact it permits parties to extend the period without limitation by written stipulation. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc., § 583.

4. Dismissal and Nonsuit 🔑60(3)

In applying statute requiring trial within five years from the date an action is begun, the time during which for all practical purposes going to trial would be impractical and futile is to be disregarded. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 583.

5. Dismissal and Nonsuit 🔑60(2)

Statute requiring trial within five years from date an action is begun does not contemplate that time consumed in service of process, disposition of demurrers, amendment of pleadings, if necessary, usual and reasonable time consumed in waiting for a place on the court's trial or in securing the attendance of a jury and such like usual necessary proceedings are to be excluded from a computation of the five-year period. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 583.

6. Dismissal and Nonsuit 🔑67, 73

Each defendant requiring dismissal under statute which requires trial within five years from the date an action is begun must ask it of the Superior Court, and the defendant asking is entitled to have his right to dismissal determined as to himself alone. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 583.

7. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⚿60(6)

A letter from defendant's attorney stating that in accordance with a suggestion of one of the attorneys for the plaintiff he would stipulate that a trial date be vacated to be rested on stipulation or on request of either party thereafter, could not be construed as a stipulation for an extension beyond the five years allowed by statute for bringing an action to trial from the date the action is begun. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 583.

8. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⚿60(1)

No extension within the five-year period allowed by a statute for bringing an action to trial from the date the action is begun not extending or, reasonably construed, extending the time for trial beyond the five-year period is capable of extending such period. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 583.

9. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⚿60(6)

The written stipulation referred to in statute providing any action shall be dismissed by the court in which the same shall have been commenced unless such action is brought to trial within five years after the plaintiff has filed his action, except where the parties have filed a stipulation in writing that the time may be extended means a written stipulation extending the time for trial beyond the statutory period. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 583.

10. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⚿60(6)

Before estoppel can arise so as to prevent application of statute requiring that trial be commenced within five years of the date an action is begun, there must have been a duty to act and a failure to act in accordance with such duty, or some act in the nature of prevention. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc., § 583.

11. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⚿60(2, 3)

Where record in separate actions by bus passengers to recover damages for personal injuries allegedly caused by the concurring negligence of the operaters of a bus and an automobile failed to show any excuse why the actions had not been brought to trial within five years after the actions were filed or to establish any period of time when there existed circumstances justifying the exclusion of any period from the statutory period requiring trial within five years from the date an action is begun, the actions would be dismissed as to moving parties. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 583.

Theodore Tamba, San Francisco, for petitioners.

Ernest E. Emmons, Jr., San Francisco, for real party in interest.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

[1] Two actions were begun in the respondent court, in each of which the plaintiffs sought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been negligently inflicted. The actions were consolidated for trial. In each certain defendants moved for dismissal under Section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the statute which requires trial within five years from the date an action is begun. Respondent court denied both motions, and the moving parties have petitioned this court for a writ of mandate directing the respondent court to dismiss the actions. Both petitions have been presented together, and a single opinion will suffice to dispose of the issues presented by each. The facts in each case will be presented under the rule that we must here adopt that view of the facts most favorable to the ruling of the trial court.

In Continental Pacific Lines v. Superior Court, Mary E. Krepps, real party, the following appears from the record: Real party began her action on September 26, 1950. She alleged both corporations, Continental Pacific Lines and West Coast Bus Lines, Ltd., were, on the occasion of her injuries, operating a bus in which she was a passenger and which was driven by their employee. She alleged the accident to have been caused by the concurring negligence of the bus driver and a Leonard Hammond, who was driving an automobile owned by one Frank Evans. She joined the bus driver, Hammond, and Evans as defendants. Petitioners answered the complaint on October 10, 1950. They admitted that Mary Krepps was a passenger for hire in a bus owned and operated by them. The cause was set for trial in April of 1953, but before that date real party's attorneys (not her present counsel) asked that the case be dropped from the calendar. Petitioners' attorney, Theodore Tamba, at that time wrote to the clerk of the court as follows: "This will serve to confirm statement made by * * * one of the attorneys for the plaintiff. * * * In accordance with his suggestion, I would stipulate that the trial date be vacated, to be reset on stipulation or on request of either party hereafter." The cause was dropped from the trial calendar, and on September 16, 1955, a trial date was again asked. Petitioners then filed a demand for a jury trial. On October 26, 1955, more than five years after the action had been commenced, petitioners filed a motion to dismiss because the cause had not been brought to trial within five years. In support of their motion they filed affidavits in which they stated they had been ready to proceed to trial at all times after issue joined. It is not contended they ever at any time requested any continuance or requested that trial be postponed. From counter-affidavits the following substantially appears: When the complaint was filed, plaintiff and her attorneys did not know the name of the bus driver. The attorneys intended to take his deposition as a material witness. We quote the following from an affidavit made by plaintiff's present counsel: "That by correspondence with and the oral representation of the said Theodore Tamba, attorney for said defendant bus company, said attorney represented to plaintiff's attorneys that Frank Reprey, bus driver, resided outside the state of California, and that the defendant West Coast Trailways refused to permit him to return to California for the purpose of service on him of copies of Summons and Complaint or of a subpoena to take his deposition." The affiant further averred that as a result of the bus driver's being outside the state and of "the refusal by said attorney to produce said defendant in this state," service of summons and complaint on him, and service of subpoena to take his deposition before trial was "impossible and plaintiff was thereby prevented from serving him or taking his deposition." It was made to appear that the defendant bus driver was a material witness to the accident. The affiant made reference to the proceedings in the companion case (counsel for plaintiff were the same in each case), and asserted that they had been compelled to drop the companion case from the trial calendar because of their inability to obtain service of process on the bus driver. The affiant averred: "[T]hat as a result, it would have been a useless task for plaintiff herein to file a memorandum to set the case for trial; that efforts were continously made to ascertain the whereabouts of the said defendant Frank Reprey [the bus driver] from Theodore Tamba, attorney for defendant West Coast Trailways, without success." (Emphasis added.) The affiant further averred that despite the absence of the bus driver and the continued refusal of defendant and its counsel to produce the bus driver for service of process and for the taking of his deposition, the affiant filed a memorandum to set the action for trial on September 16, 1955, asking for trial by the court, whereupon the defendants, through their attorney, "knowing that the delay in the jury calendar would be greatest in getting the case to trial," made demand for a jury. Affiant then averred that the other two defendants, Hammond and Evans, since shortly after filing their answers, had been continuously residing outside the state, had continuously evaded service of process upon them; and that plaintiff had diligently sought for three years past to effect service of summons and complaint and of subpoenas for the taking of their depositions without success, "for the reason that said defendants reside outside the state of California and cannot be found within this state." Attorney Tamba by a counter-affidavit denied that he had at any time told attorneys for plaintiffs that the defendants for whom he appeared had refused to permit the driver of the bus to come to California for the purpose of having his deposition taken or otherwise. Here, of course, we must accept the version presented in the affidavit of the plaintiff in the action in opposition to the motion to dismiss, noting, however, what appears of record to be the case, that Mr. Tamba was not the attorney of record for the bus driver.

In the companion case begun by real parties Elma J. Bryant and Lynwood O. Johnson, an infant by his guardian ad litem, much the same showing was made in opposition to the motion to dismiss as hereinbefore related in case of Mary E. Krepps. There were the same allegations of representation by Mr. Tamba as to the bus driver's residence without the state and of the "refusal" to permit him to return. There was the same claim that the plaintiffs in the action had been unable to take the deposition of the bus driver. There was the same claim that by what they had done the defendants and their attorney had "prevented" the taking of that deposition or the service on the bus driver of summons and complaint. It was averred that a memorandum to set for trial had been filed on August 16, 1951, and that the trial had been set for November 26, 1951, but "because said defendant bus driver had not been served or his deposition taken, said action was dropped from the calendar to be reset by the filing of a new memorandum to set" ; and the affiant declared that "in the light of the absence of said defendant bus driver and the continual refusal * * * to produce him for service of summons and complaint or the taking of his deposition," the affiant had filed a memorandum to set the cause for trial on September 16, 1955, asking for a court trial; that a demand for jury had then been made by the defendants; that the bus driver had not been represented by an attorney in the action; and that the defendants Hammond and Evans, though appearing, had appeared in propria persona; that all three defendants had been absent from the state for more than three years prior to the date of the affidavit, and it was averred that "although plaintiff has during such period diligently sought to locate them through investigators and continued requests made to Theodore Tamba, attorney for defendant West Coast Trailways," it had all been without success.

Section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that:

> "* * * Any action * * * shall be dismissed by the court in which the same shall have been commenced * * * unless such action is brought to trial within five years after the plaintiff has filed his action, except where the parties have filed a stipulation in writing that the time may be extended and except where it be shown that the defendant has been absent from the State or concealed therein and his whereabouts unknown to plaintiff and not discoverable * * * upon due diligence, in which event said period of absence or concealment shall not be a part of said five-year period."

[2-4] The statute is mandatory where applicable. Anderson v. Superior Court, 187 Cal. 95, 97, 200 P. 963. Its purpose is to prevent avoidable delay for too long a period and it is not designed arbitrarily to close the proceedings at all events in five years since it permits the parties to extend the period without limitation by written stipulation. Christian v. Superior Court, 9 Cal.2d 526, 533, 71 P.2d 205, 112 A.L.R. 1153. It is settled case law that in applying the statute, the time during which, for all practical purposes, going to trial would be impracticable and futile is to be disregarded. The Supreme Court said in Pacific Greyhound Lines v. Superior Court, 28 Cal.2d 61, 65, 168 P.2d 665, 667:

> "The superior court action with which we are concerned was filed January 29, 1940; the motion to dismiss was made on February 21, 1945, twenty-three days after the completion of the calendar five-year period; this petition for writ of mandate was filed March 27, 1945, fifty-seven days after completion of the calendar five-year period. The sole question necessary for us to determine is whether petitioners have established that the evidence before the trial court on the motion to dismiss was as a matter of law insufficient to sustain its implied finding that for more than twenty-three days of the calendar five-year period it was 'impossible,' or 'impracticable and futile' either in an objective sense or 'due to excessive and unreasonable difficulty or expense,' to proceed to trial." See also Judson v. Superior Court, 21 Cal. 2d 11, 14, 129 P.2d 361, and Westphal v. Westphal, 61 Cal.App.2d 544, 550, 143 P.2d 405.

[5] We think it should be said that the quotation taken from the opinion in Pacific Greyhound Lines v. Superior Court, supra, cannot be taken from context and considered literally. If that were done, then there would have to be eliminated from the five-year calendar period the time necessary for service of process, settlement of the pleadings and the time when the parties were waiting for a trial date, for during those times it is, of course, impossible, impracticable and futile to proceed to trial. Before the statute was cast in its present form the five years began running when the answers had been filed. It was amended to measure the five years from the beginning of the action, and it was intended that the five years allowed should be considered sufficient to afford fair opportunity to bring a cause to trial, even though a part of the five-year period must necessarily be consumed in service of process, disposition of demurrers, amendment of pleadings, if necessary, usual and reasonable time consumed in waiting for a place on the court's calendar or in securing the attendance of a jury and such like usual and necessary proceedings; but the section does not contemplate that time consumed in such ordinary proceedings are to be excluded from a computation of the five-year period. Breakstone v. Giannini, 70 Cal.App.2d 224, 160 P.2d 887; Berri v. Superior Court, Cal. App., 267 P.2d 865. Under the old form of the section the filing of an amended complaint was held not to prolong the time when the action might be brought to trial. Anderson v. City of San Diego, 118 Cal. App.2d 726, 258 P.2d 842. And in DeRoode v. County of Placer, 112 Cal.App.2d 859, 247 P.2d 390, it was held that the five-year period prescribed commenced to run from the filing of the original complaint and not from the filing of an subsequent amended complaint. It was held in City of Pasadena v. City of Alhambra, 33 Cal.2d 908, 207 P.2d 17, that the time within the five calendar year period consumed by a reference was to be excluded. Said the court in that case in 33 Cal.2d at page 916, 207 P.2d at page 23:

> "The complaint was filed on September 23, 1937, and the trial was not commenced until May 18, 1944. A dismissal is made mandatory by section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure, except in certain cases, unless the action is brought to trial within five years after the plaintiff has filed his action. It is settled, however, that in computing the five-year period the time during which, 'for all practical purposes, going to trial would be impossible, whether this was because of total lack of jurisdiction in the strict sense, or because proceeding to trial would be both impracticable and futile,' is to be excluded. Christian v. Superior Court, 9 Cal.2d 526, 533, 71 P.2d 205, 208, 112 A.L.R. 1153 (time consumed by appeal from order granting change of venue); Pacific Greyhound Lines v. Superior Court, 28 Cal.2d 61, 64, 168 P.2d 665 (time during which one defendant was in military service and stay might have been granted); Judson v. Superior Court, 21 Cal.2d 11, 14, 129 P.2d 361 (time defendant avoided service of summons by evasion and concealment); Westphal v. Westphal, 61 Cal.App.2d 544, 143 P.2d 405 (time during which co-plaintiff had an appeal pending).
> "The order of reference was made on February 8, 1939; the referee's report was filed on July 16, 1943, and, > thereafter, respondents proceeded with reasonable dispatch to bring the cause to trial. The issues to be tried were dependent to a great extent upon the facts to be ascertained by the referee, and it would have been impracticable, if not futile, to proceed to trial prior to the completion of the report. It follows that the time consumed by the reference should be excluded in computing the five-year period, and that, therefore, the action was not subject to dismissal under the provisions of section 583.

> "Every recent major water law decision of this court has expressly or impliedly approved the reference procedure provided by section 24 [Water Commission Act] and has recommended, in view of the complexity of the factual issues in water cases and the great public interest involved that the trial courts seek the aid of the expert advice and assistance provided for in that section."

We quote the following from the Rose v. Knapp case, 38 Cal.2d 114, 117, 237 P.2d 981, 983:

> "The provision of section 583, requiring dismissal if an action is not brought to trial within five years after the filing of the complaint unless the parties have stipulated for an extension of the period, is mandatory, but it is subject to implied exceptions. As stated in Christian v. Superior Court, 9 Cal.2d 526, 532–533, 71 P.2d 205, 208, 112 A.L.R. 1153, 'The purpose of the statute is plain: to prevent avoidable delay for too long a period. It is not designed arbitrarily to close the proceeding at all events in five years * * *' and one exception has been recognized 'where, for all practical purposes, going to trial would be impossible, whether this was because of total lack of jurisdiction in the strict sense, or because proceeding to trial would be both impracticable and futile.' See also Pacific Greyhound Lines v. Superior Court, 28 Cal.2d 61, 67–68, 168 P.2d 665; City of Pasadena v. City of Alhambra, 33 Cal.2d 908, 916–917, 207 P.2d 17; Judson v. Superior Court, 21 Cal.2d 11, 14, 129 P.2d 361; Westphal v. Westphal, 61 Cal.App.2d 544, 550, 143 P.2d 405. What is impossible, impracticable or futile must, of course, be determined in the light of the facts of the particular case."

[6] It has been established by case law that each defendant requiring dismissal must ask it of the superior court and that a defendant so asking is entitled to have his right to dismissal determined as to himself alone, Larkin v. Superior Court, 171 Cal. 719, 726–727, 154 P. 841; Bank of America National Trust & Savings Association v. Superior Court, 15 Cal.App.2d 279, 280, 59 P.2d 461; Dowling v. Superior Court, 122 Cal.App. 443, 445, 10 P.2d 197 (decided under the previous form of the statute).

The trial court stated in a memorandum that it based its decision in part on the letter of Mr. Tamba and upon other features of the court files. As to this latter ground it was stipulated during oral argument that the files of the superior court which were not brought to this court did not contain any information necessary to our decision which this record does not place before us.

[7–9] As to the letter of Mr. Tamba it cannot be construed as stipulating for an extension beyond the five years allowed by the statute. No extension made within the five-year period and which does not extend or cannot be reasonably construed to extend the time for trial beyond the five-year period is capable of extending the period. The written stipulation referred to in the five-year statute means a written stipulation extending the time for trial beyond the statutory period. Hastings v. Superior Court, 131 Cal.App.2d 255, 258, 280 P.2d 74. The stipulation contained in Mr. Tamba's letter is not material here. Notwithstanding the stipulation dropping the case from the calendar, plaintiffs were still required to see that their actions were timely brought to trial. Prudential Insurance Company of America v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, 117 Cal.App. 528, 4 P.2d 294. In Central Pacific Railroad Company v. Riley, 31 Cal.App. 394, 160 P. 844, it was held that a stipulation that a case be continued to be dropped from the calendar to be reset on notice did not take a case out of the operation of the statute.

It is obvious as to each of the two cases that it has at all times been possible to proceed to trial without the testimony of the missing bus driver, for it was admitted in each case that the plaintiffs were passengers for hire in a bus operated by the petitioners and being driven by their employee. It certainly was possible to proceed to trial under such circumstances for the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur would cast upon petitioners the burden of overcoming the inference that the accident was caused by the negligence of the bus driver. But was it in the objective sense impracticable or futile to proceed to trial? To answer this question we must consider the situation of the plaintiffs as presented by the record, and herein it is significant that petitioners were not under any duty to produce the bus driver or to "permit" him to testify. McEwen v. New York Life Insurance Co., 187 Cal. 144, 201 P. 577; Lawyer v. Los Angeles Pacific Co., 23 Cal.App. 543, 138 P. 920. It was aptly said in Oberkotter v. Spreckels, 64 Cal.App. 470, 473, 221 P. 698, 699:

> "* * * [A]ppellant is mistaken in assuming that a defendant must seek to have the action set for trial before he can move its dismissal for want of diligent prosecution. The established doctrine in this state is that it is the plaintiff upon whom rests the duty to use diligence at every stage of the proceeding to expedite his case to a final determination. It is true that the defendant may bring about a trial of the case, but he is under no legal duty to do so. His presence in the case is involuntary, and his attitude toward it is quite different from that of the plaintiff; he is put to a defense only, and can be charged with no neglect for failing to do more than meet the plaintiff step by step. * * *"

[10, 11] There is nothing in the affidavits that will warrant holding the petitioners to have been guilty of preventing the taking of the driver's deposition. The sum of the showing is that plaintiffs' counsel took the position it was the duty of the petitioners and their counsel to cooperate in preparing the case for trial for the benefit of the plaintiffs. As has been said in another aspect of duty to proceed, it is easier to sit in the shade twisting someone else's arm than it is to get out in the hot sun and dig up the evidence. It appears that the residence address of the bus driver was contained in the report of the highway patrol. A deposition of the managing agent of the petitioners could have been made the vehicle of accurate inquiry in so far as the petitioners had knowledge of the whereabouts of the bus driver. Plaintiffs do assert that they hired an investigator, but they do not explain why in so simple a matter these obvious steps were not taken. In any event it was not incumbent upon the petitioners to do more than to prepare themselves for trial, and this they aver without contradiction they did, thus rendering themselves ready and willing to go to trial years before the plaintiffs' counsel bestirred themselves. Indeed, it appears that present counsel has been associated with the cases only within the last year or two, and, of course, he could not explain why these matters had not been attended to earlier, and he makes no attempt either to do that or to present affidavits of counsel who were in the case in the earlier years, showing some excuse why, as to petitioners, the matter was not prepared for trial and tried. What we have said also disposes of the claim made by real parties in interest that the petitioners are estopped to ask the dismissal of the action. Before estoppel can arise here there must have been a duty to act and a failure to act in accordance with the duty; some act in the nature of prevention. Considering the whole record in the light most favorable to real parties, we hold that no excuse was shown why the causes have not long before been brought to trial, nor has any proof been made of any period of time when there existed circumstances justifying the exclusion of any period of time from the statutory five-year period.

Let peremptory writs issue commanding the respondent court to dismiss the actions as to petitioners.

SCHOTTKY, J., and McMURRAY, J. pro tem., concur.

Irving GOODMAN, etc., Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Sam JONAS and Jeannette Jonas, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 21546.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

July 3, 1956.

Rehearing Denied July 27, 1953.

Action by tenant of furniture factory against landlord and another for declaration as to rights under lease and for recovery based on allegedly fraudulent misrepresentations of landlord. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Leon T. David, J., entered a judgment in favor of defendants, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held, inter alia, that where lease of furniture factory provided, inter alia, that tenant would comply with regulations of government authority and that landlord would bear expense of any "structural building repairs and modifications", quoted words were ambiguous with respect to whether it was duty of landlord or tenant to make certain changes, including replacement of bearing walls, for compliance with the fire ordinances so that building could be used by tenant as furniture factory and it was prejudicial error to exclude tenant's proffered parol evidence as to parties' intentions, but that evidence supported findings that landlord had not been guilty of fraud.

Judgment affirmed in part and reversed in part.

1. Landlord and Tenant 🔑20

A lease is a contract as well as a conveyance.

2. Landlord and Tenant 🔑37

Where doubt arises as to what the rights, duties, and obligations of parties are under terms of lease, statutory rules for construction of contracts are applicable. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1635–1662.

3. Landlord and Tenant 🔑37, 39

Elementary principles to be used in interpretation of ambiguous lease are that (1) intention of parties is controlling and must be gathered from language of lease in light of circumstances surrounding its execution and object sought to be accomplished by parties; (2) language is to be given ordinary meaning unless technical or special meaning is clearly indicated; (3) lease is to be construed as whole so as to give effect to every provision, if reasonably possible. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1635–1662.

4. Declaratory Judgment 🔑393

Where lease of furniture factory provided, inter alia, that tenant would comply with rules and regulations of government authority and that landlord would bear expense of any "structural building repairs and modifications", quoted words were ambiguous with respect to whether it was duty of landlord or tenant to make certain changes, including replacement of bearing walls for compliance with the fire ordinances, and, in tenant's action for declaration of rights under lease, it was prejudicial error for trial court to exclude tenant's proffered parol evidence as to parties' intentions and to hold as matter of law that lease obligated tenant to make such repairs.

5. Fraud ⚷58(1, 2)

In action by tenant of furniture factory against landlord charging that landlord had fraudulently misrepresented that factory complied with fire regulations to induce tenant to enter into lease agreement, evidence supported trial court's findings that landlord truthfully represented that he had used premises for many years for furniture manufacture without interference from public authorities, that he had committed no violations of existing regulations, that he believed, without being able to guarantee, that tenant could obtain incinerator permit and that he did not represent that premises complied with building laws for any and all uses in making furniture.

6. Fraud ⚷58(4)

In action by tenant of furniture factory against landlord charging that landlord had fraudulently misrepresented that factory complied with fire regulations to induce tenant to enter into lease agreement, evidence supported trial court's finding that tenant did not rely on any representations of landlord regarding compliance of building with existing fire regulations.

7. Fraud ⚷20

Where party relies on independent investigation after acquiring all knowledge he desires without hindrance, he will not be heard to say that he has relied on representations of other party.

8. Appeal and Error ⚷1010(1)

Reviewing court would not disturb findings which were supported by evidence in the record.

Morris E. Cohn, Beverly Hills, and Erwin Morse, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Stephens, Jones, Lafever & Smith, Maurice Jones, Jr., and Eugene W. Bell, Los Angeles, for respondents.

FOX, Justice.

Plaintiff initiated an action comprising two counts: (1) for declaratory relief regarding the construction of a lease; and (2) for damages caused by defendants' fraudulent misrepresentation in inducing him to make the lease. The appeal is from those portions of the judgment which (a) construe the reciprocal rights and obligations of the parties under the lease, and (b) deny damages for fraud. Plaintiff will be subsequently referred to as Goodman and defendants[1] as Jonas.

Defendant Jonas had been engaged in the manufacture of various types of furniture for about twenty years prior to 1953. In 1945, he purchased an unimproved parcel of land fronting on Beach Street to the north and Nadeau Street to the east. Jonas erected a factory building thereon and thereafter conducted his manufacturing operations at that site. During the following eight years, Jonas made periodic additions to the original structure. All building permits after the first construction were obtained by Jonas and by 1953 the factory encompassed some 40,000 feet under a single roof. The various phases of Jonas' business and manufacturing operations were arranged in departments situated in particular sections of the premises. In what is roughly the north half of the premises, the shipping department and showroom occupied the area along Beach Street. To the rear were located the cutting room, upholstery department, warehouse area, the machine room and a part of the space for storing lumber. In the balance of the premises to the south, a finishing room, and the office area occupied the rest of the portion fronting on Beach Street. To the rear was a drying room, a compressing room, the mill area, a glue room and the rest of the lumber storage area. In connection with his manufacturing process, Jonas maintained on the premises such equipment as power saws, sanders, and wood-working machinery.

In June, 1953, plaintiff Goodman began negotiations with Jonas for a lease of the premises. Goodman had been manufacturing furniture for about seven years and desired to expand his operations to include a line of bedroom and dining room sets. Goodman outlined to Jonas certain ideas he had relative to his proposed use of the premises, including the spraying of furniture with inflammable liquids. The lease negotiations consumed a period of approximately four months, in the course of which Goodman and others acting in his behalf made comprehensive inspections of the premises and Goodman's attorney, Joseph Ostrow, explored the matter of compliance with building and zoning requirements. Both parties were represented by counsel in the closing stages of their discussions regarding the lease. On October 26, 1953, a five-year lease with option to renew was executed, providing for occupancy on February 1, 1954, at a gross rental of $126,000, payable at the rate of $2,100 per month. Simultaneous with the execution of the lease, Goodman purchased from Jonas, under a conditional sales agreement, machinery used by the latter in the manufacture of furniture for $30,000.

Subsequent to the execution of the lease, Goodman employed an engineer named Terrico to design a work flow system and to plan the arrangement of machinery and equipment. Terrico's proposed layout included the installation of spray booths for the application of paints, lacquers and varnishes, and a 150-foot heating tunnel to dry the finishes. These operations were to be conducted in the north half of the premises, largely within the area where Jonas had his upholstery department and warehouse. Jonas' finishing and drying had taken place in the southeast part of the building in an area of some 3,000 square feet. These processes under Goodman's operation would entail about four times more space, and were in the north half of the premises.

Shortly after Goodman entered under the lease and commenced manufacturing, he encountered difficulties with the authorities as he proceeded with his plans. Goodman had installed additional wood-working machinery in the mill area in the south half of the premises, thereby increasing the volume of sawdust and wood refuse which is a by-product of this operation. The Los Angeles County Department of Building and Safety (denominated "Building Department" herein) notified him that it would be necessary to provide the walls of the mill area with fire-protective sheeting. Goodman was further advised that in order to place spray booths and a heat tunnel in the north half, formerly devoted to upholstery, the prescribed areas containing the booths would have to be compartmentized by the installation of fire-resistive partitions and the existing walls sheeted with fire-proof material. Goodman informed Jonas of this contretemps and, asserting that the lease obligated Jonas to bear the cost of these alterations, demanded that Jonas provide the required work. Jonas denied liability, but, after several months of discussions, he went ahead with the sheeting of the walls of the mill or wood-working area after notifying Goodman he would seek reimbursement of the expenses incurred. This work was completed in September, 1954. However, Jonas refused to proceed with any of the work recommended for the north half.

The demised premises had a silo-type incinerator which had been installed in 1946, when no permit to operate was required. Two cyclones were attached to the incinerator, their function being to collect the sawdust and shavings and feed them into the incinerator. At no time had Jonas been cited by the Air Pollution Control District (APCD) for incinerator emissions. After taking possession of the premises, Goodman added a third cyclone to the incinerator and modified the blower system

Shortly thereafter he was cited by the APCD for emission of excessive smoke. On May 12, 1954, Goodman's application for a permit to operate the incinerator was denied. The letter from the APCD stated that the application was denied for the following reasons:

"1. An inspection made on April 28, 1954, disclosed that the incinerator operates in violation of Section 24242 of the Health and Safety Code * * * by emitting smoke in excess of that allowed;

"2. The design of the incinerator is such that it will not operate without further periodic violations of section 24242 * *" An APCD engineer testified that because of its variable feed, a silo-type incinerator, even with careful operation, will periodically violate the law. Goodman demanded that Jonas modify the incinerator so that he could obtain an operating permit from the APCD. This Jonas refused to do, disclaiming liability under the lease.

It was established that the leased factory was zoned M-1 for manufacture. However, a much-mooted question during the trial and upon this appeal relates to whether the premises complied with the use category specified in the building laws of the County of Los Angeles. The building code classifies by alphabetical letter various uses of premises in accordance with the degree of fire hazard. A furniture factory is not specifically placed in any category, but the various elements of such an operation are provided for. Under the effective ordinance, Group F includes "factories or workshops using materials not highly inflammable or combustible." A group E-2 classification applies to "paint shops and spray painting rooms and shops." Among the Group E-3 occupancies are listed "woodworking establishments, planing mills and box factories" and "factories where loose, combustible fibres or dust is manufactured, processed or generated." Section 503(a) of the Los Angeles County Building Code provides in part: "When a building is used for more than one occupancy purpose each part of the building comprising a distinct 'Occupancy' * * * shall be separated from any other occupancy as specified in Section 503(d)." Section 503(c) describes various types of "occupancy separations" in terms of hours of fire-resistive capacity. Section 503(d) reads, in part: "* * * Where any occupancy separation is required the minimum shall be a 'One-Hour Fire-Resistive Occupancy Separation.'"

As appears from the several applications for building permits made by Jonas, the entire premises, with the exception of 2,400 square feet,[2] was classified as an E occupancy by the building authorities. However, during Jonas' occupancy of the premises, the interior separating walls had no fire-resistive qualities except for a relatively small segment located in the compressing room and part of the mill area. Elsewhere, these walls were of "open stud" or exposed wood construction. Nevertheless, the record discloses that at no time during Jonas' occupancy did his use of the premises meet with disapproval from the inspecting officials and that no violations in the plant were observed or reported. Subsequent to Goodman's occupancy a newly-assigned building officer named Grant inspected the premises and gave notice that alterations would be necessary if Goodman's operations were to comply with the law. As has been indicated, Jonas and Goodman could not agree as to who should bear the expense of the required alterations.

In the action brought to resolve the controversy, Goodman's first count (for declaratory relief) alleged the execution of the lease, the fact that 80 percent of the premises and the incinerator did not comply with the requirements of the law, that the premises were not fit for the manufacture of furniture and that the incinerator could not be used because it could not qualify for a permit. The prayer was for a declaration of rights under the lease, which was appended to the complaint. The second count alleged that Jonas was thoroughly familiar with all phases of furniture manufacturing and with Goodman's requirements in the contemplated use of the premises; that Jonas knew that the premises did not meet the requirements of law for use as a furniture factory; that despite such knowledge, and in order to induce Goodman to execute the lease, Jonas represented that the premises complied with the laws regarding the manufacture of furniture and were fit for all phases of such manufacture insofar as the Los Angeles Building Code was concerned; that appellant relied on such representations to his damage in executing the lease.

[2] This section was classified as Group F, Jonas describing its use on the building permit as "storage lumber and Metal Springs—Furniture Frames."

The crucial section of the lease obligations here in dispute is Article Fifteen, which reads: "Fifteenth: Lessee will, at his sole cost and expense, faithfully observe in the use of the premises all municipal, state and federal regulations, ordinances and statutes now in force or which may hereafter be in force. Lessor agrees to bear the expense of any structural building repair or modification which shall legally be required by any municipal, state or federal regulation, ordinance or statute, which repair or modification shall not be due to the negligence, carelessness or wrongful conduct of the Lessee or to the Lessee's using the demised premises for a purpose other than that of the manufacture of furniture and all phases thereof." (Italics added.) Other pertinent paragraphs of the lease are: "Tenth: Lessor warrants and represents that the present zoning of demised premises is designated as M–2 and M1. In the event that said zoning designation is changed by governmental authority, to the end that Lessee will be prevented from conducting all phases of a furniture manufacturing business, Lessee shall have the option to terminate this lease, and be relieved from all obligations thereunder, and receive back from Lessor a sum equal to the monthly rental then in effect." "Eleventh: Lessee agrees that the demised premises are now in a tenantable and good condition and agrees to accept the demised premises in the condition and state of repair in which they now are, subject to ordinary wear and tear occurring between the date of this lease and February 1, 1954. Lessor agrees to keep in good order, condition and repair the foundations, roof and exterior walls of the demised premises, and the structure of the interior bearing walls, except for any damage thereto caused by any act or negligence of the Lessee or his employees, agents, licensees or contractors * * *" "Twelfth: Lessee is specifically granted the right to move or install as many spray booths as necessary for the conduct of his business, and to repair, move or install as many non-bearing partitions as may be necessary for the conduct of his business, without prior written consent of the Lessor, provided that said work is done in compliance with the laws of city, county and state authorities. Except as hereinabove stated, Lessee will not make, or suffer to be made, any alterations of said premises, or any part thereof, without the written consent of the Lessor first had and obtained; any additions to or alterations of the said premises, however, shall remain the property of the Lessee, even though affixed or annexed to the realty, provided that Lessee is not in default and shall upon removal leave the premises in substantially the same condition as at the commencement of the lease, ordinary wear and tear excepted." (Italics added.)

The trial of the issues posed was a lengthy one, and the findings, which are predominantly in favor of Jonas, are unusually extensive. We will epitomize those findings so far as they are germane to the questions before us. The court found that the Los Angeles County Building Laws do not classify furniture manufacture in either use category E or F to the exclusion of the other and that during the period Jonas conducted such manufacturing business on the demised premises and at the time the lease was executed, his use and occupancy of the premises was in full compliance with the county ordinances and at no time did anyone order him to cease and desist from using all or part of the premises; that the responsibility for making classifications to particular occupancy categories is entrusted to certain administrative officials, who have direction to permit mixed occupancy of premises without making them conform with the requirements of other categories; that under the applicable laws, existing occupancies were allowed to continue when not dangerous to life but upon any change in use or occupancy, the law required that each several occupancy within the building be separated from the other by fire-resistive walls; that while the premises did not meet the requirements for new construction, the use made by Jonas met the applicable requirements as interpreted by the building officials; that Goodman was legally entitled to conduct an operation on the same basis and to the same extent.

The court further found that at the time negotiations for the lease were undertaken, Goodman generally informed Jonas of the type of furniture he wished to make and of his proposed installation of spray booths and a heating tunnel in the north 19,000 square feet designated by Jonas as the upholstery department and warehouse; that Jonas knew that Goodman's proposed use would include cutting, planing, and milling of lumber and the spraying of furniture with inflammable fluids; that as of the date of the commencement of the lease, the premises were fit and suitable for the manufacture of furniture; that Jonas made no warranties of fitness for any particular or specific use, except as set out in paragraph Tenth (previously quoted) of the lease, which has not been breached.

Notwithstanding the findings that the premises complied with the law, the court found that Jonas added certain roofing over a passageway covering an area 80 feet by 16 feet between the rough mill and center mill area without an antecedent permit but "in good faith"; that as a result of this construction, the two areas became a "single building" under the applicable laws, no part of which was separated from the other by two-hour fire-resistive separations; that on October 26, 1953, and on February 1, 1954, there were no two-hour fire-resistive separations within the said building, and none were required by reason of the uses theretofore made of said building, and the applicable ordinance provisions; though the same were required in case of change of kind, degree, purpose, or manner of use, or by a change of occupancy whereby existing uses were transferred to new or different areas therein; that the premises would not comply with the requirements imposed by the construction of a roof over the passageway if, in fact, full use was made of those areas to the extent that they were openly and visibly capable of being used, but that, in fact they were not being so used by Jonas and his use thereof was legal; that prior to the commencement of this action, Jonas made the walls of the mill area fire-resistant; that under the terms of the lease the cost of such modification was required to be made at Jonas' expense.

The court further found that after Goodman took over the premises, he installed a spray booth in the former upholstery department, and additional wookworking machinery in the mill area which greatly increased the production of sawdust and shavings; that he planned the installation of additional spray booths and a heat tunnel in the northern half of the building; that the use of additional equipment and the use of the proposed installations was and is a change in the character of use or occupancy under the building ordinances; that to carry out these plans and to continue such expanded use requires "installation of fire-proof sheeting on some existing walls and the construction of interior nonbearing partitions to reduce floor areas;" and that the proposed use without the installation of fire-walls and fireproofing of existing walls is not lawful.

The court found that in order to make the north half comply with the law to permit Goodman's operation to the desired extent, it was necessary to do the following things:

"To add one-hour fire resistive partitions or separations so as to divide said 19,000 square feet into areas not to exceed 4,375 square feet where spraying is proposed to be done; and not to exceed 8,750 square feet where woodworking involving hazardous by-products is to be done; and for this purpose, in addition to said partitions, it is reasonably necessary either that two presently existing bearing walls be removed and other bearing walls be placed on the premises, or that the doorways and clerestory windows in the bearing walls be closed or provided with proper fire doors, and that such bearing walls wherein openings are so closed be made one-hour fire resistive by the application of plaster or gypsum on both sides." (Italics added.) The court found these modifications would not "constitute structural changes" under the lease and would not be required by law except for the use of the premises proposed by Goodman.

The court found that the lessor has performed his obligations under paragraph 11 of the lease, and that his agreement therein "to keep in good order and repair * * the structure of the interior bearing walls" was not intended by the parties to include the addition of fire-proof sheeting to such walls; that under paragraph 13, Goodman has the right to install spray booths and to move or install non-bearing partitions without Jonas' consent but such work must be done in compliance with the controlling laws and Jonas is not obligated under the lease to bear the expense thereof.

With respect to Article 15, it was found that it was not the intent of the parties thereunder to obligate Jonas "to make any structural building repair or modification" made necessary under the law because of the use to which Goodman put the premises; that it was the intent of the parties and is Jonas' obligation to make and bear the expenses of any structural building repair or modification in such building in the event that the state of such structure as it was accepted by Goodman becomes illegal to maintain apart from any use made of it by Goodman.

Concerning the incinerator, the court found it was of a design not presently considered adequate by the APCD; that Jonas had at all times operated in compliance with the law; that Goodman altered the incinerator after obtaining the demised premises by adding equipment for feeding wood waste; that he thereafter operated the incinerator in violation of the law and his application for a permit to operate it was denied; that Goodman has been informed by the APCD that to obtain a permit, the incinerator would have to be redesigned, reconstructed or replaced to its satisfaction; that Goodman was at all times familiar with the permit requirements of the APCD; that Goodman agreed to accept the premises in their then condition after full investigation, and that it was not the intention of the parties that Jonas repair, replace or modify the incinerator so that Goodman might conduct his operations on the premises.

With respect to the cause of action for fraud, the court found that Jonas represented to Goodman that he had constructed the building as owner and used it for furniture manufacture for years without interference from building, fire or air pollution district officials; that the property was zoned for furniture manufacturing, and that as used by him there were no existing violations of the building code or air pollution requirements; that the plant was in A-1 condition; that he thought Goodman would have no trouble with the APCD in obtaining an incinerator permit, since he himself had had no trouble and knew of nothing wrong but couldn't guarantee it; that he had not been cited for any violation of law and had no trouble with fire inspectors. The court found also that all the above statements were true; that Jonas had not represented to Goodman that the premises complied or would comply with the building laws for any and all uses to which they might be put by Goodman in the process of making furniture; that Jonas had not represented to Goodman that he would enjoy a use of the premises, unrestrained by the Building Code, greater in volume, or located differently thereon, than the operations he conducted at the time the lease was executed.

The court also found that in entering into the lease, Goodman and his attorney did not rely on statements relative to compliance with regulations but in fact checked the zoning classification with the authorities and that Jonas agreed to make the premises comply to the extent of his use at the time of the lease in the event a violation might exist with respect thereto.

The court reached the following conclusion in its declaration of rights under the lease: "(a) that plaintiff is required to make at his sole expense any alterations, additions or modifications by way of installing interior walls, or partitions, or the fireproof surfacing of walls necessary to uses proposed or contemplated by him in connection with the demised premises; (b) that defendant is not obligated to repair, reconstruct or replace the mill incinerator; (c) that defendants are obligated to make, at their expense, any additions, modifications or repairs hereafter required to make or keep the structure legally useable to the extent of the use and occupation made at the inception of the Lease by lessors; subject to the calamitous causes as defined in the Lease, and lessee's liability for its negligence thereunder; and there is no such lessor liability for those causes alleged in this action."

One of the paramount questions presented by this appeal is Goodman's contention that the trial court erred in excluding extrinsic evidence as an aid in construing the lease. This is borne out by the record, which indicates that the court entertained the conviction that the language of the lease so plainly and lucidly manifested the intention of the parties as to be alone determinative of the obligations thereunder and that to permit an inquiry into the factual circumstances accompanying and surrounding the formulation of the lease would violate the parol evidence rule. The record is replete with instances where extrinsic evidence offered as a guide to interpretation of the lease was stricken as to the count for declaratory relief, and admitted for consideration only on the fraud count. A typical example may be cited. At a meeting between the parties, attended also by Goodman's attorney, Ostrow, Goodman testified that he told Jonas he wanted it understood, for purposes of drawing up the lease, that he was not going to spend money on "Your building" and that if there was anything that had to be fixed or changed so that he might manufacture furniture in every way, Jonas would be responsible for the changes in the building. Goodman testified Jonas told him he agreed to this. All this testimony was stricken as to the first count. Various other items of evidence relating to the subject of Jonas' statements that he would be responsible for certain changes in the building that might be necessary under the requirements of the building laws were likewise either stricken with respect to the first count or refused admission into evidence.

The rationale of the court's rulings, and its determination that extrinsic evidence was not required to illuminate the intention of the parties to the lease, appears from its comments made in this connection. Early in the case, the court stated: "We have to get down to the question of what the claimed conditions are and find out. But I haven't any difficulty with the face of the instrument thus far because it is very specific * * * I can foresee that we will be met by the parol evidence rule right away if we proceed on the theory that we are interpreting the contract as drawn, and a lot of statements made as to what the negotiations were, and so forth, is not competent if that is the fact." Later on, the court observed: "Actually you cannot get into the parol evidence rule and these other things aren't there unless the contract on its face is not explicit * * * And I think, as far as I can read, that it is explicit, and as far as what the contract means, I think it could stand on its face." At another point, in discussing sections of the lease previously adverted to, the court stated: "Now, as I read those sections and to the extent that I have interpreted them, I think they are clear and direct, and that there isn't any conflict about them." Still later, the court observed: "The practical construction of the parties is only resorted to as an aid in constructing the language of the instrument if it is doubtful, and I hold that it is not." In ruling on extrinsic evidence offered by Goodman, which had been received subject to a motion to strike, the following colloquy occurred: "The Court: All of which is stricken, except on the fraud count. Mr. Cohn (Goodman's attorney): Yes, your Honor. The Court: On the ground of violating the parol evidence rule. Mr. Cohn: I am offering it, your Honor, in rebuttal to the testimony given by Mr. Jonas, which I understand was received without limitation. The Court: Multiply error by error." It is true that the court was inconsistent in that it received extrinsic evidence at times apparently without limitation; yet it repeatedly choked off Goodman's efforts to establish the meaning of the terms used in the lease by reference to the circumstances attending its execution by accepting the thesis that the parol evidence rule would be violated if such evidence were considered. This would constitute a fundamental and prejudicial error if the lease was in fact ambiguous or equivocal in some vital area. It is to this question that we now advert.

It has been observed that the public authorities required certain building alterations to be effected in order for Goodman to pursue his enlarged manufacturing process. The court found that in addition to partitioning required for this purpose, it is reasonably necessary either that two presently existing bearing walls be removed and other bearing walls be placed on the premises, or that the doorways and clerestory windows in the bearing walls be closed or provided with proper fire doors, and that such bearing walls wherein openings are so closed be made one-hour fire resistive by the application of plaster or gypsum on both sides." (Italics added.) Paragraph 15 of the lease, which may profitably be set forth again for convenient reference, provides: "Fifteenth: Lessee will, at his sole cost and expense, faithfully observe in the use of the premises all municipal, state and federal regulations, ordinances and statutes now in force or which may hereafter be in force. Lessor agrees to bear the expense of any structural building repair or modification which shall legally be required by any municipal, state or federal regulation, ordinance or statute, which repair or modification shall not be due to the negligence, carelessness or wrongful conduct of the Lessee or to the Lessee's using the demised premises for a purpose other than that of the manufacture of furniture and all phases thereof." (Italics added.)

It is at once obvious that paragraph 15 carries within itself a seeming incongruity and uncertainty, for while Goodman thereby covenants to comply with all rules and regulations of the governmental authorities in the use of the premises, Jonas has likewise covenanted that where structural changes are required by such orders they will be paid for by him unless caused by Goodman's fault or by his using the premises for a purpose other than manufacturing furniture "and all phases thereof." It is apparent that in an attempt to limit the scope of the agreement, the parties expressly excluded any obligation on Goodman's part to make structural repairs or modifications so long as he used the premises for furniture manufacture. As to the language used, which requires Jonas to make "structural building repair or modification," there is compelling force to Goodman's contention that its meaning is sufficiently ambiguous when considered both in its juxtaposition to the language of the preceding sentence and in context with other lease provisions to have demanded a full exploration by extrinsic evidence of what the parties intended to signify thereby. We are not dealing with such term in any technical sense it might have if found in a building ordinance or zoning law but are concerned simply with the meaning imparted to it by two business men entering upon a lease of premises to be used for furniture manufacture. As such, these words cannot be said to have any fixed or immutable meaning but are merely a relatively elastic symbol of an idea sought to be communicated in more or less imprecise fashion. The crux of the whole case lies in the construction of the covenants of the lease hitherto mentioned; and the vital question presented was whether the modifications required by the public authorities, which concededly affected the interior bearing walls of the buildings and were in the nature of changing an existing condition and replacing it with new and different material to render it fire-proof, could be said to be "structural" in the sense contemplated by the parties.

The trial court chose to arrive at the intention of the parties as to the scope of such a covenant solely from the provisions of the lease without considering the surrounding circumstances and concluded that the work required to make the building fireproof was not a structural modification within the obligation assumed by Jonas. However, the changes ordered by the building inspector involved work upon the interior bearing walls of the premises, a reconstruction of which would affect a very substantial portion of the premises by enlarging the occupancy use of the north half; and when made, would be permanent in nature, would presumably add materially to the value of the property and have the ultimate effect of converting a large part of the premises into a fireproof area suitable for the more hazardous phases of furniture manufacture. Whether this character of improvement, which might normally be expected of an owner, was embraced within Jonas' obligation under paragraph 15 could only be developed by an inquiry into such antecedent and contemporaneous circumstances attending the formation of the lease as would clarify the meaning of the term "structural * * modification" as used by the parties. Certainly, this terminology is neither free from doubt nor subject of easy characterization as used in a lease. The ambiguity is further established by section 12, which allows Goodman to install spray booths and move non-bearing partitions without Jonas' consent and to make only such other alterations as were consented to in writing by Jonas. That paragraph provides, nevertheless, that all such improvements and alterations are to remain Goodman's property even though annexed to the realty. However, it is clear that the work required by the county to fireproof the walls would be permanent additions to the structure which it is likely Goodman could not readily remove at the termination of his tenancy without damaging the premises. Furthermore, Article 11, although it relates to the reciprocal covenants of the parties to repair, is significant in its choice of language. That section devolves upon Jonas the responsibility to keep in good order "the structure of the interior bearing walls." This lends force to the interpretation that modifications of the bearing walls such as are here required might have been "structural" in the sense this term was used by the parties. While this conclusion is certainly not compelled as a matter of law by the various factors and considerations to which we have alluded, it points up the court's prejudicial error in its consistent exclusion of evidence of the factual circumstances accompanying the execution of the lease which would have served to ascertain the real intent of the parties as to the meaning of language of doubtful signification.

[1–3] A lease is a contract as well as a conveyance. 15 Cal.Jur., p. 614. Where doubt arises as to what the rights, duties and obligations of the parties are under the terms of a lease, the statutory rules for the construction of contracts are applicable. Knox v. Wolfe, 73 Cal.App.2d 494, 499, 167 P.2d 3. These statutory rules of interpretation are embodied in sections 1635 through 1662 of the Civil Code. The three elementary principles to be deduced therefrom in relation to the instant problem are: (1) The intention of the parties is controlling and must be gathered from the language of the lease in the light of the circumstances surrounding its execution and the object sought to be accomplished by the parties; (2) The language must be given its ordinary meaning unless a technical or special meaning is clearly intended; (3) The lease must be construed as a whole and in such a manner as to give effect to every provision, if reasonably possible.

[4] Since the lease is ambiguous in the particulars we have mentioned, the understanding of the parties as to the meaning of the term "structural" building repairs and modification cannot be determined as a matter of law. Evidence should have been received and all the facts considered which would have aided the court in ascertaining the connotation which the parties ascribed to the phrase in question. In Fricke v. Braden, 55 Cal.App.2d 266, 130 P.2d 727, the lease contained the term "Super Market." The trial court sustained respondents' objection to the introduction of parol evidence to explain the circumstances under which the lease was made and the meaning of the term understood by the parties. In holding this to be reversible error, the court observed, 55 Cal.App.2d at page 269, 130 P.2d at page 728: "'For the purpose of determining what the parties intended by the language used, it is competent to show not only the circumstances under which the contract was made, but also to prove that the parties intended and understood the language in the sense contended for; and for that purpose the conversation between and declarations of the parties during the negotiations at and before the time of the execution of the contract may be shown.'" Continuing its discussion at page 271 of 55 Cal.App.2d at page 729 of 130 P.2d, the court remarked: "What the precise meaning of the term was, as understood by the parties in a given case, can best be ascertained by the conversations between, and the declarations of the parties at and before the time of the execution of the lease. We therefore conclude that the trial court erred in sustaining respondent's objections to the introduction of parol evidence explaining the circumstances under which appellant's lease was made, and the meaning of the term 'Super Market' as understood by the lessor and lessee at the time appellant's lease was executed. While it may be true, as respondent Braden contends, that the evidence sustains the findings of the trial court, yet this ruling of the court prevented appellant from introducing evidence that was material to the issues."

This is the rule here applicable. At the time the lease was executed, Jonas was informed of Goodman's plans to conduct an expanded operation at the premises. The lease gave him the right to make certain non-structural changes without the consent of the lessor. However, as to other changes such as the type here involved which would have affected bearing walls, he was expressly forbidden to alter the premises without the written consent of the owner. And, as we have seen, it is clear that the parties contemplated an allocation of costs as to alterations that might be required by public authorities, because Jonas agreed to bear the expense of structural modifications so ordered. No fair and just determination of who would bear the expense of the modifications here required was possible without the receipt of all proper evidence as to the meanings the parties attributed to the words used. The court repeatedly blocked Goodman's efforts to introduce such evidence and plainly expressed its position that it would not consider such evidence on the first count.

In the case at bar, the ambiguities in the lease were such that the parties thereto could not agree on who was required to bear the expenses of particular modifications. As to the work in the mill area, which Jonas paid for after notifying Goodman he would demand reimbursement, the court found this to be Jonas' obligation. This is a clear illustration of the uncertainty of the parties' rights and obligations because of the imprecise language employed. Furthermore, though there is no such language in the lease, the court concluded that Jonas was obligated to make at his expense such modifications as were required only to make the premises useable to the extent of his own use at the time of the inception of the lease. In the recent case of Beneficial Fire & Cas. Ins. Co. v.

Kurt Hitke & Co., 46 Cal.2d 517, 297 P.2d 428, the Supreme Court had occasion to restate the controlling principles as to when oral evidence is admissible to explain the language of a contract or to ascertain the intention of the parties. In reversing for failure to admit extrinsic evidence, the court states, 46 Cal.2d 524, 297 P.2d 431: "'When the language used is fairly susceptible to one of two constructions, extrinsic evidence may be considered, not to vary or modify the terms of the agreement but to aid the court in ascertaining the true intent of the parties * * * not to show that "the parties meant something other than what they said" but to show "what they meant by what they said." * * * Where any doubt exists as to the purport of the parties' dealings as expressed in the wording of their contract, the court may look to the circumstances surrounding its execution—including the object, nature and subject matter of the agreement * * * —as well as to subsequent acts or declarations of the parties "shedding light upon the question of their mutual intention at the time of contracting."' * * * "'Once something has to be read into a contract to make it clear, it can hardly be said to be susceptible of only one interpretation. It would have been error for the trial court to read something into the contract by straining "to find a clear meaning in an ambiguous document, and having done so exclude the extrinsic evidence on the ground that as so construed no ambiguity exists."'" (Italics added.)

For the foregoing reasons, we conclude that the court committed prejudicial error in refusing to consider extrinsic evidence to explain the meaning of the lease and in excluding or striking much evidence that was competent and relevant. Since such error precluded a proper determination of the issues under the first count, a retrial thereof will be necessary.

[5, 6] In connection with the alleged misrepresentations involved in the fraud count, the trial court found that Jonas truthfully represented that he had used the premises for many years for furniture manufacture without interference from public authorities and that as used by him there were no violations of existing regulations; that the plant was in A-1 condition; that he believed, without being able to guarantee, that Goodman would be able to obtain an incinerator permit. The record fully supports these findings, as well as the further finding that Jonas never represented that the premises complied or would comply with the building laws for any and all uses to which they might be put by Goodman in the process of making furniture. There is also no merit in Goodman's argument that Jonas' conduct in offering to lease him a building in which he was operating a furniture business constituted actionable fraud on the theory that there was an implied representation that Goodman could engage in all phases of furniture manufacturing therein without violating the law. Assuming there was such a representation by conduct, the court found that Goodman did not rely on any representations made by Jonas regarding compliance of the building with existing regulations. The record discloses that Goodman and his attorney, Ostrow, were conscious of this problem because of an experience Ostrow had in this regard with another client and that Ostrow made his own investigation of these matters. The evidence also shows that Goodman and various individuals acting on his behalf made numerous inspections of the premises and were given full and free access to all parts of the building and had every opportunity to examine the type of operation conducted by Jonas and the character of the premises.

[7, 8] It is a well settled rule that where a party relies on his independent investigation after acquiring all the knowledge he desires without hinderance, he will not be heard to say that he relied on the representation of the other party. Teipel v. Southern Nevada Vending Co., 124 Cal.App.2d 671, 673, 674, 268 P.2d 1081; Cameron v. Cameron, 88 Cal.App.2d 585, 593–594, 199 P.2d 443. The trial judge may well have felt it was more logical to assume that Goodman and his attorney satisfied themselves as to the extent of the building's compliance with the appropriate governmental regulations, and relied on the provisions of the lease to demark the financial responsibility of the parties in the event of intervention by the public authorities. We are therefore not at liberty to disturb the court's finding, since there is substantial evidence in support thereof in the record. As an appellate court, we cannot countenance Goodman's attempt to reargue the weight of this evidence.

The judgment is affirmed insofar as it denies damages to plaintiff on the second cause of action for fraud; it is reversed as to the first cause of action for declaratory relief. Each party is to bear his own costs on appeal.

v.

The SUPERIOR COURT of the State of California, in and for the COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES, Respondent.

Civ. 21788.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

July 3, 1956.

Rehearing Granted July 31, 1956.

Prohibition proceeding to arrest further proceedings in respondent court upon information charging petitioner with violation of a narcotic law. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, J. pro tem., held that, where no great burden would have been placed upon arresting officers had they sought to obtain a search warrant and disclosed to the magistrate facts upon which they sought such warrant, so that question of probable cause could have been determined under the aegis of judicial impartiality, and petitioner did not consent to arresting officers' search of her premises, the search and seizure was unreasonable and in violation of petitioner's constitutional rights.

Peremptory writ issued.

1. Arrest 🔑63(4)

Where arresting officers had only statement of an informer who had "usually" been reliable that petitioner had, some days before, committed a felony, committing magistrate was entitled to believe testimony of arresting officers that they had been given information to which they testified and that their informer was reliable, and, therefore, committing magistrate was justified in holding that the arresting officers had reasonable cause to believe that petitioner had committed a felony.

2. Arrest 🔑71

Law enforcement officers have right to conduct a reasonable search and seizure incident to a valid arrest, but legality of an arrest is not necessarily determinative of lawfulness of the search incident thereto.

3. Searches and Seizures 🔑3(1)

Where information given by informer is correct, and search results in discovery of evidence without which person whose home is searched could not be convicted, the search cannot be justified by the discovery of such evidence.

4. False Imprisonment 🔑13

If information given by informer is sufficient to constitute probable cause for person's arrest and search, it constitutes a complete defense to any civil action that may be brought by the injured person founded upon such arrest and search. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 19; U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 4.

5. Searches and Seizures 🔑7(1)

Test of reasonableness of a search does not depend upon the practicability of procuring a search warrant. West's Ann.

Const. art. 1, § 19; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 4.

6. Prohibition ⚷27

In prohibition proceeding to arrest further proceedings in respondent court upon information charging petitioner with violation of a narcotic law, evidence was not sufficient to establish petitioner's consent to search made by arresting officers but rather to show petitioner's compliance with arresting officers' assertion of authority to search. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 995; West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500, West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 19; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 4.

7. Searches and Seizures ⚷7(10)

Where no great burden would have been placed upon arresting officers had they sought to obtain a search warrant and disclosed to the magistrate facts upon which they sought such warrant, so that question of probable cause could have been determined under the aegis of judicial impartiality, and petitioner did not consent to arresting officers' search of her premises, the search and seizure was unreasonable and in violation of petitioner's constitutional rights. Sydney M. Williams, Los Angeles, and Morton R. Goodman, Beverly Hills, for petitioner.

S. Ernest Roll, Dist. Atty., Jere J. Sullivan, and Lewis Watnick, Deputy Dist. Attys., Los Angeles, for respondent.

NOURSE, Justice pro tem.

Petitioner's motion made pursuant to the provisions of section 995 of the Penal Code to set aside an information charging her with violation of section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code having been denied by the respondent court, she seeks a writ of prohibition to arrest further proceedings in the respondent court upon that information.

It is petitioner's contention that the marijuana which was seized in the search of her home and which was received in evidence by the committing magistrate was illegally obtained and therefore inadmissible against her under the rule laid down in People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905.

The facts as shown by the evidence produced by the People are: Petitioner resides in an apartment house. On the night of February 17, 1956, she was arrested on the porch of that apartment house, when she was about to enter her apartment. The arresting officer stated to her that she was charged with possession of narcotics. At this time petitioner denied any knowledge of narcotics, and then entered her apartment. The arresting officers, according to their testimony, requested permission to enter, which petitioner gave. After entering, the following conversation occurred between one of the arresting officers and petitioner. The arresting officer asked, "Do you have any marijuana in the house?" Petitioner: "I don't know anything about any marijuana." The officer: "Well, we are going to look around anyway." Petitioner: "Go ahead. You won't find anything." After this conversation the arresting officers ransacked the apartment. In certain articles of clothing they found the debris of marijuana; in a trash basket in the kitchen they found further debris of this plant; in a spice bottle they found marijuana; and in the garage which was beneath petitioner's apartment they found a bag containing marijuana.

The officers did not have a warrant for the arrest of petitioner, nor a search warrant.

Apparently, although this is not entirely clear from the testimony given, the porch where the arrest occurred was one used in common by petitioner and others who rented apartments.

The facts here present the following clear-cut questions: (1) Is information given by a known informant sufficient in itself to constitute probable cause for a police officer to believe that a person has committed a felony, and thus justify the arrest of that person? (2) May the home of a person arrested outside the home but adjacent to it be searched when at the time of the search the officers do not have knowledge of any fact or circumstance that would indicate that the person arrested has committed a felony, other than the information given by a known informer?

Neither of these questions has been passed upon by our Supreme Court either before or since its decision in People v. Cahan, supra, in a case where it was necessary to decide the question.

In People v. Boyles, 45 Cal.2d 652, 656, 290 P.2d 535, 537, the Supreme Court said: "It is settled, however, that reasonable cause to justify an arrest may consist of information obtained from others and is not limited to evidence that would be admissible at the trial on the issue of guilt." This statement, however, was not necessary to the decision, inasmuch as the defendant had prevented the prosecution from establishing the facts which led the officers to the belief that the defendant had committed the felony. In none of the cases cited by the Supreme Court in support of the statement we have quoted was the arrest based solely upon information given by a single informant.

The first case cited by the court is Brinegar v. United States, 338 U.S. 160, 69 S.Ct. 1302, 93 L.Ed. 1879. No question of action by the arresting officers on information given by an informer was involved, but the officers had acted upon knowledge that Brinegar was engaged in the unlawful trade of transporting from Missouri to Oklahoma and selling liquor in Oklahoma, upon personal observation made by them of his activities both in Missouri and Oklahoma, and upon his actions, the condition of his automobile in being overloaded, and his admission at the time of his arrest.

The second case cited is that of United States v. Li Fat Tong, 2 Cir., 152 F.2d 650. In this case Tong was known by the government agents to have been engaged in the illegal transportation and sale of narcotics. The arresting officers were advised by government officers in Chicago that Tong and a companion would leave Chicago on a certain airplane and that they were bringing with them a considerable amount of opium. When Tong alighted from the plane he was asked by the officers to come with them to their car so they could talk, and at this time Tong dropped a bottle which still contained a small amount of Yen Shee Suey, a solution of opium in wine. Thereupon he was arrested and his baggage searched, and a large amount of opium and some Yen Shee Suey found. It is evident that this case does not uphold the proposition that the statement of one informer is sufficient to constitute probable cause, for here the arresting officers not only knew that Tong had a prior criminal record for narcotics as well as other criminal charges, but were advised that the defendant then had narcotics in his possession and at the time of the arrest knew of his present possession of the bottle of Yen Shee Suey which he had attempted to dispose of; although Judge Learned Hand in his opinion does say that hearsay evidence derived from an informer is competent evidence on the issue of probable cause.[1] This, however, was said in connection with his holding that it was not error for the court to decline to require the government to disclose the names of its informants.

The case of Aitken v. White, 93 Cal.App.2d 134, 208 P.2d 788, which was cited by the court, is not authority for the proposition that information given by a single informer, without knowledge of any other facts, is sufficient to constitute probable cause. In that action, which was one for false arrest and imprisonment, the court held it error to refuse to receive into evidence the report of a detective agency concerning the plaintiff, and which had been received by the defendant prior to his placing the plaintiff under arrest, holding that hearsay evidence was admissible upon the question of probable cause—not to establish the truth of the statements made, but as evidence bearing upon the question as to whether the defendant had reasonable cause to make the arrest. In that case, however, the defendants had, prior to the arrest, made a very thorough and exhaustive investigation, and the arrest was not based upon the information given by a single informer but upon the investigation made and the report of the detective agency. The case stands only for the proposition that hearsay evidence is relevant to a decision by the court as to the existence or nonexistence of probable cause.

The last case cited by the court is Cook v. Singer Sewing Machine Co., 138 Cal. App. 418, 32 P.2d 430, which was also an action for damages for false arrest. This case did not involve any question of arrest made solely upon the basis of information given by a single informer. It stands solely for the proposition that suspicion itself is not sufficient to establish reasonable cause to make an arrest, but that it must appear that the officer's suspicion of the guilt of the person proposed to be arrested, and his belief in the assumed fact that the person to be arrested has committed a felony, is properly founded upon relevant facts or circumstances or credible information conveyed to him.

In the case at bar the officers did not have independent knowledge of any fact or circumstance which could give rise to even a mere suspicion that the defendant had committed a felony. They had only the statement of an informer who had "usually" been reliable that she had, some days before, committed a felony.

[1] The dictum which we have quoted from the Boyles decision is a part of the workable rules governing searches and seizures formulated by the Supreme Court under its pronouncement so to do in the Cahan case. We therefore feel bound by that dictum, and hold that the committing magistrate was entitled to believe the testimony of the arresting officers that they had been given the information to which they testified and that their informer was reliable, and that he was therefore justified in holding that the arresting officers had reasonable cause to believe that petitioner had committed a felony.

This brings us to the question as to whether or not the search made of petitioner's home was a reasonable one.

[2] It is established that law enforcement officers have a right to conduct a reasonable search and seizure incident to a valid arrest, People v. Winston, 46 Cal.2d 151, 293 P.2d 40, but that the legality of an arrest is not necessarily determinative of the lawfulness of the search incident thereto, People v. Brown, 45 Cal.2d 640, 643, 290 P.2d 528.

In the present case, as we have heretofore pointed out, the officers at the time of their search did not have knowledge of any fact upon which to found a belief that the petitioner had concealed in her home any marijuana, other than the information given them by their informant.

It could not be contended that on the basis of this information they could have, without an arrest, searched petitioner's home, Agnello v. United States, 269 U.S. 20, 46 S.Ct. 4, 70 L.Ed. 145, 149; United States v. Jeffers, 342 U.S. 48, 72 S.Ct. 93, 96 L.Ed. 59. Therefore unless the pronouncement by the officer of the words "you are under arrest" had some magic to increase his power and to confer the right to invade and ransack petitioner's home, it cannot be said that the search made here was a reasonable one incident to the arrest. In fact, it can better be said that the arrest was made in order to supply a pretext for the search than that the search was made as an incident to the arrest. Henderson v. United States, 4 Cir., 12 F.2d 528, 51 A.L.R. 420, 421–423.

If a belief based solely upon information given by an informant who had "usually" been found reliable makes a search such as that involved here a reasonable one incident to the arrest, the provisions of section 19 of article 1 of the Constitution of this state, and of the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, mean little or nothing.

[3, 4] If the information given by the informer is correct, then the search results in the discovery of evidence without which the person whose home is searched could not be convicted; yet the search cannot be justified by the discovery of that evidence, People v. Berger, 44 Cal.2d 459, 282 P.2d 509. If the information proves to be incorrect and no contraband is found, the person the privacy of whose home has been invaded is without recourse; for if the information given by the informer is sufficient to constitute probable cause for the arrest and search, it constitutes a complete defense to any civil action that may be brought by the injured person founded upon that arrest and search. If law enforcement officers may search a citizen's home on the sole basis of information which they claim they received from an informer whose name they need not divulge, People v. Gonzales, 141 Cal.App.2d 604, 297 P.2d 50, and cases there cited, then such information is equivalent to a search warrant, and the safeguards of the constitutional provisions are by-passed and rendered ineffectual.

What we have here said is not in conflict with the decision of Division Two of this court in People v. Gonzales, supra. There the arrest was made on the basis of information given by a known informant, but the search of the defendant's person made simultaneously with the arrest revealed narcotics and instruments for administering them, and the defendant then freely admitted the purchase of narcotics and his use of them. These additional facts clearly made the search of the immediate premises which followed a reasonable one.

[5] Under the facts shown by the record here the officers had ample time to place the facts which they had before a magistrate and attempt to secure a search warrant; and while it is true that our Supreme Court in People v. Winston, supra, 46 Cal.2d at page 151, 293 P.2d 40, held that the test of the reasonableness of a search did not depend upon the practicability of procuring a search warrant, we do not believe that it intended to hold that under facts such as exist here a search such as was made here could be made without a warrant.

The Supreme Court, in the case just mentioned, cites and relies upon the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court in United States v. Rabinowitz, 339 U. S. 56, 70 S.Ct. 430, 94 L.Ed. 653. In that case the search made was of a room open to the public in Rabinowitz' place of business. The officers were armed with a valid warrant for his arrest and had actual knowledge that at that place he had sold altered obligations of the United States and that forged postage stamps had been delivered to him at that address. It is in the light of these facts that the court's holding that the search made at the time of the arrest was not unreasonable, even though the officers might have procured a search warrant at the same time they secured the warrant of the arrest, must be read.

The language and reasoning of the Supreme Court of the United States in United States v. Jeffers, supra, seem applicable here. The court there said at page 51 of 342 U.S., at page 95 of 72 S.Ct. at page 64 of 96 L.Ed.: "The Fourth Amendment prohibits both unreasonable searches and unreasonable seizures, and its protection extends to both 'houses' and 'effects.' Over and again this Court has emphasized that the mandate of the Amendment requires adherence to judicial processes. [Citations.] Only where incident to a valid arrest, [citation] or in 'exceptional circumstances,' [citation] may an exemption lie, and then the burden is on those seeking the exemption to show the need for it, [citation]. In so doing the Amendment does not place an unduly oppressive weight on law enforcement officers but merely interposes an orderly procedure under the aegis of judicial impartiality that is necessary to attain the beneficent purposes intended. [Citation.] Officers instead of obeying this mandate have too often, as shown by the numerous cases in this Court, taken matters into their own hands and invaded the security of the people against unreasonable search and seizure. [Emphasis added.]

"* * * There was no question of violence, no movable vehicle was involved, nor was there an arrest or imminent destruction, removal, or concealment of the property intended to be seized. In fact, the officers admit they could have easily prevented any such destruction or removal by merely guarding the door. Instead, in entering the room and making the search for the sole purpose of seizing respondent's narcotics, the officers not only proceeded without a warrant or other legal authority but their intrusion was conducted surreptitiously and by means denounced as criminal."

In cases such as the one here, no great burden is placed upon the officers by requiring them to seek a search warrant and to disclose to the magistrate the facts upon which they seek the warrant, so that the question of probable cause may be determined under "the aegis of judicial impartiality".

[6] The respondent contends that the petitioner consented to the search made by the arresting officers and that therefore she cannot contend that it was unreasonable. We do not believe that the facts here show a consent by the petitioner, but rather show merely a compliance with the assertion of authority by the arresting officers. (See People v. Gorg, 45 Cal.2d 776, 782, 291 P.2d 469; United States v. Rembert, D.C., 284 F. 996, 998–999.) The only evidence to which the People point as showing consent by petitioner to the search made by the officers was the colloquy between the arresting officer and the petitioner wherein the officer said "Do you have any marijuana in the house?"; petitioner replied "I don't know anything about any marijuana"; the officer said "Well, we are going to look around anyway"; and the petitioner replied "Go ahead". [Emphasis added.] Certainly the officer's statement "Well, we are going to look around anyway," considered in the light of the fact that he had already placed the petitioner under arrest, was an assertion of authority by him which petitioner could not well resist; and her statement "Go ahead" cannot be deemed to be a consent.

[7] We hold that the search and seizure here made were unreasonable and in violation of petitioner's constitutional rights.

Let a peremptory writ of prohibition issue as prayed.

See 301 P.2d 627.

Proceeding on trustee's petition for instructions. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Victor R. Hansen, J., entered judgment adverse to successor income beneficiary under trust in question and she appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held that where no appeal was taken from decrees of distribution distributing certain trust income payable under trust in question to testator's sister to a successor income beneficiary distribution under such decrees was final, and estate of testator's deceased sister was not entitled to any of the trust estate so distributed notwithstanding fact sister survived testator by approximately five months.

* Opinion vacated 301 P.2d 627.

Judgment reversed.

1. Wills ⚷733(8)

Although a bequest of income accrues as of date of a testator's death, and the beneficiaries of a testamentary trust are entitled to receive the income as of that date, the passage of such income is controlled by the intention of the testator. West's Ann.Prob.Code, §§ 160, 163.

2. Executors and Administrators ⚷315(5, 6)

A decree directing distribution in plain and unambiguous terms operates as an interpretation of a will and binds the parties, precluding resort to the depositive provisions of a will.

3. Judgment ⚷691

A decree of distribution which has become final is a conclusive construction of a will as against all interested parties, including beneficiaries of a testamentary trust.

Once final, an erroneous decree of distribution, like any other erroneous judgment is as conclusive as a decree that contains no error.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal by Helen Hayner Feldman, the widow of Joseph Feldman, deceased, and one of the beneficiaries under the terms of his will, from an order instructing the trustees to pay to the estate of Rose F. Metzger all monies ascertained to have been received during the period June 24, 1953[1] to January 5, 1954, on the corpus of each of the trusts created by paragraphs Fifth (B) and Fifth (C) of the will of decedent.

Joseph Feldman died on July 24, 1953. Under the terms of his will, dated July 1, 1948, three trusts were created, only two of which are involved in this appeal. The two trusts in question were created by paragraphs Fifth (B) and Fifth (C) of decedent's will, the provisions of which are as follows:

"Fifth: All the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, both real and personal, and wheresoever the same may be situate, shall be divided into three parts of fifty (50%) per cent, twenty-five (25%) per cent and twenty-five (25%) per cent, respectively, which I give, devise and bequeath as follows:

"(B) Another such part of twenty-five (25%) per cent to my Trustees hereinafter named, in trust, nevertheless, to invest the same and keep the same invested, to collect the rents, income and profits thereof, and to pay over the net income arising therefrom to my sister, Rose F. Metzger, during her lifetime, and upon her death to pay over the net income arising therefrom to my wife, Helen Hayner Feldman, and upon the death of my sister and my wife, the principal shall be disposed of as follows:

---

[1] This is an obvious typographical error in the order which should read "July 24, 1953", the date of decedent's death. The findings of fact and conclusions of law correctly give the period in question as July 24, 1953 to January 5, 1954.

"(a) In the event my wife predeceases my sister, then upon my sister's death in such manner as my sister, in her uncontrolled discretion, shall have directed and appointed by her Last Will and Testament and in default of such appointment, the principal thereof shall pass to the heirs-at-law of my sister.

"(b) In the event my sister predeceases my wife, then upon my wife's death in such manner as my wife, in her uncontrolled discretion, shall have directed and appointed by her Last Will and Testament and in default of such appointment, the principal thereof shall pass to the heirs-at-law of my wife.

"(C) Another such part of twenty-five (25%) per cent to my Trustees hereinafter named, in trust, nevertheless, to invest the same and to keep the same invested and collect the rents, income and profits thereof and to pay over such portion of the net income arising therefrom to my wife, Helen Hayner Feldman, during her lifetime, monthly, to the extent that my Trustees, in their discretion, deem necessary that the income provided to be paid her under the provisions of paragraph 'Fifth (A)' be supplemented for her proper support and maintenance during that period, and further, if in any calendar year subsequent to the year in which my death shall occur, the income from this Trust should, in the opinion of my Trustees, be insufficient together with the income from the Trust created in paragraph 'Fifth (A)' hereof, to provide for proper support and maintenance for my wife, then to pay over to my said wife out of the principal of this Trust so much thereof as my Trustees deem necessary for her support and maintenance during that period, and during the lifetime of my wife to pay over the balance of the net income, and upon her death the whole of the net income arising therefrom, to my sister, Rose F. Metzger, monthly during her lifetime, and upon the death of my wife and my sister, the principal or so much thereof as shall be remaining in the hands of my said Trustees, shall be disposed of as follows:

"(a) In the event my wife predeceases my sister, then upon my sister's death in such manner as my sister, in her uncontrolled discretion, shall have directed and appointed by her Last Will and Testament and in default of such appointment, the principal thereof shall pass to the heirs-at-law of my sister.

"(b) In the event my sister predeceases my wife, then upon my wife's death in such manner as my wife, in her uncontrolled discretion, shall have directed and appointed by her Last Will and Testament and in default of such appointment, the principal thereof shall pass to the heirs-at-law of my wife."

Under the terms of the will, Helen Hayner Feldman, Rose F. Metzger and Percival E. Jackson were named as executors, qualified as such and acted until January 5, 1954, at which time Rose F. Metzger died. Decedent's will named Rose F. Metzger and Percival E. Jackson, together with the Farmers and Merchants National Bank of Los Angeles as trustees of the trusts created by paragraphs Fifth (B) and (C) of the will.

In their amended first account current and report, the executors reported net income from the estate in the amount of $146,407.45, as of June 30, 1954. Pursuant to an order for partial distribution dated September 2, 1954, the sum of $12,500 from the income cash on hand was distributed to the trustees of the trust created by paragraph Fifth (B) and a similar amount distributed to the trustees of the trust created by paragraph Fifth (C). Pursuant to a further order for partial distribution dated November 12, 1954, the sum of $24,101.86 cash from the income on hand was distributed to the trustees of the trust created by paragraph Fifth (B), and a similar amount distributed to the trustees of the trust created by paragraph Fifth (C).

During the period of administration of the estate Helen Hayner Feldman, the widow of decedent, has received a family allowance from the estate of $5,000 per month. Such sum has been ample, without reference to the income payable to her under the trust established by paragraph Fifth (A) of the will, for her proper support and maintenance. The trustees have made no finding that any additional monies are or were, during the period from July 24, 1953, through January 5, 1954, so needed by Helen Hayner Feldman.

On a petition for instructions filed by the trustees, the trial court determined that the estate of Rose F. Metzger is entitled to all of the net income received by the executors on the corpus of the trusts created by paragraphs Fifth (B) and Fifth (C) of the will of Joseph Feldman for the period commencing with the date of the death of Joseph Feldman on July 24, 1953, to and including January 5, 1954, the date of the death of Rose F. Metzger, although such income was not distributed to the trustees until September 2, 1954. It is from this decision that the appeal herein is taken.

Appellant contends that the provisions of Section 730.06 of the Civil Code are applicable and that she, as successor beneficiary, is entitled to the income undistributed at the death of Rose F. Metzger, the first life income beneficiary.

Section 730.06 of the Civil Code provides as follows: "[Cessation of right of tenant to income.] Whenever a tenant's right to income shall cease by death, or in any other manner, all payments theretofore actually paid to the tenant or in the hands of the trustee for payment to the tenant shall belong to the tenant or to his personal representative; all income actually received by the trustee after such termination shall be paid to the person next entitled to income by the terms of the transaction by which the principal was established."

It is appellant's contention that, applying the foregoing provisions of Section 730.06 of the Civil Code, when a trust is created to pay the income to a beneficiary for life and thereafter to pay the income to another beneficiary, upon the death of the first beneficiary the second beneficiary is entitled to receive all income from the trust which has not at the date of the death of the first life income beneficiary been paid to such beneficiary or is not yet in the hands of the trustees to pay to such beneficiary.

Respondent, upon the other hand, contends that Section 160 of the Probate Code is determinative of the issue and the construction of Section 730.06 of the Civil Code urged by appellant would nullify Section 160 of the Probate Code and result in a forfeiture of a vested right in those cases wherein the income beneficiary dies prior to the decree of distribution or transfer into the hands of the trustee. Section 160 of the Probate Code provides: "In case of a bequest of the interest or income of a certain sum or fund, the income accrues from the testator's death."

[1-4] Although a bequest of income accrues as of the date of the testator's death, and the beneficiaries of a testamentary trust are entitled to receive the income as of that date, the rule is controlled by the intention of the testator. Probate Code, §§ 160, 163; In re Estate of Platt, 21 Cal.2d 343, 348, 131 P.2d 825; In re Estate of Schiffmann, 86 Cal.App.2d 638, 644, 195 P.2d 484. A decree directing distribution in plain and unambiguous terms operates as an interpretation of the will and binds the parties, precluding resort to the dispositive provisions of the will. In re Estate of Tynan, 129 Cal.App.2d 364, 366, 276 P.2d 809; Cook v. Cook, 17 Cal.2d 639, 652, 111 P.2d 322; In re Estate of Loring, 29 Cal.2d 423, 427, 175 P.2d 524. Also, it is settled that a decree of distribution which has become final is a conclusive construction of the will as against all interested parties, including beneficiaries of a testamentary trust. In re Estate of Van Deusen, 30 Cal.2d 285, 290, 182 P.2d 565; In re Estate of Easter, 24 Cal.2d 191, 194, 148 P.2d 601; In re Estate of Loring, supra, 29 Cal.2d at pages 428-429, 175 P.2d 524; In re Estate of Tynan, supra. Furthermore, once final, an erroneous decree of distribution, like any other erroneous judgment, is as conclusive as a decree that contains no error. In re Estate of Loring, supra, 29 Cal.2d at page 432, 175 P.2d 524.

In the instant case the decrees of distribution of September 2, 1954, and November 12, 1954, ordered distribution of the sum of $36,601.86 to the trustees of the trust created by paragraph Fifth (B) and a similar sum to the trustees of the trust created by paragraph Fifth (C) "to be held, used, managed and disposed of as follows: (1) To invest the principal of the estate and keep the same invested, and to collect the rents, income and profits thereof, and to pay over the net income arising therefrom" as provided in paragraphs Fifth (B) and Fifth (C) of decedent's will. (Italics added.) The decrees did not order the trustees to pay to the beneficiaries as income the sum distributed, but on the contrary ordered the trustees "to invest the principal of the estate [so distributed]" and "to pay over the net income arising therefrom" to the beneficiaries.

[5, 6] An issue concerning income which accrued during probate may be raised upon appeal from a decree of distribution. In re Estate of Platt, supra, 21 Cal.2d 343, 131 P.2d 825; In re Estate of Schiffmann, supra, 86 Cal.App.2d 638, 195 P.2d 484; In re Estate of Tynan, supra, 129 Cal.App.2d 364, 367, 276 P.2d 809. However, since no appeal was taken in the instant case, the decrees have become final and the beneficiaries are bound thereby.

We are of the opinion that under the decrees of distribution of September 2, 1954, and November 12, 1954, the estate of Rose F. Metzger is not entitled to any of the estate distributed to the trustees under those decrees. It is unnecessary, therefore, for us to consider the applicability of Section 730.06 of the Civil Code.

The judgment is reversed.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.
June 28, 1956.
Rehearing Denied July 24, 1956.

Action by surviving husband to obtain property which stood in his deceased wife's name at time of her death on contention that it was, by virtue of executed oral antenuptial agreement, community property. The Superior Court, of Los Angeles County, Jesse J. Frampton, J., rendered judgment adverse to plaintiff and he appealed. The Supreme Court, Carter, J., held, inter alia, that where husband brought prior heirship proceeding on contention that wife died intestate as to him, determination therein that he was entitled to one-half of wife's estate was res judicata upon question of his right to one-half of her estate as community property, irrespective of whether court in heirship proceeding found property to be community or separate property.

Judgment reversed with directions.

Opinion, 285 P.2d 983, vacated.

1. Husband and Wife 🔑266

Separate property of husband or wife may be converted into community property or vice versa at any time by oral agreement between spouses.

2. Husband and Wife 🔑29(9)

An oral antenuptial agreement is effective if it is executed subsequent to marriage as disclosed by acts and conduct in confirmation of it.

3. Husband and Wife 🔑29(4)

An antenuptial agreement between spouses to create community property from separate property has as consideration, if any is needed, mutual consent of spouses.

4. Husband and Wife 🔑34

In action wherein widower sought to obtain property which had stood in name of deceased wife at time of her death on basis of oral antenuptial agreement that such property would become community property, evidence compelled conclusion that agreement had been executed so that property had become community property.

5. Husband and Wife 🔑29(9)

Where antenuptial agreement provided that wife's property was to become community property and that she would will her share to no one but husband, but she willed it to another, even if, under agreement, there was to be community life estate with vested remainder in entire property in husband rather than community in fee, husband could not acquire entire community property upon wife's death unless provision for community property were separable from provision not to will to anyone else, in view of fact that only portion of agreement that property would become community was executed. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 1624 subds. 3, 6.

6. Descent and Distribution 🔑71(7)

Where husband brought heirship proceeding on contention that wife died intestate as to him, determination therein that he was entitled to one-half of wife's estate was res judicata upon question of his right to one-half of her estate as community property in subsequent proceedings brought by him to acquire property, irrespective of whether court in heirship proceeding found property to be community or separate. West's Ann.Prob.Code, §§ 70, 221, 223, 224, 1080.

7. Descent and Distribution 🔑71(7)

Where husband brought heirship proceeding on contention that wife died intestate as to him, he was claiming through estate and not adversely to it and court had right to decide question of his right to share in estate. West's Ann.Prob.Code, §§ 70, 221, 223, 224. 1080.

CARTER, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment in an action in which he sought to obtain property which stood in his deceased wife's, Eugenie, name at the time of her death.

From the findings of the court it appears that defendant bank is the executor of Eugenie's will, she having died on May 28, 1949, at the age of 91. Plaintiff and decedent were married on January 14, 1949. (The other defendants are beneficiaries under the will.) At the time of the marriage decedent owned considerable real and personal property and she "orally agreed with him [plaintiff] that if they were married, all of her property would become community property and would become his property at her death.

"After the marriage of plaintiff and said decedent, she orally declared to plaintiff and to others that by reason of said marriage the property had become the community property of herself and plaintiff and would become his after her death, to which statement plaintiff assented; and said decedent intended by such declarations to transmute her separate property to community property. At the time of her marriage of plaintiff and said decedent, and thereafter, plaintiff was possessed of no property, except items of personal use and adornment. * * * After the said marriage plaintiff earned no money and contributed nothing in the way of property, money, or otherwise, to the community. After the marriage, said deceased did nothing in the way of the transmutation of her separate property, except to make the oral declarations hereinbefore stated; she did not part with the control of any of said property or put the possession of any of it in plaintiff; she retained her bank account in her own name, subject only to her right of withdrawal; she retained her safe deposit box in her own name, subject only to her right of access; she continued to live in the same residence where she had lived prior to her marriage and where, prior to her marriage plaintiff had lived as her employee and continued to live as her husband. The oral declarations of decedent, made after her marriage, that her property was community property, as well as any oral declaration or agreement she may have made prior thereto, was never followed by any action on the part of her or the plaintiff to transfer title, control or possession."

As conclusions of law the court declared that plaintiff had no interest in any of decedent's property except a homestead set aside in the probate proceedings for a period of five years; that all the property was her separate property and she had not conveyed any of it to plaintiff; that the "oral agreements and declarations between the parties hereinbefore found were not executed or consummated" and such agreements and declarations were barred by section 1624(3) and (6) of the Civil Code,[1] and section 1973(3) and (6) of the Code of Civil Procedure,[2] and section 1091 of the Civil Code.[3] Judgment for defendants followed accordingly.

"6. * * * an agreement to devise or bequeath any property, or to make any provision for any person by will * *." Civ.Code, § 1624(3), (6).

[2] The Code of Civil Procedure provision corresponds with section 1624(3) and (6) of the Civil Code, supra.

[3] "An estate in real property, other than an estate at will or for a term not exceeding one year, can be transferred only by operation of law, or by an instrument

Decedent left a will executed before her marriage to plaintiff in which she left some property to plaintiff her servant; that bequest was cancelled by a later codicil. Whether she successfully disinherited plaintiff, her after-acquired spouse, see Prob.Code, § 70; In re Estate of Poisl, 44 Cal.2d 147, 280 P.2d 789, is not before us.

Plaintiff contends that the judgment is not supported by the findings above quoted because thereunder there was an executed oral agreement transmuting decedent's separate property to community property; that an order of the court on his petition to determine heirship in the probate proceedings in decedent's estate is res judicata that the property was community.

[1, 2] It is settled that the separate property of husband or wife may be converted into community property or vice versa at any time by oral agreement between the spouses. Tomaier v. Tomaier, 23 Cal.2d 754, 146 P.2d 905; Gudelj v. Gudelj, 41 Cal.2d 202, 259 P.2d 656; In re Estate of Wieling, 37 Cal.2d 106, 230 P.2d 808; Socol v. King, 36 Cal.2d 342, 223 P.2d 627; LaMar v. LaMar, 30 Cal.2d 898, 186 P.2d 678; Odone v. Marzocchi, 34 Cal.2d 431, 211 P.2d 297, 212 P.2d 233, 17 A.L.R.2d 1109; 10 Cal.Jur.2d, Community Property, § 58. And it has been held that an oral antenuptial agreement is effective if it is executed subsequent to the marriage as disclosed by acts and conduct in confirmation of it. Kenney v. Kenney, 220 Cal. 134, 30 P.2d 398; Handley v. Handley, 113 Cal.App.2d 280, 248 P.2d 59; In re Estate of Piatt, 81 Cal.App.2d 348, 183 P.2d 919.

Defendants contend, however, that there was no agreement that the property was to be community; that if there was such an agreement neither it nor the prenuptial agreement was consummated, pointing out that it has been held that marriage is not such an execution of an oral marriage settlement contract as will take it out of the statute of frauds. See Hughes v. Hughes, 49 Cal.App. 206, 193 P. 144; 13 Cal.Jur. 811–12.

The findings of the court above quoted clearly show an oral agreement before marriage that decedent's property was to be community property. After the marriage it was agreed that her property "had become" community property. This follows from the finding that decedent declared to plaintiff and others that the property had become community property, to which declaration plaintiff assented; that by such declaration, to which plaintiff assented, decedent intended to transmute her separate property to community property. This is a clear case of an executed agreement which transmuted the property. The court went on to find that no action was taken by decedent or plaintiff to transfer title, control or possession and the property continued to be treated as before, thus indicating it thought the law to be that some action in addition to the agreement was necessary before the agreement was executed, but as later discussed that was not necessary.

[3, 4] An agreement such as we have here has as consideration, if any is needed, the mutual consent of the spouses. See Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Cleverdon, 16 Cal.2d 788, 108 P.2d 405, and cases there cited; see Title Insurance, etc., Co. v. Ingersoll, 153 Cal. 1, 94 P. 94. In Re Estate of Raphael, 91 Cal.App.2d 931, 939, 206 P.2d 391, 395, it is said: "The object of the oral agreement of transmutation was fully performed when the agreement was made for it immediately transmuted and converted the separate property of each spouse into community property, and nothing further remained to be done." In that case, other than evidence of the oral agreement that separate property of one spouse was to be community property, nothing was shown except the making of income tax returns treating the property as community. No transfers or instruments of conveyance were executed and no delivery of possession of property made. The tax returns were not essentially different in effect than decedent's declaration in the instant case that the property was community. In most of the other cases dealing with oral transmutation agreements there was evidence of various things such as the use of the property by the spouses as though it were of the character to which it was transmuted by agreement, commingling of property and similar factors, but the language stating the rule in the cases is broad. Those other things are only evidence which may sustain or refute the existence of an agreement for transmutation or its execution; none of the cases hold that they are indispensable. Recognizing the practice of informality in property dealings between husband and wife it appears there was nothing more to be done in this case. The transmutation had taken place; it was a fait accompli. It is not surprising under the facts in the instant case that nothing more was done since the parties were married only about four months before decedent's death. If other things are indispensable as argued by defendants, then in cases of the death of a spouse shortly after the agreement, the rule would generally not apply because of the physical improbability of the time to do those things. We know of no such limitation on the rule.

in writing, subscribed by the party disposing of the same, or by his agent thereunto authorized by writing." Civ.Code, § 1091.

[5] Plaintiff claims more than one-half of the community property notwithstanding decedent's half was given to others by the will. He asserts that the agreement between decedent and him created a community property life estate in the property with a present vested remainder interest in the whole in him; the vested remainder portion of the agreement was executed as well as the life community interest; that therefore there was no property interest in decedent at the time of her death upon which her will could operate. There would appear to be no obstacle to that position for if a remainder was intended it would be created at the same time as the life estate. However, it is not clear from the court's findings as to the agreement heretofore quoted whether a community life estate and vested remainder were created or that plaintiff and decedent were to hold the property as community in fee simple and decedent would either not will away her half of it or would will it to plaintiff. If it is the latter, plaintiff is confronted with subdivision 6 of Civil Code section 1624, quoted supra, and that portion of the agreement was not executed because decedent did leave a will and did not leave the property to plaintiff. If the findings are subject to the latter construction, the judgment cannot be affirmed on the theory that the findings must be construed to support the judgment, because the court found that plaintiff obtained no interest in the property by the agreement and it is not found whether that portion of the agreement making the property community is separable from the portion agreeing to not will it to anyone else except plaintiff.

The foregoing furnishes sufficient ground for reversal, but there is an additional reason why a reversal should be ordered with directions, because of the defendant's plea of res judicata.

[6] The record shows that on May 17th the plaintiff filed in the matter of the estate of his deceased wife a petition to determine heirship in which he alleged that the decedent left a will executed on April 18, 1945 (which provided therein for the plaintiff); that she made a codicil thereto dated June 20, 1945 (by which the decedent excluded the plaintiff from the will as a beneficiary); that the plaintiff and the decedent were married on January 15, 1949; that by reason of the marriage the decedent died intestate as to the plaintiff, see Prob. Code, § 70; In re Estate of Poisl, 44 Cal. 2d 147, 280 P.2d 789, and that he was the heir of the decedent as her surviving spouse, see Prob.Code, §§ 221, 223, 224. The petition to determine heirship prayed that the court declare the rights of the parties and "determine to whom distribution of said estate should be made."

[7] By his petition the plaintiff as an heir of the decedent properly invoked the jurisdiction of the court in probate under section 1080 of the Probate Code. The court determined that the plaintiff was entitled to one-half of the property. That decision became final long before the commencement of the present action. Whatever reasoning prompted the court in arriving at its conclusion that the plaintiff was entitled to one-half is not now important. The court had the right to decide the question at issue, as the plaintiff in asserting that he was an heir was thereby claiming through the estate and not adversely to it. Central Bank v. Superior Court, 45 Cal.2d 10, 16–17, 285 P.2d 906. It mattered not whether the court sitting in probate found the property to be community or separate. It had the power to decide the question of heirship presented in the petition and the determination therein is res judicata. The fact that the petition also sought to have the entire estate declared to be community property did not oust the court sitting in probate of jurisdiction to determine the question of heirship. Anything in In re Estate of Kurt, 83 Cal.App.2d 681, 189 P.2d 528, inconsistent with the conclusion herein is disapproved. Because of what has been said a retrial of the cause becomes unnecessary.

The judgment is reversed and the trial court is directed to enter judgment awarding the plaintiff one-half of the property of the decedent and such other relief as may flow from his ownership and right to possession thereof.

Ann C. DREYER, Defendant and Appellant.
Civ. 21478.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.
July 19, 1956.

Action to recover money obtained from plaintiff by defendant. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Lloyd S. Nix, J., rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that plea of accord and satisfaction was insufficient in absence of allegation of essential element of full performance by defendant of terms of accord.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Attorney and Client ⚿62

A litigant is entitled to act as his own attorney, but, in so doing, he should be restricted to the same rules of evidence and procedure as are required of those qualified to practice law, and should expect and receive the same treatment as if represented by an attorney.

2. Appeal and Error ⚿989, 996

Where a finding of fact is attacked on ground that there is no substantial evidence to sustain it, the power of reviewing court begins and ends with the determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support such finding, and reviewing court has no power to judge the effect or value of the evidence, weigh the evidence, consider the credibility of witnesses, or resolve conflicts in the evidence or in the reasonable inferences that may be drawn therefrom.

3. Appeal and Error ⚿996

Where two or more inferences can reasonably be deduced from the facts, reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of trial court.

4. Accord and Satisfaction ⚷25(2)

In action to recover money allegedly obtained from plaintiff by fraud, allegations that plaintiff had agreed to accept deed to specified realty in full satisfaction of debt, and that defendant held such deed in her possession awaiting instructions from plaintiff in accordance with oral agreement that deed should be delivered to plaintiff upon written evidence of her restoration to legal capacity, were insufficient to plead defense of accord and satisfaction in absence of allegation of essential element of full performance of terms of accord. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1522.

5. Accord and Satisfaction ⚷20

Accord agreement allegedly made after one of the parties had been committed to state hospital as a result of mental illness and before she was restored to legal capacity was void. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 40.

6. Novation ⚷12

In action to recover money allegedly obtained from plaintiff by fraud, evidence failed to establish any novation.

7. Fraud ⚷58(2)

In action to recover money which defendant claimed she had merely borrowed from plaintiff, evidence supported finding that defendant had obtained such money from plaintiff by fraud in the form of a promise made without any existing intention to perform.

Hyman Gold; Harry Gold, Santa Monica, for appellant.

A. W. Brunton, Los Angeles, for respondent.

ASHBURN, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment for $5,400 principal and $894.50 interest, which is based upon findings that she obtained the $5,400 from plaintiff by fraud in the form of a promise made without any existing intention to perform the same.

[1] Defendant tried the case in propria persona. On appeal she requests through present counsel that "in the best interests of justice" this court "extend further latitude to appellant than would ordinarily be the case, in interpretation of the transcript and records of the trial in the lower court." This request misconceives the applicable rule. "A litigant has a right to act as his own attorney Gray v. Justice's Court, 18 Cal.App.2d 420, 63 P.2d 1160, 'but, in so doing, should be restricted to the same rules of evidence and procedure as is required of those qualified to practice law before our courts; otherwise, ignorance is unjustly rewarded.' Knapp v. Fleming, 127 Colo. 414, 258 P.2d 489; Monastero v. Los Angeles Transit Co., 131 Cal.App.2d 156, 160-161, 280 P.2d 187. The Supreme Court of Arizona, in Ackerman v. Southern Arizona Bank & Trust Co., 39 Ariz. 484, 7 P.2d 944, stated the principle in this language: 'A layman with resources who insists upon exercising the privilege of representing himself must expect and receive the same treatment as if represented by an attorney—no different, no better, no worse.' To that same effect is Biggs v. Spader, 411 Ill. 42, 103 N.E.2d 104. The fact that a layman elects to represent himself 'certainly does not excuse him from a failure of proof' of his cause of action. Pete v. Henderson, 124 Cal.App.2d 487, 491, 269 P.2d 78, 80 [45 A.L.R.2d 58]." Lombardi v. Citizens National Trust, etc., Bank, 137 Cal.App.2d 206, 208, 289 P.2d 823, 824.

[2, 3] Claiming that the finding of fraud is not supported by the evidence counsel engage in an argument as to the preponderance of the evidence, disregarding the rule which has been so often repeated, and as recently as Primm v. Primm, 46 Cal.2d 690, 299 P.2d 231, 233: "(1) When a finding of fact is attacked on the ground that there is not any substantial evidence to sustain it, the power of an appellate court begins and ends with the determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence contradicted or uncontradicted which will support the finding of fact. * * * (2) When two or more inferences can reasonably be deduced from the facts, a reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the trial court." Mr. Justice Vallée put it thus: "With rhythmic regularity it is necessary for us to say that where the findings are attacked for insufficiency of the evidence, our power begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence to support them; that we have no power to judge of the effect or value of the evidence, to weigh the evidence, to consider the credibility of the witnesses, or to resolve conflicts in the evidence or in the reasonable inferences that may be drawn therefrom. No one seems to listen." Overton v. Vita-Food Corp., 94 Cal.App.2d 367, 370, 210 P.2d 757, 759.

[4] The answer (drawn by a former attorney), in addition to denials of the principal allegations of the complaint, alleges by way of separate defense that the $5,400 was received by defendant in two loans, $400 and $5,000, respectively; that they were represented by promissory notes dated December 15, 1952 and December 27, 1952; that "thereafter and on or about the 1st day of March, 1953 this answering defendant first learned that plaintiff was confined to the State Hospital located at Camarillo, California, as a result of mental illness;" that there was an accord and satisfaction on or about June 30, 1953, whereby plaintiff agreed to accept in full satisfaction of the debt certain real property in the city of Hanford; that defendant "holds said deed in her possession waiting oral instructions from plaintiff in accordance with the oral agreement between plaintiff and defendant that said deed be delivered to plaintiff upon plaintiffs receiving and conveying to defendant written evidence of plaintiffs restoration to legal capacity." This plea is insufficient because it does not allege the essential element of full performance of the terms of the accord. Civ.Code, § 1522; 1 Cal.Jur.2d § 34, p. 276; Silvers v. Grossman, 183 Cal. 696, 699, 192 P. 534.

[5] Complaint is made that appellant was precluded from the introduction of evidence "with relation to the possibility of an accord and satisfaction or novation for the agreement to repay the money she had borrowed from respondent." It appears, however, that plaintiff was adjudged mentally ill and committed to Camarillo on February 25, 1953, paroled on June 30, 1953, and restored to capacity on February 1, 1954. According to defendant's answer she learned of this commitment about March 1, 1953; her testimony placed it in May, 1953. The alleged accord agreement is claimed to have been made on or about June 30, 1953. Such a contract, made before restoration to capacity, is void. Civ.Code, § 40; Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank v. Alden, 206 Cal. 592, 604, 275 P. 794; Gibson v. Westoby, 115 Cal.App.2d 273, 275-276, 251 P.2d 1003. The facts concerning this adjudication and restoration appeared early in the trial and the court ruled repeatedly that evidence of same would not be received. However, leniency toward one appearing in propria persona resulted in defendant's getting her evidence into the record and the effect of that was to prove that any agreement of accord and satisfaction was void, if actually made. Plaintiff testified that she made no such agreement. Indeed, defendant's own evidence shows the same thing. There was no error in the rulings on this phase of the case.

[6] Though there is no pleading to that effect counsel now argue for a novation. Plaintiff's testimony, which was accepted by the court, disproved any such claim. Hence the argument must fail of fruition.

Appellant's real defense was that she had merely borrowed $5,400 from plaintiff in a simple loan transaction resulting in two promissory notes, and that she had liquidated them through an accord and satisfaction whose subject matter was the Hanford property. After the evidence was practically closed the trial judge interrogated her. In response to his questions she said that she received the $5,400 from plaintiff and delivered the two notes; that they had been extended until sometime in 1954 (the trial began on May 2, 1955); that she had paid no part of principal or interest on either note; that she does not deny owing the money and her defense is the alleged agreement concerning the Hanford house,—the void agreement made, if at all, during plaintiff's adjudged incompetency. On further cross-examination by plaintiff's counsel it developed that defendant had sold the Hanford house which her answer alleged she was still holding for delivery to plaintiff.

[7] Neither an insufficiency of the evidence nor a prejudicial error appears

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an action for declaratory relief and an accounting for monies claimed to be due for the years 1947 to 1951, inclusive, as compensation under franchises granted by the county to the company under the Broughton Act, Stats.1905, p. 777, Public Utilities Code, §§ 6001–6006. Two franchises are involved, one for electric lines and one for gas lines. There is no dispute as to the material facts. The cities of San Diego, Coronado and National City are all contiguous, and so far as material here may be considered as one city. The electricity and gas supplied to consumers in what may be called this metropolitan area was produced in San Diego, and the lines carrying the same to these three cities do not pass over any county road and merely pass from city to city without any intervening property of any kind.

* Opinion vacated 307 P.2d 365.

The company, according to its computation, made all payments due to the county for these years. In this action, filed November 28, 1952, the county relies on a different computation, claiming that the entire gross receipts of the company on a system-wide basis should be taken as the starting point for computing the payments due. The entire amount thus in dispute amounts to $91,045.95. Both methods of computation used the same investment factor and the same mileage of lines on county roads, but the county's computation starts with the gross receipts of the entire system while the company's computation starts with its gross receipts exclusive of the receipts from this metropolitan area. The court found that the method of computation used by the company is correct and in accordance with law; that the franchise requirements have been fully complied with; that the situation here involved varies substantially from the situation existing in other counties where the method of computing such franchise payments has been judicially determined; and that the exclusion of the revenue from these three cities from the computation is justified by the unique situation disclosed by the evidence. A judgment was entered declaring that the company's method of computing the compensation due to the county is correct and in accordance with the law and the terms of the franchises, and that all amounts due to the county as such compensation have been correctly calculated, accounted for and paid to the county. It was further ordered that the county take nothing by reason of this action. The county has appealed from this judgment.

The question presented is whether the receipts from gas or electricity which is both produced and sold "within an incorporated city" may be excluded from the gross receipts, upon the basis of which the two per cent franchise payments are to be computed, on the ground that such receipts within the city do not arise from the use, operation or possession of any county franchises. The appellant argues that the delivery lines in this metropolitan area serve to carry these products to unincorporated areas and other cities in the county on a system-wide basis; that the court's holding that the receipts from this metropolitan area may be excluded from the computation is contrary to settled law as decided in County of Tulare v. City of Dinuba, 188 Cal. 664, 206 P. 983, County of Tulare v. Dinuba, 87 Cal.App. 744, 263 P. 249, and County of Los Angeles v. Southern Counties Gas Co., 42 Cal.2d 129, 266 P.2d 27; that the trial court thus refused to follow the formula established by those cases; and that under the formula so established the county has a right to use as a basis for the computation all of the gross receipts of the company arising within the county.

The trial court followed the formula approved in the cases heretofore decided, including the investment factor, except that it took as the gross receipts (to be considered as a basis for the tax) the total receipts of the company's system after excluding therefrom the receipts from this metropolitan area, in which in serving the consumers no use was made of the franchises granted by the county. In other words, in applying the established formula the court excluded from consideration the receipts from this metropolitan area which were in no way dependent upon the franchises granted by the county, and which cannot logically or fairly be said to have arisen from the use, operation or possession of those franchises.

[1] The Broughton Act does not purport to require a payment of compensation based on the gross receipts in any area on a system-wide basis. It provides for the payment of two per cent of the gross receipts "arising from (the) use, operation or possession" of the franchise granted. In the first Tulare case, 188 Cal. 664, 206 P. 983, 986, involving a dispute over the amount of franchise payments due to a city and a county, respectively, the court pointed out that such a payment is neither a tax nor a license charge, and said "It is a compensation for the use of the portions of the highway covered by the franchise easement, and it is limited to such percentage of the total gross receipts as can be shown to have arisen from the use of the franchise." Also, "In other words, the obvious policy of this law is to treat the public utility in the entire territory occupied as a single entity, and to distribute to each franchise wherever situated its two per cent. of whatever portion of the gross receipts can be traced to its exclusive use, and as to all receipts arising from the indistinguishable use of all rights of way in the system, making the division in proportion to the respective mileage of the various parts." It was there pointed out that allowance should be made for receipts attributable to such things as powerhouses and private rights of way which did not arise from the use of a franchise, and further suggested that where receipts were attributable to more than one franchise a practical solution was to divide the payment on a proportionate mileage basis. On a second appeal in that case, 87 Cal.App. 744, 263 P. 249, 250, a division between the county and the city on a mileage basis was affirmed, the court pointing out that "* * * the franchise lines in the county are helping to earn the receipts collected from the city consumers." These principles were recognized and followed in City of Monrovia v. Southern Counties Gas Co., 111 Cal.App. 659, 296 P. 117, 119, where the court said: "The receipts collected for the sale of gas within the city of Monrovia arose in part from appellant's franchise within the city and in part from its properties and rights of way outside the city."

These principles were also recognized in the cases of City of San Diego v. Southern etc. Tel. Corp., 42 Cal.2d 110, 266 P.2d 14 and County of Los Angeles v. Southern etc. Gas Co., 42 Cal.2d 129, 266 P.2d 27, 30, although other questions were there decided. In the telephone case, where two areas were involved and because the receipts collected in one of them were partly earned by the company's facilities in the other area, the court approved the use of an additional element in the formula for determining what receipts were to be considered as attributable to the franchises, consisting of an allocation of the gross receipts based upon the ratio that the company's investment in its distributing system in the area bears to its total plant investment therein. In the gas case, where the company produced only a small amount of the gas it sold, and operated under franchises granted by six counties and many cities, the question involved was the amount due under four franchises granted by the plaintiff county. The court followed the principles and formula suggested in the Tulare case as augmented by those suggested in the telephone case. In approving the use of that formula the court pointed out that gross receipts which did not arise from the use of a franchise must be excluded from the base to which the two per cent charge applies. In discussing the county franchises there involved, the court said:

> "Gross receipts that arise from the use of the franchises are the gross receipts attributable to that part of the property using the public rights of way pursuant to the franchises."
> "It is clear from the opinion in the Tulare case that the principle that this court there enunciated was that the county was not entitled to any part of the gross receipts from utility property not subject to franchise charges."
> "For the same reason [as the exclusion in the Tulare case of gross receipts attributable to property on private rights of way] gross receipts from other parts of the distribution system that are not subject to franchise charges are not subject to the 2% charge."
> "It is not 2% of its total gross receipts but only 2% of its gross receipts 'arising from the use' of the franchises that is exacted as a payment for the use of such franchises."

[2] None of these cases involved such a situation as that here appearing, where a large part of the total receipts from the company's operations arose from selling and distributing the products in the same area in which they were produced, and without the use of any property or franchise rights outside of that area. The statute imposes the payment only on that part of the gross receipts which arise from the use and operation of a particular franchise, and the Tulare case clearly points out that the obvious policy of this law is to give to the franchise grantor only its two per cent of such portion of the gross receipts as can be shown to have arisen from the use of the franchise thus granted. While the only receipts material to that case which were pointed out as being not subject to the franchise charge were the portions of the receipts which were attributable to the use of powerhouses and private rights of way, the governing principle was clearly set forth and it was recognized in the case as a whole that under other circumstances other exceptions should be made.

The effect of the court's findings here is that the receipts from the gas and electricity produced and sold within these three cities did not arise from the use or operation of the county franchises and should, therefore, be excluded from the gross receipts to be used in computing the amount to be paid as compensation for the use of county roads. These conclusions are correct since it clearly appears from the language of the statute and from all of the decisions that such compensation is to be based solely upon such receipts as can be shown to have arisen from the use and operation of the county franchise. The fact that this was a "unified system", in which the gas and electric lines also extended to other parts of the county outside this metropolitan area is not controlling. The facts which here appear are different from those in the telephone case, where the receipts in one part of the area involved were necessarily tied up with and affected by the use of facilities in both parts of that area. Here, the receipts in the metropolitan area were dependent only on the facilities within that area and involved no use of the county roads or the county's franchises. The receipts in these three cities arose from the use of other franchises granted therein. While no allocation as between franchises is involved here, the court held in the first Tulare case that even where such a division is called for the obvious policy of the law is "to distribute to each franchise wherever situated its 2 per cent. of whatever portion of the gross receipts can be traced to its exclusive use." The same reasoning is applicable here, and the county's present contention that the company is not justified in deducting "any part of its gross revenue from the computation" cannot be sustained. With the intention and purpose of the law in mind, the only logical and practical conclusion is that no use of the franchises granted by the county was here made insofar as the receipts from consumers in these three cities are concerned.

There is no dispute here as to the gas revenues since November 1, 1949, when the company discontinued the manufacture of gas and began the use of natural gas brought in from outside the county. The company has admittedly treated all subsequent receipts from gas as arising from the use and operation of the county franchises. A portion of the amount here claimed, however, relates to receipts for gas during 1947, 1948, and a part of 1949. The facts in that regard are exactly the same as those involving the distribution of electricity during the period in question, and no distinction in that regard is justified.

In view of our holding on the main point presented, certain other points incidentally raised by the appellant require no consideration.

The judgment is affirmed.

Geneva CHING (Yee), Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Eugene DY FOON, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 16723.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

July 16, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 15, 1956.

Hearing Denied Sept. 13, 1956.

Action by automobile guest passenger against host motorist for injuries received by guest when host fell asleep and drove into rear of vehicle stopped for traffic signal. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Harry J. Neubarth, J., entered judgment for host, and guest appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, J., held that questions whether host was guilty of wilful misconduct and whether guest assumed risk of such misconduct were for jury.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Negligence 🔑116, 117

Assumption of risk and contributory negligence may be produced as affirmative defense in wilful misconduct cases.

2. Pleading 🔑225(2)

Sustaining of a special demurrer without leave to amend is unquestionably an abuse of discretion.

3. Automobiles 🔑239(1)

Where, in action by automobile guest passenger against host motorist for injuries received by guest when host motorist fell asleep and drove into rear of vehicle stopped for traffic signal, only risk alleged in complaint was host's driving in a drowsy condition, answer, which alleged that guest voluntarily rode in host's automobile and voluntarily assumed all risks incident at time and place in question and under circumstances then existing, was sufficient to assert defense of assumption of the risk.

4. Negligence 🔑111(1)

Negligence may be alleged in very general terms, and pleader need only allege the act which caused the injury and state that it was done negligently.

5. Pleading 🔑207

Where the allegations make issues which adverse party must meet sufficiently clear, special demurrer will not be sustained.

6. Pleading 🔑192(2)

Where facts claimed to be uncertain or ambiguous are presumptively within demurring party's knowledge, demurrer for uncertainty will not be sustained.

7. Negligence 🔑116

In pleading defense of assumption of the risk, it was not necessary to plead all the evidentiary facts.

8. Automobiles 🔑245(24, 87)

In action by automobile guest passenger against host motorist for injuries received by guest when host fell asleep and drove into rear of vehicle stopped for traffic signal, questions whether host was guilty of wilful misconduct and whether guest assumed risk of such misconduct were for jury.

9. Negligence 🔑105

One assumes a risk when he freely, voluntarily, and knowingly manifests his assent to dangerous conduct or to maintenance of a dangerous condition and voluntarily exposes himself to danger or when he knows that a danger exists, either in the conduct or condition of another or in the condition, use, or operation of property and voluntarily places himself or remains within the area of danger.

10. Negligence 🔑105

To bar recovery, assumption of risk must be voluntary, and, to be voluntary, person in question must have actual knowledge of the danger and have had freedom of choice arising from circumstances which provide such person an opportunity, without violating any legal or moral duty, to safely refuse to expose himself to the danger in question.

11. Negligence ⇨105

If assumption of risk meets with requirements of the law, it will bar recovery for damage even though it has no part in causing the accident except that it exposes the injured person to the danger.

12. Negligence ⇨132(1)

In determining whether person assented to or assumed a risk of damages for the resulting injury, jury may consider such person's age, experience, and capacity along with all other circumstances as shown by the evidence.

13. Negligence ⇨105, 135(3)

For defense of assumption of the risk to exist, plaintiff must have had knowledge of condition which created hazard, and actual knowledge may be inferred from circumstantial evidence.

14. Appeal and Error ⇨216(2)

Where instructions on burden of proof were correct, appellant, who did not ask for further specific or qualifying instructions on the subject, would not be heard to complain on appeal that the instructions were repetitious and failed to point out to jury that burden of proof on assumption of risk was on appellee.

15. Trial ⇨253(4)

In personal injury action arising from automobile accident, refusal to give instruction that there was no issue in case as to acts or conduct of plaintiff and that jury could not consider such in making its determination as to proximate cause of the accident was proper, since instruction would eliminate defense of assumption of risk from jury's consideration even though instruction was designated as one to inform jury that contributory negligence was not at issue.

16. Trial ⇨242

Refusal to give requested instruction, which was confusing and ambiguous, was not error.

17. Negligence ⇨139(3)

Use, in instruction on wilful misconduct, of term, "serious" without giving of a definition for such term was not error.

18. Automobiles ⇨246(60)

In personal injury action by automobile guest passenger against host motorist, giving of instruction on assumption of risk could not have misled jury to believe that assumption of risk was part of guest's burden of proof as to what constituted wilful misconduct, even though instruction stated that guest, to recover, had to allege that, while she was riding as a guest, host drove in wilful or reckless manner.

19. Automobiles ⇨246(3)

In action by automobile guest passenger against host motorist for injuries received in collision, giving of instruction, which used terms "gross negligence" and "negligence" without defining them, and which stated that wilful misconduct involved a more positive intent to harm another, was not error, in view of fact that instruction did not state that wilful misconduct was a form of negligence but pointed out that all forms of negligence were excluded where a guest sued for wilful misconduct and then went on to correctly define the two types of wilful misconduct.

20. Appeal and Error ⇨882(12)

Where, in action by automobile guest passenger against host motorist for injuries sustained in automobile accident, guest requested instruction which further amplified meaning of recklessness and which pointed out that intent to injure was not a necessary element of wilful misconduct, error, if any, in regard to conflict between such instructions and prior instructions given at host's request was invited error.

21. Automobiles ⇨181(1)

In action by automobile guest passenger against host motorist for injuries sustained in automobile accident, wilful misconduct could be established without showing any violation of the statutory duty.

22. Automobiles ⚷246(3)

In action by automobile guest passenger against host motorist for injuries sustained in automobile accident, giving of instruction which stated that failure to perform statutory duty was not alone wilful misconduct and that, to constitute wilful misconduct, there must be actual knowledge, or legal equivalent thereof, of peril to be apprehended, coupled with conscious failure to act to end of averting injury plus knowledge that injury to guest will be a probable, as distinguished from a possible, result did not limit jury to finding that the misconduct had to be the violation of such a duty.

23. Appeal and Error ⚷1064(1)

Giving to jury of instruction that witness is presumed to speak the truth was not prejudicial.

24. Appeal and Error ⚷882(16)

In personal injury action arising from automobile accident, defense counsel's alleged interjection of inference of collusion between plaintiff and defendant's witness and defense counsel's attempt to impeach his own witness allegedly to destroy favorable evidence given on cross-examination was not prejudicial misconduct, in view of fact that, if jury thought there might have been something suspicious in visit of defendant to office of plaintiff's counsel, plaintiff's counsel supplied them with such information.

25. Automobiles ⚷243(3)

In action by automobile guest passenger against host motorist for injuries received in automobile accident, host was entitled to show that guest had ridden with host after the accident in order to convince jury that guest would not have done so if guest had believed host had been guilty of wilful misconduct in the accident.

26. Witnesses ⚷380(5)

Where, in personal injury action, witness had simply stated that she didn't remember visiting certain night spots prior to accident, counsel's offering, for identification only, prior statement signed by witness would be viewed as attempt to refresh recollection, rather than to impeach witness, in view of fact that counsel did not contradict the witness.

27. Appeal and Error ⚷207, 1015(1)

Where, prior to motion for new trial, movant did not claim that there had been misconduct, and there was no assignment of misconduct, and trial court was not asked to instruct jury to disregard remarks claimed to have resulted in the misconduct, conclusion of trial judge, who, on motion for new trial, passed on the asserted misconduct, and who was in better position than the reviewing court to determine whether a verdict resulted wholly or in part therefrom, would not be disturbed in absence of showing that it was plainly wrong.

White & White, San Francisco, for appellant.

Bledsoe, Smith & Cathcart, Leighton M. Bledsoe, Joseph W. Rogers, Jr., San Francisco, of counsel, for respondent.

KAUFMAN, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant and appellant after jury verdict in a personal injury action by a guest for injuries received in an automobile accident in Los Angeles on September 7, 1951.

Appellant, Geneva Ching, Esther Wong, another guest, and Eugene Dy Foon, the driver and owner of the automobile in which the three were riding, were on their way from Farmers' Market to Knott Berry Farm, when respondent fell asleep at the wheel and crashed into the rear of another vehicle which had stopped for a stop signal at an intersection on Figueroa Street. Appellant, riding beside the respondent, was asleep when the accident happened. She was thrown against the dashboard sustaining severe facial cuts about the mouth and chin and the loss of several teeth.

Respondent Dy Foon had been dating appellant occasionally for some months prior to this trip. Appellant, who was to attend a bowling tournament in Los Angeles, left San Francisco in the company of Mrs. Wong and Elsie Chang, in respondent's car prior to the Labor Day week end. They visited San Diego and Tiajuana before Labor Day, attended the bowling tournament on Labor Day in Los Angeles, and probably on Tuesday. On Monday or Tuesday evening they went to a dance. Leaving Los Angeles Wednesday evening they drove at night, reaching Las Vegas, Nevada, in the morning. Respondent did most of the driving but was occasionally relieved by Elsie Chang. The evidence does not show whether or not respondent slept while Elsie drove, but no stops were made for sleep. Elsie rested in the car while the other three walked around town. They then drove to Hoover Dam where they rested in a park for a couple of hours. Appellant believed that they all took naps.

In the evening of the same day, Thursday, September 6, the group headed back for Los Angeles, respondent doing all the driving on this trip. Respondent stopped the car once to sleep. Appellant did not know how long the stop had been as she awoke as the car started up again. They arrived in Los Angeles at about daylight Friday.

After leaving the women at their quarters, respondent went to his sister's home. Some time later in the morning he took a girl friend of appellant's to work, drove around Los Angeles with appellant, picked up appellant's girl friend, and went with them to the Farmers' Market for lunch. They left the Farmers' Market at about 2:00 p. m. to go to Knott Berry Farm. Appellant had asked respondent to take her there as she had seen some slippers there which she wanted to buy. She asked respondent if he was tired or sleepy because she thought he would be, saying they could have dinner first if he wished. He said no he wasn't, that he could do it. Appellant felt wide awake at the time, but was asleep when the accident happened.

Respondent testified that appellant and Mrs. Wong asked him twice if he was sleepy on leaving Farmers' Market, that he was not at that time, having just had a cold drink. He nodded his head a couple times in drowsiness prior to the accident, but shook himself and felt awake and able to drive.

Respondent pleaded the defense of assumption of risk. A special demurrer to this plea was overruled. At the commencement of the trial, appellant's motion to strike the special defense was denied and instructions on this defense were given to the jury.

The complaint herein filed August 22, 1952, alleged that on September 7, 1951, at about 3:30 p. m., plaintiff was a guest in defendant's automobile which was being operated in a southerly direction on Figueroa Street in Los Angeles; that defendant caused said automobile to collide with an automobile ahead of him which had stopped in compliance with an automatic stop signal; that the collision and the injuries sustained resulted from defendant's wilful misconduct in operating the automobile in that "knowing he was in a drowsy and sleepy condition, and knowing he was napping or dozing at the wheel and knowing to continue to drive in said drowsy condition was a dangerous thing to do, he continued to drive said automobile with reckless disregard of the consequences and recklessly and wantonly took a chance with the knowledge that probable serious injury would result to plaintiff from said misconduct." The answer denied generally the allegations of the complaint and set up the following affirmative defense: "This defendant alleges that plaintiff Geneva Ching voluntarily rode in the automobile mentioned in said complaint, and voluntarily assumed all of the risks [incident] to riding in said automobile at the time and place in question and under circumstances existing when she elected to ride with defendant."

Appellant asserts that error was committed by the trial court in denying her motion to strike the affirmative defense, since no facts were pleaded showing appellant's knowledge of the danger, or her appreciation of the danger, or that the danger known and appreciated by appellant were the proximate cause of appellant's injuries.

[1, 2] It is well established that assumption of risk and contributory negligence may be pleaded as affirmative defenses in wilful misconduct cases. (7 Cal.Jur.2d 239, sec. 340, and cases there cited.) If the plea in question was good against a general demurrer, it was good against a motion to strike, for even if the special demurrer had been improperly overruled, granting the motion to strike in such case would be equivalent to sustaining a special demurrer without leave to amend, a ruling which is unquestionably an abuse of discretion. Zakaessian v. Zakaessian, 70 Cal.App.2d 721, 161 P.2d 677; Duffy v. Duffy, 82 Cal. App.2d 203, 186 P.2d 61.

[3, 4] The defense is good against general demurrer for it alleged that she voluntarily rode in the automobile mentioned in the complaint, and voluntarily assumed all of the risks incident to riding in said automobile at the time and place in question and under the circumstances existing when she elected to ride with defendant. The only risk alleged in the complaint is respondent's driving in a drowsy condition. Therefore the answer sufficiently advised appellant that respondent would attempt to prove that appellant assumed the risk of respondent's knowingly driving in a sleepy condition. Under the present liberal rules of pleading, negligence may be alleged in very general terms, the pleader alleging only the act which caused injury, stating that it was done negligently. Stephenson v. Southern Pacific Co., 102 Cal. 143, 148, 34 P. 618, 36 P. 407; Griswold v. Pacific Electric Railway, 45 Cal.App. 81, 87, 187 P. 65.

[5, 6] It also appears that no prejudicial error could have resulted from the overruling of the special demurrer. Such a demurrer will not be sustained when the allegations make sufficiently clear the issues which the adverse party must meet. People v. Lim, 18 Cal.2d 872, 118 P.2d 472; Brea v. McGlashan, 3 Cal.App.2d 454, 39 P.2d 877. No reasonable person could be in doubt as to what risk respondent had alleged that appellant had assumed since the complaint alleged only one—knowingly driving while sleepy. On trial, this was the only risk respondent attempted to prove appellant had assumed under this defense. Furthermore, a demurrer for uncertainty will not be sustained where the facts claimed to be uncertain or ambiguous are presumptively within the knowledge of the demurring party. Merlino v. West Coast Macaroni Mfg. Co., 90 Cal.App.2d 106, 108, 202 P.2d 748.

[7] Appellant complains that there is no statement in the defense that appellant knew of and appreciated the risk. Pleading that she voluntarily assumed the risk of respondent's knowingly driving in a sleepy condition necessarily implies these elements. It is not necessary to plead all the evidentiary facts. Although the defense could have been more specifically stated, no prejudice could result in overruling the demurrer where the facts were all presumptively within the knowledge of the demurring party. Merlino v. West Coast Macaroni Mfg. Co., supra; Salas v. Whittington, 77 Cal.App.2d 90, 174 P.2d 886; 2 Witkin, California Procedure 1599.

Respondent's counsel offered at the opening of the trial to amend his defense, but appellant's counsel demanded a ten day continuance in order to plead that the defense was sham if leave to amend should be granted by the court. The court denied the continuance but assured appellant that additional time would be granted her at any time during trial if she should be surprised and need time to obtain additional evidence. No such request was made.

[8] It is contended that appellant was entitled to a directed verdict in her favor. Under the evidence in this case it was a factual question whether or not respondent was guilty of wilful misconduct. It was also a factual question as to whether or not appellant had assumed the risk of respondent's misconduct, if any. We know of no case which holds as a matter of law that it is wilful misconduct to continue to drive after having experienced "premonitory symptoms" of sleep. It has been held that where a driver goes to sleep at the wheel of an automobile and after awakening continues to drive and an accident results from him falling asleep again, it is a question of fact for the jury as to whether the driver was guilty of wilful misconduct in thus continuing to drive. Erickson v. Vogt, 27 Cal.App.2d 77, 80 P.2d 533; Pennix v. Winton, 61 Cal.App.2d 761, 143 P.2d 940, 145 P.2d 561; Halstead v. Paul, 129 Cal. App.2d 339, 340, 277 P.2d 43. It was therefore not error to refuse to direct a verdict in appellant's favor.

It may be said that the evidence was also sufficient to support a finding that appellant had assumed the risk of respondent's conduct, for the jury could well have inferred from the evidence herein that appellant, because of her knowledge of the group's activities since they had left San Francisco, and because of her questioning of respondent as to whether or not he was tired prior to the commencement of this drive, fully realized the danger of driving in Los Angeles traffic in a sleepy condition. They could also infer that because respondent had been dating appellant, he would try to complete the drive which was being made at her request instead of stopping in the middle of the afternoon on a busy city street to take a nap and that she realized this. There was also evidence from which it would have been proper to infer contributory negligence on the part of appellant, for she promptly went to sleep instead of observing respondent's driving after having earlier expressed concern that he might be fatigued. However, contributory negligence was not pleaded as a defense, nor were any instructions given on the subject.

Appellant attacks the instructions given by the court on the doctrine of assumption of risk as being erroneous and prejudicial to her.

The following instructions were given:

"There is a legal principle commonly referred to by the term 'assumption of risk,' which now will be explained to you:

"One is said to assume a risk when she freely, voluntarily and knowingly manifests her assent to dangerous conduct or to the question of maintenance of a dangerous condition, and voluntarily exposes herself to that danger, or when she knows that a danger exists in either the conduct or condition of another, or in the condition, use or operation of property, and voluntarily places herself or remains within the area of danger.

"It should be noted that to bar recovery assumption of risk must be voluntary. To be voluntary these two factors must be present: First, the person in question must have actual knowledge of the danger. Second, she must have freedom of choice. This freedom of choice must come from circumstances that provide her a reasonable opportunity, without violating any legal or moral duty, to safely refuse to expose herself to the danger in question.

"But assumption of risk, if it meets with the requirements of the law as stated to you, will bar recovery for damage although it plays no part in causing the accident except merely to expose the person to the danger.

"In determining whether a person assented to or assumed a risk so as to bar recovery by her of damages for injury, you may consider her age, experience and capacity, along with all the other surrounding circumstances as shown by the evidence."

The trial court refused to give an instruction offered by appellant that "There is no issue in the case that the plaintiff assumed any risk that was the proximate cause of the injuries complained of by her, and such issue may not be considered by you." This instruction would have told the jury that there was no defense of assumption of risk in the case. It was therefore correctly refused.

[9–13] As to the instructions given, they are in themselves correct instructions. These instructions were apparently all taken from BAJI 207–207 D. Appellant argues that regardless of the correctness of the instructions themselves, if they find no support in the evidence it was error to give them. She contends that there is no evidence that appellant had any knowledge of the risk of respondent's continuing to drive, knowing that he was dozing or that she appreciated the risk of him driving in this condition. However, it may be said that the very fact that she questioned him as to his condition before commencing the drive, is evidence from which her knowledge of appreciation of such a risk may be inferred. In Hayes v. Richfield Oil Corp., 38 Cal.2d 375, 240 P.2d 580, 581, it is said that "Where the facts are such that plaintiff must have had knowledge of hazard, the situation is equivalent to actual knowledge, and there may be an assumption of risk, but where it merely appears that a person could or should have discovered the danger by exercise of ordinary care, defense is not assumption of risk but contributory negligence." The person must have knowledge of the condition creating the hazard, DeGraf v. Anglo California Nat. Bank, 14 Cal.2d 87, 100, 92 P.2d 899, and it appears that there was evidence in this case from which such actual knowledge could be inferred. And, see Prescott v. Ralphs Grocery Co., 42 Cal.2d 158, 162, 265 P.2d 904. Actual knowledge may be inferred from circumstantial evidence. Gantner & Mattern Co. v. Hawkins, 89 Cal.App.2d 783, 786, 201 P.2d 847. The instruction refers to exposure of appellant to the danger in question. The only danger alleged in the complaint was that of respondent falling asleep while driving, and all of the evidence was to the effect that this was the sole cause of the accident. Where there was only this one risk in the case, the jury could not have been misled.

Appellant contends that the instructions herein told the jury that if plaintiff knows of a danger and voluntarily places herself or remains within the area of danger, she may be deemed to have assumed the risk even though she does not appreciate the risk involved. She cites Prosser on Torts, page 385, to the effect that a defect and the danger arising therefrom are not necessarily identified, and a person might know of one without appreciating the other. However, since the jury were told that appellant must have actual knowledge that a danger exists in either the conduct or condition of another, or in the condition, use or operation of property, the instruction appears to meet Prosser's requirement. The instruction does not tell the jury that it would be sufficient that appellant knew of respondent's lack of sleep in order for her to assume the risk, but that she must know of the danger arising from that condition. Appellant emphasizes the fact that the jury was not told that appellant must "appreciate the risk". Many of the cases discuss the fact that plaintiff must have knowledge and appreciation of the risk. However, the term "actual knowledge of the danger" expresses the same thought as "appreciation of the danger." None of the model instructions given on assumption of risk in BAJI use the term "appreciation" of the risk.

One of the instructions given above, was in the main, similar to BAJI 207, but did not include the last paragraph of the instruction there given which states that one "who thus assumed a risk is not entitled to recover for damage [caused [him] [her] without intention and] which resulted from the dangerous condition or conduct to which [he] [she] thus exposed [himself] [herself]." It appears that the omission of this paragraph would make the instruction more favorable to appellant. However, appellant argues that by leaving this out, the jury was not instructed that the risk assumed must be the proximate cause of appellant's injuries. It has been previously pointed out that the only risk involved in the entire case was respondent's continuing to drive while falling asleep at the wheel.

Error is alleged in the giving of the instruction, quoted supra, to the effect that assumption of risk will bar recovery although it plays no part in causing the accident except merely to expose the person to the danger. The instruction is correct, and was properly given herein.

[14] Appellant complains that the instructions on burden of proof were repetitious, and that they failed to point out to the jury that the burden of proof on the defense of assumption of risk was on respondent. She cites numerous authorities to the effect that a litigant is entitled to have instructions given on any and all theories which are supported by evidence in the case. But appellant offered no instruction on the subject, no doubt for the reason that she refused to recognize that assumption of risk was in the case. Since the instructions on burden of proof are correct, appellant cannot complain since she did not ask for further specific or qualifying instructions on the subject. (24 Cal.Jur. p. 796, sec. 74.)

[15] The court refused the following instruction offered by appellant: "Subject: Contributory Negligence, not at Issue. I instruct you that there is no issue in this case as to the acts or conduct of the plaintiff, and you may not consider such in your determination as to the proximate cause of the accident complained of." The instruction is obviously not a proper instruction to simply tell the jury that contributory negligence is not an issue. The statement that there is "no issue in this case as to the acts or conduct of the plaintiff" would eliminate the defense of assumption of risk from the jury's consideration, for plaintiff's acts and conduct were directly involved in that defense. The instruction was therefore properly refused.

[16] It is urged that the court withdrew from the jury appellant's theory of the case by refusing a certain instruction but a reading of the record discloses that the requested instruction was confusing and ambiguous. No error exists in this connection.

[17] Numerous errors are claimed to exist in the instructions given on wilful misconduct. Appellant takes exception to the language in certain instructions stating that wilful misconduct is conduct under circumstances which show defendant's knowledge that serious injury will probably result or a reckless disregard of the possible results. She says that this tells the jury that the burden of proof is on appellant to prove that she suffered "serious" injury, and that no definition of serious was given. There is no merit in this contention. The instruction deals with defendant's state of mind, his knowledge of what may result from his conduct. The meaning is perfectly clear. Furthermore, appellant herself requested an instruction which was refused as covered by other instructions in which she defined wilful misconduct as the "intentional doing of something with knowledge that serious injury is a probable (as distinguished from a possible) result." Instructions on wilful misconduct using the term "serious" in the same manner used herein were approved by the court in Cope v. Davison, 30 Cal.2d 193, 197–199, 180 P.2d 873, 171 A.L.R. 667.

[18] The court gave introductory instructions stating that plaintiff had alleged that while she was riding as a guest in defendant's automobile he drove in a wilful or reckless manner, and that she had charged him with wilful misconduct, that this was necessary to recover in a guest case, and that defendant had denied the charges and had pleaded the special defense of assumption of risk. The court stated that those were the problems and that for the jury to arrive at a proper verdict "it is necessary for me to give you instructions as to what constitutes wilful misconduct, what a driver should do and what a guest should do under the circumstances. The next problem is the question of damages * * *" Appellant objects to the quoted language, saying that by this instruction the court told the jury that assumption of risk was part of appellant's burden of proof as to what constituted wilful misconduct. This appears to be a highly unlikely deduction from the above language on the part of the jury. While the language is none too well chosen it obviously means that instructions on the subjects just mentioned, wilful misconduct and assumption of risk, will follow later. It attempts no definition of wilful misconduct, and could not have misled the jury.

An instruction was given distinguishing wilful misconduct from gross negligence. It was said that "wilful misconduct involves a more positive intent actually to harm another or to do an act with a positive, active and absolute disregard of its consequences. The law has excluded in a a case where a guest is suing all forms of negligence as a basis of recovery. The law will only permit a recovery where a guest sues when it appears that the thing done by the defendant amounts to misconduct as distinguished from negligence, and the law further states that this misconduct must be wilful. While the word 'wilful' implies an intent, the intention referred to relates to the misconduct and not merely to the fact that some act was intentionally done. Wilful misconduct implies the intentional doing of something either with a knowledge that serious injury is a probable (as distinguished from possible) result or the intentional doing of an act with a wanton and reckless disregard of its possible result."

[19] Appellant asserts that bringing in the terms "gross negligence" and "negligence" without defining them was error, and that the language that wilful misconduct involves a more positive intent to harm another is erroneous. The language of this instruction appears to have been taken from an opinion in the case of Meek v. Fowler, 3 Cal.2d 420, 425, 45 P.2d 194, and was quoted with approval in Hawaiian Pineapple Company v. Industrial Accident Comm., 40 Cal.2d 656, 662, 255 P.2d 431. In the recent case of Lynch v. Birdwell, 44 Cal.2d 839, 285 P.2d 919, it was held in disapproving BAJI instruction 209–J that it was erroneous to instruct that wilful misconduct is a form of negligence, for wilful misconduct and negligence are mutually exclusive.

Respondent contends that it should still be proper, however, to point out the distinction between negligence and wilful misconduct, and that the cited case has not forbidden courts to do so. The instruction herein, unlike the instruction condemned, did not state that wilful misconduct was a "form of negligence" but pointed out that all forms of negligence were entirely excluded where a guest sues for wilful misconduct. The instruction then went on to correctly define the two types of wilful misconduct. Therefore, the later instructions given that "an intent to injure anyone is not a necessary ingredient of wilful misconduct" in defining the second type of wilful misconduct, the intentional doing of an act with a reckless disregard of its possible result, should not have been confusing to the jury.

[20] Appellant argues that the giving of the instructions which further amplified the meaning of recklessness, which pointed out that an intent to injure was not a necessary element of wilful misconduct hopelessly conflicted with the prior instructions given at respondent's request. These latter instructions were requested by appellant herself. They are apparently taken from the Restatement of Torts, section 500, and the California Annotations show that they are in accord with numerous decisions in this state. If there is error in any of them it was invited error but if the two types of wilful misconduct are kept in mind they do not appear to be conflicting.

[21, 22] Prejudicial error is claimed in the giving of the following instruction at the instance of respondent: "The mere failure to perform a statutory duty is not alone wilful misconduct. It amounts only to simply negligence. To constitute wilful misconduct there must be actual knowledge, or that which in the law is esteemed to be the equivalent of actual knowledge, of the peril to be apprehended coupled with a conscious failure to act to the end of averting injury plus knowledge that an injury to a guest will be a probable as distinguished from a possible result." The complaint herein alleged that the accident happened when respondent's automobile collided with the automobile ahead which had stopped in compliance with a stop signal, hence there was an allegation and there was evidence of a failure to perform a statutory duty. The instruction did not advise the jury, as appellant contends, that in order to prove wilful misconduct appellant must prove that some statutory provision had been violated, and that such statute was violated with actual knowledge or the equivalent thereof. Appellant correctly states that wilful misconduct may be established without the showing of any violation of a statutory duty, and there is nothing in this instruction that in any way limits the jury to finding that the misconduct must be the violation of such a duty. See, Porter v. Hofman, 12 Cal.2d 445, 448, 85 P.2d 447.

[23] There is no merit in appellant's charge that there was prejudicial error in the court's instruction in abstract terms on the evidentiary weight to be given a presumption. She contends that it placed on her the additional burden of disproving a presumption that there was no wilful misconduct. The court instructed that no presumption of wilful misconduct arose from the fact that a person was injured or an accident happened. It did not instruct that there was a presumption that there was no wilful misconduct. The only presumption given to the jury was that a witness was presumed to speak the truth. This could not have been prejudicial. There is likewise no merit in the contention that the instructions were argumentative.

Appellant contends that the court erroneously restricted her cross-examination of respondent regarding a conversation between him and appellant's counsel in the latter's office prior to the filing of this suit. The record does not bear this out and no error appears.

[24] It is asserted that prejudicial misconduct on the part of respondent's counsel occurred in that he interjected an inference of collusion and attempted to impeach his own witness in order to destroy any favorable evidence given on cross-examination. As defense counsel did not deny in his affidavit on motion for a new trial, appellant's counsel's statement in her affidavit that "this entire matter of the visit of the defendant was well known to the insurance carrier for the defendant and must have by necessity been equally well known to the defense counsel, Mr. Bledsoe," appellant says he therefore admitted that he had known all along about the visit of respondent to appellant's counsel's office. Respondent's counsel stated that he was trying to refresh respondent's recollection by asking the question. We do not see how the jury would infer collusion from the fact that appellant's attorney interviewed respondent. Counsel for appellant admitted that the record of the interview could not be located. If the jury thought there might be something suspicious in that fact, appellant's counsel herself supplied them with that information.

[25] Prejudicial misconduct is further asserted in that respondent's counsel allegedly brought out a feeling of friendship between appellant and respondent after filing of the suit. Since there was evidence in the record that respondent dated appellant prior to the accident, and that she sometimes rode with him in his automobile after the accident, the jury were well aware that the parties had once been somewhat friendly. Since appellant was married to someone other than respondent at the time of trial, the jury could very well have inferred that the parties might not then be as friendly as they had formerly been even if their attention had not been drawn to the fact. It would seem that respondent was entitled to show that appellant rode with respondent after the accident, in order to convince the jury that she would not have done so if she believed he had been guilty of wilful misconduct in the accident.

[26] It is further charged that prejudicial misconduct was committed in the examination of Mrs. Wong. Counsel for respondent had a statement signed by Mrs.

Wong which was offered for identification. She was asked if she remembered visiting night spots in Las Vegas, and answered, "No." Upon later being shown the statement, she said that she did not remember the part about visiting different sights in Las Vegas. Respondent's counsel then said he would offer it for identification only as it did not refresh her recollection. Appellant claims that this was an attempt by respondent to impeach his own witness, and that it was also an attempt to infer collusion. Here the witness had simply said she didn't remember, so it must be viewed as an attempt to refresh her recollection, rather than impeach her. Counsel did not therefore contradict the witness. See, Island v. Fireman's Fund Indemnity Company, 30 Cal.2d 541, 184 P.2d 153, 173 A.L.R. 896. The only part of the statement disclosed to the jury was that read by the witness when she said she didn't remember the part that they spent the night visiting the different sights in Las Vegas.

[27] In none of the above instances did appellant claim prior to her motion for new trial that there had been misconduct. It is generally necessary that the attention of the trial court be called to the alleged misconduct. Here there was no assignment of misconduct and the trial court was not asked to instruct the jury to disregard the remarks. Furthermore the trial judge passed on the asserted misconduct on the motion for new trial and as was said in Cope v. Davison, 30 Cal.2d 193, 202–203, 180 P.2d 873, 171 A.L.R. 667, he was in a better position than the appellate court to determine whether a verdict resulted wholly or in part therefrom, and his conclusion will not be disturbed unless plainly wrong.

As to the final charge of misconduct on the part of the trial judge, we find nothing in the record to support the charge that the trial judge did not take appellant's counsel seriously. Nor was there misconduct in the other instances cited in the sustaining of objections or the questioning of witnesses. That the alleged misconduct influenced the jury is not to be necessarily inferred from the fact that the jury was out only 25 minutes. In the case of Sanguinetti v. Moore Dry Dock Co., 36 Cal.2d 812, 228 P.2d 557, cited by appellant, the jury within 35 minutes returned a verdict for $75,000 in a case wherein plaintiff was allowed to amend his prayer for damages in the presence of the jury, a flagrant case of prejudicial error. That case was rather difficult in that it was a case brought under the Jones Act and comparative negligence had to be considered.

We conclude that the case was fully and fairly tried and that there is no prejudicial error in the record.

The SUPERIOR COURT of the State of California, in and for the COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES, Respondent.

Civ. 21845.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

July 10, 1956.

Prosecution under narcotics statute. Defendant's motion to set aside the information was denied and she sought writ of prohibition from the District Court of Appeal. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, J. pro tem., held that where one who resided in an apartment with defendant was arrested on a public street, search of the apartment without a warrant was not a search which was a proper incident to such lawful arrest, and was unreasonable, notwithstanding that the apartment was but 95 feet from the place on the public street where such arrest was made.

Writ granted.

1. Criminal Law ⚷395

Where narcotics were obtained through unreasonable search and unlawful seizure, they were inadmissible in evidence in prosecution under narcotics act. West's Ann. Health and Safety Code, § 11500; U.S.C.A. Const. Amends. 4, 5.

2. Arrest ⚷71
Searches and Seizures ⚷7(12)

Where one who resided in apartment with defendant was arrested on a public street, search of the apartment without a warrant was not a search which was proper incident to such lawful arrest, and was unreasonable, notwithstanding that apartment was but 95 feet from place on public street where such arrest was made. U.S.C.A. Const. Amends. 4, 5.

3. Criminal Law ⚷395

Where defendant's admission that dolophine found in her home was hers and that she used it, was a by-product of unlawful entry into her home and unlawful search thereof, it did not justify admission of illegally seized evidence against her in prosecution under narcotics act. 4. Criminal Law ⚷238

Where narcotics were inadmissible in prosecution under narcotics act, because of illegal seizure in course of unreasonable search of defendant's home, there was no proof of corpus delicti and therefore no basis upon which she could be held liable to answer notwithstanding her admission, which was by-product of the unlawful entry and search, that dolophine found in her home was hers and that she used it. Bryon Schwartz, Los Angeles, for petitioner.

S. Ernest Roll, Dist. Atty., Fred N. Whichello, Deputy Dist. Atty., Los Angeles, for respondent.

By an information filed with the District Attorney of the County of Los Angeles, petitioner is charged with violation of section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code. Her motion to set aside the information, made pursuant to section 995 of the Penal Code, having been denied she here seeks a writ of prohibition to arrest further proceedings in the respondent court.

The relevant facts are:

Petitioner and one Taverez resided in an apartment at the rear of 1814 Workman Avenue in the City of Los Angeles.

Taverez had been indicted by the grand jury of Los Angeles County on a charge of the sale of narcotics. Police of the City of Los Angeles learned that an automobile used by him was parked on Workman Avenue (adjacent to the apartment house in which petitioner and Taverez resided). The police staked out in the vicinity of the parked automobile, and when Taverez entered it they placed him under arrest and there took him into custody. After he was under arrest the officers were advised by a by-stander that Taverez lived in an apartment at the rear of 1814 Workman Avenue, the door to which was about 95 feet from the place on the public street where Taverez was held under arrest, and that it was the apartment with a light on.

The officers then went to the apartment indicated by their informant and entered without invitation. They there found petitioner. They did not then have any knowledge of any unlawful act having been committed by petitioner, nor did they have any basis for believing that petitioner had committed a felony. They did not have a warrant for her arrest or a search warrant. They proceeded to search the apartment and found therein a quantity of narcotics. Petitioner admitted that one of the narcotics (dolophine) was hers and that she was using it. Petitioner was then placed under arrest.

The evidence seized in the apartment was received in evidence by the committing magistrate over petitioner's objection. It is conceded by respondent that if this evidence was improperly received, petitioner's motion made pursuant to section 995 of the Penal Code should have been granted, and that the writ prayed for here should issue.

[1] We have concluded that the evidence in question was obtained through an unreasonable search and an unlawful seizure, and that therefore under the rule laid down in People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905, the evidence in question should have been excluded by the committing magistrate; and that petitioner is entitled to the writ she here prays for.

It is the contention of respondent that the search of the apartment occupied by petitioner and Taverez was a proper incident to the lawful arrest of Taverez. Respondent relies on People v. Winston, 46 Cal.2d 151, 293 P.2d 40, and People v. Coleman, 134 Cal.App.2d 594, 286 P.2d 582. Neither of these cases supports respondent's contention. In each of them the premises searched were those in which a lawful arrest had been made. In the case at bar the arrest of Taverez was made upon the public street, and at the time of the arrest the officers were not even informed as to his place of residence.

Respondent also relies on People v. Dixon, 46 Cal.2d 456, 296 P.2d 557. That case does not support its contention. In the cited case the same arresting officer who made the arrest of petitioner here entered Dixon's apartment and placed her under arrest without a warrant. The officers searched the apartment and found material which is used to cut heroin. While they were in the apartment Dixon attempted to dispose of a key and it was taken from her by force. This key turned out to be the key to a garage connected with the apartment she rented. In the garage the officers found a quantity of heroin which had been cut. This drug was introduced into evidence against Dixon at her trial. The Supreme Court held that there having been no evidence to justify the entry, arrest, and search, the evidence was illegally obtained and should have been excluded; and reversed her conviction. It stated, however, that if on a new trial reasonable cause was shown for the entry into Dixon's apartment and her arrest, that the contemporaneous search of the garage would be a lawful search as an incident to that arrest, since the garage was on the premises where the arrest was made and was under defendant's control. It is evident that this case is not authority for a search without a warrant of an arrested person's home and place of residence, when that arrest is not made upon the premises where the person arrested resides.

To us this case seems to be on all fours with that of Agnello v. United States, 269 U.S. 20, 46 S.Ct. 4, 70 L.Ed. 145, 51 A.L.R. 409. In that case Agnello and others were charged with conspiracy to violate the Harrison Act. Among the overt acts charged was the sale of a quantity of cocaine at the home of one Alba. The evidence introduced by the government showed that certain under-cover agents of the government had negotiated with Alba and one Centorino for the purchase of narcotics; that Centorino left Alba's home and went to the home of Agnello and shortly thereafter returned with Agnello and another person to the home of Alba where a quantity of cocaine was delivered to the under-cover agents. Agnello was immediately placed under arrest and Alba's premises searched. After Agnello's arrest the officers went to his home which was several blocks distant from the place where the narcotics were sold, searched it and found a quantity of cocaine. At the trial of the action Agnello testified that he did not know that the material he delivered to the under-cover agents at the home of Alba was a narcotic and that he had never seen narcotics. The government then produced the cocaine which the officers had seized in Agnello's home, and when he denied knowledge of it was permitted to prove that it had been seized in his home and that it was cocaine.

In holding that it was error to admit this evidence even by way of impeachment of Agnello's testimony that he had never seen narcotics, the Supreme Court of the United States held that while a search without a warrant of the premises where a lawful arrest is made does not violate the Fourth and Fifth Amendments of the Constitution of the United States, that fact did not justify the search of Agnello's home after his arrest was complete. In so holding, it said in part (51 A.L.R. at 412): "The legality of the arrests, or of the searches and seizures made at the home of Alba, is not questioned. Such searches and seizures naturally and usually appertain to and attend such arrests. But the right does not extend to other places. Frank Agnello's house was several blocks distant from Alba's house, where the arrest was made. When it was entered and searched, the conspiracy was ended, and the defendants were under arrest and in custody elsewhere. That search cannot be sustained as an incident of the arrests. (Citations.)

"While the question has never been directly decided by this court, it has always been assumed that one's house cannot lawfully be searched without a search warrant, except as an incident to a lawful arrest therein. (Citations.) The protection of the 4th Amendment extends to all equally,—to those justly suspected or accused, as well as to the innocent. The search of a private dwelling without a warrant is, in itself, unreasonable and abhorrent to our laws." [Emphasis added.]

Agnello v. United States, supra, is cited with approval by our Supreme Court in People v. Gorg, 45 Cal.2d 776, 781, 291 P.2d 469, 472. Our Supreme Court there said: "The attorney general contends that it is not unreasonable to search a man's dwelling after having arrested him some other place for a crime involving theft. Even if the object of the search was to recover other stolen articles, it was not incidental to the arrest, for it was at a distance from the place thereof and was not contemporaneous therewith. [Citations.]"

[2] In the present case the search of the home of petitioner and Taverez was not an incident to Taverez' arrest. He was in his automobile on a public street when the arrest was made, and when he was there taken into custody his arrest was completed. The fact that it turned out that Taverez' home was but 95 feet away from the place of his arrest does not change the complexion of this matter. His arrest was on a public street, not upon any part of the premises in which the apartment in which he lived was situated; and if we were to uphold a search of his home without a warrant because his home was but 95 feet from the place on the public street where he was arrested, we would necessarily have to uphold it if it were 95 blocks distant.

Inasmuch as the officers did not have the right to enter and search the home of Taverez, their arrest of him certainly cannot justify the search of petitioner's home.

[3, 4] Respondent argues that petitioner's admission before her arrest that the dolophine found in her home was hers and that she used it justified the magistrate in committing her. But this admission was only a by-product of the unlawful entry into her home, the unlawful search conducted therein, and the unlawful assertion of authority by the officers. It did not justify the admission of the illegally seized evidence against her. Without that evidence there was no proof of the corpus delicti, and therefore no basis upon which petitioner could be held to answer.

Let a peremptory writ of prohibition issue as prayed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Richard GILL, Jr., Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5550.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

July 10, 1956.

Rehearing Denied July 24, 1956.

Hearing Denied Aug. 8, 1956.

Prosecution for the crimes of assault with intent to commit rape, and rape. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Clement D. Nye, J., entered judgment of conviction on both counts and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Parker Wood, J., held that because of prejudicial errors committed in allowing testimony of prior act of intercourse involving the defendant and another party as well as the calling of defendant's wife as a witness for the prosecution, the convictions must be reversed.

Reversed.

1. Rape ⚷51(4), 53(1)

In prosecution for attempt to commit rape and for rape by use of force and violence, involving two different victims, evidence was sufficient to support both convictions.

2. Criminal Law ⚷369(8), 1169(11)

In prosecution for assault with intent to commit rape and for rape, the introduction of testimony of a prior act of intercourse by the defendant wholly unconnected with crimes charged, constituted prejudicial error.

3. Criminal Law ⚷706

Mere fact prosecution called defendant's wife as a witness was not improper.

4. Criminal Law ⚷706, 1171(1)

Where prosecutor called defendant's wife as a witness, although he knew she would not be permitted to testify, he forced defendant to create an unfavorable impression of himself before the jury by objecting to her testifying, and such action together with the asking of irrelevant questions on cross-examination of defendant, constituted prejudicial misconduct.

Gladys Towles Root, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Patrick T. McCormick, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Defendant was charged in Count I with assault with intent to commit rape, and in Count II with rape by use of force and violence. In a trial by jury he was convicted on both counts. He was sentenced to state prison and it was ordered that the sentences run consecutively. He appeals from the judgment and sentence.

Appellant contends that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict (as to Count I); the court erred in receiving evidence as to prior misconduct of appellant; and the deputy district attorney was guilty of misconduct.

With reference to Count I, Mrs. Williams testified that on November 7, 1954, about midnight, she was driving her automobile on San Pedro Street and when she was near Vernon Avenue the automobile stalled; defendant walked up the street and asked her if she would like for him to help her; she replied in the affirmative, and he pushed the car to the middle of the street; with her permission he got in the driver's seat and waited for another car to come along and give her car a push; after being pushed twice by other cars her car started and defendant drove "around in circles"; after asking him where he lived, she told him that since the car was running nicely he could drive by his house and get out and then she would go home; he drove to 42d Street and stopped by the curb near the middle of the block; then he tried to kiss her; she asked him what he meant by trying to get so personal with her and she told him that if payment was what he wanted she was prepared to pay him; he replied that he hoped she did not think that he went to all that trouble for nothing; he pushed her down on the seat (front seat) with her head toward the right door and her feet on the seat of the car and toward the left door; he pulled her skirt up above her waistline; he pinned her shoulders down; he was on top of her; her feet pushed the door open, and she screamed; he told her that he had a knife and if she screamed again he would kill her; he grabbed the door, and told her that, "If I have to go to all this trouble, it isn't worth it."; she pleaded with him all the time to let her go; he started the car, drove about two blocks and then she jumped out of the car, screamed and ran to a house across the street and reported the happening to the police; when she jumped out of the car she broke her toe and lost her shoes; the police came that same night and she went with them to San Pedro Street, where they found her car; she did not consent to sexual intercourse with defendant; she was not married to him.

Officer Banks testified that on May 16, 1955, he asked defendant if he had been in the vicinity of 114th and Wilmington on the night of the 13th and the morning of the 14th; and that defendant replied that he had not; that he (officer) asked him if he had picked up a woman in that vicinity; and that defendant replied, "No"; that defendant also said, in reply to questions, that he did not have a spare tire or a woman's belongings in his car. The officer also testified that, in a conversation with defendant on May 23, 1955, defendant said: he tried to kiss Mrs. Williams and she pulled away from him and got out of the car; then she got back in the car and he started to take her home, and she jumped out again and ran up the street; he drove about five blocks and abandoned the car. The officer also testified that, in the same conversation, he asked defendant what happened on May 13 at 114th and Wilmington; and defendant said (in part): he was driving along and he saw this woman, Miss Harris, who was having trouble with her car; they drove to an alley in the vicinity of 41st and Avalon; she took her coat off and he had intercourse with her; then some "creep" walked up behind the car and Miss Harris ran down the alley; the next morning he took the tire and her clothing out of his car and hid them.

Defendant testified in substance the same as Mrs. Williams had testified with respect to their meeting on San Pedro Street, getting the car started, and going to 41st Street. He testified further that, after he stopped the car, he said that after all the help he had given he expected something; he tried to kiss Mrs. Williams and she pushed him away; then he tried again to kiss her, and she shoved him away; then he drove to the next corner, she jumped out and started screaming; he drove about three blocks, stopped (and left) the car, and went home. On cross-examination, defendant testified that he intended to have intercourse with Mrs. Williams if she submitted, but when she screamed he drove to the next corner where she jumped out of the car; he did not threaten her with a knife; after she jumped out he became afraid and drove away.

Defendant also testified in substance the same as Miss Harris had testified with respect to their meeting on Wilmington Boulevard and going into an alley near 41st and McKinley. He testified further that he parked the car, he pulled her toward him and she pushed him back; she asked if he was going to take her home; he replied that he promised to take her home; she took her coat off and "laid" down; he had intercourse with her; she got out of the car, and some fellow ran by defendant, who was in the driver's seat; Miss Harris, who was screaming, ran out of the alley; defendant drove out of the alley, became frightened, and went home. On cross-examination, he testified that he became frightened because he heard a lady say she was going to call the police; he took Miss Harris' coat out of his car and put it in his closet, and put her spare tire in his back yard; he took "the dollar" out of her wallet and put her wallet in his pocket; that he lied when he told the officers he had not picked up a woman in the vicinity of 114th Street and Wilmington, and when he told the officers that he did not have the spare tire or the wallet.

[1] Appellant's argument with respect to insufficiency of the evidence pertains only to Count I. The evidence was sufficient to support both verdicts.

[2] A further contention of appellant is that the court erred in receiving evidence as to prior misconduct of appellant. While Deputy District Attorney Aaron Stovitz was cross-examining defendant, the deputy said to defendant: "So you state on the witness stand here, that if she [referring to Mrs. Williams] was going to resist, you weren't going to have an act of sexual intercourse, is that right?" The defendant answered, "Yes." Then the following proceedings occurred:

> "Q. [By Deputy District Attorney Stovitz] You remember Miss Marian Hillary, Mr. Gill?
> "Mr. Shaffer [attorney for defendant]: Just a moment, what was that name?
> "Mr. Stovitz: Marian Hillary, H-i-l-l-a-r-y.
> "Mr. Shaffer: Objected to as not being material.
> "The Court: Objection is overruled.
> "Q. By Mr. Stovitz: You remember Miss Marian Hillary? A. I remember the name.
> "Q. You remember the date of May 10th, 1953?
> "Mr. Shaffer: Objected to again your Honor, as not within the issues of this case.
>
> "The Court: Objection will be overruled.
> "Q. By Mr. Stovitz: Remember the date of May 10, 1953? A. Yes, sir, I do.
> "Q. Do you remember the location of 40th and South Central, an alley? A. 40th and South Central? No, sir, I don't, not 40th and South Central in an alley.

"Q. You remember the location of 40th and Central, an alley there?

"Mr. Shaffer: Your Honor, I object again. This time it's gone far beyond the scope of direct examination. It's not proper impeachment. Can't in any way be connected with the charges that are alleged here.

"The Court: Objection is overruled.

"Q. By Mr. Stovitz: Do you remember that? A. 40th and Central?

"Q. Yes. A. Yes, I remember it.

"Q. Now, you know what we're talking about? A. Yes, sir, I do.

"Q. Remember picking up Miss Hillary in your car? A. Yes, sir, I do.

"Q. What were your intentions when you picked up Miss Hillary back on May 10th, 1953? A. I don't remember what my intentions were at that time. I had an intercourse with her.

"Q. You did have an act of sexual intercourse with her, didn't you? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. She resisted you, didn't she? A. No, sir, she didn't.

"Q. She submitted to you, is that right? A. Yes, sir."

It was error to overrule defendant's objections and to receive the testimony pertaining to Miss Hillary. The testimony was unrelated to the charges upon which defendant was on trial. It was not proper cross-examination. It did not tend to prove a common plan or scheme on the part of defendant, which plan or scheme would tend to prove that defendant committed either of the offenses charged. Rules with reference to admissibility of evidence of similar offenses are stated in detail in People v. Channell, 136 Cal.App.2d 99, 288 P.2d 326, and in People v. Cassandras, 83 Cal.App.2d 272, 188 P.2d 546. In People v. Cassandras, supra, it was said in 83 Cal.App.2d at page 281, 188 P.2d at page 551. "[W]here the prior rape or attempt is committed under circumstances remarkably similar to the one charged the evidence is admissible to show a plan or scheme to commit the crime in that fashion, even though the prior rape or attempt was committed on a person other than the prosecutrix. In such cases the evidence that defendant committed the prior offense tends to prove that he committed the offense charged." In the present case the testimony of defendant pertaining to Miss Hillary, elicited by the deputy district attorney over objections by defendant, did not prove a prior crime of rape—the testimony was that she did not resist, but submitted to the act of intercourse (there was no evidence as to her age). Miss Hillary was not called as a witness, and the deputy district attorney did not justify or attempt to justify the asking of those questions. It is apparent that his question, "She resisted you, didn't she?" was intended (irrespective of defendant's denial) to create the impression that she did resist. Defendant's counsel is correct in asserting that the deputy district attorney was guilty of misconduct in asking the questions regarding Miss Hillary. In view of the conflicting factual considerations herein, the errors in receiving said testimony, and the misconduct of the deputy district attorney, were prejudicial. It is to be noted that the jury deliberated about seven hours.

[3, 4] Another contention of appellant is that, under the circumstances here, the deputy district attorney was guilty of misconduct in calling defendant's wife as a witness. When Officer Banks was a witness, the deputy district attorney said to him: "Now before we get to the 23rd of May conversation, without telling us what was said, sir, did you speak to the defendant's wife?" The officer answered, "Yes." Counsel for defendant said that he objected to that as being irrelevant and immaterial. The objection was overruled. "Q. By Mr. Stovitz: And when did you speak to the defendant's wife? A. On the morning of the 16th. Q. And was this in the presence of the defendant, or outside of his presence? A. It was in his presence. Q. And where did this conversation take place? A. At the defendant's residence, in the backyard." In rebuttal and as the last witness in the case, the deputy district attorney called the wife of defendant as a witness. After she had taken the oath and had stated her name, defendant's counsel objected to any testimony by defendant's wife. Then the judge said: "What is the purpose of this, Mr. Stovitz?" The deputy replied: "Well, if the defendant objects, your Honor, I cannot ask her any questions. Mr. Shaffer: If we can have an offer of proof at the bench, maybe I'll withdraw the objection. The Court: I don't think it's necessary. You may be excused. The objection will be sustained. A man's wife cannot be used as a witness against him. That's all. Step down. Mr. Stovitz: The People rest, your Honor." The mere fact that the prosecution calls the wife of a defendant as a witness is not improper. In the present case, however, the deputy district attorney knew that during the first part of the trial, defendant had objected to the deputy's question as to whether Officer Banks had spoken to defendant's wife. After the deputy had called the wife as a witness, and after the defendant had objected, the judge asked the deputy, "What is the purpose of this, Mr. Stovitz?" The deputy evaded the question of the judge and merely stated, "Well, if the defendant objects, your Honor, I cannot ask her any questions." It is obvious that the deputy knew, when he called defendant's wife as a witness, that she would not be permitted to testify; and it is obvious that he intended thereby to unfairly create an unfavorable impression against defendant. When this conduct of the deputy is considered in connection with his conduct in asking defendant the irrelevant questions about Miss Hillary, it seems apparent that the deputy intended that a substantial part of the trial should be by unfair innuendoes. In People v. Grider, 13 Cal.App. 703, at page 712, 110 P. 586, 590, it was said: "Where an improper question is asked of a witness by a district attorney, the test whether it is misconduct is found in answer to the question: 'What was the purpose of counsel in asking the question?' If it was to take an unfair advantage of the defendant by intimating to the jury something that was either not true or not capable of being proven in the manner attempted then it is error." Under the circumstances in the present case, the deputy district attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct.

The judgment is reversed and the case is remanded for a new trial. The purported appeal from the sentence is dismissed.

Civ. 5159.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

July 16, 1956.

Action for damages arising out of an intersectional collision between two automobiles. The Superior Court, San Diego County, Dean Sherry, J., entered judgment for plaintiff motorist notwithstanding the verdict and both plaintiff and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that evidence justified jury verdict finding that defendant while making a left-hand turn at the intersection was free from negligence in an accident wherein her automobile was struck by plaintiff motorist traveling in opposite direction.

Judgment on verdict affirmed and judgment notwithstanding the verdict reversed.

1. Judgment 🔑199(1)

A trial court has no authority to enter a judgment notwithstanding a verdict except where a motion for a directed verdict was made and erroneously denied.

2. Judgment 🔑199(3.2, 3.7)

On a motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, trial court has no power to weigh the evidence but must view it in the light most favorable to the one in whose favor the verdict was rendered and disregard all conflicts, and such a judgment may not be entered if there is any substantial evidence which would support the verdict of the jury.

3. Automobiles 🔑245(14)

In action for damages resulting from intersectional collision of two automobiles, whether defendant motorist made a left-hand turn when it was not reasonably safe to do so, or whether she failed to yield the right of way, was for the jury. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 544, 551.

4. Damages 🔑208(1)

In action for damages resulting from intersectional collision of two automobiles, the issue as to the amount of damages presented a question for the jury and not for the court.

5. Automobiles 🔑244(11)

In action by plaintiff motorist who collided in intersection with left-hand turning defendant motorist, the evidence supported the jury's verdict for the defendant. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 544, 551.

6. Appeal and Error 🔑110

No appeal lies from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an action for damages arising out of a collision between two automobiles. The accident happened about midnight on September 9, 1952, at the intersection of El Cajon Boulevard and Hamilton Street in San Diego. Hamilton runs north and south and is 40 feet wide. El Cajon runs east and west with six traffic lanes, separated by islands in the middle. The northerly of the three east-bound lanes is 24 feet wide, and the other two are 12 feet wide. At the time in question the defendant was traveling west in the southerly of the west-bound lanes as she approached Hamilton. She turned left at the intersection in order to go south on Hamilton. As she proceeded south her car was struck about the center of its right side by a car driven by the plaintiff, which was traveling in the center lane of the three east-bound lanes on El Cajon.

In this action which followed, the defendant denied the allegations of the complaint and pleaded contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. A jury returned a unanimous verdict in favor of the defendant and judgment thereon was entered on January 27, 1955. On February 8, the plaintiff filed notice of a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, or in the alternative of intention to move for a new trial. On March 21, 1955, the court signed an order "that judgment be and hereby is rendered in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant in the sum of $3,000, notwithstanding said verdict"; and further ordering "that the said motion for new trial be and the same is hereby denied." On April 12, the plaintiff filed notice of appeal from the judgment "made and entered on the 27th day of January, 1955, and from the denial of the motion for a new trial made and entered on the 21st day of March, 1955". On April 18, the defendant filed a notice of appeal from the judgment in favor of the plaintiff notwithstanding the verdict entered on March 21, 1955.

On his appeal the plaintiff contends that the evidence disclosed negligence on the part of the defendant in that she did not slow up sufficiently in making her turn and failed to yield to oncoming traffic, in violation of section 551 of the Vehicle Code; that contributory negligence on his part was not proven except by inferences and suspicions; that the jury could not have weighed the testimony since it was out less than twenty minutes; that defense counsel was guilty of prejudicial misconduct in that he "tried to bring out that the plaintiff was in the Mastic Paint business"; and that the court erred in failing to grant his motion for a new trial since the evidence showed that he was free from contributory negligence, and that the defendant was guilty of negligence.

On her appeal the defendant contends that the court had no jurisdiction to grant a judgment notwithstanding the verdict since no motion for a directed verdict had been made; and that the judgment notwithstanding the verdict was erroneously entered because there was evidence on the issues of negligence, contributory negligence and damages which was sufficient to support the jury's verdict and the original judgment.

[1, 2] A trial court has no authority to enter a judgment notwithstanding the verdict except where a motion for a directed verdict was made and erroneously denied. Hallinan v. Prindle, 220 Cal. 46, 29 P.2d 202. No mention for a directed verdict was here made. It is also well settled that the court's power to enter a judgment notwithstanding the verdict is the same as its power to grant a nonsuit; that on a motion for such a judgment the court has no power to weigh the evidence, but must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the one in whose favor the verdict was rendered, and disregard all conflicts; and that such a judgment may not be entered if there is any substantial evidence which would support the verdict of the jury. Neel v. Mannings, Inc., 19 Cal.2d 647, 122 P.2d 576; Ferran v. Southern Pac. Co., 3 Cal.2d 350, 44 P.2d 533; Sakamu v. Zellerbach Paper Co., 25 Cal.App.2d 309, 77 P.2d 313; In re Estate of Arnold, 16 Cal.2d 573, 107 P.2d 25.

[3] While that matter is not important, the record discloses that the jury was out 40 minutes instead of 20. There was ample evidence from which the jury could well find that the defendant was not negligent. Whether she turned left when it was not reasonably safe to do so, in violation of section 544 of the Vehicle Code, or whether she failed to yield the right of way as required by section 551 were questions of fact. There was evidence that she started to make her turn from the proper lane; that she slowed down to about ten miles an hour as she made the turn; that as she started to make the turn she looked to the right and could see no vehicles approaching from the west on El Cajon; that her left-turn blinker signals were on; that her car was struck when it was more than half way across the east-bound lanes of El Cajon; and that plaintiff's car left skid marks on the pavement 43 feet long. The evidence clearly discloses that the defendant entered the intersection first, and that she had traveled a considerable distance therein before the plaintiff entered the intersection. There was also substantial evidence of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. In addition to the above evidence indicating that the plaintiff did not yield the right of way, there was evidence that he was coming uphill for 300 feet before he reached this intersection, and he testified that he saw the defendant "just making the turn" when he was about half-way up this hill, and that he observed that "She did not stop. She kept going." There was evidence from which it might be inferred that the plaintiff did not turn on his lights until about the time he applied his brakes.

[4, 5] There was also evidence on the issue of damages from which the jury could well have concluded that the plaintiff was not damaged, or that his damage amounted to much less than $3,000. In any event, the issue as to the amount of damages was one for the jury and not for the court. There was a material conflict in the evidence, and the record seems to indicate that the preponderance of the evidence was in favor of the defendant. In addition, the testimony of the plaintiff was seriously impeached in several material respects, which the jury was entitled to take into consideration. In any event it clearly appears that the verdict was supported by substantial evidence.

[6] No appeal lies, of course, from the order denying a motion for a new trial. The evidence amply supports the verdict of the jury and the judgment entered thereon. The order for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict was erroneously entered and is entirely unsupported by the record.

The purported appeal from the order denying a new trial is dismissed. The judgment entered on the verdict of the jury is affirmed. The order for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is reversed.

Civ. 16761.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

July 23, 1956.

Hearing Denied Sept. 13, 1956.

Personal injury action. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Harry J. Neubarth, J., granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment on the ground that the one year statute of limitations had barred the action, and the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal held that when female plaintiff was married after having reached the age of eighteen, plaintiff became an adult and was obliged to bring her action for injuries previously sustained within one year after that date to avoid the bar of the one year statute of limitations.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Limitation of Actions 🔑72(5)

When female plaintiff was married after having reached the age of 18, plaintiff became an adult and was obliged to bring her action for personal injuries previously sustained within one year of the date of her marriage to avoid the bar of the one-year statute of limitations. 2. Infants 🔑70

Where statute providing that a female who contracts a legal marriage after having reached the age of 18 years is an adult for the purpose of maintaining or defending actions respecting her property was amended by addition of phrase "or for the purpose of maintaining or defending an action affecting her marital status", the amendment did not change the statute and did not restrict the procedural capacity of married females between the ages of 18 and 21 to actions affecting their marital status, but was enacted for the purpose of clarifying the rights of such females. PER CURIAM.

[1] By complaint filed April 30, 1954, appellant instituted a personal injury action based on facts allegedly occurring on June 18, 1948. She appeals on an agreed statement from a summary judgment in favor of defendants based on their contention that the action was barred by the one-year statute of limitations. Code Civ.Proc. § 340, subd. 3. Appellant contends that the statute had been tolled under Code of Civil Procedure section 352, subd. 1 until May 1, 1953, her twenty-first birthday. Defendants' position was that plaintiff reached her majority on February 10, 1951, when she married having reached the age of 18 years. Civil Code, § 25. In this, the only point in controversy, the position of defendants must be sustained.

The point was decided against plaintiff's contention in Haro v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 1936, 17 Cal.App.2d 594, 62 P.2d 441, a wrongful death action by a widow, 19 years old when her husband died, instituted more than one year after his death but before she reached the age of 21. The court held that the phrase "transaction respecting property" in Civil Code section 25 includes the bringing of an action for wrongful death, that she therefore was under no disability preventing her to bring the action at any time during the year following his death and that at the end of that year the action was barred by the statute, 17 Cal.App.2d at page 597, 62 P.2d at page 443. The Supreme Court denied a hearing. Appellant's attacks on this decision and her contention that it has lost authority because of an amendment made in 1953 in section 25, supra, are without merit.

[2] Appellant urges that the court in the Haro case failed to construe section 25 in accordance with the legislative intent which according to appellant was to give the married woman between 18 and 21 an adult status for certain transactions only, to be construed strictly as exceptions, and otherwise to maintain her protection as an inexperienced juvenile. No such intention appears from section 25 or from related code sections. The contrary intention is indicated by the provision of section 25 that the eighteen year old married woman shall "be of the age of majority" and by Probate Code section 1590, subd. 1 which provides: "Where the appointment of a guardian was made solely because of the ward's minority, the marriage of a minor ward terminates the guardianship of the person; and the guardianship of the estate of a minor female ward is terminated upon her attaining majority as provided in Section 25 of the Civil Code." Accordingly, it is said in In re Guardianship of Jacobson, 30 Cal.2d 312, 322, 182 P.2d 537, 543, "A lawful marriage contracted by a female over the age of 18 years terminates her minority and the guardianship of her person and estate." See also a statement of this court that a woman over 18 years of age and being married is an adult in Price v. Hovsepian, 114 Cal.App.2d 385, 386, 250 P.2d 252.

Appellant further points out that in 1953 the phrase "or for the purpose of maintaining or defending an action affecting her marital status" was added to the purposes for which under section 25 the married woman between 18 and 21 was deemed an adult person, which amendment according to appellant was intended to clear up the confusion [sic] caused by the Haro case and to change the law so as to restrict the procedural capacity of the married woman between 18 and 21 to actions affecting her marital status. No ground whatever is shown for the asserted relation between the amendment of 1953, and the, at that time, seventeen year old Haro decision. Probably, the amendment was prompted by the fear that the specification in section 25 of adultness "for the purpose of entering into any engagement or transaction respecting property or her estate, or for the purpose of entering into any contract," might wrongly be construed as permitting action for such purpose relating to property only. The State Bar Committee on Administration of Justice recommended support of the amendment "in the interest of clarification" (not as a change in the law). If it had been the intention to change the law of the cited cases that a married woman between 18 and 21 was an adult, clearer language could have been expected.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Eugene F. MOORE and Ralph Hill, Jr., Defendants and Appellants.

Cr. 3201.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

July 23, 1956.

Hearing Denied Aug. 21, 1956.

Defendants were convicted of burglary while armed with deadly weapon, of conspiracy to commit burglary with an acetylene torch or explosives, and of possession of firearm capable of being concealed on the person after such person had been convicted of a felony. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Daniel R. Shoemaker, J., entered judgment and order denying defendants' motions for new trial, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal held that, where more than one punishment was legal, the District Court of Appeals could not review trial court's discretion in making the sentences run consecutively or concurrently.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Burglary ⚷10

To be armed with a deadly weapon sufficient to sustain charge of burglary while armed with a deadly weapon, it was sufficient that defendants had a ".45 automatic" pistol in their possession and available for immediate use, and jury could find that the pistol, which was contained in suitcase which defendants brought into the store which was burglarized, was in the joint possession of both defendants and available for immediate use. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 459, 460.

2. Criminal Law ⚷573, 577

The law requires both a speedy trial, which is not to be postponed without proof of necessity in the interests of justice, and a reasonable opportunity for accused's attorney to prepare for trial. West's Ann. Pen.Code, § 1050.

3. Criminal Law ⚷586, 1151

Decision upon ex parte motion of defendants to continue criminal prosecution on ground that defendants had been in custody for the two weeks prior to the motion was matter within trial court's discretion, and the District Court of Appeal would not disturb trial court's denial of such motion in absence of showing of any most cogent reason for continuance or any detriment to defendants' defense by such denial. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1050.

4. Witnesses ⚷350

Where one defendant, while testifying in his own behalf in a criminal proceeding, testified as to prior difficulties he had had with police, particularly with two inspectors present as witnesses, district attorney was entitled to cross-examine defendants as to alleged false arrests previously made by such inspectors and as to all circumstances which could be of importance for the evaluation of the defense of the officers in making the arrest.

5. Witnesses ⚷350

Where, in a criminal matter, defendant has testified in his own behalf, upon cross-examination, any matter which may tend to overcome or qualify effect of testimony given by him on his direct examination may be elicited, and if the questions are relevant for such purpose, then the evidence is admissible whether it embraces commission of another crime or whether the other crime is similar in kind or is part of a single design.

6. Criminal Law ⚷1044

Where trial court sustained defense counsel's objection to certain alleged misconduct of district attorney and admonished jury as requested by defense counsel, and no mistrial was asked, and, upon subsequent objection for similar alleged misconduct, no misconduct was assigned and no admonition was asked, attitude of defendants in trial court would prevent review of such alleged misconduct.

7. Criminal Law ⚷1186(4)

Error, if any, in district attorney's cross-examination of one defendant about prior arrests, which did not appear to be related to the felonies charged, could not have caused a miscarriage of justice and, therefore, could not lead to a reversal, in view of fact that evidence of defendant's guilt, including their own testimony, was overwhelming. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 182, 459, 460, 464, 12021; West's Ann. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

8. Criminal Law ⚷1166½(12)

Where, in criminal proceeding, court corrected defense counsel when counsel addressed defendant by wrong name, and defendant, after defense counsel said he was confused, stated that it was no wonder that counsel was confused since defendant had not paid defense counsel yet, trial judge, in remarking "I don't believe that", did not commit prejudicial error in view of fact that requested admonition to jury cured any possible error, especially in light of strength of case against defendants.

9. Criminal Law ⚷1172(1)

The use of popular language by court in explaining the several offenses charged when jury requested additional instruction did not cause a miscarriage of justice even though tone of statement, which was factually correct, might have somewhat favored the prosecution, in view of fact that case against defendants was so clear.

10. Criminal Law ⚷829(1)

In criminal proceeding, refusal of instructions which were offered by defendants but which contained subject matter fully and correctly covered by other instructions given was not error.

11. Criminal Law ⚷200(1)

Penal Code provision prohibiting punishing under more than one penal provision if the same act is made punishable in different ways by different provisions of the Code prohibits double punishment for commission of a single act but does not prohibit convictions for different offenses arising out of a single act, unless one is necessarily included within the other. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 654.

12. Conspiracy ⚷28

Conspiracy is a distinct offense from actual commission of offense forming the object of the conspiracy, and guilty parties may be legally convicted of both offenses.

13. Criminal Law ⚷200(1)

Applicability of Penal Code provision prohibiting punishment, under more than one penal provision, if the same act is made punishable in different ways by different provisions of the Code depends upon whether a separate and distinct act can be established as basis of each conviction, and it is only when the two offenses are committed by the same act or when the act is essential to both that they may not both be punished. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 182, 464.

14. Criminal Law ⚷200(1)

In each case the court must decide, on basis of its particular fact and the legislative intent, whether there are one or more distinct acts and whether one or more punishments can be inflicted. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 182, 464.

15. Criminal Law ⚷200(3)

In prosecution for burglary while armed with a deadly weapon, of conspiracy to commit burglary with an acetylene torch or explosives, and of possession of firearm capable of being concealed on person after defendants had been convicted of a felony, no included offenses were involved, separate convictions were correct, and more than one punishment was legal. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 182, 459, 460, 464, 654, 12021.

16. Criminal Law ⚷1147

Where more than one punishment was legal, the District Court of Appeals could not review trial court's discretion in making the sentences run consecutively or concurrently. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 654.

Kenneth C. Zwerin, San Francisco, for appellant Hill.

Emmet F. Hagerty, San Francisco, for appellant, Moore.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., Raymond M. Momboisse, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

Appellants were found guilty by a jury on both counts of an information (No. 51442) accusing them of 1. burglary armed with a deadly weapon, first degree Penal Code, §§ 459–460, and 2. conspiracy, Penal Code, § 182, to commit burglary with an acetylene torch or explosives, Penal Code, § 464, and charging appellant Hill with a prior felony conviction, which was admitted. Moreover, each was found guilty on an information (Nos. 51441 and 51443) accusing him of possession of a firearm capable of being concealed on the person after having been convicted of a felony, Penal Code, § 12021. Their motions for a new trial were denied and they were sentenced to San Quentin, the sentences to run consecutively. They appeal from the judgment and the order denying their motions for new trial.

[1] Their first contention is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the conviction of 1st degree burglary and of possession of a concealable firearm, because there was allegedly no evidence that they possessed the pistol found on the burglarized premises, and the conviction of conspiracy, because there was allegedly no evidence to substantiate the only overt act charged to wit that appellants "placed upon the floor within the premises * * * acetylene tanks and * * * other tools." The contention of insufficiency of the evidence, not seriously maintained in the closing brief, is wholly without merit. Appellants do not deny that the evidence was sufficient to justify conviction of second degree burglary. They themselves testified to conspiring to burglarize the place (allegedly with a third party with no other name than Joe) and that they passed into the store burglarized a large suitcase with acetylene torch, etc. They were arrested in the place itself and the police officers found on the floor there a 45 automatic in a towel underneath gauges, in the same suitcase which contained two acetylene torches. The clip with shells was in the gun. To be armed with a deadly weapon under section 460 of the Penal Code it is sufficient that appellants had it in their possession available for immediate use. People v. Stroff, 134 Cal.App. 670, 674, 26 P.2d 315. The jury could find that the pistol was in the joint possession of both and that in the suitcase it was available for immediate use. The same applies to the possession, custody or control of the weapon under section 12021 of the Penal Code. In People v. Welch, 89 Cal.App. 18, 29, 264 P. 324, it was held that two loaded revolvers which were in an automobile used by three defendants conspirators on a burglary trip with one of which revolvers one of the defendants shot it out with the police, were also in the possession, custody and control of the two defendants who were arrested in the automobile but who did not shoot. Here both defendants carried the pistol with them into the burglarized store in a suitcase which they there opened. There is no doubt that they both could be held to have had detention and control of the weapon. The contention that the alleged overt act was not proved, although defendants themselves testified that they conspired to burglarize the store and brought into the store the suitcase with the acetylene torches which the police found there on the floor, does not require any comment.

[2, 3] Next appellants complain of the fact that an ex parte motion made on August 3, 1955, to continue the trial scheduled for August 8th on the ground that the defendants had been in custody in Stockton for two weeks prior to the motion was denied. Our law requires both a speedy trial, not to be postponed without proof of necessity in the interest of justice, Penal Code, § 1050, and a reasonable opportunity for the attorney of the accused to prepare for trial. In re Ochse, 38 Cal.2d 230, 238 P.2d 561. The decision of the motion on the basis of these two principles and the special facts of the case is in the discretion of the trial court and the appellate court will only disturb its ruling for the most cogent reasons. People v. Gaines, 1 Cal. 2d 110, 113, 34 P.2d 146. We cannot say that there were here most cogent reasons for continuance or any detriment to appellants' defense by the denial. The attorneys who made the motion on August 3, 1955, had already assisted appellants at their arraignment on June 22, 1955, and the briefs on appeal do not state any matter in which the efficacy of the defense was hampered by lack of preparation. The evidence indicates that no long preparation for the trial was needed.

[4, 5] Appellants predicate misconduct of the district attorney on the fact that he cross-examined appellant Hill about prior arrests of which it did not appear that they related to felonies. Defendant Hill opened up the matter of the prior arrests, when, testifying in his own behalf, he testified as to prior difficulties he had had with members of the San Francisco Police Department, particularly with two inspectors present as witnesses in the case, against whom he brought a damage suit (for false the questions complained of, defendant arrest). On cross-examination prior to Hill referred to the time that one of these inspectors "falsely arrested" him. This evidence was clearly intended to undermine the confidence of the jury in the impartiality of those police officers as to defendants and in the value of their testimony. The district attorney was then entitled to cross-examine defendants as to these arrests and all circumstances which could be of importance for the evaluation of the attitude of the officers in making the arrests. From a defendant in a criminal matter who has testified in his own behalf any matter may be elicited on cross-examination, which may tend to overcome or qualify the effect of the testimony given by him on his direct examination. People v. Zerillo, 36 Cal.2d 222, 228, 223 P.2d 223. If the questions were relevant for that purpose then the evidence was admissible, "'whether it embraces the commission of another crime or does not, whether the other crime be similar in kind or not, whether it be part of a single design or not.'" People v. Peete, 28 Cal.2d 306, 315, 169 P.2d 924, 929; People v. Hughes, 123 Cal.App.2d 767, 769, 267 P.2d 376. For the right to rebut an implied attack by defendant on the credibility of police officers see People v. Clark, 122 Cal.App.2d 342, 348, 265 P.2d 43.

[6, 7] At any rate the attitude of defendants in the court below prevents review on appeal on this ground. After most of the questions here complained of had been asked, defendant Hill's attorney for the first time assigned misconduct and asked that the jury would be admonished to disregard. The court sustained the objection and so admonished the jury. It is not contended that the admonition could not cure the error. No mistrial was asked. Appellants got all they asked for. Jonte v. Key System, 89 Cal.App.2d 654, 659, 201 P.2d 562; Ades v. Brush, 66 Cal.App.2d 436, 445, 152 P.2d 519. Thereafter only one question was asked here complained of, to wit whether defendant Hill had been arrested for driving with a suspended or revoked driver's license. The objection led to a discussion between counsel and the question remained unanswered without a ruling by the court. No misconduct was assigned or admonition asked. The failure to obtain a ruling prevents review of the objection on appeal, 3 Cal.Jur.2d 610 and authorities there cited. But even if this were not so the evidence of defendants' guilt including their own testimony is so overwhelming that any possible error in mentioning the other arrests cannot have caused a miscarriage of justice and therefore cannot lead to reversal. Cal. Const. Art. VI, § 4½; People v. Hughes, supra, 123 Cal.App.2d at page 769, 267 P. 2d 376; People v. Guthrie, 103 Cal.App. 2d 468, 472, 229 P.2d 841.

[8] Appellants' contention of misconduct of the court consisting in the court's remark to defendant Hill: "I don't believe that" is frivolous when the circumstances of the remark are considered. Mr. Hill's counsel addressed his client, who was testifying, by mistake as Mr. Moore. The court corrected him. Counsel said that he was sorry, he was confused. Defendant Hill then said: "No wonder he's confused. I haven't paid him yet." On this remark, which evidently was a joke, the court in the same spirit said: "I don't believe that." Nevertheless at the request of counsel the court instructed the jury to disregard the statement, which he said was just a repartee. Evidently the admonition, which was all that was asked, must be considered to have cured any possible error and there is no possibility whatever of prejudice, certainly not if the strength of the case against the defendants is considered.

[9] Appellants contend that certain language used by the court when the jury requested additional instructions was intemperate and prejudicially erroneous. The jury had not sufficiently understood the several offenses of which defendants were accused and the code sections which governed said offenses. The court therefore explained these points in popular language. It was explained that the first count of the information against both defendants related to burglary, § 459, that defendants admitted burglary but that the disputed question was whether the burglary was of the first or second degree depending on whether they were armed with a pistol at the time of the burglary; that was joined with a second count charging conspiracy, § 182; that a conspiracy must be to do something and that they were accused of conspiracy to commit burglary with explosives, § 464, which requires entering the place with the intent to attempt to open or to open a safe and to use acetylene torches or explosives; that the people say that they had an agreement, conspiracy, between them to go in there and do these things. "They say we had an agreement sure, but it was just to go in and burglarize the place, not as the people charge." It was for the jury to determine whether they had the conspiracy and did the overt act as charged by the people. After a further question of a juror the court repeated that the fact that defendants admitted that they conspired to burglarize the place was not sufficient to find them guilty because they were charged with a specific conspiracy, conspiracy to burglarize with explosives. They say, "'Sure, we got together. We cased this joint. We did everything but we didn't go beyond that.' It is up to you to decide whether or not you are going to believe that or whether you are going to take the position that the State maintains." Appellants complain of the emphasized language as giving the jury the impression that appellants were burglars. As they had expressly admitted burglarizing the place such could hardly be objectionable. There might be a question whether the above statement of the position of the parties, factually correct, did not in its tone somewhat favor the prosecution, but, as said before, the case was so clear that this cannot have caused a miscarriage of justice. The court took care to eliminate any possibility that the jury would construe the above language as giving them the right to decide on mere belief by instructing them again "that it is the duty of the State to prove these men guilty beyond a reasonable doubt."

[10] Appellants complain of the refusal of three instructions offered by them as to possession of a weapon and burglary armed with a deadly weapon. The subject matter of these instructions was fully and correctly covered by other instructions given. Hence the refusal of the instructions offered was no error. People v. Eggers, 30 Cal.2d 676, 688, 185 P.2d 1.

[11–16] Appellants urge that the convictions of and punishment for three separate offenses in this case violate section 654 of the Penal Code which prohibits punishing under more than one penal provision if the same act is made punishable in different ways by different provisions of the code. In this respect conviction and punishment must be distinguished. "Section 654 prohibits double punishment for the commission of a single act [citations], but it does not prohibit convictions for different offenses arising out of a single act unless one is necessarily included within the other. [Citations.]" People v. Smith, 36 Cal.2d 444, 448, 224 P.2d 719, 722. There is no doubt that here no included offenses were involved and that the separate convictions were correct. "It has long been settled that a conspiracy is a distinct offense from the actual commission of the offense forming the object of the conspiracy and that guilty parties may be legally convicted of both offenses." People v. Campbell, 132 Cal.App.2d 262, 268, 281 P.2d 912, 915; People v. Hoyt, 20 Cal.2d 306, 317, 125 P.2d 29. It has also been held that armed robbery and possession of a concealable firearm by a felon were two distinct offenses; the conviction of both of which was upheld. People v. Israel, 91 Cal.App.2d 773, 779, 206 P.2d 62; Cf. People v. Warren, 16 Cal. 2d 103, 110–111, 104 P.2d 1024. The same must apply in this case. The question remains whether it was in accordance with the legislative intent expressed in section 654, supra, that in a situation like that here present, the sentences were made to run consecutively. People v. Kynette, 15 Cal. 2d 731, 762, 104 P.2d 794. In that respect the question is not whether appellants were guilty of distinct offenses but whether these offenses were committed by the same or by distinct acts. People v. Knowles, 35 Cal.2d 175, 187, 217 P.2d 1. "The applicability of section 654 depends upon whether a separate and distinct act can be established as the basis of each conviction. [Citation.] * * * It is only when the two offenses are committed by the same act or when that act is essential to both that they may not both be punished. [Citations.]" In re Chapman, 43 Cal.2d 385, 389–390, 273 P.2d 817, 819. The unlawful agreement, which is the gist of the conspiracy, to commit burglary with explosives, is an act separate and distinct from the armed burglary, the essence of which is the armed entry with felonious intent. It may be noted, without deciding the importance of the point, that the overt act alleged, the placing of the suitcase with acetylene tools on the floor of the burglarized premises is not essential to the armed burglary. It has expressly been held that separate punishment for the conspiracy and the act to which it relates is not forbidden by section 654, supra. People v. Severino, 122 Cal.App.2d 172, 184, 264 P.2d 656. For an example of consecutive sentences for the crime and the conspiracy to commit the same see People v. Gem Hang, 131 Cal. App.2d 69, 280 P.2d 28. There might be some more doubt whether the possession of a concealable weapon by defendants (felons) and the burglary armed with a deadly weapon have as their basis distinct acts, because there was no evidence of the possession of the pistol except its presence among the tools of defendants in the burglarized store. However, in People v. Warren, supra, 16 Cal.2d at page 111, 104 P.2d at page 1029, it is said as basis for the court's decision as to double jeopardy: "'In People v. Perry, 99 Cal.App. 90, at (page) 93 (277 P. 1080), it was held that the crime of carrying a concealed weapon in violation of the Firearms Act (Stats. 1923, p. 695), is separate and distinct from the crime of robbery, and defendant was subject to separate indictment, conviction and punishment for carrying a concealed weapon, irrespective of the result of the robbery prosecution, and notwithstanding that both crimes may have grown out of the same continuous transaction and were committed at the same time.'" It is moreover said in the Warren case, 16 Cal.2d at page 110, 104 P.2d at page 1028: "* * * the offense which is prohibited by section 2 of the Deadly Weapons Act., i. e., possession or control of a firearm by persons who had been previously convicted of crime, was complete before the robbery took place for the reason that without possession of the deadly weapons which were used in the perpetration of the robbery, that crime could not have been consummated." Although People v. Warren and People v. Perry do not directly involve section 654, supra, they indicate that the necessary possession prior to the entry can be considered a distinct act, which may be separately punished. The possession after the entry could also be considered as a separate act because the burglary was completed by the entry with felonious intent alone. See People v. Shaffer, 81 Cal.App. 752, 754–755, 254 P. 666. Appellants rely on People v. Roberts, 40 Cal.2d 483, 491, 254 P.2d 501, 505, which held that for transportation, furnishing and possession of heroin (all prohibited by section 11500 and made punishable by section 11712 of the Health and Safety Code) if committed at the same time one punishment only can be inflicted and on the rule there stated that "'co-operative acts constituting but one offense when committed by the same person at the same time, when combined, charge but one crime and but one punishment can be inflicted.'" However, in this case different offenses made punishable by different code sections are charged in separate informations, and the above rule has no application. In each case the court must decide on the basis of its particular facts and the legislative intent whether there are one or more distinct acts and whether one or more punishments can be inflicted. People v. Logan, 41 Cal.2d 279, 290, 260 P.2d 20. We hold that under the facts of this case more than one punishment was legal. We then cannot review the discretion of the trial court in making the sentences run consecutively or concurrently. People v. Kynette, supra, 15 Cal.2d 731, 762, 104 P.2d 794; People v. Schafer, 161 Cal. 573, 580, 119 P. 920.

Glen S. COLE and Velma M. Cole, Appellants.

Civ. 5162.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

July 12, 1956.

Action by buyers of a weight reducing business for a declaratory judgment determining their rights under an agreement, and for damages for sellers' breach of an agreement not to engage in a business competitive with buyers. The sellers cross-complained for the balance due on a note given in part payment of purchase price. The Superior Court, San Diego County, Arthur L. Mundo, J., entered judgment for sellers with a setoff for damages to buyers, and sellers appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that where sellers stated to buyers that they were bound by the provisions of a franchise agreement with a weight reducing business and that they could not compete with buyers, and buyers relying upon such representation took over a business and operated it for several months when sellers commenced competitive activities, evidence of an oral agreement made by sellers not to compete in business with buyers for two years was not, under the circumstances, rendered inadmissible by the statute of frauds.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Pleading 🔑245(4)

Where sellers of a weight reducing business had opportunity to introduce all relevant evidence on the issues presented by buyers' action for damages for sellers' breach of an oral agreement not to engage in a business competitive with buyers, and were informed at the commencement of trial as to contentions of buyers, sellers were not prejudiced by trial court's allowance of an amendment to buyers' complaint to conform to their proof, and such amendment, was therefore not untimely.

2. Pleading 🔑248(4)

Where buyers of a weight reducing business in their complaint for damages against sellers alleged sellers began to sell weight reducing tables in competition with buyers in violation of an agreement with buyers, and amendment to conform to the proof adding an allegation that sellers orally agreed that they would not enter into any business in competition with plaintiffs for a period of two years was a fact which could have been established under the complaint as within the issues without amendment, and therefore, a new cause of action was not stated in the amendment allowed.

3. Contracts ⚿332(2)

An action for damages for breach of an oral agreement not to enter into any business in competition with plaintiffs for a period of two years stated a cause of action. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1060.

4. Frauds, Statute of ⚿144

Where sellers stated to buyers that they were bound by the provisions of a franchise agreement with a weight reducing business and that they could not compete with buyers, and buyers relying upon such representation took over the business and operated it for several months when sellers commenced competitive activities, evidence of an oral agreement made by sellers not to compete in business with buyers for two years was not, under the circumstances, rendered inadmissible by the statute of frauds.

5. Frauds, Statute of ⚿144

Where a party, in reliance upon a parol contract that should have been reduced to writing, has changed his position or parted with value so that it would be an injustice to permit the other party to rely on the statute of frauds, the doctrine of equitable estoppel will be invoked and the statute of frauds will not be made available to perpetuate the fraud.

6. Evidence ⚿448

Where parol evidence is entirely consistent with and in no way changes or contradicts a written instrument, such parol evidence may be admitted to explain ambiguity in a written contract.

7. Damages ⚿222

It is not necessary that a court itemize damages.

8. Damages ⚿6

One whose wrongful conduct has rendered difficult ascertainment of damages cannot escape liability because the damages can not be measured with exactness.

MUSSELL, Justice.

This is an action for declaratory relief in which plaintiffs seek a determination of their rights under an agreement to purchase a weight reducing business in the city of San Diego, known as the "Stauffer System". Defendants in their cross-complaint pray for judgment against plaintiffs for the balance due on a promissory note given in part payment of the purchase price of said business. The trial court rendered judgment in favor of the cross-complainants for the amount due on the promissory note, less the sum of $1,575 allowed plaintiffs as damages by reason of the breach of cross-complainants of their agreement not to engage in business in competition with plaintiffs. Glen S. Cole and Velma M. Cole, defendants and cross-complainants, appeal from the judgment, claiming that the court erred in allowing the sum of $1,575 as a setoff against the balance due on the note.

On June 2, 1952, plaintiffs and defendants entered into a written agreement wherein the Coles agreed to transfer to the Bouchards the business owned by the Coles, known as the "Stauffer System", at 905 "E" Street in San Diego, together with the existing patronage. The Coles further agreed to surrender their existing franchise from Stauffer and as a part of the purchase price, the Bouchards executed a promissory note payable to the Coles for $2,250, with interest. This note was unpaid at the time of trial. The business acquired by the plaintiffs was conducted in a salon where customers, under the supervision of Stauffer trained technicians, are placed on specially built tables which vibrate or move in a manner calculated to effect a reduction in the customer's weight.

The Stauffer franchise which the Coles had obtained from Stauffer, and which was surrendered by the Coles, was evidenced by an agreement between Stauffer and the Coles wherein the Coles were given the exclusive right to use the trade name of "Stauffer System" in the city of San Diego and elsewhere. The Stauffer System franchise given to the Coles contained the following provision:

> "In the event of the termination of this agreement for any reason, the licensees agree not to engage in any business predicated upon the principle of the 'Stauffer System' or in competition therewith, within the territory herein described, for a period of two years after such termination, either directly or indirectly."

The contract of sale of June 2, 1952, was prepared by Cole and when it was presented to Bouchard, he pointed out to Cole that it did not include a provision that the Coles would not engage in competitive business for a perod of two years as was provided in the preliminary draft of the contract which Cole had previously submitted. In this connection Bouchard testified that they had a definite clause in the preliminary contract that Cole would not go into competitive business with them for two years and that Cole left this provision out of the final contract, stating that it was already in his contract with Stauffer and that there was no necessity for it inasmuch as it was in the franchise agreement. Cole further stated that there was no possible way "that they could go into business with the Bouchards."

The Bouchards took possession of the business on June 15, 1952, and approximately three months thereafter, the Coles obtained a distributorship from B. H. Stauffer, the owner of the Stauffer System, giving them the right to sell and distribute "Stauffer Home Plan" units, which units were tables built by Stauffer similar to those used by plaintiffs and were sold to customers for use in their own homes, with no supervised exercises. Within two years from the sale of the business to the Bouchards the Coles sold 25 of the Stauffer Home Plan units at a profit of $75 per unit and used the designation "Stauffer" and "Stauffer System" in their advertisement to effect such sales. The record also shows that the Coles retained the list of customers of the business sold to the Bouchards and that some of these customers were contacted by the Coles.

When the June 15, 1953, payment on the purchase price of the business became due, the Bouchards refused to pay and filed this action for declaratory relief, for an injunction and damages. They sought a determination of their rights under the agreement of June 2, 1952, and under the franchise agreement with Stauffer. There was no allegation in the complaint that the Coles had orally agreed that they would not enter into any business in competition with the Bouchards for a period of two years and the trial court, after filing a memorandum of opinion on February 17, 1955, permitted the Bouchards to file an amendment to their complaint containing this omitted allegation. The amendment was filed March 17, 1955, and was allowed to conform to the proof. The findings of fact and conclusions of law were signed by the court on March 23, 1955, and the judgment was entered on March 31, 1955.

[1] Defendants first argue that the amendment to the complaint came too late. However, as is said in Carman v. Athearn, 77 Cal.App.2d 585, 594, 175 P.2d 926, 931:

> "The allowance of amendments to conform to the proof rests in the sound discretion of the trial court. This is so even where, as here, the motion is not made until after submission of the cause. [Citations.] The greatest liberality is to be encouraged in the allowance of such amendments in order to see that justice is done."

It does not appear that the defendants herein were prejudiced by the amendment since they had ample opportunity to introduce all relevant evidence on the issues and were informed at the commencement of the trial as to the contentions of plaintiffs.

[2] Defendants next contend that the amendment introduced a new cause of action and was therefore improperly allowed. We find no merit in this contention. Plaintiffs in their complaint set forth the terms of the franchise the defendants had from Stauffer and alleged that defendants agreed to turn over to plaintiffs all the lists of the then customers of the business; that after the contract of June 2, 1952, was executed, defendants immediately began to sell reducing tables in competition with plaintiffs and used the trade name "Stauffer System" in violation of their franchise with Stauffer and of the franchise held by the plaintiffs; that defendants immediately began and now are contacting customers on the lists agreed to be delivered to plaintiffs, in violation of the agreement with plaintiffs. The amendment to conform to the proof merely added the allegation that defendants orally agreed that they would not enter into any business in competition with plaintiffs for a period of two years, a fact which could have been established under the complaint as within the issues without the amendment. The complaint put the defendants on notice that plaintiffs' cause of action was based upon the defendants' agreement not to compete with plaintiffs for a period of two years. It does not appear, therefore, that a new cause of action was stated in the amendment allowed.

[3] Defendants argue that the new pleadings do not state a cause of action. However, the action was authorized under the provisions of section 1060 of the Code of Civil Precedure and such action is therein authorized in the case of a controversy relating to oral contracts and obligations. Zimmer v. Gorelnik, 42 Cal.App.2d 440, 445, 109 P.2d 34.

It is next contended that the parol evidence rule and the statute of frauds render the amendment and evidence of an agreement not to compete in business for two years inadmissible. This argument is likewise without merit. As is said in Grant v. Long, 33 Cal.App.2d 725, 739–740, 92 P.2d 940, 949:

> "It is a fundamental rule that as the statute of frauds is designed to prevent fraud it cannot be invoked to perpetrate a fraud. Seymour v. Oelrichs, 156 Cal. 782, 106 P. 88, 134 Am.St.Rep. 154; Stepp v. Williams, 52 Cal.App. 237, 198 P. 661; Tuck v. Gudnason, 11 Cal.App.2d 626, 54 P.2d 88. This rule is based on the doctrine of estoppel. It is applied in those cases in which one party, in reliance on a parol contract that should have been reduced to writing, has changed his position or parted with value so that it would be an injustice to permit the other party to plead the statute of frauds."

[4, 5] In the instant case defendants stated to plaintiffs that they were bound by the provisions of their franchise agreement with Stauffer and that they could not compete with plaintiffs. Plaintiffs, relying upon these representations, took over the business and operated it for several months, when defendants commenced their competitive activities. Where a party, in reliance upon a parol contract that should have been reduced to writing, has changed his position or parted with value so that it would be an injustice to permit the other party to rely on the statute of frauds, the doctrine of equitable estoppel will be invoked and the statute of frauds is not available to perpetuate the fraud. Le Blond v. Wolfe, 83 Cal.App.2d 282, 286, 188 P.2d 278.

[6] Parol evidence of the agreement of the parties was admitted to explain ambiguity in the written contract and the rule is that when the parol evidence which is offered is entirely consistent with and in no way changes or contradicts the written instrument, such parol evidence may be admitted. Cotton v. Riverside Cement Co., 29 Cal.App.2d 588, 592, 85 P.2d 136.

[7, 8] Defendants' final contention is that the court erred in allowing damages for defendants' breach of their agreement not to engage in competitive business with plaintiffs. However, defendants do not cite any authority to sustain their contention in this connection and do not claim that the damages awarded were excessive. There is substantial evidence that appellants used the list of customers which they agreed to furnish to plaintiffs and sold home plan units advertising the name of "Stauffer". It was not necessary that the court itemize the damages awarded, Laird v. Steinmann, 97 Cal.App.2d 781, 786, 218 P.2d 780, and the rule is that one whose wrongful conduct has rendered difficult the ascertainment of damages cannot escape liability because the damages could not be measured with exactness. Zinn v. Ex-Cell-O Corp., 24 Cal.2d 290, 297–298, 149 P.2d 177.

The judgment is affirmed.

The SUPERIOR COURT of the State of California, IN AND FOR the CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, Respondent.

No. 17299.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

July 16, 1956.

Prohibition proceeding by decedent's divorced wife to restrain Superior Court from resuming and completing trial in action by 110 plaintiffs against administrator and another to impress a constructive trust on assets of estate. The District Court of Appeal, Agee, J. pro tem., held that although decedent's divorced wife who had obtained judgment against estate objected to resumption of trial and desired to have trial commenced de novo so that she could adequately present her defense, trial court was acting within its jurisdiction in announcing its intention to resume and complete trial.

Peremptory writ denied and alternative writ discharged.

1. Appeal and Error 🔑136

Where decedent's divorced wife had obtained judgment against decedent's estate, if wife should choose to remain out of pending trial to impress constructive trust on assets of estate and if trial court should render judgment which would affect her adversely, wife's remedy would be by way of appeal, and in view of wife's objection to resumption of such trial, if wife should choose to enter trial, such objection could be reviewed on appeal.

2. Appearance 🔑12

Although deceased's divorced wife, who had obtained judgment against estate, had objected to resumption of trial in action by 110 plaintiffs against administrator and another to impress a constructive trust on assets of estate and desired to have trial commenced de novo so that she could adequately present her defense, court was acting within its jurisdiction in announcing its intention to resume and complete trial which had reached point where plaintiffs had completed their case in chief before divorced wife appeared in case. AGEE, Justice pro tem.

Petitioner seeks a peremptory writ of prohibition restraining the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco, the Honorable George W. Schonfeld presiding, from resuming and completing the trial of action numbered 431997 therein.

Petitioner is the former wife of Robert Russell Sidebotham, who died intestate on December 21, 1951. She had obtained a Nevada divorce from him on November 16, 1946, and the validity of that divorce is not in question.

On October 10, 1952, petitioner commenced an action against the administrator of the estate of her deceased husband and his heirs at law to have one-half of certain assets (mostly money) in the possession of her former husband at the time of his death declared to be hers as a tenant in common therein with him and, upon his death, his estate. She obtained judgment. The trial court reached the following conclusions of law: "1. That all of the monies, assets, and properties possessed and controlled by the decedent at the time of his death on December 21, 1951, and held for and on account of the estate of Robert Sidebotham, deceased, excepting the sum of $10,015.06, thereof, were acquired and accumulated by said decedent, prior to November 14, 1946 [the date of the divorce]. 2. That plaintiff [petitioner herein] has at all times since November 14, 1946, been the owner and entitled to the possession of an undivided one half thereof as tenant in common." Petitioner's theory in that case was that her deceased husband had wrongfully concealed from her the existence of this property at the time of the divorce, that it was community property, and that it was not disposed of in the divorce action. The judgment was entered on February 27, 1956, and is not final because an appeal therefrom is pending.

The action first mentioned in this opinion, No. 431997, was commenced on October 3, 1953, by 110 plaintiffs, who claimed that funds entrusted by them to decedent and one Huttaball had been misused and that the assets possessed by decedent at the time of his death originated from such misused funds and should be impressed with a constructive trust. The administrator of the decedent's estate, Huttaball and petitioner were named as defendants. (The plaintiffs apparently had learned of petitioner's claim and so joined her as a party.) None of the plaintiffs were parties to the previous action.

On October 27, 1954, the attorney for the administrator advised petitioner's attorney of the action and warned him that, if it was successful, the assets of the estate would be almost entirely exhausted. He asked that petitioner appear or that he be advised of her address so that she could be brought into the action. Petitioner did not appear in the action and her counsel did not disclose her whereabouts.

After the trial had proceeded against the administrator and Huttaball for 22 trial days, petitioner appeared therein and filed a general and special demurrer and a motion to strike. The demurrers were overruled and the motion to strike denied. On April 25, 1956, the lower court ordered the trial to resume on June 19, 1956. On that day petitioner filed her petition in this Court to prohibit such resumption. An alternative writ was issued, returnable on July 9, 1956.

The sole question is whether the resumption of the trial as against the administrator and Huttaball would be "without or in excess of the jurisdiction" of the trial court. Code Civ.Proc. § 1102. The trial has reached the point where plaintiffs have completed their case in chief and are ready to rest. The affidavit of the trial judge denies that, as petitioner avers, he has "ordered that the trial of the action proceed against Petitioner." (Emphasis added.) The plaintiffs have stated for the record that they will not object if petitioner intervenes even at this late date and participates in the trial from this point on. Plaintiffs have also stated for the record that, if petitioner does not wish to so participate, they will not make any move to force her to come in. The choice is hers to come in or stay out. Petitioner's main defense is based upon the judgment in her favor in the earlier action, to which we have previously referred. This defense is open to her in the pending trial if she chooses to make it.

Certain motions were made before the trial court on June 18, 1956, which were denied. The gist of them is that petitioner desires the trial be commenced de novo so that she can adequately present her defense. All of the points made by her are in the record and are reviewable on appeal. The affidavit of the trial judge, in opposition to the granting of the writ of prohibition sought by petitioner, avers: "That by denying the motions made by Ruiz [petitioner's attorney] on June 18, 1956, affiant [Judge Schonfeld] did not order that the trial of the action proceed against Petitioner and did not pass upon, nor intend to pass upon, the question of whether or not Petitioner would be bound by any judgment rendered therein or the question of whether or not Petitioner is a participant in said trial or has submitted to the Court's jurisdiction over Petitioner with relation to the merits of the action or of Petitioner's defense, and to the contrary, at the time of denying said motions, affiant, as Trial Judge, expressly informed said Ruiz that affiant was simply letting the record stand as it was; that no issue has been directly presented to affiant, as Trial Judge, which would require a determination one way or the other of whether Petitioner, by reason of the facts related hereinabove, is already a participant in the trial or should participate therein in order to protect such rights, if any, that Petitioner has in the premises."

[1] If petitioner chooses to remain out of the pending trial and a judgment is rendered therein, which affects her adversely, her remedy is by way of appeal. Likewise, if petitioner chooses to enter the trial at this point, she has made her objections to the resumption of the trial and may have the same reviewed on appeal.

[2] We conclude that the trial court, in announcing its intention to resume and complete the trial as against the defendant administrator and defendant Huttaball is not acting "without or in excess of the jurisdiction." Code Civ.Proc. § 1102.

A peremptory writ is denied and the alternative writ discharged.

CIRO'S OF SAN FRANCISCO, a corporation, Petitioner and Appellant,

v.

STATE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION OF The State of CALIFORNIA, Respondent.

No. 16913.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

June 28, 1956.

Proceeding on application for writ of mandamus to review State Board of Equalization order revoking on-sale liquor license on ground establishment operating under such license was operated by persons with police records in violation of statute. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Frank T. Deasy, J., denied writ and petitioner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that evidence was sufficient to support finding of Board that establishment operating under license in question was managed by individuals who had police records and such a violation constituted sufficient ground for revocation of license.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Intoxicating Liquors ⚷118

Under section of Alcoholic Beverage Control Act providing that no on-sale liquor licensee or on-sale general licensee for seasonal business shall knowingly employ any person to manage, direct, or conduct business who does not have qualifications required of holder of license, the words "manage, direct, or conduct" each suggests control. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 23788.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Manage, Direct or Conduct".

2. Mandamus ⚷168(4)

In proceeding on application for writ of mandamus to review order of State Board of Equalization revoking on-sale liquor license, which was revoked on ground unqualified persons were employed as managers of the tavern in question, evidence was sufficient to support finding by Board that two persons, who had police records, had managerial powers over tavern in question in violation of controlling statute. West's Ann.Const. art. 20, § 22; West's Ann.Bus & Prof.Code, § 24200(a).

3. Intoxicating Liquors ⚷106(4)

In proceeding on application for writ of mandamus to review State Board of Equalization order revoking on-sale liquor license, Board of Equalization did not abuse its discretion in imposing penalty of revocation of license on ground liquor establishment involved was operated by law violators contrary to statute. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 23788, 24200(a), (c).

BRAY, Justice.

The State Board of Equalization revoked petitioner's on-sale liquor license. Petitioner applied to the superior court for a writ of mandamus to review the board's action and to restore the license. After a hearing held upon the transcript and record of the proceedings before the board, the court made findings of fact and conclusions of law to the effect that the board's action was supported by the weight of the evidence and upheld the board's action. Judgment was then entered denying the writ. Petitioner appeals.

Questions Presented.

1. Sufficiency of evidence.
2. Is the penalty excessive?

Evidence.

Petitioner is a California corporation operating a tavern in San Francisco. The accusation upon which the board acted charged petitioner with violating section 24200, Business and Professions Code (Alcoholic Beverage Control Act) and article XX, § 22, California Constitution, in that from January 15, 1953, to November 6, 1953, it employed as a manager Renaldo Ferrari, a person who did not have the qualifications of a licensee because of a police record, and that from January 15, 1953, until September 18th, it employed as manager Anthony Tomasello and also permitted him to own one-third of the corporate stock, he likewise being a person who because of a police record could not qualify as a licensee. The accusation charged that because of those facts "the continuance of a license would be contrary to public welfare or morals." § 24200, subd. (c).

Ciro's corporation first became licensed to operate a tavern in 1951. At that time its board of directors consisted of William J. Parker, Doris B. Zweirin and Kenneth C. Zweirin. In its application for the license it specifically agreed that any manager employed in the business would have all the qualifications required of a licensee. December 13, 1952, Ferrari, Tomasello and Wallace Scott as copartners opened a commercial account at the Bank of America. The title of the account was "Ciro's Special" at the address 645 Geary (petitioner's tavern) with the business listed as "tavern." Withdrawals could be made upon the signature of any two of the three copartners. January 5, 1953, all members of the board resigned effective January 15th. January 14th, Richard Ferrari, Renaldo's son, borrowed $5,000 from his father to invest in the corporation and immediately gave his father a power of attorney to collect and deposit moneys, to endorse checks, to enter into written agreements, documents or commitments, including the borrowing of money or hypothecating of property, all on the son's behalf. It specifically empowered Renaldo "to do any act or thing in relation to the operation, management, ownership and/or transfer of the same in and to" Ciro's tavern, "or to do any act or thing in relation to the ownership of that certain California corporation known as Ciro's of San Francisco, Inc." The next day the ownership of the corporation was transferred to the following stockholders: Richard Ferrari, Scott and Tomasello. At a special stockholders' meeting then held, the above three being present, the board of directors was instructed to hold a special meeting later in the day to elect officers and to make application to the corporation commissioner for authority to issue stock. The meeting was held. Scott was elected president, Richard vice president and one Florence Da Ros secretary treasurer. The officers were authorized to open an account with the Bank of America. January 29th the account was opened in the name of Ciro's of San Francisco, withdrawals to be made by any two of the following three: Renaldo Ferrari, Tomasello and Scott. The previously opened "Ciro's Special" account was closed, reason "new account." At the meeting Scott stated that the officers should immediately file with the state board an application for a transfer of the liquor license to the corporation. January 20th, Scott, Richard, and Da Ros filed with the board information concerning their background. Richard was in the air force, stationed in Alaska during this period and was only active in the management of the business when home on furlough. Scott was the president of the corporation and under the by-laws was to have "general supervision, direction and control of the business affairs of the corporation," subject to the control of the board of directors. He testified that he did the managing of the business, the hiring and firing of employees, etc., and not Renaldo or Tomasello. (He also acted as a bartender.) It is significant, however, that checks on the corporation bank account could be signed by Tomasello and Renaldo alone. The resolution of the corporation and the bank signature card provided that any two of the three, Tomasello, Scott and Renaldo, were authorized to sign "checks, drafts and all other paper issued in said trade." Renaldo testified that the president of the corporation "had given me permission to sign different contracts" for the corporation and that he did sign such.

Renaldo began to work at the tavern December 15, 1952, and for the corporation January, 1953. He stated that he was hired by Scott and Richard as a bartender at union scale. He did not receive pay until the corporation was in a position to pay, starting approximately August, 1953. Renaldo in the course of his work was authorized to sign checks and contracts for the corporation. He also did a few odd jobs on the premises and "might" have signed for materials delivered to the corporation. His criminal record shows numerous arrests and convictions resulting in imprisonment for violation of state and federal narcotics laws. Tomasello's record shows two convictions and imprisonment on narcotics charges. Tomasello also acted as bartender from January, 1953, on. Besides authority to sign checks, he owned one-third of the corporate stock, although it appears that after his second arrest he transferred his stock to Richard and Scott, and left his employment. This was sometime between September 23, 1953, and January 19, 1954.

1. Sufficiency of Evidence.

Petitioner concedes that both Renaldo and Tomasello did not possess the qualifications required of licensees. It contends, however, that the evidence does not show by convincing proof to a reasonable certainty[1] that Renaldo and Tomasello acted as managers.

In Gordon v. Industrial Accident Commission, 1926, 199 Cal. 420, 427, 249 P. 849, 852, 58 A.L.R. 1374, the court said: "* * * a managing agent or a managing representative is one who has general discretionary powers of direction and control—one who may direct, control, conduct, or carry on his employer's business or any part or branch thereof."

[1] It does not contend that if the evidence so shows such facts would not be contrary to public welfare and morals, and would not constitute a violation of section 24200, subdivision (a), Business and Professions Code, and of article XX, § 22 of the Constitution.

[1] There has been no explanation by the Legislature as to what it meant by "manage" as used in section 23788 of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act. It is of some value to note that in that section the Legislature used the words "manage, direct, or conduct * * *." Each of these words suggests "control."

[2] Without reviewing all the facts relating to Renaldo's employment at Ciro's, it is clear that there was substantial proof that he did exercise managerial powers. He was one of the three persons, any two of which could sign checks for the corporation; he was authorized to sign contracts for the corporation; he performed odd jobs around the premises even though he was supposedly hired as a bartender; and he held a power of attorney from his son, a stockholder, director and vice president of the corporation, which permitted Renaldo, through the by-laws, to exercise some control over the president of the corporation.

The evidence also reveals that Tomasello had the power, in conjunction with one of the two other authorized persons, to sign checks for Ciro's; he was owner of one-third of the stock of the corporation; and that, although he was employed as a bartender starting January, 1953, he received no pay until July, 1953. This is sufficient evidence to support the board's finding that Tomasello had managerial powers.

Petitioner contends that the ownership by Tomasello of one-third of the stock of the corporation does not justify a revocation of the license, as it contends there is no inhibition in the law against a person who is not qualified to obtain a liquor license, owning stock in a corporation which holds one. It is not necessary to consider the effect of Tomasello's stock ownership except as it bears on his managing and conducting the business. Tomasello's acts as well as those of Renaldo in this respect show clearly that both were acting in connection with the business in a manner such as to make the continuance of the license contrary to public welfare and morals. As to Tomasello, this is true, whether his ownership of one-third of the stock of the corporation itself would or would not be cause for revocation of the license.

It should be noted that Renaldo, Tomasello and Scott held the bank account for Ciro's tavern, prior to the incorporation. Thereafter the same three had full charge of the corporation's bank account.

2. Penalty.

[3] Characterizing the violations found by the board as merely technical ones, petitioner contends that the board abused its discretion in the penalty imposed, namely, revocation of the license. We fail to see, however, that the violations were merely technical.[2] It requires no extended argument to prove that premises licensed to dispense alcoholic beverages should not be operated by law violators, particularly those convicted of heinous crimes of the type of narcotics violations. It is a well known fact that much of the narcotic traffic centers in and around taverns. Renaldo in 1937 was convicted of transporting morphine and also of possession thereof. Apparently the one year he served in the county jail therefor did not cause him to cease trafficking in narcotics. In 1947 he was convicted of concealing narcotics and was sentenced to the federal penitentiary for three years and one day. Tomasello in 1944 pleaded guilty to possession of marijuana and was sentenced to 90 days in the county jail. He, too, did not profit therefrom, for in 1953 he was again sentenced to the county jail, this time for five months, on a plea of guilty of possession of marijuana. Even though there was no evidence in this case of questionable activities at Ciro's, the flouting of the law by petitioner, the importance of a strict enforcement of the law as to the character of the persons to be permitted the privilege of liquor licenses, the danger to the public welfare and morals to which the corporation subjected the public by employment in the capacities here shown of men with prohibited backgrounds, and the circumstances of this case, negative any contention of abuse of discretion in the penalty imposed. The board did what petitioner quoting "the philosophy of the Mikado and 'make the punishment fit the crime,'" says it should be required to do.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

F. Louis GOMES, Executor of the Estate of Antonio Lucio, also known as A. Lucio, also known as Antonio F. Lucio, also known as A. F. Lucio, deceased, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 8865.

District Court of Appeal, Third District. California.

July 16, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 7, 1956.

Hearing Denied Sept. 13, 1956.

Suit by sister-in-law of decedent to establish claim for reasonable value of nursing services performed for deceased during last nine years of his life. The Superior Court, Madera County, R. R. Sischo, J., entered judgment for sister-in-law and executor appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that evidence justified jury in finding that services rendered to decedent by sister-in-law were to be paid for at their reasonable worth.

Affirmed.

1. Executors and Administrators ⇨221(5)

In action by deceased's sister-in-law to establish claim for reasonable value of services, including the furnishing of room and board and extensive personal services, evidence justified jury in finding that services were to be paid for at their reasonable value.

2. Work and Labor ⇨4(2)

When services are rendered by one person from which another derives a benefit, although there is no express contract or agreement to pay for the services, there is a presumption of law which arises from the proof of services rendered that the person enjoying the benefit of the same is bound to pay what they are reasonably worth.

3. Limitation of Actions ⇨50(2)

Where sister-in-law performed continuing services to decedent for the last nine years of his life and such services were rendered up to the point of decedent's death, and there was evidence from which it could be inferred that they were not to be paid for until terminated, statute limiting recovery to the last two years preceding death was not applicable. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc., § 1880, subd. 3.

4. Limitation of Actions ⇨197(1)

In sister-in-law's suit to establish claim for reasonable value of services performed continuously for the deceased during the last nine years of his life and up to the point of his death, where there was testimony from which it could be inferred that the services were not to be paid for until terminated and that the decedent had said he was going to leave sister-in-law his property, evidence was sufficient to avoid the plea of the two-year statute of limitations. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1880, subd. 3.

5. Executors and Administrators ⇨251

Sister-in-law's complaint for reasonable value of personal services performed for deceased during last nine years of his life sufficiently pleaded a cause of action.

6. Executors and Administrators ⚿253

Where sister-in-law's suit to establish claim for personal services rendered to decedent was pleaded and tried on the theory of establishing a claim for the reasonable value thereof, the court properly refused a requested instruction that the sister-in-law could not recover unless there was an express oral agreement.

7. Executors and Administrators ⚿253

In sister-in-law's action to establish claim for reasonable value of services rendered to decedent during the last years of his life, the court properly instructed the jury with respect to the proof necessary in order to establish a claim for the reasonable value of the services.

8. Attorney and Client ⚿86

A party's former attorney could not bind her by any admissions allegedly made after the relationship of attorney and client had been terminated.

9. Appeal and Error ⚿1046(5)

Judge's remark, in ruling upon objection to evidence, that if certain things had occurred to him previously he would not have permitted prior testimony favorable to the objector, was not conduct prejudicial to objector where testimony was not stricken and objector made specific use of the testimony in argument to the jury.

10. Appeal and Error ⚿1046(5)

Court's remark, in overruling objection to hypothetical question, to the effect that it was about as good as the objector had asked, was not prejudicial misconduct on the ground that it completely discredited a question the objector had asked.

11. Trial ⚿110

An attorney asking question for impeachment purposes in such a way as to suggest that the denials produced are false takes upon himself the burden of making it clear that they are asked in good faith, and generally if no such showing is made he stands convicted of bad faith.

12. Appeal and Error ⚿971(6)
Witnesses ⚿329

Where a question for impeachment purposes might have been asked in bad faith but because of valid objections to the admissibility of subsequent evidence the issue remained clouded, propriety of question was a matter for the discretion of the trial court and his ruling would not be disturbed on appeal.

13. Trial ⚿114

Jurors are sworn to uphold the law and attorneys are guilty of misconduct when they suggest any other course of conduct.

14. Trial ⚿133(6)

Where trial court properly admonished jury to disregard remark by counsel suggesting that adversary could have waived the so-called dead man's statute, rights of defendant were not prejudiced. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1880, subd. 3.

Lawrence W. Young, Fresno, for appellant.

Linneman, Burgess, Telles & Van Atta, Dos Palos, Chandler & Hammerberg, Madera, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Judge.

Appellant as executor of the will of Antonio Lucio, deceased, appeals from a judgment entered upon a jury's verdict in favor of respondent who sued to establish a rejected claim for the reasonable value of services alleged to have been performed for deceased.

There was substantial evidence to the following effect: The testator, a widower, died on October 18, 1953, at the age of 85. His grandnephew, appellant herein, was the sole beneficiary under his will. Respondent, who was a sister-in-law of decedent, had cared for him in her home during the last years of his life. The services began January 1, 1946, when he entered her home, and were continuously performed thereafter to the date of his death. She furnished him room and board and performed extensive personal services. For several years before his death decedent was crippled and could only walk with the aid of crutches. He was unable to drive an automobile and depended upon respondent and her sons for transportation when he wished to go out. In his crippled condition respondent had to assist him when he fell and consequently could not retire at night until he was in bed. Decedent lacked control of his bladder and his bedding as well as his clothes had to be changed and laundered almost daily. His needs were described as being the same as those required by a baby for the last four years of his life. It was shown that respondent spared herself in no way in caring for and attending decedent, although she was not related to him by blood and was under no legal or moral duty to render to him any services whatsoever. There was a conflict in the evidence as to whether she received any pay, but we must here assume that the jury found, as they could have, that she received none whatever.

[1, 2] From the foregoing evidence the jury were justified in inferring that the services rendered to decedent by respondent were to be paid for at their reasonable worth.

> "'* * * [W]hen services are rendered by one person, from which another derives a benefit, although there is no express contract or agreement to pay for the services, there is a "presumption of law which arises from the proof of services rendered, that the person enjoying the benefit of the same is bound to pay what they are reasonably worth."'" Moore v. Spremo, 72 Cal.App.2d 324, 329–330, 164 P.2d 540, 544.

[3, 4] However, appellant as a defense pleaded the statute of limitations, thereby asserting that, even if decedent was obligated to pay the reasonable value of the services he received, nevertheless the recovery must have been limited to the last two years preceding his death. This was not done. The statute of limitations was not applicable for the reason that the services were continuous, were never paid for, were rendered up to the point of decedent's death and there was evidence from which it could be inferred that they were not to be paid for until terminated. In addition to what has been stated, there was testimony that decedent had said he was going to leave respondent enough to build a house and take care of herself; that he was going to see to it that she had something to get by on when he was gone; that he was going to leave his property to her; that he was going to make it easy for her. When she took the stand respondent was not permitted to testify over objection based upon the so-called dead man's statute. Code Civ. Proc., § 1880, subd. 3. Nevertheless, the foregoing was sufficient to avoid the plea of the statute of limitations. In Mayborne v. Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank, 46 Cal. App. 178, 189, 188 P. 1034, 1039, it was said in a similar case:

> "We think there is no merit in the contention that the claim is barred by the statute of limitations. The services were continuous for a period of 20 years [in this case they were continuous for a period of nine years], and it is a fair inference that it was the intention or expectation that they should be rewarded when terminated. They did not cease until the death of Mr. Dutton. The case falls clearly within the rule announced in Krumb v. Campbell, 102 Cal. 370, 36 P. 664; Hagan v. McNary, 170 Cal. 141, 148 P. 937, L.R.A. 1915E, 562; Furman v. Craine, 18 Cal. App. 41, 121 P. 1007; Clark v. Gruber [74 W.Va. 533, 82 S.E. 338]; Morrissey v. Faucett [28 Wash. 52, 68 P. 352]. They are all to the effect that where the contract is for an indefinite time, and no time for payment is specified, the statute does not begin to run until the services end. Of course, the same rule applies to an express contract and to one implied by law."

In addition to contending that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict and judgment, which contention we have hereinbefore discussed, appellant claims further that the trial court erred in giving and refusing to give instructions, that respondent's counsel was guilty of prejudicial misconduct, and that certain remarks of the trial court were prejudicial and require reversal. We shall treat these contentions in order.

[5–7] Appellant requested and the court refused to give an instruction that the jury must first determine whether there was or there was not an oral agreement entered into between respondent and decedent on or about the time he entered respondent's home, all as alleged in the complaint, and that if they failed to find that such an agreement was entered into then they were to deliberate no further but were to render a verdict for the defendant. In amplification of the foregoing appellant also requested an instruction telling the jury that loose statements or expressions of intention as to what one party expected or intended to do for another party who had rendered a service did not constitute a contract, but that it was necessary to prove further that the minds of the parties had in fact met and that they had agreed upon a definite and a certain contract. It is true that the complaint alleged and the answer denied that the services had been rendered pursuant to an oral contract whereby decedent had promised to leave all his property by will to respondent if she would take him into her home during the remainder of his life and there care for him and furnish to him necessary board, lodging, household services and nursing care. However, this action was not one to enforce an oral contract to make a will nor to recover anything other than reasonable compensation for services rendered over the period of nine years and up to the death of decedent under an implied promise on his part to pay the reasonable value thereof. This is amply shown by considering the pleadings further. It was alleged that notwithstanding the promise to leave his property to her by will the decedent had not kept this promise either in whole or in part; that after his death respondent had filed a claim against the estate of decedent to recover the reasonable value of her services; that the reasonable value of the services she had rendered was the sum of $39,000. In response to a demand for a bill of particulars she broke down the demand as follows: Services for 2 years at $300 per month; for the next 2 years at $325 per month; and for the last 5 years at $400 per month. We think it apparent that the case was pleaded and tried upon the theory that it was a suit for the reasonable value of services rendered requiring only proof sufficient to warrant the inference of an implied agreement to pay. From the continuity of service, from the character of service, from the lack of legal or moral duty to render the service, from the lack of any demand during life or payment made during life and from the statements of the decedent as to his intentions to compensate when he died, a sufficient cause of action was made out. It therefore would have been error for the trial court to tell the jury that the respondent could not recover unless there was an express oral agreement entered into between the respondent and the decedent at the date on which he moved into her home. The action was not upon such a contract, an express contract, but upon an implied contract manifested by conduct. The court instructed the jury that if they believed it could reasonably be inferred from the facts and circumstances of the case that compensation was contemplated by the parties, that respondent had rendered services or furnished support for decedent during the period of time referred to in the complaint and that such services or support were furnished to decedent under conditions and circumstances from which the jury could reasonably infer that respondent expected to be compensated for such services and that the decedent contemplated compensating her therefor, then no further proof of a contract or agreement to compensate was required. We think the court properly instructed the jury and that the instructions refused would have wrongfully narrowed the basis of respondent's right to compensation. Beard v. Melvin, 60 Cal.App.2d 421, 429, 140 P.2d 720; Winder v. Winder, 18 Cal.2d 123, 127, 114 P.2d 347, 144 A.L.R. 935.

[8–10] There is no merit in appellant's contention that the trial court by its rulings and remarks committed serious and reversible error. He asserts that the court improperly refused to permit him to testify as to a conversation he had with respondent's former attorney. He offered to prove that after respondent's claim was filed by her present counsel, her former attorney, who neither filed nor pressed the claim, told appellant he had never heard of any oral agreement between respondent and decedent. The trial court correctly held this to be inadmissible. The attorney in question, who was available, was not called as a witness and if it does not fairly appear that at the time of the alleged conversation with appellant he was not the attorney for nor the agent of respondent, it certainly can be inferred that such was his status. He therefore could not bind her by any admission even if we assume (which is a matter of doubt) that an attorney has general power to bind his client by extrajudicial admissions. See 6 Cal.Jur.2d 438. Appellant asserts that in ruling upon the objection to this offered evidence the trial court remarked that if the status of the attorney had occurred to him previously he would not have permitted appellant to testify, as he had, that during the time the attorney represented respondent he made no claim of an oral agreement, but merely asserted that respondent had not been paid for the care provided decedent during the last two years of his life. Appellant assigns this statement by the court as prejudicial misconduct. We fail to see how he was injured by the court's statement. The testimony was not stricken after the court's remark and remained in evidence for all purposes and appellant made it the specific subject of argument to the jury. Likewise, no prejudice ensued from a hypothetical question asked by the court and from its remarks in connection therewith. A registered nurse had testified as a witness called by respondent as to the prevailing wages of practical nurses during the years involved. On cross-examination appellant's counsel asked several hypothetical questions and the court sustained objections thereto. The court then stated: "Having in mind this person is in the home, taking care of four little children, she's doing work for the patient and for the small children all at the same time in the home, that was the general situation, she had them both to take care of, and she had to remain up, usually, sometimes, to a rather late hour, because she wouldn't go to bed until the patient went to bed, and, further, that if he had fallen down he couldn't get up by himself, he had to be assisted, so she had to be up late at all hours of the night, as late as ten, eleven o'clock at night, sometimes beyond that, but, considering those facts, would you say that her salary should be any less than $8.00 a day?" Appellant objected to the question, but only on the ground that the witness was not qualified and not on the ground that the question assumed facts not in evidence. However, here the appellant contends that the question was improper because it "told the witness and the jury that the matters set forth in the hypothetical question were facts". We think that neither the witness nor the jury so construed the question and in any event to all practical purposes the facts assumed had been proved in the case without contradiction. In overruling appellant's objection to the question the court remarked: "I think it is about as good a one as you asked." We cannot agree with appellant that the court thereby "completely discredited any question that defendant's counsel had asked the witness."

[11, 12] Appellant contends that respondent's counsel acted in bad faith and for the sole purpose of prejudicing appellant in the eyes of the jury by asking him upon cross-examination whether the deceased had not once broken a fountain pen handed him by appellant at a time when appellant was trying to get decedent to sign a will in appellant's favor. No objection was interposed when the question was asked, but appellant claimed this was because his counsel assumed a foundation was being laid for impeachment purposes. Appellant denied that such an event had occurred and thereafter no attempt was made to impeach him. An attorney asking questions of that sort in such a way as to suggest to the jury that the denials produced are false takes upon himself the burden of making it clear that they are asked in good faith and generally if no such showing is made or proffered he stands convicted of bad faith; but here the matter is complicated by the fact that respondent was thereafter called as a witness and was prevented from testifying by the objections of appellant. The true situation is therefore so beclouded we cannot here declare misconduct. Counsel may have had credible information that the suggested facts were true; and if so he was not obliged to anticipate either that appellant would deny the truth or that when respondent became a witness she would be prevented from testifying. A motion for a new trial was made and denied and we feel we must leave the matter as one peculiarly for the trial court to determine in ruling upon that motion.

[13, 14] A further charge of prejudicial misconduct is made as to the following portion of counsel's argument to the jury to which exception was taken: "Now, there are two rather extraordinary circumstances attending this trial. The first one is that the person who, above all, could have told you with absolute verity and with absolute certainty exactly what the facts of this case were, was not permitted to testify concerning a fact or matter which occurred during the lifetime of this decedent. I do not wish you to feel that I criticize the harshness of the law that resulted in that inability. That is the law. But it could have been waived, and it is fit and proper that you should have in mind the fact that it could have been waived, but that they did not see fit to waive it." That argument should not have been made. Jurors are sworn to uphold the law and attorneys are guilty of misconduct when they suggest any other course of conduct; but we cannot reverse for this misconduct. The trial court promptly instructed the jury to disregard the matter and not to consider any question of waiver, and in view of that admonition we cannot say that the jury did not obey it rather than follow the wrongful course of conduct suggested by counsel. We do not think that the rights of the defendant before the jury were prejudiced. Here again the court denied a motion for new trial and we think that its ruling upon this matter must here be upheld.

ESTATE of James E. HARVEY, Deceased.

Annie G. HARVEY, Contestant-Appellant,

v.

Jesse E. HARVEY and Jesse M. Harvey, Proponents-Respondents.

Civ. 21603.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

July 24, 1956.

Will contest proceeding. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Clarence M. Hanson, J., entered judgment and order admitting will to probate and denying contestant's petition for letters of administration, dismissing her contest, and appointing testator's brothers as his executors, and contestant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that, where there was substantial conflict in the evidence, Superior Court's finding that the will had been executed by decedent on date it bore could not be disturbed by the District Court of Appeal.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⚿989

Reviewing court cannot weigh the evidence to determine where the preponderance lies, but duty of such court begins and ends with a determination of whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or not, which supports the finding of fact.

2. Appeal and Error 🔑996

Where two or more inferences reasonably can be deduced from the evidence, reviewing court cannot substitute its own inferences for those of the trial court.

3. Wills 🔑289

Attestation clause, with proof of signatures of testator and the two attesting witnesses, raised a presumption of due execution, and forgetfulness of one of the attesting witnesses as to testator's signature of will could not destroy other proof which consisted of a testimony of other attesting witness and third party present at execution of will that testator had signed the will.

4. Appeal and Error 🔑1012(1)

A reviewing court will not uphold a judgment or verdict which is based upon evidence which is inherently improbable, but testimony which merely discloses unusual circumstances does not come within such category.

5. Appeal and Error 🔑1010(1), 1011(1)

To warrant reviewing court's rejection of statements given by a witness, who was believed by a trial court, there must exist either a physical impossibility that they are true or their falsity must be apparent without resorting to inferences or deductions, and conflicts and even testimony which is subject to justifiable suspicion do not justify reversal of a judgment.

6. Appeal and Error 🔑994(2, 3)

It is the exclusive province of the trial judge or jury to determine credibility of a witness and truth or falsity of facts upon which such a determination depends.

7. Wills 🔑400

Where, in will contest proceeding, there was substantial conflict in the evidence, Superior Court's finding that the will had been executed by decedent on date it bore could not be disturbed by the District Court of Appeal.

8. Wills 🔑322

Where, in will contest proceeding, contestant claimed that signature on will was a forgery, refusal to reopen case, upon motion for new trial, for receipt of cumulative evidence by handwriting expert that decedent did not write the signature on the will but that will had been written by one of the proponents was not error, in absence of showing of diligence.

Littlejohn & Callister and Roy Littlejohn, Los Angeles, for appellant.

William F. Peters, Los Angeles, for respondents.

ASHBURN, Justice.

Appeal by decedent's widow from judgment and order admitting to probate his will of July 24, 1950, denying her petition for letters of administration, dismissing her contest and appointing as executors testator's brother, Jesse E. Harvey (Jesse, Sr.) and his nephew, Jesse M. Harvey (Jesse, Jr.).

Though numerous grounds of contest were alleged, no evidence of substantiality was introduced in support of any of them except the claim that the will was not executed by testator, not actually signed by him. The case was tried without a jury and the trial court found that the will was duly executed by the testator on the date it bears. Appellant's counsel initially assert in their opening brief that the evidence conclusively establishes the contrary, but before the argument has proceeded far it degenerates into one of the incidence of the preponderance of the evidence. Under the impact of respondents' arguments the reply brief claims no more than a preponderance in favor of contestant.

[1, 2] The appellate courts are required to reiterate from day to day, and with unremitting monotony, these fundamental principles of review: That the appellate court cannot weigh the evidence to determine where the preponderance lies; that its duty begins and ends with a determination of whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which supports the finding of fact; and that when two or more inferences reasonably can be deduced from the evidence the reviewing court cannot substitute its own inferences for those of the trial court. See Primm v. Primm, 46 Cal.2d 690, 299 P.2d 231. The evidence thus construed presents the following situation.

The will, executed on July 24, 1950, left the family home and furnishings to the wife, provided for a family allowance for her during probate, and placed the remainder of the estate in a trust which endures for ten years from testator's death until one of his two daughters becomes twenty-five years old. This latter event will occur about six years after testator's death, which was on December 13, 1954. Income from the trust goes one-fourth to the wife, one-fourth to each of testator's two daughters, and one-fourth to his sister, Ruby Foulks. In the event of the death of any beneficiary her share goes to the survivors. Principal is to be distributed upon termination of the trust in the same manner as the income, namely, one-fourth to the wife and to each of the other beneficiaries. The will also includes a distress clause in favor of the wife. The executors are Jesse, Sr. and Jesse, Jr., neither of whom takes anything under the will except reasonable compensation for his services.

Decedent was one of three brothers who operated a concern engaged in the rock and gravel business under the name of Harvey Bros. One brother, Frank, predeceased testator, dying in 1946. About four days before the date of the will decedent asked his nephew, Jesse, Jr., who was office manager of the plant of Harvey Bros., to have the firm's attorney draw a new will for him; he told Jesse what he desired it to contain, and asked him to write it down; Jesse did so and read his notes back to his uncle. He then telephoned the lawyer, instructed him to draw the will and read his notes "as to what he wishes in the new will." Attorney Bridges took the information and prepared the will. In about two days Jesse received it at the attorney's office and took it to the plant. Testator soon called and asked Jesse if he had the new will. Being assured of that, he came to the plant on July 24th, asked to see the will and the notes which Jesse previously had made. He read the will and the notes for a long period of time, said he wanted to sign the will and asked Jesse to get some witnesses. The latter went next door to the Universal Cast-Iron Co., asked Mr. Russell E. Persion and Mr. Leslie M. Percey to act in that capacity. They soon arrived at the Harvey Bros. plant and were taken into Jesse, Jr.'s office where testator was seated. The door was closed, testator produced the will and asked Persion and Percey if they were there to witness the signing of his will. They replied in the affirmative and Jesse, Jr. testified that testator then dated and signed the will and each of the witnesses also signed it. All this was done in the presence of Jesse. He produced his original notes in court. The original will was shown him and he identified it as the one signed by decedent and the two witnesses on that day, July 24, 1950. He knew his uncle's signature, having seen it innumerable times, and testified that he saw it affixed to the will on the occasion in question.

The witness' father, Jesse, Sr., had been in the adjoining office during the execution of the will. Testator having taken the will into his own possession, came into the room where Jesse, Sr. was, told him that he had just signed his will and made him and his son executors, and asked him to read it over to see if he would accept the appointment. He did read it and said he would accept. The will was handed back to the testator who headed toward the room where the office safe was located. When he died, four years later, it was found in that safe to which he had had access during all that period. Testator was in the habit of keeping insurance papers and similar documents in that repository. Indeed, an earlier will of June 3, 1925, was also found in that safe.

[3] Attesting witness Persion recalled the occasion of execution of the will, although he was not certain of the date. He testified that Mr. James Harvey, the testator, exhibited the last page of the document, said it was his will, that he, Persion, saw testator sign the will, and that he and Mr. Percey did likewise. He also identified the signatures of himself and of Percey on the document. Mr. Percey recalled Jesse, Jr. having asked them to come over to the Harvey Bros. plant. He identified his own signature on the will but did not recall seeing testator or Persion sign. In May, 1954, this witness had suffered a coronary thrombosis, which inferentially impaired his memory. Of course the attestation clause with proof of the three signatures raised a presumption of due execution. In re Estate of Morey, 75 Cal.App.2d 628, 634, 171 P.2d 131. And the forgetfulness of one of the attesting witnesses could not destroy the other proof. (26 Cal.Jur. § 125, p. 791.)

[4–6] To disprove the execution of the will contestant relied wholly upon circumstantial evidence. It was to the effect that decedent could not have made the will on the day of its date because he was desperately ill at home; that on that day he was in fact delirious and incapable of transacting any business. Dr. Price, his physician, testified that he was delirious. Contestant said that he was out of his mind and unconscious and that he was delirious and incoherent for a solid week. Reverend Miller said he was in a stupor and insane. Louis Jackson said that he was dazed and wandering and did not recognize the witness. Blanche Dodson said he was insane. The showing is persuasive but it rises no higher than a substantial conflict in the evidence. "Although an appellate court will not uphold a judgment or verdict based upon evidence inherently improbable, testimony which merely discloses unusual circumstances does not come within that category. Kidroski v. Anderson, 39 Cal.App.2d 602, 605, 103 P.2d 1000. To warrant the rejection of the statements given by a witness who has been believed by a trial court, there must exist either a physical impossibility that they are true, or their falsity must be apparent without resorting to inferences or deductions. [Citing cases.] Conflicts and even testimony which is subject to justifiable suspicion do not justify the reversal of a judgment, for it is the exclusive province of a trial judge or jury to determine the credibility of a witness and the truth or falsity of the facts upon which a determination depends. Hicks v. Ocean Shore Railroad, Inc., 18 Cal.2d 773, 781, 117 P.2d 850." People v. Huston, 21 Cal.2d 690, 693, 134 P.2d 758, 759.

[7] A significant feature of contestant's case is that, although she was claiming throughout that the signature on the will was not that of her husband and hence was a forgery, she called no handwriting expert until after she had lost the case. Indeed she did not undertake to testify from the will itself that the signature was not genuine, and she had been married to decedent for many years. The daughter, Anita Fisher, was called as a witness to substantiate certain circumstantial items of evidence. She testified on cross-examination that she knew her father's signature, but she was not asked whether the signature on the will was genuine. Alice B. Harvey, widow of Frank, was office secretary at Harvey Bros. for many years and presumptively familiar with decedent's signature. She was a witness for contestant but was not asked whether the signature on the will was genuine. No witness testified that the signature on that document was not that of the testator. The finding that the will was executed by decedent on the date it bears cannot be disturbed by this court.

[8] Appellant claims error in denial of her motion for new trial. In support of same she filed the affidavit of a handwriting expert, Mr. A. Henry Silver, who therein expressed the opinion that decedent did not write the signature on the will but that Jesse E. Harvey had written it. No explanation of any kind was given respecting contestant's failure to call this witness or other experts at the trial. The Silver testimony, if received, would be merely a cumulative addition to the circumstantial evidence which had been directed toward the desired conclusion of forgery. In the absence of a showing of diligence there was no error in refusing to reopen the case for the receipt of such cumulative evidence. In re Estate of Jepson, 178 Cal. 257, 172 P. 1107; In re Estate of Clark, 93 Cal.App.2d 110, 118, 208 P.2d 737. No other claim of error is advanced with respect to denial of the motion.

Judgment and order affirmed.

PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.
James Roscoe HAMILTON, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 1115.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.
July 20, 1956.
Hearing Denied Aug. 16, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of receiving stolen goods. The Superior Court, San Bernardino County, Martin J. Coughlin, J., rendered judgment and denied motion for new trial, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held, inter alia, that where it appeared that alleged thieves' testimony contained no direct admissions, and where court instructed jury that testimony of an accomplice should be viewed with distrust, any error in trial court's refusal to instruct that testimony of any witness purporting to relate to an oral admission of defendant should be viewed with caution was not reversibly erroneous.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Criminal Law 🔑1173(2)

In prosecution for receiving stolen goods, wherein it appeared that alleged thieves' testimony contained no direct admissions, and wherein court instructed jury that testimony of an accomplice should be viewed with distrust, any error in trial court's refusal to instruct that testimony of any witness purporting to relate to an oral admission of defendant should be viewed with caution was not reversibly erroneous. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 496.

2. Receiving Stolen Goods 🔑9(2)

In prosecution for receiving stolen goods, instruction to effect that guilty knowledge may be proved by evidence from which this element may be inferred was not subject to claimed objection of instructing that actual and positive knowledge of stolen character of goods is unnecessary. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 496.

3. Criminal Law 🔑507(5)

In absence of a showing of a prearranged plan whereby one party was to steal and another to buy, alleged thieves were not accomplices of an alleged receiver of stolen goods. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1111.

4. Criminal Law 🔑742(2)

In prosecution for receiving stolen goods, evidence as to whether alleged thieves and another person were accomplices of defendant, for purpose of weighing their testimony, presented fact question for jury.

5. Criminal Law 🔑1169(5)

In prosecution for receiving stolen goods, no prejudice appeared from trial court's action in first permitting defendant to be questioned as to whether he had held a conversation with an attorney, and then ordering the answers stricken and instructing jury not to consider any stricken evidence.

6. Criminal Law ⚷706
Witnesses ⚷221

In criminal case, wherein it was not known in advance whether defendant would waive the attorney-client privilege, prosecutor's action in questioning defendant's attorney with respect to conversation with defendant was not prejudicial misconduct, and answer was admissible where no objection on ground of privilege was made. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½.

7. Witnesses ⚷331½

In prosecution for receiving stolen goods, wherein defendant stated that named person had given him no money to give to thieves, thief's testimony as to whether he had had a certain conversation with the named person relative to money was admissible for impeachment purposes.

8. Receiving Stolen Goods ⚷9(2)

In prosecution for receiving stolen goods, evidence as to whether defendant had been found in possession of stolen goods warranted instruction with respect to the possession of stolen property.

9. Criminal Law ⚷1174(1)

In criminal case, no possible prejudice resulted from trial court's failure to admonish jury when recess was taken immediately after jury was selected and sworn. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1122.

Vernon R. Hamilton, Ontario, Peter H. Stevens, South Gate, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., James L. Mamakos, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

The defendant was charged in Count I of an information with receiving stolen property on or about December 11, 1954, in violation of section 496 of the Penal Code. In Count II he was charged with the same crime, alleged to have been committed on or about December 15, 1954. A jury found him guilty on both counts and he was sentenced to imprisonment on each count, the two sentences to run concurrently. He has appealed from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The evidence discloses the following facts. On the night of December 8, 1954, one Pilcher and one Freeman broke into a market in Upland and stole some adding machines and cash registers. Later that night they entered an oil station in Ontario and stole an adding machine and a battery. These articles were then stored in a shack at a certain address in Ontario. On December 10, 1954, Freeman and Pilcher broke into a television store in Ontario and stole a television set, some radios, and a cash register. These articles were also stored in the same shack in Ontario.

A day or two later, the defendant first met Pilcher and Freeman at a house in front of the shack where these articles were stored. Pilcher or Freeman asked the defendant whether he wanted to buy "this" property, and the defendant said "Yes". After examining the property in the shack the defendant offered $200 "for the stuff", which was accepted. It was agreed the property was to be taken up to the foothills where the defendant was to come and receive it. Later that evening the defendant met Pilcher and Freeman in the foothills and the property was taken out of their car and loaded into defendant's pickup truck, and the purchase price was paid.

With respect to Count II, the evidence shows that about 3:00 A.M. on December 15, 1954, Pilcher and Freeman broke into a furniture store in Ontario and took a television set, some radios, and some electric drills. Prior to breaking into this furniture store Pilcher and Freeman had visited that store and had a salesman show them television sets and radios in order to ascertain which were the best sets. After thus "casing" this store Pilcher and Freeman asked the defendant what articles he wished to buy, and he replied that he wanted radios, televisions and electric tools. The articles taken from the furniture store were taken to "the mountains" and hid in the brush. Three days later Freeman took some of these articles, including a television set, a typewriter and a radio to the defendant's house and asked the defendant if he wanted to buy it. The defendant looked at the articles and bought them for $75. On December 30, 1954, two officers went to the defendant's home and the defendant's uncle, who had been left in charge, gave them permission to enter. The officers found there a red plastic Zenith radio which Pilcher later identified as being the same type as seven or eight such radios which they had stolen from the furniture store. When an officer asked the defendant on January 5, whether he had received stolen property he stated that he did not wish to make any statement until he had seen his attorney. When told that the officers had recovered a stolen radio from his home and asked if he would be willing to state how he came into possession of that radio the defendant said "No". When told that the officers had a strand of hair from one of the stolen articles the defendant declined to let the officer take a hair from his head for the purpose of comparison.

The defendant took the stand and testified that Pilcher approached him about buying this property but that he had stated he could not use it. He denied that he had gone into the foothills to meet Pilcher or Freeman; denied that he had received any stolen property or agreed to buy any property from either of these men; denied that he had had any stolen property in his possession; stated that he had not at any time knowingly received any stolen property from either Freeman or Pilcher; and stated that on December 16 he purchased the radio which was found in his home for $10 from a stranger in the parking lot of a store in Ontario.

[1] The appellant first contends that the court erred in failing to instruct the jury, on its own motion, that the testimony of any witness purporting to relate an oral admission of the defendant should be viewed with caution. It is argued that the testimony of the persons who stole this property contains such admissions. In the evidence pointed out these witnesses stated with reference to the sale of the property to the defendant that the defendant said he would buy it, that he said he would give $200 for it, that he stated what articles he wanted to buy, and that in between the two deals when one of these witnesses asked whether an adding machine in defendant's house was the one the witness had sold him the witness replied that it was. This was a part of the evidence in connection with the sale of the property and no admissions appear in the sense that the defendant later made statements to outside parties which tended to admit his guilt. Moreover, the court did instruct the jury that the testimony of an accomplice should be viewed with distrust. Any error appearing in this connection cannot be held, under the facts of this case, to have been sufficiently prejudicial to justify a reversal. People v. Koenig, 29 Cal.2d 87, 173 P.2d 1.

[2] It is next contended that the court erred in instructing the jury that actual and positive knowledge of the stolen character of goods is unnecessary. It is argued that this instruction was taken from People v. Juehling, 10 Cal.App.2d 527, 52 P.2d 520, but was removed from the context and had the effect of confusing the requirement of knowledge and the basis upon which knowledge may be found. The instruction reads as follows:

> "The prosecution has the burden of proving guilty knowledge of the recipient of stolen property, but actual and positive knowledge is unnecessary and the requirement as to guilty knowledge may be met by evidence from which the element of guilty knowledge properly may be inferred."

The court also instructed the jury that "Every person who receives any property which has been stolen, knowing the same to have been so stolen, is guilty of a felony," and "If a defendant received property which had been stolen, then in determining whether or not at the time he received such property from the owner, he had knowledge the property had been stolen, you may consider all the facts in evidence and every reasonable inference that may be drawn from such facts." It clearly appears that in the portion of the instruction complained of the court was merely differentiating between direct evidence and inferences from other circumstances. The jury was sufficiently instructed in this regard and no prejudice appears.

[3] It is contended that the court erred in failing to instruct the jury that the witnesses Pilcher and Freeman were accomplices of the defendant, as a matter of law, with respect to Count I of the information. It is argued that these witnesses aided and abetted the commission of this offense and were accomplices as defined in Penal Code Section 1111. While it is admitted that there are "innumerable authorities" stating that the thief is not the accomplice of the receiver it is argued that such cases fail to give proper consideration to the 1915 amendment to Section 1111, and that the entire question should now be reexamined. It is sufficiently settled that the thief and the receiver of stolen property are guilty of separate and distinct offenses, and are not accomplices of each other except where there is a prearranged plan whereby one is to steal and the other is to buy. People v. Raven, 44 Cal.2d 523, 282 P.2d 866.

[4] It is next contended that the court erred in failing to instruct the jury that Pilcher and Freeman were accomplices of the defendant, as a matter of law, with respect to the offense alleged in Count II. Reliance is placed on Pilcher's testimony that after he and Freeman went to the furniture store on the evening of December 14, and before they broke into the furniture store, they asked the defendant what they could sell to him and he replied that he would buy radios, television sets and electric tools. However, Freeman testified that he heard this conversation and nothing was said that he could specify. He also testified that after this robbery they took some of the property taken to the defendant and asked him if he wanted to buy it. The evidence was sufficient to justify the court in leaving the question as to whether these parties were accomplices to the jury, as a matter of fact. In any event, the testimony of Pilcher and Freeman was sufficiently corroborated by defendant's refusal to answer when asked by an officer if he did receive any stolen property, and his saying that he would make no statement until he had seen his lawyer; by the defendant's testimony that Holmes, a man working with Pilcher and Freeman, had left money in an envelope on top of defendant's television set; by defendant's refusal to let the officer remove a strand of hair for comparison, saying he wanted to see his attorney first; by the defendant's refusal, when first asked by the officer, to tell how he came into possession of the radio found in his home; by his later unsatisfactory claim that he had bought it from a stranger the day after it was stolen, People v. Wayne, 41 Cal.2d 814, 264 P.2d 547; and by his possession of a radio itself, and defendant's entire conduct under the circumstances. People v. Coakley, 108 Cal.App.2d 223, 238 P.2d 633; People v. MacEwing, 45 Cal.2d 218, 288 P.2d 257. What has already been said sufficiently disposes of a further contention that the witness Holmes was an accomplice as a matter of law. The question as to whether these witnesses were accomplices was left to the jury, under proper instructions.

It is next contended that the court erred in failing to give an instruction, as requested, to the effect that a conviction may not be had upon the testimony of an accomplice unless it is corroborated by other evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, defining an accomplice, and stating that whether or not any witness was an accomplice was for the jury to determine from all of the testimony and all of the circumstances. The court gave another instruction containing the exact language of the refused instruction in its entirety, to which was added a paragraph telling the jury that if it should find that the witnesses were operating under a preconceived plan with the defendant to commit a burglary and have the defendant receive the property stolen in such burglary, then such witnesses are accomplices and must be corroborated.

[5] It is next contended that the court erred in permitting the district attorney to question the defendant as to a conversation between the defendant and an attorney consulted by him. When a question was asked of the defendant as to such a conversation an objection was sustained. Later, the court permitted the district attorney to ask whether a certain conversation with this attorney had not been had. The defendant denied that he had had such a conversation. Still later, the court reversed his ruling, sustained the objection, and ordered the answer stricken on the ground that the matter was privileged. The court thereafter instructed the jury not to consider any evidence which had been stricken. There is no merit to the contention now made that the court did not "specifically admonish the jury" with regard to this particular testimony, and no prejudice appears.

[6] It is next contended that the court erred in overruling an objection to a conversation between a witness and law enforcement officers. This witness was an attorney who had been consulted by the defendant but who did not represent him at the trial. It was brought out that this witness had called the officers on December 31 asking if the defendant was wanted, and then asking that the warrant not be served until after New Year's day. In this connection it is also contended that the district attorney committed prejudicial misconduct in thus attempting to bring out privileged communications. The question was objected to on the ground that it was hearsay and not on the ground of privilege. No prejudicial misconduct appears since it could not be known in advance whether or not the privilege would be claimed or waived. Under the circumstances, it cannot be held that reversible error appears. Sec. 4½, Art. VI of the Const.

[7] It is next contended that the court erred in overruling an objection to a question asked of the witness Freeman as to whether he had at a certain time had a conversation with Holmes relative to money. This question was asked in rebuttal for the purpose of rebutting the defendant's testimony that he had not been given any money by Holmes to give to Freeman. Holmes had previously testified that he gave defendant money for that purpose, and Freeman had testified that the defendant gave him the money. The court was not asked to instruct the jury that the evidence was received for the limited purpose of impeachment. The evidence was admissible for that purpose and no reversible prejudice appears.

[8] It is next contended that the court erred in giving an instruction with respect to the possession of stolen property, it being argued that this instruction implied that such property was found in the defendant's possession when no such evidence had been received. There was evidence that a radio was found in the defendant's house which was of the same type as a number of radios stolen from the furniture store. The defendant admitted that this radio was in his possession, and gave an explanation of how he acquired it which could hardly be considered satisfactory. Whether or not this radio was one of those taken from the furniture store, and whether the defendant's explanation of how it came into his possession was to be believed were questions of fact for the jury. The instruction was properly given under the circumstances.

[9] Finally, it is contended that the court erred in failing to admonish the jury, as required by section 1122 of the Penal Code, on taking a recess at 11:02 A.M. on the first day of the trial. The clerk's transcript discloses that this recess was taken immediately after the jury had been selected and sworn. No evidence had been received and no possible prejudice could have resulted.

The evidence of the defendant's guilt was strong, and we are far from convinced that any miscarriage of justice has occurred or that any errors which may appear could have affected the result.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

v.

Paul F. WINN, Defendant and Cross-Complainant, Respondent and Appellant.

Civ. 16772.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

July 17, 1956.

Divorce action. The Superior Court, Contra Costa County, Harold Jacoby, J., entered an interlocutory decree in favor of wife, and she appealed from certain of the custody, alimony and support awards, and the allowance of attorney's fees and costs. Husband cross appealed from an award to wife of certain of his accounts receivable. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held, inter alia, that an award of $50 per month for the support of two boys where their father was earning approximately $20,000 per year net was unsupportable, and would be reversed with directions to the trial judge to make an award commensurate with the welfare of the children of a father whose net earnings were $20,000 per year.

Partly reversed with directions and partly affirmed as amended.

1. Divorce 🔑312.7

Where trial court, in divorce proceeding orally recited that joint custody of parties' minor children would be awarded to the parties but with physical custody to remain with wife, and in its formal order stated merely that the minor children of the parties would be awarded jointly to the parties, decree would be amended so as to provide that physical custody would remain in the wife in accordance with oral recital.

2. Divorce 🔑298(1)

In divorce proceeding, award of custody to both parties with physical custody to remain in wife was not unreasonable.

3. Divorce 🔑296, 298(1)

A court's main concern in making a custody award in a divorce proceeding is the best interest of the children and the court has a wide discretion in this matter.

4. Divorce 🔑235

In the matter of alimony to divorced wife, a trial court has a wide discretion as to whether to make a permanent award or one for a limited period.

5. Divorce 🔑240(2)

In divorce proceeding, where wife was a trained nurse and husband was earning approximately $20,000 per year, award of alimony of $375 per month to wife for 18 months was not unreasonable.

6. Divorce 🔑308, 312.7

Award of $50 per month for the support of two boys where their divorced father was earning approximately $20,000 per year net was unsupportable, and would be reversed with directions to make an award commensurate with the welfare of children of a father whose net earnings were $20,000 per year.

7. Divorce 🔑306

In a divorce proceeding, a trial court must consider, in making an award for support of minor children, the welfare of the children above all else, considering their station in life and the ability of their father to pay.

8. Divorce ⚷223

In divorce proceeding, award of $200 to wife's attorneys was not an abuse of discretion in view of fact that court was entitled in setting such fees to consider fees paid to wife's previous attorneys, and the ability of the wife to pay a portion of her present attorney's fees.

9. Husband and Wife ⚷259

Accounts receivable of a practicing physician are "community property", being the earnings of a husband during marriage. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 164.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Community Property".

10. Divorce ⚷249(2)

When during a divorce proceeding it was called to trial court's attention that a substantial item of property, clearly community property, had been overlooked in wife's stipulation with husband for division of their community property, it was within sound discretion of trial court to relieve wife of the stipulation to that extent and to reopen the case for the disposition of such item.

11. Divorce ⚷252

Where trial court, in a divorce proceeding could have awarded all of husband's accounts receivable to wife, husband could not complain that court did not deduct community debts which he was ordered to pay from such item or that an award of 50% of such accounts receivable was otherwise inequitable.

C. Dan Lange, Clyde R. Rockwell, San Francisco, for appellant.

Bray, Baldwin & Ogden, Martinez, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice.

Plaintiff Frances R. Winn was awarded an interlocutory decree of divorce. She appeals from the following portions of the judgment: an award of joint custody of the two minor children; an award of $50 per month as child support for both minor children; an order terminating all alimony payments after 18 months; and an award of $200 for attorneys' fees for her present attorneys, plus the sum of $50 for costs advanced. Defendant Paul F. Winn appeals from the portion of the judgment awarding plaintiff 50 percent of the accounts receivable of his medical practice as of July 7, 1954, as collected.

The parties were married in Arizona in 1933. Plaintiff filed this action for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty in August of 1953. Defendant filed a cross-complaint for divorce, also on the ground of extreme cruelty. The action was brought to trial in July of 1954. At that time it was stipulated that the minor children of the parties, twin boys then of the age of eight and one-half years, should be allowed to remain in a private school in Monrovia, California, for a period of at least a year from the coming fall semester. Defendant agreed to pay the tuition for the boys on condition that they remain in this school. The parties further stipulated as to the manner in which certain community property should be divided between them.

At the close of the testimony the court orally announced its decision granting plaintiff an interlocutory decree of divorce on the ground of defendant's extreme cruelty. Custody of the children to be awarded to both parties with the provision that they should remain in the private school in Monrovia for a period of two years. Attorneys for both parties stated that the division of the community property had already been agreed upon. Plaintiff's attorneys were granted $250 for additional attorneys' fees. Plaintiff was to receive $50 per month for the support and maintenance of the children for other things besides their tuition and the sum of $375 per month for a period of eighteen months as alimony. Findings were waived by both parties.

On August 24, 1954, plaintiff substituted her present attorneys in place of those who had previously represented her. The substituted attorneys filed a Motion to Vacate Waiver of Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law and for Allowance of Attorney's Fees and Costs. They also filed a Motion to Set Aside Submission and to Reopen Cause. The motion to reopen was granted for the limited purpose of receiving evidence on the issue of the accounts receivable of the defendant.

A hearing for the purpose of receiving evidence on the question of defendant's accounts receivable from his medical practice was held on January 10, 1955. At that time the court decided to give plaintiff 50 percent of these accounts as of July 7, 1954, as and when collected by defendant. An order was also made in plaintiff's favor for an additional $200 attorneys' fees and $50 costs for her present attorneys.

Defendant Paul F. Winn sought to have plaintiff held in contempt of court because of her action in removing the minor children from the private school where they had been placed by order of the court. He filed a Motion in re Contempt for this purpose on December 15, 1954. This motion was also argued on January 10, 1955. It appeared that one of the children had become seriously ill while in the private school and plaintiff removed both children from that school so that she might care for them. For this purpose she rented a house in Arcadia, California, and sent both of the children to the public school there. The trial judge said that plaintiff technically had no right to take the children out of the private school but he seemed inclined to believe that under the circumstances she was compelled to act as she did and he declined to hold her in contempt for her act. The court further determined to give the actual physical custody of the children to plaintiff retaining joint legal custody in both parties and he refused to increase the previously allowed $50 per month for their support. The provisions of his final order were carried into the interlocutory decree.

The Wife's Appeal.

The interlocutory decree contains the following provisions with regard to the custody of the children:

> "The Court being fully advised in the premises * * * modified its announcement with respect to the custody of * * * the minor children * * *, directing that joint custody of said minor children be awarded to the parties hereto with physical custody to remain with the plaintiff and cross-defendant until further order of the Court * * * [this by way of recital.]
> "It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that the care, custody and control of * * * the minor children of the parties hereto be awarded jointly to the parties hereto * * * [this by formal order.]
> "It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that the defendant shall pay to the plaintiff the sum of $50.00 each month * * * as and for the care, support and maintenance of * * * the minor children * * * until they shall attain the age of twenty-one (21) years or until further order of Court * * *"

[1–3] It will thus be seen that the decree formally gives joint custody (without, except by recital, giving actual physical custody to the mother) and at the same time orders support payments made to the mother until age 21 or the further order of the court, thus indicating that the court intended the mother to have physical custody. The judge announced that he intended to leave the children where they were, and if that did not work out the matter could later be brought before the court for possible modification. As we read the record it was the intention of the trial judge to continue actual physical custody in the mother and the unequivocal order for continued support payments to the mother in the decree itself bears this out. To avoid any possible ambiguity in this respect the decree is ordered amended to add the words "with physical custody to remain in the plaintiff" to the paragraph of the decree awarding joint custody of the minor children to the parties. As so amended, to carry out the expressed intention of the trial court, we cannot regard the custody award as unreasonable. The court's main concern in making a custody award is the best interest of the children and the court has a wide discretion in this matter. Prouty v. Prouty, 16 Cal.2d 190, 105 P.2d 295.

[4, 5] The court awarded the plaintiff as alimony $375 per month for eighteen months. In the matter of alimony, whether to make a permanent award or one for a limited period, the court has a wide discretion. Simpson v. Simpson, 134 Cal.App.2d 219, 285 P.2d 313; Newbauer v. Newbauer, 95 Cal.App.2d 36, 212 P.2d 240. In the latter case the court said in 95 Cal.App. at page 40, 212 P.2d at page 243: "That the members of this court might have been more liberal is not the test. The discretion was the trial judge's, not ours; and we can only interfere if we find that under all the evidence, viewed most favorably in support of the trial court's action, no judge could reasonably have made the order that he did." The plaintiff is a trained nurse and the trial court orally announced the conclusion that after a reasonable adjustment period she could resume this occupation. We cannot find that no judge could reasonably have made the alimony order here in question.

[6, 7] The award of only $50 per month for the support of two boys, where the father is earning approximately $20,000 per year net to him, in our view cannot be supported. The trial court must consider in making such an award the welfare of the children above all else, considering their station in life and the ability of the father to pay. Twenty-five dollars each per month for the support of two boys whose father earns $20,000 shocks the conscience. No self-respecting and considerate father left to his own discretion, with such an income, would limit his contribution to the support of his children to $25 per month each. The trial judge saw fit to leave the children in the physical custody of the mother. At the same time he determined to continue in effect an order which originally was intended merely for clothing and incidentals while the father was paying $200 per month for the support of each boy in a boarding school. This was an obvious and clear abuse of discretion. The welfare of the boys demands more of a father with such an income. In Gudelj v. Gudelj, 41 Cal.2d 202, 259 P.2d 656, 661, an award of $50 per month for the support of one child was affirmed but the court characterized the award as "not overly generous." The father in the Gudelj case was not earning anything like $20,000 per year and there is nothing in the Gudelj case to support the niggardly award of $25 per child under the circumstances of this case. This portion of the decree will be reversed with directions to the trial judge to make an award commensurate with the welfare of the children of a defendant whose net earnings are $20,000 per year, such award to date from January 11, 1955, the date of the interlocutory decree.

[8] The court awarded plaintiff's present attorneys $200 counsel fees and $50 for costs advanced. The court had previously allowed plaintiff's former attorneys $175 on account on November 30, 1953, and in the interlocutory decree ordered an additional fee of $250 paid to said attorneys. Thus the total allowed for attorneys' fees was $625. Plaintiff's present counsel succeeded in securing for her one-half of accounts receivable which, if collected, will net her over $8000. Two hundred dollars for the services performed by these attorneys is not a generous allowance, but the court was entitled to consider the aggregate fees allowed to two sets of attorneys and also the ability of the wife to pay a portion of her present attorneys' fees. He might well consider her ability to pay something to her attorneys out of the $8000 to be collected particularly in view of the fact that defendant was ordered to pay all community debts. (See 16 Cal.Jur.2d, Divorce and Separation, §§ 194–197, pp. 484–490.) On the whole circumstances of the case we cannot hold that the judge abused his discretion in this particular.

The Husband's Appeal.

[9] Defendant husband appeals only from that part of the interlocutory decree which awards the wife 50 percent of the accounts receiveable from his practice as of July 7, 1954, as collected. At the close of the original hearing the parties stipulated to the division of the community property. These accounts receivable, although clearly community property (the earnings of the husband during marriage, Civ.Code, § 164), were not mentioned in the pleadings or the stipulation of the parties. The court announced its order for judgment, including the division of the property pursuant to the stipulation. Before the interlocutory decree was signed the wife procured new counsel who moved to reopen the trial for several purposes, including the award of these uncollected accounts as community property. The court granted the motion as to the accounts receivable only.

Appellant husband contends that the wife was bound by her stipulation which he claims amounted in effect to a property settlement agreement. The stipulation was not in any sense a formal property settlement agreement.

The rule covering the power of a court to set aside stipulations, supported by extensive citation of authority, is thus stated in 23 Cal.Jur., Stipulations, section 14, pages 829–830: "The rule is firmly established that a court may, in the exercise of its sound discretion, set aside stipulations entered into through inadvertence, excusable neglect, or mistake, either of fact, or of law. And the court's action in this regard will be interfered with upon appeal only upon a clear showing of an abuse of discretion."

[10] When it was called to the trial court's attention that a substantial item which was clearly community property had been overlooked by plaintiff's counsel in their stipulation it was within the sound discretion of the trial court to relieve plaintiff of the stipulation to this extent and to reopen the case for the disposition of this item.

[11] Since the court could have awarded all of this property to plaintiff, Barham v. Barham, 33 Cal.2d 416, 431, 202 P.2d 289, appellant husband cannot complain that the court did not deduct the community debts (which the husband was ordered to pay) or that the award of 50 percent was otherwise inequitable.

The interlocutory decree is ordered amended in the particular hereinabove mentioned with respect to the physical custody of the children, the award of $50 per month for the support of the children is reversed with directions to the trial court to make an adequate allowance for the support of the children, such award to date from January 11, 1955, and the decree as amended is otherwise affirmed, the plaintiff to have her costs on both appeals.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.
Frank BOMPENSIERO, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 1046.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.
June 28, 1956.
Rehearing Denied July 9, 1956.
Hearing Denied July 24, 1956.

Defendant was by a judgment of the Superior Court, San Diego County, John A. Hewicker, J., convicted of conspiracy to commit the crime of asking or receiving bribes by a public officer and he appealed from such judgment and from an order denying his motion for new trial. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held, inter alia, that the evidence sustained conviction on counts of indictment charging the crime of asking, receiving and agreeing to receive a bribe by a public officer and also of conspiracy to commit a crime of asking or receiving bribes on behalf of a public officer.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Accused's verified statement alleging bias and prejudice on part of trial judge was properly stricken where on prior appeal Supreme Court had held that trial judge was not in error in striking statement on ground that remarks attributed to trial court showed prejudice and subsequent statement set forth same remarks of judge and in addition set forth certain statements and remarks made at time accused's counsel was objecting to jurisdiction of court to continue the trial while prohibition proceedings were being conducted in the appellate court. 2. Judges ⚷51(3)

Statements of disqualification of a judge are insufficient as a matter of law unless facts constituting alleged disqualification are set forth, and mere allegations setting forth conclusions of affiant do not comply with the statute. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 170.

3. Judges ⚷51(4)

Trial judge was not without jurisdiction to pass upon preliminary motions and demurrer, to sit as trial judge, to hear and pass on the defendant's motion for new trial and to pronounce judgment on ground that trial court erred in striking from record "statement of personal bias and prejudice of judge" where such statement had been properly stricken.

4. Bribery ⚷11

Evidence sustained conviction on counts of indictments charging the crime of asking, receiving and agreeing to receive a bribe by a public officer. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 68.

5. Conspiracy ⚷47

Evidence sustained conviction of conspiracy to commit crime of asking or receiving bribes on behalf of a public officer. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 68.

6. Conspiracy ⚷23, 24

The gist of crime of conspiracy is the unlawful agreement between conspirators to commit an offense prohibited by statute, accomplished by an overt act in furtherance thereof and the agreement may be inferred from acts and conduct of the parties in mutually carrying out a common purpose in violation of the statute. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 182.

7. Bribery ⚷1(1)

The offer or solicitation of a bribe need not be stated in express language as such, it being sufficient that the words used carried the import of a bribe and were evidently intended to bear that meaning. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 68.

8. Bribery ⚷10

In bribery prosecution, it is permissible to show the various steps taken by accused in committing the crime, including preliminary negotiations. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 68.

9. Bribery ⚷11

Evidence was not insufficient to sustain conviction as to count which charged accused with asking and receiving a bribe on ground that it was not shown that liquor licensee who gave the bribe had understanding with accused that vote or action of licensing officer was to be influenced by such payment, where general conspiracy was established and licensee's testimony showed that he paid accused money to obtain a seasonal license, a witness testified that he talked to officer about the license and officer told him to inform licensee that it would cost him certain amount and officer told witness to tell licensee that accused would come and see him and accused told witness that accused had met licensee and had received a check from him. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 68.

10. Conspiracy ⚷40

Where, in prosecution for conspiracy to commit crime of asking and receiving bribes by a public officer, general conspiracy could reasonably be supposed to have existed, prosecution under certain count, concerning which there was no direct evidence connecting defendant with the action charged therein, could proceed upon theory that criminal offense in furtherance of the conspiracy was charged by such count. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 68.

11. Indictment and Information ⚷159(2)

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit crime of asking and receiving bribes by a public officer, amendment of counts by inserting the word "received" between the words "ask" and "agreed to receive" was proper and was not prejudicial where new crime was not thereby charged and defendant could not claim surprise as he had transcript of grand jury proceedings in which the evidence showed certain sums were "received" as bribes on dates in question, and defendant did not request continuance and offered no protest when court stated that it was not necessary to rearraign him. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 68.

12. Criminal Law ⚷147

A person, who was not public official, and who had been charged with agreeing to receive a bribe upon understanding that action of district liquor control administrator upon matters officially before him would be influenced, could be prosecuted, tried, and punished as principal for criminal act of acceptance of bribe by public official, and, therefore, six year statute of limitations pertaining to crime of "acceptance" would be applicable, rather than three year statute applicable to certain felonies other than such acceptance. West's Ann. Pen.Code, § 68.

13. Criminal Law ⚷372(6)

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit crime of asking and receiving bribes by a public officer, testimony relating to several alleged offenses other than the offense for which accused was on trial was admissible to show common design of criminal enterprise and extent of criminal conspiracy, even though it might have tended to prove the commission of distinct criminal acts. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 68.

14. Criminal Law ⚷507(1)

The giver and receiver of a bribe are not "accomplices" within statute requiring corroboration of accomplices' testimony. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1111.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Accomplices".

15. Criminal Law ⚷511(2)

Evidence corroborating accomplice's testimony is sufficient, if it tends to connect defendant with commission of crime charged in such a way as may reasonably satisfy a jury that accomplice is telling the truth. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1111.

16. Criminal Law ⚷511(4)

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit crime of asking or receiving bribes by a public officer, testimony of alleged accomplice who gave money to accused was sufficiently corroborated by that of accomplice's wife and other witnesses, the files of board of equalization showing issuance of license after payment of money, and cashier's check and expert testimony as to accused's signature on back thereof. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 68, 1111.

17. Criminal Law ⚷656(3)

The trial court was not guilty of misconduct in allegedly acting as advocate on behalf of prosecution in ruling on admission of evidence and claimed restriction of cross-examination of witnesses, where court instructed jury that if during trial court had said or done anything which might have suggested that court was inclined in favor of claims or position of either party that jury should not be influenced by any such suggestion and that court's object in asking questions of certain witnesses was to bring out in greater detail facts not then fully covered in the testimony.

18. Criminal Law ⚿822(1), 829(1)

The trial court did not commit error in giving alleged improper instructions and by refusing to give instructions offered on behalf of accused, where it appeared from the many instructions given as a whole that jury was fully and fairly instructed as to elements of offenses charged and as to the law applicable thereto.

19. Criminal Law ⚿763(1)

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit crime of asking and receiving bribes by a public officer, instructions were not objectionable as in effect telling jury that conspiracy was established as matter of law and that money that various witnesses testified they paid were bribes as matter of law where court was instructing jury as to provisions of statutes and as to who were and who were not accomplices. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 67, 68.

20. Criminal Law ⚿656(1)

The record failed to show that trial court was acting as an advocate in behalf of prosecution in his comments regarding accomplices and weight to be given to their testimony, where jury was properly told that testimony of an accomplice could not be used to sustain a conviction unless it was corroborated by evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense.

21. Criminal Law ⚿772(6)

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit crime of asking or receiving bribes by a public officer, that trial court gave an example in discussing the law relative to conspiracies was not prejudicial on ground that it misled jury as to application of statute of limitations, where accused's argument as to application of such statute had been determined adversely to him by the Supreme Court in a prohibition proceeding.

22. Criminal Law ⚿829(1), 830

The refusal to give instructions which were covered by other instructions or which did not accurately state the law was not prejudicial error.

23. Criminal Law ⚿863(2)

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit crime of asking or receiving bribes by a public officer, wherein jury during its deliberations returned to court for further instructions and at request of juror court reread a portion of instructions given relative to question of liability of persons charged with conspiracy for acts and declarations of persons not members of such conspiracy, and court then informed jury that person who committed a criminal act without having knowledge of conspiracy would not be guilty thereof the court did not invade province of jury during its deliberations. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 68.

Augustine, Bryans & Ragen and Frank Desimone, Downey, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and William E. James Deputy Atty. Gen., James Don Keller, Dist. Atty., and Jack R. Levitt, Deputy Dist. Atty., San Diego, for respondent.

MUSSELL, Justice.

In an amended indictment, appellant Frank Bompensiero, together with Charles Lyon and Louis Trapani and certain John Does and certain unindicted coconspirators, to wit, Charles Berry, Harry W. Steetle and Al V. Bennett, were charged in count one with the crime of conspiracy to commit the crime of asking or receiving bribes by a public officer, to wit, Charles Berry, executive officer of the State of California (District Liquor Control Officer of the State Board of Equalization). Eight overt acts alleged to have taken place in San Diego county in furtherance of the conspiracy were set forth, i. e., (1) That defendant Lyon called one Patterson on the telephone on January 20, 1953; (2) that Lyon instructed Patterson to make an application for an on-sale general liquor license about November 16, 1952; (3) that on January 20, 1953, Lyon instructed Patterson to bring him $7,000; (4) that defendant Trapani, about August 23, 1952, instructed two Ghio brothers to collect $7,500; (5) that about October 10, 1952, defendant Trapani instructed them to apply for an on-sale general liquor license; (6) that appellant Bompensiero, about February 27, 1951, instructed one Gillenberg to apply for a seasonal liquor license; (7) that about October 25, 1952, Bennett instructed one Gillenberg to obtain $2,500; and (8) that about December 15, 1952, defendant Trapani instructed one Schoenbeck to gather together $7,000. Counts two through nine charged certain defendants with the crimes of attempted grand theft, grand theft, and asking, receiving and agreeing to receive bribes, but appellant Bompensiero was not named as a defendant in these counts of the amended indictment. In count ten, appellant Bompensiero, defendants Berry and Bennett and certain John Does, were charged with violating section 68 of the Penal Code (asking and receiving bribes by public officers or employees) and it was alleged that on or about the 3rd day of April, 1951, the named defendants did ask, receive and agree to receive a bribe from Ernest Gillenberg in the sum of $5,000. Count eleven likewise charged violation of Penal Code section 68, naming appellant Bompensiero, Berry, Bennett and certain John Does, alleging that on October 25, 1952, they did ask, receive and agree to receive a bribe from Ernest Gillenberg in the sum of $2,500. Appellant Bompensiero was charged with having suffered a prior felony conviction in that on or about the 30th day of January, 1931, in the District Court of the United States, in the Southern District of California, he was convicted of the crime of violation of the National Prohibition Act and that he had served a term of imprisonment therefor in the penitentiary at McNeil Island.

Bompensiero moved to set aside the indictment and the trial as to him was continued due to the pendency of a proceeding in prohibition. See Bompensiero v. Superior Court, 44 Cal.2d 178, 281 P.2d 250. Trial was then had as to defendants Lyon, Berry, Bennett and Trapani which resulted in verdicts of guilty as to said named defendants and their convictions were affirmed on appeal by this court in People v. Lyon, 135 Cal.App.2d 558, 288 P.2d 57, except as to Berry whose appeal was dismissed. On April 18, 1955, following the making and denial of certain motions and the filing of an amended indictment in which counts ten and eleven were amended by adding the word "receive", the matter proceeded to trial before a jury as to defendant Bompensiero. Verdicts were returned by the jury finding him guilty as charged in counts one, ten and eleven of the amended indictment. His motion for new trial was denied. Judgment was pronounced and he was sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison. He appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] The first of appellant's numerous contentions on appeal is that the court erred in striking from the record appellant's verified statement alleging bias and prejudice on the part of the trial judge. This contention is without merit. The record shows that on or about September 17, 1954, appellant filed in the instant action a statement that the trial judge was biased and prejudiced against him. This statement was stricken by the trial court and on appeal, the Supreme Court in People v. Bompensiero, 44 Cal.2d 183, 281 P.2d 250, supra, held that the trial judge was not in error in striking the statement on the ground that the remarks attributed to the trial court showed so little basis for claiming personal bias or prejudice against Bompensiero as to justify the conclusion that the charge of disqualification was sham and frivolous and on the further ground that Bompensiero's statement was not verified and was therefore formally defective. On April 18, 1955, appellant filed another document with the superior court denominated "Statement of personal bias and prejudice of judge". In this statement he set forth the same remarks of the judge upon which he based his claim of bias and prejudice in the proceedings on the first statement reviewed by the Supreme Court and in addition set forth therein certain statements and remarks of the trial judge made at the time defendant's counsel was objecting to the jurisdiction of the court to continue the trial while prohibition proceedings were being conducted in the appellate court. These remarks, like those set forth in appellant's first statement, were not sufficient to show that the trial court was biased and prejudiced and the statement was properly stricken.

[2] In Ephraim v. Superior Court, 42 Cal.App.2d 578, 109 P.2d 378, it was held that statements of disqualification of a judge are insufficient as a matter of law unless the facts constituting the alleged disqualification are set forth, and that mere allegations setting forth the conclusions of affiant do not comply with section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In People v. Lyon, supra, 135 Cal.App.2d 558, 584–585, 288 P.2d 57, the appellant contended, as here, that the trial court failed to comply with section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure with respect to his own claimed disqualification and this court there held that the refusal of the trial judge to submit the claim of disqualification asserted by Lyon, a codefendant of appellant Bompensiero herein, for consideration was proper.

[3] Bompensiero, in points two, three, four and five of his opening brief, claims that the trial judge had no jurisdiction to pass upon the preliminary motions and demurrer, to sit as a trial judge, to hear and pass on appellant's motion for a new trial, and to pronounce judgment. These four contentions are based upon the premise that the trial court erred in striking from the record the "Statement of personal bias and prejudice of judge" and since we have concluded that the statement was properly stricken, it follows that the court had jurisdiction to pass upon the matters stated in said points two, three, four and five.

Appellant contends that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdicts and the judgment. The consideration of this contention involves a somewhat lengthy statement of the testimony produced by the prosecution.

Charles J. Cameron testified as follows: He was employed by the Board of Equalization in San Diego from September 1, 1947 until the time of trial and after July 1, 1948, his superior officer was Charles E. Berry. Prior to the fall of 1953, when general licenses were available, any one desiring a general license would have to talk to Mr. Berry, the district administrator, and that only Charles Berry accepted applications for formal liquor licenses. After the fall of 1953, preliminary applications were issued to every one who had a business or a lot but Mr. Berry screened them and only with his approval could a formal application be filed. In no instance, to his knowledge, was a formal application approved by Mr. Berry ever turned down by the board in Sacramento. The market value of on-sale general licenses in 1952 and early in 1953 was around $12,500 and thereafter it was around $7,500. General licenses were limited to one per thousand population within the county and there is no resale market in seasonal licenses. A license, once approved, is transferable by the person named in the license. Until July 1, 1954, the fee for on-sale general license in the city of San Diego was $525 and $325 in the county area. Al Bennett's place of business was between 100 and 150 feet north of the Board of Equalization building in San Diego and was visible therefrom. He testified further that during the last part of 1954 the records of the Board of Equalization were under his care and control and that he became familiar with the signature of Mr. Berry. He identified certain files and records of the Board of Equalization and stated that in every instance when a person filled out a formal license and paid the fee, he was granted a license. Mr. Steetle was one of Al Bennett's salesmen and the witness had seen both Steetle and Bennett talking to Mr. Berry and had seen Frank Bompensiero at the Board of Equalization from time to time.

Al Tossas testified that one William Cook instructed him to come to San Diego for the purpose of selling seasonal licenses and to collect campaign funds for the William G. Bonelli campaign. He was asked to check several locations for the possibility of the issuance of seasonal licenses and was told to quote the price in one or two cases. He was told that this money was to apply to the campaign fund or to pay accumulated bills. Mr. Cook told him to use as a part of his sales talk the statement that after a period of time it would be possible to convert a seasonal into a general license. He picked up money on seasonal licenses in Orange and San Bernardino counties and carried sealed envelopes from Charles Berry, the district liquor control administrator of San Diego and Imperial counties to William Cook and vice versa. He stated also that he had received $500 from Frank Bompensiero as contributions for William G. Bonelli's campaign in 1950.

Ira M. Provart testified that he was formerly employed by the Board of Equalization as liquor control officer in El Centro and as such was acquainted with Charles Berry, who was the administrator in the San Diego and Imperial county area. He was asked by Ernest Gillenberg, who operated the Barbara Worth Cafe in Jacumba, if it would be possible that he could get a seasonal license. He, Provart, brought this to Mr. Berry's attention and Berry told him to tell Gillenberg that he could but it would cost him $5,000. Gillenberg said he could afford only $3,500, which statement he relayed to Mr. Berry. Berry asked him if he thought Frank Bompensiero could talk to him and when and Provart said "I suppose so", and Berry said to tell Mr. Gillenberg that Frank would come and see him. "He asked me to stop and see Mr. Gillenberg so I stopped in Mr. Gillenberg's place in Jacumba and told him a man by the name of Frank B. would come to see him." He asked me his name and I said "I don't think you will remember his full name, but he will make himself known to you when he comes in"; that Gillenberg came to the El Centro office and made an application for an on-sale seasonal license, saying that Frank told him to make an application; that Frank Bompensiero told him he had met Gillenberg in the Grant Hotel and had received a check from him; that Frank Bompensiero told him he was to have delivered to him a sum of money, alone, but instead he came with his wife and that he had some trouble dodging around the pillars, trying to keep away from her; that Bompensiero further stated that to avoid being apprehended with the money he had made arrangements with a former employee to shake hands with him and "palm off" whatever he had received; that Mr. Berry had told him that he needn't expect very much out of this because by the time it was cut ten or eleven ways, there wouldn't be much for him; that later Mr. Berry handed him $400 in an envelope, saying, "This is your share of the Gillenberg deal" and that in a subsequent conversation about Gillenberg, Frank Bompensiero said "Well, I hope that so-and-so will sell his place because he just talked too much."

Ernest M. Gillenberg testified that in 1951 he acquired a seasonal cocktail license for the Barbara Worth Cafe in Jacumba; that Frank Bompensiero came into his place early in 1951 and told him he could get him a seasonal license but it would cost $5,000 in cash money and that after he had operated a year he could get a regular general license. Gillenberg saw Mr. Provart and asked him about Frank Bompensiero and filled out his application. He waited several weeks hoping the license would come through without paying $5,000. He was instructed to meet Frank Bompensiero in the lobby of the U. S. Grant Hotel and to bring $5,000 in cash. He purchased a $5,000 cashier's check, payable to himself and met Bompensiero; that Bompensiero, after walking behind a pillar, didn't want to accept the check, asking for money, but finally took the check. Gillenberg obtained a seasonal license after paying the check and asked the board about making application for a general license. He received a telephone call from Al Bennett, wanting to talk to him. He told Al Bennett he understood he was to get a general license without paying any additional amount but Bennett told him he had to pay $2,500 more and that was the only way he could get one; that he paid Bennett $2,500 in cash, after driving with him to El Centro and withdrawing it from the bank. The money was paid beside the car, outside the presence of a woman Mr. Bennett introduced as his wife, and Bennett told him he would be informed when to come in. He received a telephone call to that effect, made an application and received his general license. Gladys Gillenberg testified that she was present at the Grant Hotel in San Diego when her husband delivered the check for $5,000.

Louis C. Davis, handwriting expert, testified as to the signature on Frank Bompensiero's booking sheet and bank signature card and stated that in his opinion the endorsement "Frank Bompensiero" on the back of the $5,000 cashier's check was the signature of the same person who had signed the booking sheet and bank signature card.

Thomas B. Colby testified that he operated a country club prior to April of 1952; that he saw Mr. Berry and was told it would be impossible to secure a liquor license; that Louis Trapani told him it would cost $5,000 for a seasonal license and that it would have to be in cash; that he received a call asking him to bring the money and pay it at the Santa Anita race track and that he did so and was told to put in his application and thereafter he received a seasonal license; that he was told that later in the year, when a new batch of licenses would be available, he could convert the seasonal into a general on-sale license for $2,500 extra; that later Trapani asked him for $2,500 more, which he paid, and that he applied for and received a general license.

Earl E. Jacobs testified that he was the owner and operator of the Lakeland resort; that he had a seasonal license and that he talked to Mr. Berry about obtaining an on-sale general cocktail license and was told they were getting $3,000 to $4,000 for them; that he applied for an on-sale license and was given a formal application for one in December, 1952; that Mr. Berry told him they were getting $2,500 for them; that arrangements were made for him to bring in $500 and spread the balance out; that he was allowed to make an application and placed $500 in a drawer of Mr. Berry's desk and in Mr. Berry's presence, following an agreement to pay $2,500 to Mr. Berry; that he later paid an additional $500 in the same manner at the same place and received an on-sale general license but was told he could forget the balance due to his having sustained a broken back.

Tony M. Silva, a motel operator, testified that Al Bennett came to see him and asked if he wanted a seasonal license, saying it would cost him $5,000; that he agreed and gave him $1,000 down payment and later $2,000 and the final $2,000 when he went to sign an application; that he was given a receipt each time; that these receipts were taken by Bennett; that Bennett, after the final payment, told him to see Mr. Berry; that he did so and Mr. Berry had the papers ready and that he then obtained the seasonal license; that he later obtained a new issue general license after Bennett came to see him again and that Bennett said he would charge $2,500 for it; that he gave Mr. Bennett the money without obtaining a receipt and was sent over to the board, where the papers were again ready.

Harry C. Patterson, operator of a tavern having a beer and wine license, testified that he acquired an on-sale general license by contacting Charles Lyon in Los Angeles; that Lyon told him he would have to pay $8,000 for the license and told him to see Berry at the Equalization board; that he told Berry he had seen Lyon and was told by Berry that Lyon was one of the best friends that anybody ever had; that he received an on-sale general license and paid $1,000 to Mr. Lyon; that he did not obtain a receipt from him and was told by Lyon that he couldn't give him one; that he did not pay the balance of the $8,000 although Lyon twice asked him for it, once saying that Mr. Bonelli was getting impatient; that Lyon told him to bring the balance of the money in a sealed envelope.

Cottardo Ghio testified that Berry told him they weren't issuing licenses; that he thereafter saw Louis Trapani, who told him it would cost $7,500 cash; that he agreed to take the license and was told to meet Trapani in San Juan Capistrano with $7,500 in small bills; that later he was called by Trapani to go to Berry to make an application; that he and his partners tried to apply twice but were told by Berry that he knew nothing about it; that they informed Trapani of the conversation with Berry and later Trapani told him to apply for a license again; that he and his partners then filed an application and received a liquor license.

Ernest Bernardini testified that he operated a restaurant in San Diego under a beer and wine license; that Mr. Trapani and Mr. Ghio came to his place of business and told him that if he wanted an on-sale general liquor license it would cost him $7,000; that he was told by Trapani that the money would have to be paid in $50 and $100 bills; that he did not pay any money and did not receive a liquor license although he had made out an application.

Frank Cerda testified that he owned a tavern, the Mission Inn in Oceanside; that in the fall of 1953 he attempted to get an on-sale general license and filled out a preliminary application form; that thereafter Harry Steetle came to see him and asked him to go outside to his car to talk in regard to his liquor license; that Steetle told him he could get him a license for $4,700 in cash; that he did not talk to Steetle again and did not obtain a license.

Harold F. Dodds testified that he was an operator of a restaurant and bar and acquired a newly issued general on-sale license from the board of equalization; that he filled out a preliminary application and was then contacted by Harry Steetle, who told him there was a license available and it was to cost him $4,500 for the new issue; that he borrowed the money to purchase the license and took the money up to Bennett's office. He gave Bennett $3,500 and a note for $1,000; that Bennett placed a 'phone call, saying Harold would be over; that he went to the State Board of Equalization and saw Mr. Berry, who had his preliminary application on his desk; that he then filled out a formal application and received a liquor license.

H. F. Millspaugh, a resort owner, testified that in the fall of 1953 he attempted to get a liquor license from the State Board of Equalization in San Diego; that he filled out a preliminary application and a few days later received a telephone call from Bennett asking him to come to his office; that Bennett told him he was in line for a license if he would pay $4,000; that he was handling all the licenses and that nobody could get a license unless they paid $4,000; that he went back to Mr. Bennett for additional information and was warned not to take money out of an account where it could be traced and that it would have to be paid in cash; that Bennett told him that as soon as the money was paid he would give Mr. Berry the o. k. to issue the license; that he again saw Bennett about the license and Bennett suggested he take money out of the bank and go to Las Vegas and return in a few days and complain about losing a lot of money; that he told Bennett that he had heard Mr. Bonelli got half and that he and Berry kept the rest; that Bennett indicated that he didn't get as much as Millspaugh thought he did; that he tried to talk to Bennett again but was told there was too much heat on due to the Weinberger committee.

[4, 5] It is evident from the testimony of the witnesses named that there was sufficient substantial evidence to sustain the verdict of the jury finding appellant guilty of counts one, ten and eleven of the indictment. As to the conspiracy count, the evidence set out shows that prior to the fall of 1953, when licenses were available, any one desiring such a license would have to talk to Mr. Berry, the district administrator, and that he was the only person who accepted applications for formal liquor licenses. After the fall of 1953, preliminary applications were issued to everyone who had a license or a lot, but Berry secured them, and only with his approval could a formal application be filed. Such applications approved by Berry were never turned down by the board in Sacramento. The market value of on-sale general licenses in 1952 and early 1953 was around $12,500 and thereafter around $7,500. Until July 1, 1954, the fee required by the state for the issuance of an on-sale license was $525 in the city of San Diego and $325 in the county area. The witness, Al Tossas, was instructed by one Cook to come to San Diego for the purpose of selling seasonal licenses and to collect campaign funds for the William G. Bonelli campaign. Tossas picked up money on seasonal licenses in Orange and San Bernardino counties and carried sealed envelopes between Berry and Cook, and in 1950 he received $500 from appellant as contributions for Bonelli's campaign. The witness Provart arranged the Gillenberg transaction through Berry and appellant in which Gillenberg paid $5,000 in cash to appellant for a seasonal license and later paid $2,500 to Al Bennett for a general license. Thomas Colby obtained a seasonal license upon payment of $5,000 in cash to Louis Trapani and obtained a general license upon payment of the further sum of $2,500. The witness Earl Jacobs obtained an on-sale license upon depositing $500 cash in a drawer in Berry's desk and agreeing to pay $2,500. Tony Silva was told by Bennett that a seasonal license would cost $5,000. Silva paid the money to Bennett who then told him to see Berry and the license was then issued. Later Silva obtained a general license upon payment to Bennett of $2,500. Harry G. Patterson obtained an on-sale general license by communicating with Charles Lyon in Los Angeles and paying him the sum of $1,000. The witness Ghio obtained a license upon payment to Louis Trapani of $7,500 in cash in small bills. Harold Dodds obtained a newly issued general on-sale license upon being contacted by Harry Steetle and payment to Bennett of $3,500, plus a note for $1,000. Bennett informed the witness Millspaugh that he was in line for a license if he would pay $4,000 and that nobody could get a license unless they paid that amount. Bennett warned Millspaugh not to take money for the license out of an account where it could be traced and that it would have to be paid in cash. The jury was justified in inferring from the testimony that the conspiracy existed as alleged in the indictment and that the payments were asked for and received by the conspirators in furtherance of the agreement to ask for or receive bribes on behalf of Berry, the district liquor control officer of the State Board of Equalization.

In People v. Lyon, supra, several of the witnesses in the instant action testified substantially the same as in the instant action and this court there held that only one conspiracy was charged and that the court and the jury were justified in believing that each of the transactions disclosed by the testimony was a part of a single and general conspiracy to ask and receive bribes in connection with the issuance or proposed issuance of such liquor licenses. The same reasoning and ruling applies in the instant case.

In Bompensiero v. Superior Court, supra, 44 Cal.2d 178, 184, 281 P.2d 250, 254, the court said:

> "The rule governing the sufficiency of the evidence to justify a suspicion of a conspiracy has been summarized as follows: 'Direct proof of a formal understanding between parties to the conspiracy is not required as the basis of an indictment or information. "(i)t was not necessary for the state to prove that the parties actually came together, mutually discussed their common design, and after reaching a formal agreement set out upon their previously agreed course of conduct. The > extent of the assent of minds which are involved in a conspiracy may be, and from the secrecy of the crime usually must be, inferred by the jury from the proofs of the facts and circumstances which, when taken together, apparently indicate that they are parts to the same complete whole."' Lorenson v. Superior Court, supra, 35 Cal.2d 49, 57–58, 216 P.2d 859, 864. The grand jury was justified in the belief that each of the transactions in which a bribe was accepted was part of a single general conspiracy to invoke a bribe for each new liquor license issued throughout the district."

[6] Bompensiero claims that there was no proof of any agreement between the parties named in the conspiracy count. However, the gist of the crime of conspiracy, under section 182 of the Penal Code, is the unlawful agreement between the conspirators to commit an offense prohibited by statute, accomplished by an overt act in furtherance thereof. The agreement may be inferred from the acts and conduct of the parties in mutually carrying out a common purpose in violation of the statute. People v. Benenato, 77 Cal.App.2d 350, 358, 175 P.2d 296. In People v. Steccone, 36 Cal.2d 234, 237–238, 223 P.2d 17, 19, it is said:

> "As a general rule, a conspiracy can only be established by circumstantial evidence 'for, as the courts have said, it is not often that the direct fact of an unlawful design which is the essence of a conspiracy can be proved otherwise than by the establishment of independent facts, bearing more or less closely or remotely upon the common design (5 Cal.Jur. 521); and it is not necessary to show that the parties met and actually agreed to undertake the performance of the unlawful acts (citing authority), nor that they had previously arranged a detailed plan * * * for the execution of the conspiracy (citing authority).'"

In People v. Bennett, 132 Cal.App.2d 569, 575, 282 P.2d 590, 594, this court, in considering a previous appeal of defendant Bennett, said:

> "There was considerable other evidence applicable to all counts which showed a common scheme or design among Berry and the two appellants. Several other witnesses testified to similar experiences in getting licenses for themselves or their friends, and similar activities on the part of Bennett or Steetle. The evidence discloses that in many instances large sums of cash were paid to Berry, Bennett or Steetle for which receipts were never given; that much secrecy was engaged in by Berry and the appellants in their dealings with potential licensees; that in all cases where such payments were received licenses were issued; and that in every instance where such payments were refused, whatever the reason therefor, no license was ever issued."

[7, 8] In People v. Vollmann, 73 Cal.App.2d 769, 786, 167 P.2d 545, it was held that the offer or solicitation of a bribe need not be stated in express language as such; it is sufficient that the words used carried the import of a bribe and were evidently intended to bear that meaning; and that it is permissible to show the various steps taken by an accused in committing the crime, including preliminary negotiations.

Under the reasoning of the foregoing authorities it is apparent that sufficient facts were proven in the instant case from which the jury could infer that there was a common design and scheme entered into through the agreement of the defendants herein to ask and receive bribes for and on behalf of a public officer or employee and that it is apparent that the design was to obtain bribes in a considerable amount from persons desiring to obtain liquor licenses in the area over which defendant Berry was the district liquor control officer.

[9] Appellant argues that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the conviction as to count ten because it was not shown that Gillenberg had an understanding with appellant that the vote or action of Berry was to be influenced by the payment of $5,000. This argument is without merit. A general conspiracy was established and Gillenberg's testimony shows that he paid appellant $5,000 to obtain a seasonal license. Provart testified that he talked to Berry about the Gillenberg license and Berry told him to inform Gillenberg that it would cost him $5,000. Berry told Provart to tell Gillenberg that Frank would come and see him, and appellant told Provart that he had met Gillenberg in the Grant Hotel and had received a check from him. The testimony of Provart and Gillenberg, together with the evidence of the general conspiracy, was sufficient to support the verdict and judgment as to count ten.

[10] Appellant argues that there was no evidence, direct or indirect, to support the charge in count eleven. However, this contention was considered by the Supreme Court in Bompensiero v. Superior Court, supra, and it was there held that since a general conspiracy might reasonably be supposed to have existed, prosecution might proceed under this count. The record shows that appellant told Gillenberg that after he had operated a year he could get a regular general license, and that if he so desired, to let somebody at the board know about it. Gillenberg then paid Bennett the $2,500. We conclude that the record contains substantial evidence to support the verdict and judgment on the charge contained in count eleven.

[11] Appellant contends that the trial court erred in permitting the prosecution to amend counts ten and eleven of the indictment. This amendment was accomplished by interlineation, inserting the word "received" between the words "ask" and "agree to receive" in counts ten and eleven. The amendment was proper in charging a violation of section 68 of the Penal Code. A new crime was not thereby charged and the defendant could not claim surprise as he had the transcript of the grand jury proceedings in which the evidence shows that the sums of $5,000 and $2,500 were "received" as bribes on the dates in question. See Bompensiero v. Superior Court, supra. Appellant did not request a continuance and offered no protest when the court stated that it was not necessary to rearraign the appellant. He was not prejudiced by the amendment and no error resulted from it. People v. Finkelstin, 98 Cal. App.2d 545, 556, 557, 220 P.2d 934.

[12] Appellant contends that the charge contained in count ten of the indictment is barred by the statute of limitations. However, this contention was made and considered in Bompensiero v. Superior Court, supra, and by the court rejected. A detailed discussion of this contention is set forth on pages 185 and 186 of that decision [44 Cal.2d, 281 P.2d on pages 255, 256] and reference is hereby made thereto in answer to appellant's contention herein.

[13] It is claimed that the trial court erred in overruling appellant's objections to and in denying his motion to strike the testimony of the People's witnesses relating to several alleged offenses other than the offense for which appellant was on trial. This testimony was admissible to show the common design of the criminal enterprise and extent of the criminal conspiracy, even though it may have tended to prove the commission of distinct criminal acts. People v. Collier, 111 Cal.App. 215, 237, 295 P. 898. In People v. Stevens, 78 Cal.App. 395, 406–407, 248 P. 696, it is said that in conspiracy cases it is no objection that the evidence covers a great many transactions and extends over a long period of time, that it may show another crime, that the acts, evidence to show which is offered, occurred some time before the alleged formation of the conspiracy, provided, however, that the facts shown have some bearing on and tendency to prove the ultimate facts at issue. We find no error in the court's ruling on the motion to strike.

[14–16] Appellant argues that the accomplices' testimony was not corroborated. This argument is based upon the false premise that witnesses Gillenberg and Provart and others were accomplices. However, it is well settled that the giver and receiver of a bribe are not accomplices under section 1111 of the Penal Code. People v. Bennett, supra, 132 Cal.App.2d 569, 581, 282 P.2d 590; People v. Lyon, supra, 135 Cal.App.2d 558, 576, 288 P.2d 57. Furthermore, the testimony of Gillenberg was corroborated by that of his wife and other witnesses, the files of the board of equalization, the cashier's check for $5,000, and expert testimony as to appellant's signature on the back thereof. The rule is that the corroborating evidence is sufficient if it tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime in such a way as may reasonably satisfy the jury that the witness who must be corroborated is telling the truth. People v. MacEwing, 45 Cal.2d 218, 288 P.2d 257. It appears, therefore, that there was adequate corroboration of the testimony of the witnesses for the prosecution herein.

[17] It is next contended that the trial court was guilty of misconduct and acted as an advocate on behalf of the prosecution. We are not in accord with this contention. Appellant, in his opening brief, devotes 36 pages to the discussion and statement of many excerpts from the reporter's transcript which he claims show that the trial court was guilty of misconduct. These excerpts relate mainly to the court's ruling on the admission of evidence and the claimed restriction of the cross-examination of witnesses. In this connection the court instructed the jury that if during the trial he had said or done anything which may have suggested that he was inclined in favor of the claims or position of either party that the jury should not be influenced by any such suggestion and that his object in asking questions of certain witnesses was to bring out in greater detail facts not then fully covered in the testimony.

[18] Appellant further contends that the trial court committed error by giving the jury improper instructions and by refusing to give instructions offered on behalf of appellant. There were many instructions given to the jury (Rep.Tr., pp. 1159–1660.) and it appears that when they are considered as a whole, the jury was fully and fairly instructed as to the elements of the offenses charged and as to the law applicable thereto.

[19] Appellant complains that the court, in effect, told the jury (Rep.Tr., pp. 1603, 1607 and 1618) that a conspiracy was established as a matter of law. However, a reading of the transcript in this connection does not bear out appellant's contention. Appellant further states that the court, in effect, told the jury (Rep.Tr., pp. 1612 and 1614) that the moneys that the various witnesses testified they paid were bribes as a matter of law. We do not so read the instructions. In this connection the court was not instructing the jury that bribes were received as a matter of law but was instructing it as to the provisions of sections 67 and 68 of the Penal Code and as to who were and who were not accomplices.

[20] Appellant complains that the court was acting as an advocate in behalf of the prosecution in his comments regarding accomplices and the weight to be given to their testimony. The record does not support this proposition. The jury was properly told that the testimony of an accomplice could not be used to sustain a conviction unless it was corroborated by evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense.

[21] Appellant claims that the court should not have given an example in discussing the law relative to conspiracies. The objection in this connection is that the court misled the jury as to the application of the statute of limitations. However, no prejudicial error appears in that connection as appellant's argument as to the application of the statute was determined adversely to him in Bompensiero v. Superior Court, supra.

It is argued that the trial court committed error and was guilty of misconduct in that he told the jury that the overt acts were "good overt acts". However, examination of the court's instruction in this connection shows that the court did not instruct the jury that the overt acts were good overt acts but stated that overt acts proven were "good overt acts".

[22] Other complaints of appellant as to the instructions given are likewise without merit. It further appears that many of the instructions offered by appellant were covered by other instructions or did not accurately state the law and no prejudicial error resulted from the refusal to give them.

[23] Finally, appellant contends that the court erred by invading the province of the jury during its deliberations. No error appears in this connection. The jury during its deliberations returned to court for further instructions and at the request of a juror, the court reread a portion of the instructions given relative to the question of the liability of persons charged with a conspiracy for the acts and declarations of persons not members of such conspiracy. The court then informed the jury that a person who committed a criminal act without having knowledge of a conspiracy would not be guilty thereof. It appears that the jury was fully and fairly instructed on the law applicable to the charges set forth in the indictment and that the court did not invade the province of the jury during its deliberations.

In view of what we have heretofore said, we deem it unnecessary to pass on other points raised by appellant.

The judgment and order denying motion for new trial are affirmed.

v.

STATE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION of the State of California, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 21314, 21315.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

July 3, 1956.

Rehearing Denied July 30, 1956.

Hearing Denied Aug. 30, 1956.

Two actions for recovery of taxes levied and collected under Sales and Use Tax Law. The cases were consolidated for trial in the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Ellsworth Meyer, J., and judgment in each case went for the defendant State Board of Equalization. Appeals were taken from the judgments and the District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held that where purchasers of materials entered into construction contracts to fabricate and erect structures on real property out of state, they were essentially performing services and were consumers of the materials which they had purchased and were not engaged in the reselling of materials as personal property.

Affirmed.

1. Licenses ⚷15.1(6)

Under Sales and Use Tax Law as in effect before 1953 amendments, materials purchased by California seller under certificates of resale and subsequently fabricated, shipped and erected on out-of-state job sites pursuant to contracts with out-of-state purchasers were subject to the tax. West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 6009.1, 6051, 6091–6094, 6201.

2. Commerce ⚷64
Licenses ⚷15.1(6)

Where materials were purchased by California seller under certificates of resale and subsequently fabricated, shipped and erected on out-of-state job sites pursuant to contract with out-of-state purchasers, such sales to California seller were not exempt from sales and use taxes by virtue of statute relating to property exempted by Constitution or federal law, nor was state deprived of jurisdiction to collect tax by virtue of Interstate Commerce Clause of federal Constitution. West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, § 6352; U.S.C.A.Const. art. 1, § 8, cl. 3.

3. Licenses ⚷15.1(3)

Partners engaged in business of constructing tanks and other items which were fabricated pursuant to contracts and erected on real property outside the state were, under facts as shown by the record, "contractors" within meaning of law of California, and were "consumers" for sales and use tax purposes. West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 6009.1, 6051, 6091–6094.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Consumers" and "Contractors".

4. Estoppel ⚷92(1)

Where contractors in business of fabricating items avoided immediate payment of sales taxes on purchases of materials by giving resale certificates as provided by statute, they had no standing to attempt in court to avoid conditions specified in such statute, by reference to other statutes and by charges of inconsistency. West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 6009.1, 6051, 6091–6094.

5. Licenses ⚷32(1)

Resale certificate provisions of Sales and Use Tax Law were enacted to permit purchase to be tax free, where purchaser is unable to determine at time of purchase whether he will in fact resell articles purchased or will use them, until such time as ultimate disposition of property is determined. West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 6091–6094.

6. Commerce ⚷64
Licenses ⚷15.1(6)

Subjection to imposition of taxes under Sales and Use Tax Law of purchases of materials, purchased by contractors who gave resale certificates and then subsequently fabricated items which they installed on out-of-state job sites, did not conflict with Interstate Commerce Clause of federal Constitution, nor was extraterritorial effect thereby given to the Sales and Use Tax Law. West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 6009.1, 6051, 6091–6094; U.S.C.A.Const. art. 1, § 8, cl. 3.

7. Licenses ⚷28

Purpose of resale provisions of Sales and Use Tax Law is to relieve original seller from payment of sales tax where property is bought by purchaser for purpose of reselling it in form of tangible personal property. West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 6091–6095.

8. Licenses ⚷15.1(8)

Legislature did not intend to permit purchasers to escape entirely, payment of tax under Sales and Use Tax Law by giving of resale certificate if it later developed that property was consumed or used rather than resold in form of tangible personal property, and, to prevent this possibility, Legislature enacted section relating to the use of article bought for resale. West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 6091–6095.

Wadsworth & Fraser, by E. L. Fraser, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., James E. Sabine, Asst. Atty. Gen., Edward Sumner, Dan Kaufmann, and James C. Maupin, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondent.

FOURT, Justice.

Appellants brought two actions for the recovery of taxes levied and collected under the California Sales and Use Tax Law. The cases were consolidated for trial and judgment in each case went for the defendant.

One action, Case Number 21314, is for the recovery of taxes in the amount of $9,717.17, with interest levied during the period from February 1, 1949, to September 30, 1951. The second action, Case Number 21315, is for the recovery of taxes in the sum of $1,940.18, with interest levied during the period from July 1, 1948, to January 31, 1949. Except for the taxable periods, the legal and factual issues in each action are substantially the same.

The appellants were engaged in designing, engineering, fabricating, selling and installing water cooling towers, aerial towers and industrial wooden products especially designed for industrial processing. The business headquarters were located in Los Angeles, and their principal fabricating plant, storage and lumber yard were located at Santa Rosa, California. Customers' purchase orders were first sent to the Los Angeles office where design and engineering work was performed. The orders were then forwarded to Santa Rosa, accompanied by requisitions to inventory. Fabrication and loading for shipment were performed at Santa Rosa. The items fabricated were either (1) sold and merely delivered to the job sites specified by customers, or (2) erected on the customers' job sites by appellants. Out-of-state shipments were made by railroad car with appellants as consignee at the out-of-state job site. Appellants' erection superintendent took possession of the shipment upon arrival and with the assistance of local labor supervised the erection work. No deficiency tax assessments were made upon out-of-state sales not involving erection. The business was a specialty in that the items fabricated consisted almost entirely of items specifically engineered for a particular customer.

The instant appeals involve tax and interest measured by the price paid by appellants for materials which were purchased in California, ex tax under resale certificates. The raw materials were first placed in inventory in California and, as orders were received for the erection of one of the completed structures to be manufactured and installed by appellants, after the design and engineering work was done, the necessary raw materials were withdrawn from inventory as required, and fabricated in California for subsequent erection and installation by the appellants outside California on customers' job sites. The purchase, storage and fabrication of the materials all took place in this state.

We are concerned with the provisions of the law as it existed during the taxable periods.[1]

[1] Revenue and Taxation Code sections:

"§ 6009.1. What not included in 'storage' or 'use.' 'Storage' and 'use' do not include the keeping, retaining or exercising any right or power over tangible personal property shipped or brought into this State for the purpose of subsequently transporting it outside the State for use thereafter solely outside the State, or for the purpose of being processed, fabricated, or manufactured into, attached to or incorporated into, other tangible personal property to be transported outside the State and thereafter used solely outside the State."

"§ 6051. Imposition and rate of tax. For the privilege of selling tangible personal property at retail a tax is hereby imposed upon all retailers at the rate of 2½ percent of the gross receipts of any retailer from the sale of all tangible personal property sold at retail in this State on or after August 1, 1933, and to and including June 30, 1935, and at the rate of 3 percent thereafter, and at the rate of 2½ percent on and after July 1, 1943, and to and including June 30, 1949, and at the rate of 3 percent thereafter."

In 1953, section 6009.1 was amended by striking therefrom the words "shipped or brought into this State". In the same year, section 6094 was amended as follows:

"§ 6094. If a purchaser who gives a certificate makes any use of the property other than retention, demonstration, or display while holding it for sale in the regular course of business, the use shall be deemed a retail sale by taxable to the purchaser under Chapter 3 of this part as of the time the property is first used by him, and the cost sales price of the property to him shall be deemed the gross receipts from such retail sale the measure of the tax. Only when there is an unsatisfied use tax liability on this basis shall the seller be liable for sales tax with respect to the sale of the property to the purchaser. If the sole use of the property other than retention, demonstration, or display in the regular course of business is the rental of the property while holding it for sale, the purchaser may elect to include in his gross receipts the amount of the rental charged rather than the cost sales price of the property to him." (Italics indicating additions made to the section.)

Where the purchaser gave a valid resale certificate pursuant to sections 6091–6093, and the gross receipts involved were accordingly not included in the measure of the sales tax imposed upon the vendor, any use by the purchaser other than mere retention, demonstration or display while holding the property for sale in the regular course of business was under section 6094 as it read during the period involved herein, and prior to the section's amendment in 1953, deemed a retail sale by the purchaser and subject to the sales tax measured by the purchaser's cost. The amendment of 1953 provided that the use of tangible personal property, other than retention, demonstration or display, for sale in the regular course of business by the one who pur-

"§ 6091. Presumption that gross receipts subject to tax: Burden of proof. For the purpose of the proper administration of this part and to prevent evasion of the sales tax it shall be presumed that all gross receipts are subject to the tax until the contrary is established. The burden of proving that a sale of tangible personal property is not a sale at retail is upon the person who makes the sale unless he takes from the purchaser a certificate to the effect that the property is purchased for resale."

"§ 6092. Purchaser's certificate that purchase for resale: Sufficiency to relieve seller of burden of proof. The certificate relieves the seller from the burden of proof only if taken in good faith from a person who is engaged in the business of selling tangible personal property and who holds the permit provided for in Article 2 of this chapter and who, at the time of purchasing the tangible personal property, intends to sell it in the regular course of business or is unable to ascertain at the time of purchase whether the property will be sold or will be used for some other purpose."

"§ 6093. Same: Execution, form, and contents. The certificate shall be signed by and bear the name and address of the purchaser, shall indicate the number of the permit issued to the purchaser, and shall indicate the general character of the tangible personal property sold by the purchaser in the regular course of business. The certificate shall be substantially in such form as the board may prescribe."

"§ 6094. Effect of using article bought for resale. If a purchaser who gives a certificate makes any use of the property other than retention, demonstration, or display while holding it for sale in the regular course of business, the use shall be deemed a retail sale by the purchaser as of the time the property is first used by him, and the cost of the property to him shall be deemed the gross receipts from such retail sale. If the sole use of the property other than retention, demonstration, or display in the regular course of business is the rental of the property while holding it for sale, the purchaser may elect to include in his gross receipts the amount of the rental charged rather than the cost of the property to him."

"§ 6201. Imposition and rate of tax. An excise tax is hereby imposed on the storage, use, or other consumption in this State of tangible personal property purchased from any retailer on or after July 1, 1935, for storage, use, or other consumption in this State at the rate of 3 percent of the sales price of the property, and at the rate of 2½ percent on and after July 1, 1943, and to and including June 30, 1949, and at the rate of 3 percent thereafter."

chased the property under a valid retail certificate is subject to the use tax imposed by section 6201, rather than the sales tax imposed by section 6051.

During the times with which we are concerned, section 1921 of the California Administrative Code, relating to the Board of Equalization—Sales and Use Tax (being formerly known as Board of Equalization Sales and Use Tax Ruling No. 11), provided in substance as is set forth in the footnote hereto.[2]

[1] Appellants' contention, in substance, is that prior to the 1953 amendment, the Sales and Use Tax Law was ambiguous with respect to the taxation of materials purchased by a California seller under certificates of resale and subsequently fabricated, shipped and erected on out-of-state job sites pursuant to contract with out-of-state purchasers, and that the 1953 amendments to sections 6009.1 and 6094 should be construed as declaration of existing law.

Before the 1953 amendment, section 6009.1 exempted from the definition of taxable storage and use, under certain circumstances, only the use of tangible personal property "shipped or brought into this State for the purpose of subsequently transporting it outside the State for use thereafter solely outside the State, * * *."

In the case of People v. Grazer, 138 Cal. App.2d 274, 291 P.2d 957, 960, the court said:

"Respondent argues that it has never been the intent or effect of the code provisions to tax the transactions here involved and refers us to the declaration to that effect by the legislature when it passed the exclusionary section 6019. If the existing law taxed these transactions, and we hold that it did, then the legislature could not change the law by declaring that it had never intended to tax them.

" 'The usual purpose of a special interpretative statute is to correct a judicial interpretation of a prior law which the Legislature determines to be inaccurate. Where such statutes are given any effect, the effect is prospective only. This seems correct, for any other result would make the Legislature a court of last resort.' (2 Sutherland Statutory Construction, third edition, sec. 3004.)

"In any event the legislature could not retroactively change what had been the law by declaring what a preceding legislature had meant by what it had said." See, also, Stockton Savings & Loan Bank v. Massanet, 18 Cal.2d 200, 114 P.2d 592; Board of Social Welfare v. County of L. A., 27 Cal.2d 90, 162 P.2d 635; California Employment Stabilization Comm. v. Payne, 31 Cal.2d 210, 187 P.2d 702.

[2] The appellant further contends that the imposition of the tax violates the Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution. The initial sales and purchases of the materials by the appellants were subject to a sales tax in that the property was

[2] The term "Contractor" as used in this administrative ruling is defined as including both general contractors and subcontractors and including also contractors engaged in such building trades as carpentry, bricklaying, cement work, steel work, plastering, sheet metal work, roofing, tile and terrazzo work, electrical work, plumbing, heating, air conditioning, painting and interior decorating.

The term "Construction Contracts" is defined as a contract for erecting a building or other structures on land and includes lump-sum, cost-plus and time-and-material contracts.

The term "Materials" is defined as tangible personal property which, when combined with other tangible personal property loses its identity to become an integral and inseparable part of the completed structure. The ruling contains a list of "materials" such as flooring, insulation, laths, lumber, oil, paint, piping, valves, pipefittings, putty, roofing, sheet metal, steel, wallboard, weatherstripping, wood preserver, etc.

The term "Fixtures" is defined as items accessory to a building and which do not lose their identity as accessories when placed or installed, such as lighting fixtures, etc.

The ruling specifically provides in subdivision (b) (1) that "Contractors are the consumers of materials used by them in fulfilling construction contracts and the tax applies to the sale of such materials to the contractors."

delivered to appellants at a point in the state. Such sales were not exempt under section 6352 of the Revenue and Taxation Code, nor was the state deprived of jurisdiction to collect the tax by virtue of the Interstate Commerce Clause of the Federal Constitution, U.S.C.A.Const. art. 1, § 8, cl. 3.

[3] The appellants were engaged in the business of constructing tanks and the items heretofore mentioned, which were fabricated pursuant to contracts to be erected on real property outside of the state. In our opinion they were, under the facts of these particular cases, contractors within the meaning of the law of this state, and were consumers. It was said in General Electric Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization, 111 Cal.App.2d 180, 187, 244 P.2d 427, 431: "* * * Where the materials are combined with other materials so as to lose their identity and become part of the completed structure the contractor is deemed to be the consumer of such materials * * *."

[4] But for the giving of resale certificates, the sales tax would have applied at the time of the sale of the raw materials to the appellants. By giving the resale certificates appellants escaped reimbursing their sellers for the sales tax at the time of the initial purchases and sales. Such certificates relieved the seller of the obligation initially to pay the sales tax and thus there was no necessity for the sellers to collect sales tax reimbursement from the appellants as buyers. Having elected to accept the conditions of Article 3, Chapter 2, Division 2 of the Revenue and Taxation Code, sections 6091–6095, relative to resale certificates, the appellants are in no position to attempt to avoid the conditions of that Article by reference to other provisions in the Code and by charges of inconsistency.

[5] There are many situations which develop in the ordinary course of business where the purchaser is unable to determine at the time of the purchase whether he will in fact resell the articles purchased or will use them. The resale certificate provisions of the law were enacted to permit the purchase to be tax free under these circumstances until such time as the ultimate disposition of the property is determined. If that disposition is a resale, in the form of tangible personal property, then no tax is due with respect to the original sale. If that disposition is for a use other than retention, demonstration, or display, while holding it for sale in the regular course of business, then a tax is due because the property was not purchased for resale. However, under these circumstances, the person who gave the resale certificate is required to pay a tax at the rate of the sales tax, but measured by the cost of the property to him. The legislature apparently felt that it was fair to impose a tax on the purchaser under these conditions because the seller could have collected reimbursement for the tax from the buyer, except for his reliance upon the resale certificate.

[6] The appellants, in the instant cases, both stored and fabricated the materials in California, pursuant to construction contracts; they were not merely retaining these materials, demonstrating them or displaying them while holding them for sale in the regular course of business. Furthermore, since all of these events took place in California and were preliminary to the actual shipment of the structures, there can be, in our opinion, no application of the Interstate Commerce Clause of the Federal Constitution. Southern Pacific Co. v. Gallagher, 306 U.S. 167, 59 S.Ct. 389, 83 L.Ed. 586; Utah Power & Light Co. v. Pfost, 286 U.S. 165, 52 S.Ct. 548, 76 L.Ed. 1038; American Mfg. Co. v. St. Louis, 250 U.S. 459, 39 S.Ct. 522, 63 L.Ed. 1084. In other words, the appellants cannot use the resale certificate sections to strip the state of its jurisdiction merely because the ultimate and final use of the property took place in another state as part of the continuing process of contracting.

Appellants further contend that extraterritorial effect is being given to the California Sales and Use Tax Law in these cases in that the contracting work was performed outside of the state of California.

The actual erection of the structures was only a portion of the contracting agreement. The agreement to erect the structures establishes the nature of the activities of the appellants as a contractor. However, all of the incidents with which the instant cases are concerned, insofar as they involve the applicability of the California Sales and Use Tax Law, are incidents which occurred in California. The property was bought and delivered in California and a sales tax would have been paid but for the giving of the resale certificates; it was stored in California; it was determined that it would be dedicated to the performance of a construction contract and it was removed from storage in California, then fabricated in California, that fabrication consisting of the rendering of contracting services transforming the raw materials into the completed structures prior to their being shipped outside of the state for erection pursuant to the construction agreements.

[7, 8] Article 3, Chapter 2, Division 2 of the Revenue and Taxation Code relates entirely to resale certificates. The purpose of the provisions of sections 6091–6095 is to relieve the original seller from the payment of sales tax where the property is bought by the purchaser for the purpose of reselling it in the form of tangible personal property. Obviously, the legislature did not intend to permit parties in this type of transaction to escape payment of a tax entirely by the giving of a resale certificate if it later developed that the property was consumed or used rather than resold in the form of tangible personal property. To prevent this possibility, the legislature enacted section 6094. Once it is established that the property is not to be resold in the form of tangible personal property then the tax is due and payable since the sales tax was not paid at the time of the original sale. The legislature has required that the purchaser must now pay the tax, but has related the tax back to the initial purchase to the extent that that purchase price is controlling as to the measure of the tax. There is nothing in sections 6091–6095 to indicate that the legislature intended in any way to relate these particular provisions of law to problems dealing with interstate commerce.

The appellants further argue that because the Board did not tax the sale of materials by the appellants in knocked-down form to be delivered without erection at the out-of-state job sites, that the Board was inconsistent in taxing the materials fabricated into structures in California pursuant to a construction contract calling for erection of the structures in other states. They further argue that in all cases they were merely selling personal property and should come within the Board's rule that gross receipts from sales to manufacturers, producers or processors of tangible personal property which becomes an ingredient or component part of the tangible personal property which they manufacture, produce or process are not taxable. Where the appellants had no construction contract but were merely selling their materials to purchasers out-of-state, they were reselling personal property. But where they entered into a construction contract to fabricate and erect structures on real property, they were essentially performing services. As to the construction contracts they were the consumers of the materials which they had purchased. They were not reselling these materials as personal property, but were rather using them in the process of fulfilling a construction contract, and thus fall within the provisions of Board rule No. 11.

PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

A. R. MOSELY et al., Defendants,

A. R. Mosely, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. A. 3415.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, Los Angeles County, California.

June 27, 1956.

Prosecution for failure to maintain a toilet and sink for a dwelling house in good repair, failure to keep said building in good repair, and failure to keep said building and its premises clean. The Municipal Court, Los Angeles Judicial District, Ernestine Stahlhut, J., entered a conviction, denied defendant's motion for a new trial and he appealed. The Appellate Department of the Superior Court, Swain, J., held, inter alia, that city ordinance imposing a duty to keep toilets and sinks in a dwelling house in good repair conflicted with state law requiring such premises to be kept in good repair, and, under provision of constitution providing that a city may not enact a local sanitary ordinance in conflict with a general law, conviction for violation of such ordinance was error.

Order reversed in part and affirmed in part; appeals from all other matters dismissed.

1. Criminal Law 🔑1023(1, 10)

In criminal prosecution, rulings of the trial court and the verdict of the jury are not appealable.

2. Criminal Law 🔑1023(10)

Where no judgment was entered in prosecution in the Municipal Court, and probation was granted without imposition of sentence against the convicted defendant, the Appellate Department of the Superior Court would treat the purported appeal from the judgment as an appeal from the order granting probation.

3. Municipal Corporations 🔑592(1)

City ordinance imposing a duty to keep toilets and sinks in a dwelling house in good repair conflicted with state law requiring such premises to be kept in good repair, and, under provision of constitution providing that a city may not enact a local sanitary ordinance in conflict with a general law, conviction for violation of such ordinance was error. West's Ann. Const. art. 11, § 11; West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 17800.

4. Health 🔑40

Mere fact that complaint in prosecution for failure to keep dwelling house in good repair failed to allege that the defendant was a person who had the duty of repairing the house did not constitute a ground for reversal of defendant's conviction, in the absence of a demurrer. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 960, 1426; West's Ann. Health & Safety Code, § 17800.

5. Criminal Law 🔑1144(14)

Where defendant in prosecution for failure to keep a dwelling house in good repair made no objection to instructions as given by the Municipal Court, the Appellate Department of the Superior Court would assume that they were correct. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 17800.

6. Health 🔑40

Complaint charging defendant with failure to keep a dwelling house clean in violation of Health and Safety Code was sufficient even though it did not state whether the landlord or the tenant had a duty to keep the house clean in view of fact that language of Code providing that it would be unlawful for any person to violate, or cause to permit another person to violate, any of its provisions included both landlord and tenant. West's Ann. Health & Safety Code, §§ 17800, 17900.

7. Criminal Law 🔑303

Where trial court on motion of assistant to a city attorney entered an order dismissing a complaint for failure to keep a dwelling house in good repair for the sole purpose of filing an amended complaint, such order was a mere dismissal of the complaint, and not a dismissal of the action, and therefore did not render void all proceedings thereafter. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, §§ 17800, 17811.

8. Criminal Law ⚷982

Municipal court has jurisdiction to modify conditions of probation without any directions from Appellate Division of Superior Court, if it so desires.

A. R. Mosely, in pro. per.

Roger Arnebergh, City Atty., Donald M. Redwine, Asst. City Atty., Philip E. Grey, Deputy City Atty., Los Angeles, for respondent.

SWAIN, Judge.

The defendant Archie R. Mosely was convicted (Count I) of failing to maintain a toilet and sink for a dwelling house in good working order, in violation of subsection (a) of section 32.01 of the Los Angeles Municipal Code; (Count II) of failing to keep said building in good repair in violation of section 17800, Health and Safety Code; and (Count III) of failing to keep said building and its premises clean in violation of section 17811, Health and Safety Code.

[1, 2] The defendant Archie R. Mosely appeals from (a) rulings of the trial court, (b) the order denying his motion for a new trial, (c) the verdict of the jury, and (d) the judgment. (a) and (c) are not appealable. There is no judgment, probation having been granted without imposition of sentence, but we shall treat the purported appeal from the judgment as an appeal from the order granting probation.

The evidence supports implied findings that the appellant was the owner and that the defendant Hamilton, who has not appealed, was the tenant and occupant of the dwelling house in question.

[3] It is obvious that appellant has been convicted twice of failing to keep the premises in repair, first, under Count I, which charges this was a violation of the City Ordinance, and, second, under Count II, which charges this was a violation of the State law. The toilet and sink alleged in Count I are a part of the building in question. The city may not enact a local sanitary ordinance in conflict with a general law (Cal.Const. Art. XI, § 11). The conviction of Count I was error. The conviction of Count II must be affirmed.

[4, 5] Appellant contends that Count II of the complaint does not allege that appellant was a person who had the duty of repairing the house. In the absence of a demurrer to that count or any count, this matter of pleading is not a ground for reversal, Pen.Code §§ 960 and 1426. Under the liberal modern system of pleading theft, for instance, it is sufficient to allege that the defendant took the property of another without alleging whether it was by larceny, by trick or device or by embezzlement. The court instructed the jury it was the duty of a lessor and of a lessee, respectively, to repair a dwelling as required by Civil Code, §§ 1941 and 1929. Appellant makes no objection to these instructions. We, therefore, assume they are correct.

[6] As to Count III, appellant appears to complain that Count III of the complaint does not state whether the owner or the lessee-occupant of a dwelling house has the duty to keep it clean. Section 17900, Health and Safety Code, provides: "It is unlawful for any person to violate, or cause or permit another person to violate, any provision of this part." That language includes both landlord and tenant. Appellant has presented no authorities or argument to the contrary.

[7] Appellant also complains that when the court gave the prosecution leave to file an amended complaint, it made an order dismissing the action and, therefore, all proceedings thereafter were void. The wording of the order was, "Cause dismissed on motion of Deputy City Attorney, J. C. Denny, as to each defendant for the sole purpose of filing and amended complaint." From the fact that the court granted leave to file an amended complaint, it is obvious that the court dismissed the complaint, not the action. Muns v. Superior Court, 1955, 137 Cal.App.2d 728, 290 P.2d 951.

[8] The order denying a new trial of Count I is reversed with instructions to dismiss Count I. The order denying a new trial as to Counts II and III is affirmed. The order granting probation is affirmed. Although the conviction of Count I was error, it is not necessary for us to reverse the order granting probation. The trial court has jurisdiction to modify the conditions of probation without any directions from us if it so desires. Appellant has not complained of any of the conditions.

The appeals from all other matters are dismissed.

DEPARTMENT OF MENTAL HYGIENE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Bessie SHANE, Executrix of the Estate of William Henry Waller, also known as W. H. Waller, Deceased, Defendant and Respondent.

C. A. 39.

Appellate Department, Superior Court,
Kern County, California.
July 5, 1956.

Action by Department of Mental Hygiene against executrix of a deceased father for father's alleged statutory liability for the care, support and maintenance of his son who was committed to a state mental hospital. The Municipal Court entered judgment for executrix and the department appealed. The Superior Court, Appellate Division, Kern County, Lambert, P. J., held that under statute providing that the father of a mentally ill person, and the father's estate shall be liable for the care, support and maintenance in a state institution of such person, the size of the father's estate, the amount of his earnings, and the fact that there may be other claims against his estate are not defenses, and whatever estate the father does leave is liable.

Judgment reversed and judgment entered for plaintiff.

1. Executors and Administrators 🔑202(1)

Under statute providing that the father of a mentally ill person, and the father's estate shall be liable for the care, support and maintenance in a state institution of such person, the size of the father's estate, the amount of his earnings, and the fact that there may be other claims against his estate are not defenses, and whatever estate the father does leave is liable. West's Ann. Welfare & Inst.Code, § 6650.

2. Executors and Administrators 🔑260

Department of mental hygiene would share its judgment against deceased's father's estate for his statutory liability for the care, support and maintenance of his son who was committed to a state mental hospital, as a general creditor on a pro rata basis for whatever was left in decedent's estate after payment of preferred claims and expenses of administration, as provided by law in probate matters. West's Ann.Welfare & Inst.Code, §§ 6650–6652.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Ariel C. Hilton, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellant.

John B. Young, Bakersfield, for defendant and respondent.

LAMBERT, Presiding Judge.

This is an appeal by the plaintiff, Department of Mental Hygiene of the State of California, from judgment entered in the Municipal Court in favor of the defendant in an action by the plaintiff against the executrix of the estate of the deceased father on his alleged statutory liability for the care, support and maintenance of his son committed to a state mental hospital. The facts are not in dispute and they show that the complaint was filed on March 7, 1955, and alleged that on December 4, 1952, Lee Henry Waller was adjudged insane by this court and committed to the Mendocine State Hospital and ever since has been a patient there. That William Henry Waller, who died September 5, 1954, was the father of Lee Henry Waller, which facts were admitted by the answer. The complaint further alleged that pursuant to Section 6651 of the Welfare and Institutions Code, the rate for the care, support and maintenance of Lee Henry Waller at said hospital was determined by the Director of Mental Hygiene to be $90 a month, effective December 4, 1952, redetermined at $100 a month, effective January 1, 1953, and again redetermined to be $111 a month, effective 1954. That a claim was filed in the estate of the deceased father for $2,184.09 for this care for the period of December 4, 1952, to September 4, 1954, and that said sum was now due and owing from the executrix from the funds of the estate. The answer of the defendant denied the establishment of the rate, admitted the filing of the claim and alleged its rejection October 27, 1954. The indebtedness of the estate to the Department of Mental Hygiene was denied. These facts are taken from the appellant's brief but are in accordance with the record. There was introduced at the trial evidence that the determinations by the Director of Mental Hygiene for the period involved were made as alleged. It was the plaintiff's position that the facts admitted, together with the documents introduced as evidence (plaintiff's exhibits 2, 3, 4) made a case whereby the plaintiff was entitled to a judgment.

The respondent argued that liability of the estate rests upon the ability to pay and he then introduced into evidence the inventory and appraisal of the estate (exhibit B) showing assets of $2,430. The evidence shows that the creditor's claims in the estate were offered as a group amounting to $666.83, exclusive of the rejected claim of the Department of Mental Hygiene. The evidence also showed that payments in wages to the decedent William Henry Waller amounted to $360 in 1953 and in 1954 of $510. There was also a statement from the Social Security Administration that for the period in question, the decedent received social security at the rate of $53.90 per month, and the evidence showed that this was all the income that the decedent had and there was no evidence to show whether the Department of Mental Hygiene had ever made a demand upon the decedent for the support of his son. Inasmuch as the decedent made less than the amount which he owed for 1953–54, that he had therefore no ability to pay.

There is no case law on the subject. The respondent asserts that the appellant cites no cases. It can also be stated that respondent cites no cases that are comparable to this case. Section 6650 of the Welfare and Institutions Code reads as follows:

> "The husband, wife, father, mother, or children of a mentally ill person or inebriate, the estates of such persons, and the guardian and administrator of the estate of such mentally ill person or inebriate, shall cause him to be properly and suitably cared for and maintained, and shall pay the costs and charges of his transportation to a state institution for the mentally ill or inebriates. The husband, wife, father, mother, or children of a mentally ill person or inebriate, and the administrators of their estates, and the estate of such mentally ill person or inebriate, shall be liable for his care, support, and maintenance in a state institution of which he is an inmate. The liability of such persons and estates shall be a joint and several liability, and such liability shall exist whether the mentally ill person or inebriate has become > an inmate of a state institution pursuant to the provisions of this code or pursuant to the provisions of Sections 1026, 1368, 1369, 1370, and 1372 of the Penal Code."

Section 6651 of the Welfare and Institutions Code provides that the Director of Mental Hygiene shall establish the rate for the care of the incompetent. It also authorizes the Director to reduce, remit, or cancel this obligation on satisfactory proof that the estate or relatives are unable to pay.

Section 6652 provides that the Department of Mental Hygiene shall collect all the costs and charges mentioned in Section 6650, and may take such action as is necessary to effect their collection within or without the State.

It will be seen from Section 6650 that the husband, wife, father, mother, or children of a mentally ill person or inebriate, their estates, and the estate of such mentally ill person or inebriate, shall be liable for his care, support, and maintenance in a state institution of which he is an inmate. We don't see any connection between the fact that the decedent did not have the ability to pay for his son, the inmate, while he was living and the fact that his estate would be liable. The liability of the father's estate is clearly stated in the section. The matter was briefed in the lower court on the question of the demurrer and the statute of limitations, and we have considered all the briefs and the demurrer was properly overruled. Section 345 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides for a special limitation on an action to recover money due on account of the support of patients at state or county hospitals and they may be commenced at any time within four years after the accrual of the same.

The case must be decided on the plain wording of the statutes and the state statutes say nothing whatever about the size of the estate which a man leaves. There is one case however, County of San Bernardino v. Simmons, 46 Cal.2d 394, 296 P.2d 329, which does hold that the Welfare and Institutions Code sets out what appears on the face to be a complete procedure for recovery by the county from a spouse or adult child who is able to support the aged relative.

[1, 2] If the statutory procedure set out in that Code is the exclusive method of recovery from a relative of old age support, as held in the Simmons case, then it follows by analogy that the procedure set out in that Code for recovery from a relative for support of an incompetent was likewise intended by the legislature to be the exclusive method. The Code does not mention the size of the deceased's estate as having any bearing on the right to recover. It might be that during his lifetime a man would not be able to pay for hospitalization of an incompetent son, or the father by good fortune might accumulate a substantial estate late in life. Irrespective of that, whatever estate he does leave is liable, and the fact that there are other claims is not any defense. In the probate of the estate the preferred claims will be paid, also the expenses for the administration, etc., and plaintiff will share as a general creditor on a pro rata basis whatever is left, as provided by the law in probate matters.

The judgment should be reversed and the judgment entered for the plaintiff.

Frederick BENANE et al., Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER COMPANY, a corporation, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 178.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, Alameda County, California.

June 28, 1956.

Action to recover wages deducted from paycheck of plaintiff-employees because of two hour absence during regular working hours on general election day. From judgment of the Municipal Court of the Oakland-Piedmont Judicial District, Joseph A. Murphy, J., for defendant, plaintiffs appealed. The Appellate Department of the Superior Court, Wagler, P. J., held that the "pay while voting" statute was constitutional and that collective bargaining agreement provision waiving employees' right to pay for time taken off to vote was invalid as against public policy and as contrary to express provision of law.

Reversed with direction.

1. Constitutional Law 🔑70(3)
Elections 🔑311

"Pay while voting" statute is constitutional and represents legitimate attempt by legislature to safeguard right of suffrage; and it is not province of courts to question wisdom of such legislation. West's Ann. Election Code, § 5699.

2. Statutes 🔑190

Statute free of ambiguity and uncertainty needs no construction and should be enforced as written.

3. Elections 🔑319

The "pay while voting" statute is unambiguous and entitles employee to absent himself from his employment for two consecutive hours, irrespective of whether he has other free time to vote. West's Ann. Election Code, § 5699.

4. Estoppel 🔑52

Doctrine of waiver is generally applicable to all rights and privileges to which person is legally entitled, whether secured by contract, conferred by statute, or guaranteed by constitution, provided, however, such rights and privileges rest in individual and are intended for his sole benefit.

5. Estoppel 🔑52

For purposes of Civil Code section permitting any one to waive advantage of law intended solely for his benefit, but providing that a law established for public reason cannot be contravened by private agreement, a law has been established for a public "reason" only if it has been enacted for protection of public generally, that is, if its tendency is to promote welfare of general public rather than small percentage of citizens. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3513; West's Ann.Election Code, § 5699.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Reason".

6. Elections 🔑319

Legislature is presumably cognizant of existing conditions, and changing conditions since adoption of "pay while voting" statute in 1891 would not render public policy therein expressed inapplicable, in absence of legislative action. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3513; West's Ann.Election Code, § 5699.

7. Elections 🔑319

Collective bargaining agreement provision, waiving employees' right to pay for time taken off to vote, was invalid as against public policy and as contrary to express provision of law. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1667; West's Ann.Election Code, §§ 5699, 11500, 11501.

8. Elections 🔑319

The "pay while voting" statute prohibits employer from making any deductions from employee's usual salary on account of time off while voting. West's Ann.Election Code, § 5699.

9. Contracts 🔑107

Normally, imposition by statute of penalty implies prohibition of act to which penalty is attached, and contract founded on such act is void.

10. Elections ⟹319

In view of Election Code section punishing wilful violation of election laws, the "pay while voting" statute must be deemed penal in character, even though statute itself contains no penal provision. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1667; West's Ann.Election Code, §§ 5699, 11500, 11501.

Jay A. Darwin and Charles H. Warren, San Francisco, for appellants.

Neumiller, Ditz, Beardslee & Sheppard, Stockton, for respondent.

WAGLER, Presiding Judge.

This is an appeal by 59 employees of respondent, International Harvester Company, from an adverse judgment rendered in their action to recover wages which were deducted from the pay check of each because of a two hour absence during regular working hours on November 4, 1952, a General Election Day.

The action is based upon Section 5699 California Election Code, which on the date in question, read as follows:

> "Every voter shall, on the day of every general, direct primary or presidential primary election at which he is entitled to vote, be entitled to absent himself from any service or employment in which he is then engaged for two consecutive hours between the time of opening and the time of closing the polls. The voter shall not, because of so absenting himself, be liable to any penalty, nor shall any deduction be made on account of such absence from his usual salary or wages."

The case was submitted to the trial court upon a stipulation of facts and the admissions contained in the pleadings. Only questions of law are therefore involved.

The pertinent facts are as follows:

On November 4, 1952, a General Election Day, each plaintiff was employed by the defendant at its Emeryville plant at an agreed hourly wage. The regularly scheduled working hours commenced at 7:30 a. m. and ended at 4:00 p. m. On the date in question, each plaintiff absented himself from his employment for two hours, to-wit: between 2:00 p. m. and 4:00 p. m. and each worked only six hours for which he has been paid. Defendant has refused to pay plaintiffs, or any of them, wages for the two hours aforementioned, although same has been duly demanded. On said Election Day the polls opened at 7:00 a. m., and were kept open until 7:00 p. m. If plaintiffs had not absented themselves from their employment, each plaintiff would still have had sufficient time between the conclusion of regular working hours at 4:00 p. m. and the closing of the polls within which to travel from his place of employment to his election poll and to vote. Each plaintiff did in fact vote in said General Election.

On November 6, 1950, the defendant as employer and International Union, United Automobile, Aircraft and Agricultural Implement Workers of America, and its affiliated local unions, Nos. 6, 57, 98, 226, 402, 817, 916, 988, 1101 and 1106, as bargaining representative, entered into a contract with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours and other conditions of employment. (Some of said local unions are located in states which do not have time off for voting statutes.) Said contract was in full force and effect on November 4, 1952, and each of the plaintiffs was an employee covered by said contract. Article XX of said contract provides as follows:

> "Employees shall be allowed the necessary time off, without pay, to vote in any Federal, State or Municipal Election."

Three questions of law were argued before the trial court. The same questions are raised on this appeal. They are:

(1) Is Section 5699, California Election Code, constitutional?

(2) Is Section 5699 ambiguous and therefore subject to judicial interpretation?

(3) What is the effect of Article XX of the collective bargaining contract above set forth upon the right of plaintiffs to claim compensation as provided by the Statute?

The learned trial judge in his memorandum opinion found Section 5699, California Election Code to be constitutional, but denied recovery to the plaintiffs on the ground that Article XX of the collective bargaining contract constituted a valid waiver of the statutory right to pay which was binding on each of the plaintiffs.

Constitutionality

[1] The constitutionality of Section 5699 has never been judicially determined by the Supreme Court of this State. Similar statutes have been upheld against attack on constitutional grounds by the courts of last resort in Missouri, State v. Day-Brite Lighting, Inc., 362 Mo. 299, 240 S.W. 2d 886; Minnesota, State v. International Harvester Co., Minn., 63 N.W.2d 547, and Iowa, Lorentzen v. Deere Manufacturing Co., Iowa, 66 N.W.2d 499.

The Supreme Court of the United States in Day-Brite Lighting v. State of Missouri, 342 U.S. 421, 72 S.Ct. 405, 96 L.Ed. 469, found the Missouri statute, which is similar to our own, free of infirmity under the due process and equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment and the contract clause of Article I, § 10.

A "pay while voting" statute was upheld by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of New York in People v. Ford Motor Co., 271 App.Div. 141, 63 N.Y.S.2d 697, and the statute in question has been held constitutional by Appellate Departments of the Superior Court in this state in Ballarini, etc., v. Schlage Lock Co., 100 Cal. App.2d Supp. 859, 226 P.2d 771, and Tidewater Associated Oil Co. v. Robinson, 22 Labor Cases 67,217. Summarily affirmed by the U. S. Supreme Court, 344 U.S. 804, 73 S.Ct. 27, 97 L.Ed. 626.

The foregoing decisions represent the *majority view. They are consistent with the evolution of an expanding police power. They all conclude, as do we, that "pay while voting" statutes represent a legitimate attempt by the legislature to safeguard the right of suffrage and it is not the province of the courts to question the wisdom of such legislation.

Ambiguity

[2, 3] Respondent contends that the statute should be construed by the courts as requiring the employer to give the designated time off only if the employee does not have two consecutive hours of free time during which he has sufficient opportunity to vote. With this contention we cannot agree. It is a cardinal rule that a statute free of ambiguity and uncertainty needs no construction and should be enforced as written. The language of Section 5699 is clear and unambiguous. There is, therefore, no room for statutory construction. We must conclude that the legislature meant what it said and that each employee shall be entitled "to absent himself from * * * employment * * * for two consecutive hours" irrespective of other free time.

Waiver

[4-10] By the plain terms of the collective bargaining contract, the appellants waived their right to compensation while taking time off to vote. This waiver provision, however, they contend, is of no effect, because it is contrary both to public policy and to express provision of law.

The doctrine of waiver is generally applicable to all rights and privileges to which a person is legally entitled, whether secured by contract, conferred by statute, or guaranteed by the Constitution, provided, however, such rights and privileges rest in the individual and are intended for his sole benefit. Miller & Lux, Inc., v. San Joaquin Light & Power Corp., 120 Cal. App. 589, 8 P.2d 560.

The policy of the law in this state in this regard is expressed in Civ.Code, § 3513 in the following language:

> "Any one may waive the advantage of a law intended solely for his benefit. But a law established for a public reason cannot be contravened by a private agreement."

A law has been established "for a public reason" only if it has been enacted for the protection of the public generally, i. e. if its tendency is to promote the welfare of the general public rather than a small percentage of citizens. 12 Am.Jur. 661; In re Kazas, 22 Cal.App.2d 161, 70 P.2d 962; California Bank v. Stimson, 89 Cal.App.2d 552, 201 P.2d 39; De Haviland v. Warner Bros. Pictures, 67 Cal.App.2d 225, 153 P.2d 983.

In California Bank v. Stimson, supra, it was held that Code Civ.Proc. § 580a prescribing the procedure for securing a deficiency judgment was adopted to promote the public welfare by shielding the debtor class from oppression. As such, said Section was construed as a declaration of a public policy of the state, and not subject to waiver.

In De Haviland v. Warner Brothers Pictures, supra [67 Cal.App.2d 225, 153 P.2d 988], Miss De Haviland waived the provisions of Section 2855 of the Labor Code, which limits a contract of personal service to "seven years from the commencement of service under it". This she did by agreeing that her employer should have the right to suspend her for a period of periods when she should fail, refuse or neglect to perform her service to the full limit of her ability, etc., and that the employer at its option should have the further right to extend the term of the contract for a time equal to the periods of suspension. It was held that the waiver was invalid since "the rights of employees as now declared by 2855 of the Labor Code fall squarely within the prohibition of section 3513 of the Civil Code, that rights created in the public interest may not be contravened by private agreement".

It is difficult to envision legislation enacted for greater public reason than that designed to safeguard the right of suffrage by the working class. Indeed, the major premise upon which the constitutionality of "pay while voting" statutes has been sustained in this and in other states is that the police power pursuant to which such legislation is enacted extends to "all of the great public needs", including an increase in election participation and the free exercise of the right to vote.

The learned trial judge in his memorandum opinion expressed the view that due to a change in conditions since the adoption of the statute in 1891, the public policy therein expressed should no longer apply. The fallacy underlying this reasoning is that it permits the courts to overrule a public policy already expressed by the legislature in a field which is peculiarly within the prerogative of the legislature. The legislature has met many times since the enactment of this statute. It too, is presumably cognizant of existing conditions. Yet it had not, prior to the commencement of the instant action seen fit to change the statute.

Not only is the waiver provision of the contract invalid because against public policy, but also because it is contrary to an express provision of law. Civil Code, § 1667. Respondent tacitly concedes that the statute prohibits the employer from making any deductions from the employee's usual salary on account of time off while voting. It also recognizes the rule that normally the imposition by a statute of a penalty implies a prohibition of the act to which the penalty is attached, and that a contract founded on such an act is void. Respondent contends, however, that Section 5699 is not penal in character, because the section itself contains no penal provision. This argument entirely overlooks the provisions of Sections 11500 and 11501 of the California Election Code, which read as follows:

> 11500. "All the provisions of this division apply to both final elections and primary elections."
> 11501. "Every person who willfully violates any of the provisions of the laws of this State relating to elections is, unless a different punishment is prescribed by this code, punishable by a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars ($1000), or by imprisonment in the State Prison not exceeding five years, or by both."

In State v. International Harvester Co., 63 N.W.2d 547, the Supreme Court of Minnesota had before it on appeal statutes quite similar to the ones involved in the instant case. Also involved was a collective bargaining contract with provisions identical to Article XX of the collective bargaining contract under which these appellants were employed. The Supreme Court held that the waiver provision in the contract was no defense to a prosecution instituted as a result of a deduction from wages representing time off on Election Day. We would be compelled to hold likewise in case of a similar prosecution under our own statute.

The judgment for the defendant is reversed and the court is directed to enter judgment for the plaintiffs as prayed.

v.
Robert M. NEWELL, Defendant and Respondent.
L. A. 23337.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.
Aug. 3, 1956.

Wife brought action against husband. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Elmer D. Doyle, J., entered an order which restrained wife from prosecuting a divorce action in a foreign state against husband, from taking depositions for use in the divorce action in the foreign state, and from taking any steps in any court in any foreign state, leading to a determination of the rights to custody of the minor children of the parties, and the wife appealed. The Supreme Court held that where it appeared that the wife had received a foreign divorce decree, which had been affirmed, and that custody orders, which superseded the custody provision of the order, which was the subject of the appeal, had been made by the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, there was no issue involved, which required a determination by the Supreme Court.

Appeal dismissed.

Opinion, 289 P.2d 22, vacated.

Appeal and Error ⚷781(4)

Where it appeared on appeal to California Supreme Court from order of Superior Court restraining wife from prosecuting divorce action in foreign state, from taking depositions of certain named persons or others for use in divorce action, and from taking any steps in any foreign state leading to determination of rights of custody of children, that wife had received a foreign divorce decree, which had been affirmed, and that custody orders had been made by California Superior Court superseding the custody provision of the order, which was the subject of the appeal, the appeal would be dismissed on grounds that there was no issue involved requiring a determination by the Supreme Court.

Ernest W. Pitney and Glenn A. Lane, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Theodore A. Chester, Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

Plaintiff, Gertrude B. Newell, appeals from an order of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, made on June 23, 1954, which restrained her from prosecuting an action for divorce in Idaho against Robert Newell; from taking depositions of certain named persons or of any other persons for use in such Idaho divorce action; and from taking any steps in any court in any state, other than the California court, leading to a determination of the rights of custody of the minor children of the parties.

Before this case was placed upon our calendar for oral argument, we propounded four questions to counsel for the respective parties in an endeavor to ascertain whether or not the issues involved on this appeal had become moot. In response to the questions propounded, briefs were filed by counsel for the respective parties.

The briefs filed by the parties in answer to our questions show that Gertrude, plaintiff and appellant here, received an Idaho decree of divorce on August 31, 1954, which was affirmed by the Supreme Court of Idaho on February 27, 1956. 293 P.2d 663. It follows, therefore, that the provisions of the restraining order prohibiting her from seeking a decree of divorce in Idaho are no longer an issue. It also appears that there is no action pending in Idaho in which depositions of California witnesses would be needed. In answer to our question concerning the order presently in effect concerning the custody of the minor children of the parties, we are advised that on March 16, 1955, two identical custody orders were made by the Superior Court of Los Angeles County in which legal custody was awarded jointly to the parties. These two orders supersede the custody provision of the order which is the subject of this appeal. There are appeals presently pending in the District Court of Appeal from the orders of March 16, 1955.

We conclude, therefore, that there is no issue involved in this appeal which requires a determination by this court.

The appeal is dismissed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.
Robert S. VOGEL (Robert S. Neilsen), Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 5778.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.
June 28, 1956.
Rehearing Denied July 24, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of bigamy. The Superior Court, San Diego County, John A. Hewicker, J., rendered judgment on the jury's verdict, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that defendant's evidence that his first wife married another before his remarriage should have been admitted and that exclusion of his testimony as to such wife's statement to him that she was going to divorce him was error prejudicial to him as depriving him of defense of bona fide reasonable belief that facts leaving him free to remarry existed.

Judgment reversed.

Shenk, J., dissented.

Opinion, 285 P.2d 731, vacated.

1. Bigamy 🔑1

A husband having bona fide reasonable belief that facts leaving him free to remarry existed when he married second wife is not guilty of bigamy. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 281.

2. Bigamy 🔑1

To constitute bigamy, there must be a union of act and wrongful intent. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 20, 26, subd. 4, 281.

3. Criminal Law 🔑26

Union of act and wrongful intent is invariable element of every crime, unless excluded by statute expressly or by necessary implication. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 20.

4. Bigamy 🔑1

The Penal Code section declaring person having spouse living, who marries any other person, except in cases specified in next section, guilty of bigamy, and such next section, providing that preceding section does not extend to person whose spouse has been absent for five successive years without being known to such person within that time to be living or to any person by reason of former marriage which has been pronounced void, annulled, or dissolved by judgment of competent court, do not expressly nor reasonably imply exclusion of wrongful intent as element of such crime. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 20, 26, subd. 4, 281, 282.

5. Bigamy 🔑1

Exclusion of wrongful intent as element of crime of bigamy cannot be implied from mere omission of any reference to intent in statutory definition of bigamy, as such omission was meant only to shift to defendant burden of proving that he did not have requisite intent. West's Ann.Pen. Code, §§ 20, 281.

6. Criminal Law 🔑26

To constitute a crime, an evil act and evil intent must concur, so that intent with which unlawful act was done, as well as other material facts stated in indictment, must be proved by either direct or indirect evidence tending to establish fact or by inference of law from other facts proved.

7. Criminal Law 🔑24, 330

An unlawful act proved to have been done by person accused thereof is presumed to have been intended, and burden is on him to prove justification or excuse overcoming such presumption.

8. Bigamy 🔑2, 11

In prosecution for bigamy, state makes prima facie case by proof that defendant's second marriage was entered into while his first spouse was still living, and his bona fide reasonable belief that facts leaving him free to remarry existed at time of second marriage is a defense to be proved by him. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 281.

9. Bigamy 🔑1

Exclusion of wrongful intent as element of bigamy need not be implied from statutory exceptions of person whose former spouse has been absent for five successive years without being known to such person within that time to be living and person whose former marriage has been pronounced void, annulled, or dissolved by judgment of competent court, from application of penal code section defining bigamy, as such exceptions are not all inclusive. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 281, 282.

10. Bigamy 🔑2

Mere enumeration in statute of specific defenses appropriate to particular crimes, such as bigamy, does not exclude general defenses based on penal code sections requiring union or joint operation of act and intent in every crime and declaring certain classes of persons incapable of committing crimes. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 20, 26, 281, 282.

11. Criminal Law 🔑31

An honest and reasonable belief in existence of circumstances which, if true, would make act for which a person is indicted an innocent act, is good defense, both at common law and in cases of statutory offenses, unless excluded expressly or by necessary implication.

12. Bigamy 🔑8

In prosecution for bigamy, evidence that a person is generally reputed to be married is admissible as tending to show actual marriage, and same evidence, if offered by People, may reasonably form basis for honest belief by defendant that there was such marriage and that it was legally entered into, so that he was free to remarry. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 281, 1106.

13. Bigamy 🔑8

In prosecution for bigamy, defendant's evidence that his first wife married another before defendant's second marriage should have been admitted. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 281.

14. Bigamy 🔑8
Witnesses 🔑390

In prosecution for bigamy, defendant's testimony as to his first wife's statement to him before his second marriage that she was going to divorce him was admissible on issue of his belief that she had done so and to impeach her testimony that she did not make such statement. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 281.

15. Criminal Law 🔑1170(1)

In bigamy prosecution, exclusion of defendant's testimony that his first wife told him before his second marriage that she was going to divorce him was prejudicial to him as depriving him of defense of bona fide reasonable belief at time of his remarriage that facts leaving him free to remarry existed. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 281.

16. Bigamy 🔑2

In bigamy prosecution, defendant did not waive defense of his bona fide reasonable belief that facts leaving him free to remarry existed at time of his second marriage because of first wife's statement to him that she was going to divorce him by offering evidence on issue of her actual procurement of divorce rather than issue of his good faith, where trial judge expressly stated that he would exclude all such evidence. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 281.

17. Bigamy 🔑2

The Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act does not preclude bona fide reasonable belief of war veteran, charged with bigamy, that facts leaving him free to remarry existed at time of his second marriage. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 281; Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940, 50 U.S.C.A.Appendix, § 501 et seq.

18. Armed Services 🔑34.12

A default judgment, taken against serviceman without complying with provisions of Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, is not void, but voidable at his instance within 90 days after termination of his service on proper showing of prejudice. Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940, 50 U.S.C.A.Appendix, § 501 et seq.

Buttermore & Lightner and Wesley B. Buttermore, Jr., San Diego, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Chief Asst. Atty. Gen., John S. McInerny and William E. James, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondent.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction entered on a jury verdict finding him guilty of bigamy and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

On September 17, 1944, defendant married Peggy Lambert in a civil ceremony in New Orleans, Louisiana. He was in the Coast Guard and was sent overseas six days after the marriage. Upon his discharge in December, 1945, he returned to Peggy. In 1947 they were remarried in a religious ceremony in New Orleans. They had two children. Peggy testified that they separated several times, and defendant also testified that the marriage was an unhappy one.

In September, 1950, defendant was called to active duty for the Korean War. Peggy received an allotment as his wife until November 13, 1951, when he was released from active duty. Upon his release he did not return to Peggy.

In December, 1951, Peggy and the children moved to St. Louis, Missouri. On April 15, 1952, she was seriously injured in an automobile accident. Defendant learned of her injury on May 19, 1952, went to St. Louis, and took her and the children to New Orleans, where he remained until August, 1952.

On March 6, 1953, defendant married Stelma Roberts, the prosecuting witness, in San Diego County, California. Stelma was granted a final decree of divorce on July 1, 1954.

At the trial Peggy testified that she had never divorced defendant. She admitted that she had obtained a driver's license in her maiden name in 1951. Defendant admitted that he had not divorced Peggy and conceded that he could not prove by record or other direct evidence that she had divorced him. He sought to testify that in 1950, before his call to active duty, Peggy told him that she was going to divorce him in a jurisdiction unknown to him so that he could not contest the custody of their children. The court rejected such testimony as immaterial. He offered other evidence tending to show that during his absence Peggy had married an Earl Heck, namely, testimony of Mr. and Mrs. Lucas, owners of an apartment in St. Louis, Missouri, that Peggy and the children lived in one of their apartments with Heck during the first four months of 1952, that she received mail, telephone calls, and visitors as Mrs. Earl Heck, and that when she was injured in the automobile accident she was identified as Mrs. Heck. The court rejected the evidence on the ground that it would show merely a "barnyard romance" and that under People v. Kelly, 32 Cal.App.2d 624, 90 P.2d 605, defendant's good faith belief that she had divorced him and married Heck was immaterial.

[1-4] We have concluded that defendant is not guilty of bigamy, if he had a bona fide and reasonable belief that facts existed that left him free to remarry. As in other crimes, there must be a union of act and wrongful intent.[1] So basic is this requirement that it is an invariable element of every crime unless excluded expressly or by necessary implication.[2] Sections 281 and 282[3] do not expressly exclude it nor can its exclusion therefrom be reasonably implied.

[5–7] Certainly its exclusion cannot be implied from the mere omission of any reference to intent in the definition of bigamy, for the commissioners' annotation to section 20 makes it clear that such an omission was not meant to exclude intent as an element of the crime but to shift to defendant the burden of proving that he did not have the requisite intent. The commissioners' quote at length from People v. Harris, 29 Cal. 678, 681–682. That case involved a conviction for twice voting at the same election. The defendant sought to defend upon the ground that he was so drunk at the time he voted the second time that he did not know what he was doing and that he therefore had no criminal intent. The court held that the trial court erred in excluding from the jury any consideration of the mental state of the defendant by reason of his intoxicated condition, stating: "It is laid down in the books on the subject, that it is a universal doctrine that to constitute what the law deems a crime there must concur both an evil act and an evil intent. Actus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea.—1 Bish. on Cr.Law, Secs. 227, 229; 3 Greenl.Ev., Sec. 13. Therefore the intent with which the unlawful act was done must be proved as well as the other material facts stated in the indictment; which may be by evidence either direct or indirect, tending to establish the fact, or by inference of law from other facts proved. When the act is proved to have been done by the accused, if it be an act in itself unlawful, the law in the first instance presumes it to have been intended, and the proof of justification or excuse lies on the defendant to overcome this legal and natural presumption.

[1] "In every crime or public offense there must exist a union, or joint operation of act and intent, or criminal negligence." Pen.Code, § 20.

"All persons are capable of committing crimes except those belonging to the following classes: * * *

"Four—Persons who committed the act or made the omission charged under an ignorance or mistake of fact, which disproves any criminal intent." Pen. Code, § 26, subd. 4.

[2] The commissioners' annotation to section 20 makes it abundantly clear that the word "intent" in that section means wrongful intent. Thus, they quoted Bishop (1 Bishop's Crim.Law, § 227): "'There is only one criterion by which the guilt of men is to be tested. It is whether the mind is criminal. * * * It is, therefore, a principle of our legal system, as probably of every other, that the essence of the offense is the wrongful intent, without which it cannot exist.' The opinion of Mr. Bishop finds full support in the following adjudged cases.—[Citations.]" (Commissioners' annotation to section 20, California Penal Code of 1872.)

Under many statutes enacted for the protection of the public health and safety, e. g., traffic and food and drug regulations, criminal sanctions are relied upon even if there is no wrongful intent. These offenses usually involve light penalties and no moral obloquy or damage to reputation. Although criminal sanctions are relied upon, the primary purpose of the statutes is regulation rather than punishment or correction. The offenses are not crimes in the orthodox sense, and wrongful intent is not required in the interest of enforcement. (See, Sayre, Public Welfare Offenses, 33 Col.L.Rev. 55, 72–75; Hall, Prologomena to a Science of Criminal Law, 89 U.Pa.L.Rev. 549, 568–569; Wechsler, The American Law Institute; Some Observation On Its Model Penal Code, 42 A.B.A. 321, 324.)

[3] "Every person having a husband or wife living, who marries any other person, except in the cases specified in the next section, is guilty of bigamy." Pen.Code, § 281.

"The last section does not extend—

"1. To any person by reason of any former marriage, whose husband or wife by such marriage has been absent for five successive years without being known to such person within that time to be living; nor,

"2. To any person by reason of any former marriage which has been pronounced void, annulled, or dissolved by the judgment of a competent Court." Pen.Code, § 282.

—3 Greenleaf's Ev., Secs. 13, 14, 18. Now, when the statute declares the act of voting more than once at the same election by the same person to be a felony, it must be understood as implying that the interdicted act must be done with a criminal intention, or under circumstances from which such intention may be inferred. The defendant's counsel, at the trial, seems to have apprehended the true rule of law on the subject, and to have regarded the burden as on the defendant to show by evidence that the act of his voting the second time was not criminal, * * *." The commissioners go on to state: "The opinion of the Court in People v. Harris is given at length because it is a correct and authoritative exposition of Sec. 20; * *."

[8] The "correct and authoritative exposition of Sec. 20" as applied in People v. Harris to the crime of twice voting in the same election applies with even greater force to the crime of bigamy and compels the conclusion that guilty knowledge, which was formerly a part of the definition of bigamy[4] was omitted from section 281 to reallocate the burden of proof on that issue in a bigamy trial. Thus, the prosecution makes a prima facie case upon proof that the second marriage was entered into while the first spouse was still living (see, People v. Priestly, 17 Cal.App. 171, 173–174, 118 P. 965; People v. Huntley, 93 Cal.App. 504, 506, 269 P. 750, and his bona fide and reasonable belief that facts existed that left the defendant free to remarry is a defense to be proved by the defendant.

[9, 10] Nor must the exclusion of wrongful intent be implied from the two exceptions set forth in section 282. Obviously they are not all inclusive, for it cannot be seriously contended that an insane person or a person who married for the second time while unconscious, Pen.Code, § 26, subds. 3, 5, could be convicted of bigamy. Moreover, the mere enumeration of specific defenses appropriate to particular crimes does not exclude general defenses based on sections 20 and 26 (see, 2 Lewis' Sutherland, Statutory Construction, § 495, p. 924; 23 Cal.Jur., Statutes, § 118, p. 742), for the enumerated defenses in no way conflict with such general defenses.

It is significant that the commissioners did not list among the precedents of sections 281 and 282 the case of Commonwealth v. Mash, 7 Metc. 472, 48 Mass. 472, decided in 1844, which construed a similar statute to preclude a bona fide and reasonable belief in the death of the prior spouse as a defense to bigamy. Nor do any of the precedents listed refer to that case or to the principle for which it stands. (See, California Penal Code of 1872, annotations to sections 281 and 282; see also, 1 Bishop's Crim.Law, 9th ed., § 303(a), note 6, pp. 206–214.)

It is also significant that under section 61, subd. 2, of the Civil Code a subsequent marriage contracted by a person when the former husband or wife of such person "is generally reputed or believed by such person to be dead * * * is valid until its nullity is adjudged by a competent tribunal", even if the former husband or wife has not been absent for five years and the general repute or belief proves to be erroneous. It would be anomalous to hold that although in the Civil Code the Legislature sanctions such a marriage and makes it valid until it is annulled (it may never be annulled and may therefore always be valid), in the Penal Code the Legislature makes such a person guilty of bigamy. (See Armstrong, California Family Law, 39–41.) Nor would it be reasonable to hold that a person is guilty of bigamy who remarries in good faith in reliance on a judgment of divorce or annulment that is subsequently found not to be the "judgment of a competent Court" Pen.Code, § 282, particularly when such a judgment is obtained by the former husband or wife of such person in any one of the numerous jurisdictions in which such judgments can be obtained. Since it is often difficult for laymen to know when a judgment is not that of a competent court, we cannot reasonably expect them always to have such knowledge and make them criminals if their bona fide belief proves to be erroneous.

The foregoing construction of sections 281 and 282 is consistent with good sense and justice. (See, dissenting opinion of McComb, J., in People v. Kelly, 32 Cal. App.2d 624, 628, 90 P.2d 605.) The severe penalty imposed for bigamy,[5] the serious loss of reputation conviction entails, the infrequency of the offense, and the fact that it has been regarded for centuries as a crime involving moral turpitude, make it extremely unlikely that the Legislature meant to include the morally innocent to make sure the guilty did not escape.

[11] People v. Hartman, 130 Cal. 487, 62 P. 823, is contrary to our opinion herein, but the basis of that decision was repudiated in Matter of Application of Ahart, 172 Cal. 762, 764–765, 159 P. 160, 161, in plain language expressly referring to bigamy. The Ahart case involved an ordinance prohibiting the transportation of liquor. This court held that the ordinance did not apply to innocent transportation, stating: "The case comes quite clearly within the reasoning and principle of the English case of Regina v. Tolson (L.R. 23 Q.B.Div. 168, [1889], s. c., 40 Alb.L.J. 250), which case itself receives detailed consideration in 2 Lewis' Sutherland Statutory Construction, § 527. The case was a criminal charge against a woman for a bigamous marriage. It has been held that one who marries a second time under an honest but erroneous belief that a decree of divorce which had been granted was valid is afforded no protection by the invalid decree, and that evidence of his good faith will be excluded. 2 Wharton Crim. Ev. (8th Ed.), § 1695a. But in the later Tolson Case the woman had married five years, instead of seven years, after her husband's desertion of her, under the belief held in good faith that her husband was dead. The proposition considered was whether honest belief and good faith constituted a defense. It was conceded that the prisoner 'falls within the very words of the statute.' Cave, J., said: 'At common law an honest and reasonable belief in the existence of circumstances, which, if true, would make the act for which the person is indicted an innocent act, has always been held to be a good defense. * * * So far as I am aware it has never been suggested that these exceptions do not equally apply to the case of statutory offenses unless they are excluded expressly or by necessary implication.' " 172 Cal. 764–765, 159 P.; see also, Thomas v. The King, 59 Com.L.Rep. [Australia] 279. For the foregoing reasons People v. Hartman, supra, 130 Cal. 487, 62 P. 823, which was overruled sub silentio in Matter of Application of Ahart, supra, 172 Cal. 762, 159 P. 160, is now expressly overruled and People v. Kelly, 32 Cal.App. 2d 624, 90 P.2d 605, is disapproved.

[12–16] In a prosecution for bigamy evidence that a person is generally reputed to be married is admissible as tending to show actual marriage. (See, Pen.Code, § 1106; People v. Beevers, 99 Cal. 286, 289, 33 P. 844; People v. Van Wie, 72 Cal.App. 2d 227, 233, 164 P.2d 290.) The same evidence that would tend to prove an actual marriage, if offered by the People, could reasonably form the basis for an honest belief by a defendant that there was such marriage, that it was legally entered into, and that he was, therefore, free to remarry. The evidence offered to show that Peggy had married Earl Heck should therefore have been admitted. The statement allegedly made by Peggy that she was going to divorce defendant was admissible on the issue of his belief that she had done so and it was also admissible to impeach her testimony that she did not tell him that she was going to divorce him.

[5] "Bigamy is punishable by a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars ($5,000) or by imprisonment in a county jail not exceeding one year or in the state prison not exceeding ten years." Pen.Code, § 283.)

The exclusion of this evidence was clearly prejudicial, for it deprived defendant of the defense of a bona fide and reasonable belief that facts existed that left him free to remarry. Defendant did not waive this defense by offering the evidence on the issue of Peggy's actually getting a divorce rather than on the issue of good faith, for the trial court expressly stated that it would exclude all such evidence on the basis of People v. Kelly, supra, 32 Cal.App. 2d 624, 90 P.2d 605. (See People v. Kitchens, 46 Cal.2d 260, 294 P.2d 17; Cf. Heimann v. City of Los Angeles, 30 Cal.2d 746, 757, 185 P.2d 597.)

[17, 18] There is nothing in the provisions of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940, 54 Stats. 1178, 1180, 50 U.S.C.A.Appendix, § 501 et seq., that would preclude such a belief. A default judgment taken without complying with the provisions of the act is not void but voidable within 90 days after termination of service at the instance of the serviceman upon proper showing of prejudice. Allen v. Allen, 30 Cal.2d 433, 435–436, 182 P.2d 551; see also, Kromm v. Kromm, 84 Cal.App.2d 523, 530, 191 P.2d 115; Wilterdink v. Wilterdink, 81 Cal.App.2d 526, 532–534, 184 P.2d 527.

The judgment and order are reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and CARTER, SCHAUER, SPENCE and McCOMB, JJ., concur.

SHENK, Justice.

I dissent.

The defendant was charged by information with the violation of section 281 of the Penal Code, a felony, in that on March 6, 1953, in San Diego County, he married Stelma G. Roberts, having a lawful wife, Peggy Vogel, then living. He was found guilty as charged. Imposition of sentence was suspended and probation was granted on condition that he spend four months in the adult detention facility in San Diego; that he support his children in accordance with a support agreement; that he should not leave the State of California; that within one year he "absolve" a marriage contract made by him with a Mrs. Harrington on February 15, 1954, in Tiajuana, Mexico.

The prosecution proved the successive marriages of the defendant, to Peggy in 1944 and to Stelma in 1953. Peggy testified that she had not obtained a divorce from the defendant and that she had not received any notice indicating that he was seeking a divorce from her. In the absence of conflicting evidence this would be a showing sufficient to support a conviction for bigamy. The defendant conceded that he had not obtained a divorce from Peggy.

Bigamy is a statutory crime, defined in section 281 of the Penal Code, as follows: "Every person having a husband or wife living, who marries any other person, except in the cases specified in the next section, is guilty of bigamy." The exceptions contained in section 282 are as follows:

> "The last section does not extend—
> "1. To any person by reason of any former marriage, whose husband or wife by such marriage has been absent for five successive years without being known to such person within that time to be living; nor
> "2. To any person by reason of any former marriage which has been pronounced void, annulled, or dissolved by the judgment of a competent Court."

While the legislature has provided a condition and a term of years after which a person may in good faith reasonably conclude that an absent spouse is dead, it has provided no such condition or term for concluding that an absent spouse has procured a divorce. The legislature has not, either expressly or by reasonable implication, made a mere belief in the existence of a prior divorce a defense to a bigamy prosecution.

The defendant's contention that he had married Stelma honestly believing that Peggy had theretofore divorced him was properly rejected. "It is a familiar rule that, to constitute crime, there must be a union of act and intent; but our Code provides that 'the word "willfully," when applied to the intent with which an act is done or omitted, implies simply a purpose or willingness to commit the act, or make the omission referred to. It does not require any intent to violate law, or to injure another, or to acquire any advantage.'" People v. O'Brien, 96 Cal. 171, 176, 31 P. 45, 47; People v. Hartman, 130 Cal. 487, 490, 62 P. 823. It was said in Matter of Ahart, 172 Cal. 762, at page 764, 159 P. 160, at page 161: "[S]some acts [are] made crimes by the very terms of the law where the fraudulent or wicked intent is conclusively presumed from the commission of the act itself, or where the act is denounced as criminal without regard to the facinorous intent." The act of bigamy involves moral turpitude on the part of the bigamist. It also creates a serious mischief to society which the law seeks to prevent by penal sanctions.

The opinion refers to the comment of the Code Commissioners that the opinion in People v. Harris, 29 Cal. 678, 679, is a correct and authoritative exposition of section 20 of the Penal Code. It was there held that a defendant may introduce evidence to show that he was intoxicated at the time he committed the act complained of (voting twice at the same election), not as an excuse for the crime but to enable the jury to determine whether he was incapable of knowing what he was doing by reason of intoxication. That rule has no application to a charge of bigamy where the defendant voluntarily and consciously has entered into a second marriage knowing that his first spouse is alive. A specific intent to commit the crime of bigamy is not required by statute expressly nor by reasonable interpretation. The validity of marriages is of sufficient social importance to uphold the legislature's purpose to provide that where the specific statutory exceptions do not apply a person remarries at his peril. Any change in this regard should be made by the legislature.

This court holds that the evidence rejected by the trial court was admissible on the issue whether facts existed which left the defendant free to remarry. I cannot agree with this conclusion. The defendant conceded that he could offer no direct evidence of a divorce. As circumstantial evidence he offered the following: a purported declaration by Peggy in 1950 that she was going to divorce him in a jurisdiction unknown to him; a driver's license issued to Peggy in her maiden name in 1951 in Louisiana, and testimony of a Mr. and Mrs. Lucas tending to show cohabitation between Peggy and Earl Heck in 1952.

Defendant offered to prove Peggy's 1950 declaration on the theory that it was admissible under the Hillmon doctrine as evidence that she had later obtained a divorce. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hillmon, 145 U.S. 285, 12 S.Ct. 909, 36 L.Ed. 706. He also cites People v. Alcalde, 24 Cal.2d 177, 148 P.2d 627, People v. Silver, 16 Cal.2d 714, 108 P.2d 4, and People v. Chenault, 74 Cal. App.2d 487, 169 P.2d 29, in support of his position. Declarations of intent have generally been held admissible to prove a completed act only where the declarant is dead or otherwise unavailable, People v. Alcalde, 24 Cal.2d 177, 185–188, 148 P.2d 627, supra; People v. Weatherford, 27 Cal.2d 401, 420–423, 164 P.2d 753, or where they fall within other exceptions to the hearsay rule. People v. Silver, supra, 16 Cal.2d 714, 108 P.2d 4; People v. Chenault, supra, 74 Cal.App.2d 487, 169 P.2d 29; People v. Fong Sing, 38 Cal.App. 253, 175 P. 911. This declaration is not within those exceptions.

In those jurisdictions where an honest but erroneous belief, reasonably entertained, that a valid divorce has been granted as to a prior marriage constitutes a defense to a prosecution for bigamy, it is required that a bona fide attempt be made to ascertain the facts. Lesueur v. State, 1911, 176 Ind. 448, 95 N.E. 239; Robinson v. State, 1909, 6 Ga.App. 696, 65 S.E. 792; Squire v. State, 1874, 46 Ind. 459; Baker v. State, 1910, 86 Neb. 775, 126 N.W. 300, 27 L.R.A., N.S., 1097; see also Gillum v. State, 1941, 141 Tex.Cr.R. 162, 147 S.W.2d 778; White v. State, 1928, 157 Tenn. 446, 9 S.W.2d 702, 704; 10 C.J.S., Bigamy, § 7, pp. 367–368;

State v. Hendrickson, 67 Utah 15, 245 P. 375, 57 A.L.R. 786. A mere belief, without a further showing of diligent inquiry and investigation is clearly insufficient.

The fact that a driver's license was issued to Peggy under her maiden name would not have furnished proof of divorce. This license was obtained during the time when she was receiving allotment checks as the defendant's wife. In order to obtain a default divorce during the time he was in military service she was required by law, Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940, 54 Stats. 1180, ch. 888, § 200, to execute an affidavit that her husband was in military service. The presumption is that she obeyed the law. Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 33.

Nor was the testimony of Mr. and Mrs. Lucas admissible as proof of a divorce. The defendant contends that their evidence would have established a marriage by cohabitation and repute from which a presumption of validity would arise. Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 30. The presumption in favor of the legality of a marriage does not arise in favor of a marriage proved solely by cohabitation and repute. In view of the statutory requirement of solemnization it arises only in favor of a marriage regularly solemnized. McKibbin v. McKibbin, 139 Cal. 448, 73 P. 143; Wilcox v. Wilcox, 171 Cal. 770, 155 P. 95; In re Estate of Hughson, 173 Cal. 448, 160 P. 548; see In re Estate of Gill, 23 Cal.App.2d 212, 72 P.2d 771. Moreover the presumption of validity of a ceremonial marriage is applied only in civil cases. The authorities are in general agreement that it may not be relied upon by a defendant in a bigamy prosecution. Fletcher v. State, 169 Ind. 77, 81 N.E. 1083; 7 Am.Jur. p. 769, note 11.5; Annotations 14 A.L.R.2d 34; 34 A.L.R. 464, 491.

Section 4½ of Article VI of the Constitution of this state enjoins upon the court the duty not to reverse a judgment or an order denying a motion for a new trial on account of an improper "rejection of evidence * * * unless, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, * * * the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice."

The rejected evidence was not competent to prove that Peggy had obtained a divorce. Even if the rejection of that evidence was error no prejudice resulted. The defendant received a fair trial. The jury was fully and fairly instructed and the proof of guilt of violation of the statute was without substantial conflict.

I would affirm the judgment and order.

Rehearing denied; SHENK, J., dissenting.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

In a prior action defendant Dimond sought to recover possession of personal property from plaintiffs, LeFave and others. Dimond invoked the provisional remedy of claim and delivery, filing an undertaking as required by statute. (See Code Civ.Proc. §§ 509, 512.[1]) After the sheriff served the papers relating to the provisional remedy, LeFave et al. furnished a redelivery bond pursuant to section 514[2] and, as permitted by the statute, retained possession of the property. Dimond was unsuccessful in that action, and the present suit, based on the claim and delivery undertaking, was brought by LeFave et al. against Dimond and his surety to recover attorney's fees incurred in defending the prior action. When the matter came on for trial, the court sustained an objection to the introduction of evidence on the ground that the complaint did not state a cause of action, and LeFave et al. appeal from the ensuing judgment.

[1] Ordinarily, fees paid to attorneys are not recoverable from the opposing party as costs, damages or otherwise, in the absence of express statutory or contractual authority. Code Civ.Proc. § 1021; Viner v. Untrecht, 26 Cal.2d 261, 272, 158 P.2d 3; Section 512 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which sets forth the requirements of the undertaking to be furnished in claim and delivery, provides for the payment to the defendant "of such sum as may from any cause be recovered against the plaintiff." Section 667 of the Code of Civil Procedure[3] permits either the plaintiff or

[1] Section 509 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "The plaintiff in an action to recover the possession of personal property may, at the time of issuing the summons, or at any time before answer, claim the delivery of such property to him as provided in this Chapter."

Section 512 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads, in part, "Upon a receipt of the affidavit and notice, with a written undertaking, executed by two or more sufficient sureties, * * * to the effect that they are bound to the defendant in double the value of the property as stated in the affidavit for the prosecution of the action, for the return of the property to the defendant, if return thereof be adjudged, and for the payment to him of such sum as may from any cause be recovered against the plaintiff, such officer must forthwith take the property described in the affidavit * *."

[2] Section 514 of the Code of Civil Procedure sets forth the procedure by which a defendant may require the return of the property upon giving to the officer making the service a written undertaking, executed by two or more sureties, "to the effect that they are bound in double the value of the property, as stated in the affidavit of the plaintiff, for the delivery thereof to the plaintiff, if such delivery be adjudged, and for the payment to him of such sum as may, for any cause, be recovered against the defendant. If a return of the property be not so acquired within five days after the taking and service of notice to the defendant, it must be delivered to the plaintiff, except as provided in section 519."

[3] Section 667 provides, in part, "In an action to recover the possession of personal property, judgment for the plaintiff may be for the possession or the value thereof, in case a delivery can not be had, and damages for the detention. If the property has been delivered to the plaintiff, and the defendant claim a return there-the defendant in a replevin action to recover judgment for the possession of the property or its value and, in addition, damages for its taking and detention. Spencer Kennelly, Ltd. v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n, 19 Cal.2d 586, 589, 122 P.2d 552; Nahhas v. Browning, 181 Cal. 55, 57, 183 P. 442, 6 A.L.R. 476.

[2] It is clear that there is no express authority for the allowance of attorney's fees in claim and delivery, and the cases have uniformly refused to award such fees as damages in actions for the recovery of personal property. Drinkhouse v. Van Ness, 202 Cal. 359, 380, 260 P. 869 [claim and delivery, damages sought by plaintiff]; Anglo-California Trust Co. v. Collins, 192 Cal. 315, 318, 219 P. 982 [claim and delivery, damages sought by plaintiff]; Harris v. Smith, 132 Cal. 316, 319, 64 P. 409 [damages sought by plaintiff]; Hays v. Windsor, 130 Cal. 230, 235–236, 62 P. 395 [damages sought by defendant]; Black v. Hilliker, 130 Cal. 190, 193–194, 62 P. 481 [claim and delivery, damages sought by defendant]; Holm v. Davis, 8 Cal.App.2d 328, 330–331, 47 P.2d 537 [damages sought by plaintiff]; Martland v. Bekins Van & Storage Co., 19 Cal.App. 283, 285, 125 P. 759 [damages sought by plaintiff]; see also W. R. Bradshaw & Co. v. Eggers, 27 Cal.App. 132, 134, 148 P. 961, 962, which states that "attorneys' fees are not recoverable as damages in actions of claim and delivery or conversion."

Plaintiffs point out that attorney's fees have been allowed where the provisional remedies of attachment and injunction were invoked, and it may be that, as a matter of policy, there is just as much reason for allowing such fees in claim and delivery as in attachment and injunction. The courts, however, have construed our statutes as authorizing the allowance of attorney's fees incurred in procuring the dissolution of an attachment or injunction in appropriate cases where such remedies were used, Reachi v. National Auto. & Cas. Co., 37 Cal.2d 808, 236 P.2d 151 [attachment][4]; Frahm v. Walton, 130 Cal. 396, 62 P. 618 [injunction]; Prader v. Grim, 13 Cal. 586, 587–588 [injunction]; Ah Thaie v. Quan Wan, 3 Cal. 216, 217–218 [injunction]; Mason v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 60 Cal.App.2d 587, 593–594, 141 P.2d 475 [injunction]; see Soule v. United States F. & G. Co., 82 Cal.App. 572, 573–575, 255 P. 886 [attachment], while, as we have seen, the cases have uniformly refused to allow attorney's fees as costs or damages in actions to recover personal property where claim and delivery was invoked. Arguments with respect to matters of policy in this field should be directed to the Legislature.

[3] The holding of the trial court that the complaint fails to state a cause of action is in accordance with the settled rule that fees paid to attorneys are not recoverable as damages or otherwise in the absence of express statutory or contractual authority.

The judgment is affirmed.

CARTER, Justice (concurring).

I concur in the judgment but deem it necessary to point out that attorney's fees are not allowed in injunction cases and probably should not be in attachment cases, except the fees incurred on a successful motion to dissolve or quash the provisional remedy; they have not been allowed for defense of the action in which the injunction was sought. The majority opinion of, judgment for the defendant may be for a return of the property or the value thereof, in case a return cannot be had, and damages for taking and withholding the same. * * *"

Section 627 of the Code of Civil Procedure contains similar provisions as to assessment of damages in actions for recovery of specific personal property.

[4] The Reachi case involved the attachment of property of a nonresident under section 537 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and attorney's fees were allowed for defending this suit on its merits because it was necessary to defeat the main action in order to defeat the attachment.

states generally, "The courts, however, have construed our statutes as authorizing the allowance of attorney's fees incurred in procuring the dissolution of an attachment or injunction in appropriate cases where such remedies were used. Reachi v. National Auto & Cas. Co., 37 Cal.2d 808, 236 P.2d 151 (attachment); Frahm v. Walton, 130 Cal. 396, 62 P. 618 (injunction); Prader v. Grim, 13 Cal. 586, 587–588 (injunction); Ah Thaie v. This is not a complete statement of the law in injunction cases. In such cases where a bond is given for the issuance of a temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction, counsel fees incurred on a successful motion to dissolve the injunction are recoverable but not for defending on the merits the action for an injunction. Bustamente v. Stewart, 55 Cal. 115; Porter v. Hopkins, 63 Cal. 53; Lambert v. Haskell, 80 Cal. 611, 22 P. 327; San Diego Water Co. v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co., 101 Cal. 216, 35 P. 651; Mitchell v. Hawley, 79 Cal. 301, 21 P. 833; Mason v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 60 Cal.App.2d 587, 141 P.2d 475; Handy v. Samaha, 117 Cal.App. 286, 3 P.2d 602; Warden v. Choate, 33 Cal.App. 354, 165 P. 36; Curtiss v. Bachman, 110 Cal. 433, 42 P. 910; Moore v. Maryland Casualty Co., 100 Cal.App. 658, 280 P. 1008; Frahm v. Walton, 130 Cal. 396, 62 P. 618; see Ah Thaie v. Quan Wan, 3 Cal. 216. It is said in Curtiss v. Bachman, supra, 110 Cal. 433, 437, 42 P. 910, 911: "The damages for which the plaintiff seeks to recover herein, and of which he gave evidence at the trial, consisted of moneys which he had paid to his attorneys, the costs incurred in the action of Gilman v. Curtis [66 Cal. 116, 4 P. 1094, [the injunction action], and the loss of time and injury to his business necessitated by the suit. We are of the opinion, however, that neither of these elements of damage is within the terms of the obligation of the defendants, and that the plaintiff failed to establish any right of action against them. The liability of the defendants is measured by the terms of their contract, and in the present action is limited to the damages that the plaintiff might sustain 'by reason of the said injunction.' Whatever expenses he was subjected to by reason of the suit, as distinguished from those sustained by reason of the injunction, are not damages within this contract of the defendants; and, as it rested upon the plaintiff to establish a cause of action against them, it was necessary for him to show, not only that he had sustained damage, but that the damage which he had sustained was caused solely by reason of the injunction.

"Counsel fees incurred by a defendant by reason of a preliminary injunction are recognized as a part of the damages for which he has a right to indemnity, and are within the undertaking which the plaintiff is required to give as a condition of procuring the injunction; but only such counsel fees as may be incurred after the injunction has been issued, and prior to the determination of the action, can be considered as within the rule. If the defendant, instead of attempting to remove the temporary injunction, seeks rather to prevent the issuance of a permanent injunction, or directs his efforts to defeating the action of the plaintiff, the expense of counsel fees thus incurred is an incident of the suit, and is not recoverable as damages sustained by reason of the injunction. 'The allowance of counsel fees in suits on injunction bonds is exceptional, and should not be carried beyond the point to which former decisions have taken it' [citations]. Counsel fees rendered in resisting a motion for a preliminary injunction are not within the terms of the undertaking, since they are not expenses made necessary 'by reason of the injunction' * * * [B]ut are expenses incurred in the action as much as are counsel fees rendered in attempting to prevent the issuance of a permanent injunction (Thurston v. Haskell, 81 Me. 303, 17 A. 73) * * *. It is well settled that the services of counsel rendered in the trial of the cause are not a portion of the damage sustained by reason of the injunction." (Emphasis added.)

In the instant case no effort was made to have the claim and delivery proceedings nullified and hence there was no basis for the award of any attorney's fees. The only fees incurred were those of defending the action on the merits. The injunction cases are, therefore, authority for the result reached in this case.

In regard to attachment cases it has been held by this court that where the attaching creditor attached in order to obtain jurisdiction (quasi-rem) over a non-resident defendant and the attachment was appropriate to the case and valid on its face, the defendant therein who won the main case could recover the attorney's fees expended in defending the main case. Reachi v. National Auto. & Cas. Co., 37 Cal.2d 808, 236 P.2d 151. That case is out of line with several appellate court decisions and is probably wrong. It purported to distinguish Soule v. United States F. & G. Co., 82 Cal.App. 572, 255 P. 886; and Miramonte & Louedestel Co. v. National Surety Co., 91 Cal.App. 64, 266 P. 576, which applied the same rule as had previously been applied in the injunction cases above discussed. The distinction is not realistic (see, 25 So.Cal.L.Rev. 452). A short time before the decision in the Reachi case, Woodward v. Bruner, 104 Cal.App.2d 83, 230 P.2d 861, held that attorney's fees in an action for the removal of the effects of a wrongful attachment in another action are not recoverable as damages because damages do not include attorney's fees. And it was held in Viner v. Untrecht, 26 Cal.2d 261, 158 P.2d 3, that attorney's fees were not "damages" and therefore not recoverable in an action for the conversion of personal property where the statute, Civ.Code, § 3336, provided that the detriment caused by the wrongful conversion of personal property is presumed to be "a fair compensation for the time and money properly expended in pursuit of the property."

Angelita AGUIRRE, by and through her guardian ad litem, Lino Aguirre, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.
CITY OF LOS ANGELES, Defendant and Respondent.
L. A. 24125.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.
July 20, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 16, 1956.

Action against city for injuries sustained by plaintiff when, while roller skating on a public sidewalk, she grabbed a metal lamppost with her hand and arm at the same time her metal skates touched some J-bolts in a concrete lid over an underground box containing transformers and electrical lines which were part of a street lighting system in the area and received a severe electric shock and burns on her arm. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Robert H. Scott, J., granted defendant's motion for a nonsuit, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court, McComb, J., held that question of whether city made a reasonable inspection of electrical system to determine whether any defects existed was for the jury.

Reversed.

Opinion, 293 P.2d 115, vacated.

1. Municipal Corporations ⚿742(5)

Where evidence discloses that a municipality has created a condition for which plaintiff seeks to hold it liable, it is not necessary to introduce further evidence to show knowledge upon the part of the municipality of the defective condition created by it which resulted in injury.

2. Electricity ⚷16(5)

Where the public authority which has planned and constructed a sidewalk and electrical improvements in connection therewith has knowledge of circumstances which reasonably might be expected to result in a dangerous condition as a natural, probable consequence of the work, it is incumbent on it to make inspections commensurate in scope with the nature and character of its knowledge and the peril to be avoided.

3. Municipal Corporations ⚷821(6)

Whether a given set of circumstances creates a dangerous or defective condition in a public sidewalk is a question of fact for the determination of the trier of fact.

4. Trial ⚷139(1)

A judgment of nonsuit can be supported only if, disregarding conflicting evidence, and giving to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, indulging every legitimate inference which may be drawn from such evidence, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a judgment for plaintiff.

5. Electricity ⚷19(10)

In action against city for injuries sustained by plaintiff when, while roller skating on a public sidewalk, she grabbed a metal lamppost with her hand and arm at the same time her metal skates touched some J-bolts in a concrete lid over an underground box containing transformers and electrical lines which were part of the street lighting system in the area and received a severe electric shock and burns on her arm, question of whether city made reasonable inspection of the electrical system to determine whether any defects existed was for the jury.

Richard A. Ibanez, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Roger Arnebergh, City Atty., Bourke Jones, Asst. City Atty., and William E. Still, Deputy City Atty., Los Angeles, for respondent.

McCOMB, Justice.

From an order granting defendant's motion for a nonsuit in an action to recover damages for injuries resulting from a defective condition in a sidewalk maintained by defendant, predicated on the ground that the evidence did not show a cause of action under the Public Liability Act of 1923 (Gov.Code, §§ 53050 et seq.) because it was insufficient to prove notice or knowledge upon the part of defendant of the dangerous condition which existed, plaintiff appeals.

The record discloses that on August 7, 1953, plaintiff, a minor, was roller skating on the public sidewalk at the southeast corner of Towne Avenue and 7th Street in the city of Los Angeles. On the sidewalk and flush with it was a cement lid approximately one foot by two feet in size, about three feet from the curb. This lid was called a "pull box." The lid had two brass inverted J-bolts used to raise it. It covered an underground box containing transformers and electrical lines which formed part of the street lighting system in the area. Between the pull box and the curb was a metal lamppost.

While skating plaintiff grabbed the metal lamppost with her left hand and arm. At the same time her metal skates touched the J-bolts and she received a severe electric shock and suffered burns on her arm.

The street lamp system had been installed in the area in 1950. The lines going through the pull box carried over 4000 volts. The J-bolts extended through the bottom of the lid so that it was possible for them to wear through the insulation of the power lines and become energized by contact with such lines. The J-bolts had worn through the insulation in the power lines causing the J-bolts to become energized, with the result that when plaintiff stepped on them with her skates, at the same time touching the metal lamp standard, she received an electric shock.

At the time of the installation of the street lamp system it had been tested to determine whether there were any defects in the power lines. The electrical lines were not tested or inspected after the initial test although maintenance, such as painting the lampposts, was performed.

Defendant urges in support of the order: That the evidence fails to disclose defendant had either actual or constructive notice of the defective condition of the public property here involved.

This proposition is unsound for these reasons:

[1] (1) Where the evidence discloses that a municipality has created the condition for which plaintiff seeks to hold it liable, it is not necessary to introduce further evidence to show knowledge upon the part of the municipality of the defective condition created by it which has resulted in injury. City of San Diego, supra, 26 Cal.2d at page 206 [4a et seq.], 157 P.2d at page 630; Polk v. City of Los Angeles, 26 Cal.2d 519, at pages 525 [3], 527 [5], 159 P.2d 931), and

[4] (4) A judgment of nonsuit can be supported only if, disregarding conflicting evidence, and giving to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, indulging every legitimate inference which may be drawn from such evidence, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a judgment for plaintiff. (Bosqui v. City of San Bernardino, 2 Cal.2d 747, at page 760 [4], 43 P.2d 547; see also cases cited in 16 West's Ann.Cal.Code Civ.Proc. (1955), § 581c, p. 142, note 36.)

[5] Applying the above rules to the facts in the instant case it is apparent that defendant, having created the condition which resulted in the injury, had implied notice and knowledge of the defective condition which in fact existed and was under a duty to make reasonable inspections to determine whether a defective condition existed. Likewise, it was a question of fact for the determination of the trier of fact as to whether defendant in view of the circumstances had or had not made reasonable inspection of the electrical system to determine whether any defects existed. Therefore, the trial court erred in granting defendant's motion for a nonsuit.

Howard A. CLARK, Appellant,

v.

Dean S. LESHER, Daniel B. Halcomb and Roy Wolfe, Respondents.

Sac. 6687.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.
Aug. 10, 1956.

Surviving partner brought action against newspaper publisher, who purchased partnership business, receiver of partnership, and publisher's manager for damages, on ground that they fraudulently conspired to destroy good will of newspaper of partnership. The Superior Court, Madera County, Sherrill Halbert, J., entered judgment adverse to the surviving partner, and he appealed. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held that judgment in favor of administrator of deceased partner in accounting action against surviving partner, and judgment in action by receiver of partnership against surviving partner to quiet title to proceeds of sale of partnership business and certain personalty and life insurance policy, did not, under doctrine of collateral estoppel, operate as an estoppel in subsequent action by surviving partner against newspaper publisher, receiver, and publisher's manager for damages, on ground that they fraudulently conspired to destroy good will of newspaper of partnership.

Judgment reversed.

Opinion, 290 P.2d 293, vacated.

1. Judgment ⚿540

The doctrine of res judicata operates as a bar to maintenance of a second suit between the same parties on the same cause of action.

2. Judgment ⚿720

A prior judgment is not a complete bar to a second suit between the same parties though on a different cause of action, but, under the doctrine of collateral estoppel, it operates as an estoppel or conclusive adjudication as to such issues in the second action as were actually litigated and determined in the first action.

3. Judgment ⚿713(3)

Judgment in favor of administrator of deceased partner in accounting action against surviving partner, and judgment in action by receiver of partnership against surviving partner to quiet title to proceeds of sale of partnership business and certain personalty and life insurance policy, did not, under doctrine of collateral estoppel, operate as an estoppel in subsequent action by surviving partner against newspaper publisher, who purchased partnership business, receiver, and publisher's manager for damages, on ground that they fraudulently conspired to destroy good will of newspaper partnership.

4. Judgment ⚿585(4)

The purpose of section of Code of Civil Procedure providing that if defendant omits to set up a counterclaim on a cause arising out of transaction set forth in complaint as foundation of plaintiff's claim, neither he nor his assignee can afterwards maintain an action against the plaintiff therefor, is to avoid multiplicity of actions and conflicting judgments. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 439.

5. Judgment ⚿585(4)

Action by surviving partner against newspaper publisher, who purchased partnership business, receiver of partnership, and publisher's manager for damages, on ground that they fraudulently conspired to destroy good will of newspaper partnership, was not barred by Code of Civil Procedure because of failure of surviving partner to set up a counterclaim in prior action by administrator of deceased partner against surviving partner for an accounting, or in another prior action by receiver against surviving partner to quiet title to proceeds of sale of partnership business and certain personalty and life insurance policy. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 438, 439.

6. Judgment ⚷585(4)

The bar of section of Code of Civil Procedure providing that if defendant omits to set up a counterclaim on a cause arising out of transaction set forth in complaint as foundation of plaintiff's claim, neither he nor his assignee can afterwards maintain an action against plaintiff therefor, applies only where cause of action may properly be pleaded as a counterclaim arising out of transaction forming foundation of complaint. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., § 439.

7. Assignments ⚷24(3)

Alleged cause of action for the alleged fraudulent destruction of good will of newspaper belonging to partnership was assignable by surviving partner, if surviving partner and assignee so intended. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 954.

8. Assignments ⚷138

If question whether cause of action for alleged fraudulent destruction of good will of newspaper of partnership had been assigned by surviving partner could be determined from face of written instrument of assignment, then construction of the instrument was the responsibility of the trial court and not the function of the jury. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 954.

9. Assignments ⚷138

Agreement providing that surviving partner and his wife assigned to assignee all of their right, title and interest of every kind and nature to the properties in the estate of deceased partner, who was the father of the surviving partner, and all claims of every kind, nature, and description filed against the estate, or which they might thereafter assert against the estate, together with their entire interest in the partnership and all assets of the partnership, did not as a matter of law transfer the surviving partner's alleged cause of action to assignee for damages for alleged fraudulent conspiracy on part of assignee, assignee's manager, and receiver of partnership to destroy good will of newspaper which had belonged to the partnership.

10. Estoppel ⚷58

Where one of the defendants did not rely to his injury on plaintiff's conduct in negotiations preceding assignment, he was precluded from resorting to defense that plaintiff was estopped to deny that the assignment transferred plaintiff's alleged cause of action to one of the other defendants.

11. Estoppel ⚷110

Defense of estoppel was not available to that defendant, who failed to plead the defense of estoppel.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

Clark sought to recover damages from defendants Lesher, Halcomb and Wolfe, alleging that they fraudulently conspired to destroy the good will of a newspaper in which he had an interest. Defendants denied the conspiracy and, by way of affirmative defenses, alleged that the issues tendered by the complaint are res judicata, that Clark had assigned his cause of action to Lesher, and that he is estopped to deny the transfer. The court ordered that the case be tried first on the special defenses, and the jury returned a verdict thereon for all defendants. Judgment was entered accordingly, and Clark has appealed.

For a number of years, Clark and his father owned and published a newspaper in Madera as partners. The father died in September of 1944, leaving his one-half interest in the partnership to be equally divided among Clark and two other children. Clark remained in possession of the newspaper and continued to publish it. The other two heirs sold their interests to Lesher.

R. S. Jay was appointed administrator of the estate, and an action entitled Jay v. Clark was instituted in February of 1945 in which it was alleged that Clark had refused to wind up the partnership or to render an accounting. In that action the trial court found against Clark and entered an interlocutory judgment ordering him to render an accounting and appointing a receiver to take possession of the assets of the partnership and to operate the business until it could be sold as a going concern. In June of 1948, following affirmance of this judgment, Jay v. Clark, 85 Cal.App.2d 88, 192 P.2d 462, Wolfe was appointed receiver in place of the one originally selected, and he took possession of the newspaper from Clark. Wolfe petitioned the court for instructions, stating that there were not sufficient funds on hand to continue operations. The court ordered him to discontinue publication within ten days, to publish a notice of sale for two weeks, and to sell the business within 30 days thereafter. In August, the newspaper was sold to Lesher for $30,750, and, after a hearing at which no objections were made, the court confirmed the sale.

In January of 1949, Wolfe, as receiver, brought an action entitled Wolfe v. Clark and Lesher to quiet title to the proceeds of the sale and to certain items of personal property, including a life insurance policy. Clark filed an answer, asserting his ownership of the insurance policy and claiming a right to the proceeds of sale in an amount representing his partnership interest and compensation for services rendered to the newspaper. Lesher denied that Clark was entitled to any money and alleged that the policy was an asset of the business purchased by him. In June of 1949, while the action was pending, Clark and his wife executed an assignment transferring to Lesher all their interests in the partnership and the estate. The assignment was made as consideration for entry of judgment in a form stipulated by the parties which recited the terms of the assignment and ordered Wolfe to pay Clark $5,000. Wolfe reported to the court in Jay v. Clark regarding the agreement reached by the parties, and an order discharging him as receiver was then entered in that action.

The present action was commenced by Clark about two weeks after entry of the stipulated judgment in Wolfe v. Clark and Lesher. The allegations of the complaint may be summarized as follows: Upon the death of Clark's father, Lesher, who owned a newspaper in an adjoining county, bought one in Madera and appointed Halcomb as manager. Lesher and Halcomb conspired to eliminate Clark's newspaper as a competitor, and, in furtherance of the conspiracy, Lesher purchased the rights of the two children who, in addition to Clark, inherited the deceased's partnership interest in the newspaper. Without the knowledge or consent of Jay, Lesher brought the action entitled Jay v. Clark in the name of the administrator for the purpose of ousting Clark from possession of the newspaper. After entry of the interlocutory judgment in Jay v. Clark, Lesher and Halcomb approached Wolfe, telling him that they would arrange to have him appointed as receiver of the partnership, in which event he was to discontinue the publication of the newspaper. Wolfe agreed to the plan, and Lesher and Halcomb procured the order appointing Wolfe as receiver, without the knowledge or consent of the administrator and without notice to Clark. Although the interlocutory judgment directed that the business be sold as a going concern, Lesher, Halcomb and Wolfe conspired to obtain an order authorizing cessation of publication. In an ex parte proceeding conducted without securing the consent of the administrator and without giving notice to Clark, Wolfe, by knowingly misrepresenting that there were not sufficient funds to continue operations, procured the order directing that publication of the newspaper be discontinued within ten days, that notice of sale be given for two weeks, and that the business be then sold within 30 days. The newspaper could have been sold to best advantage while being published and circulated, and defendants knew that cessation of its publication would cause irreparable damage to its owners. When publication ceased, there was a total destruction of the good will of the newspaper. Immediately thereafter, advertisement and subscription rates of Lesher's newspaper were raised. In collaboration with Halcomb and Wolfe, Lesher entered a bid to buy the newspaper, offering to raise any other bid by $200. Lesher's bid was accepted, and the assets of the newspaper were delivered to him.

A general demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend, and judgment was entered accordingly. On appeal, the judgment was reversed on the ground that the complaint stated a cause of action in tort for fraudulent conspiracy to destroy and depreciate the good will of the partnership. Clark v. Lesher, 106 Cal.App.2d 403, 235 P.2d 71. Defendants answered, denying the fraudulent conspiracy and alleging affirmative defenses. As we have seen, the case then proceeded to trial on the special defenses, and the jury returned a verdict for defendants.

Was Clark's Cause of Action Res Judicata?

One of the special defenses relied on in support of the judgment is that the issues tendered by the complaint are res judicata. This defense was left entirely to the jury without any guidance regarding the legal force and effect of the prior actions.[1] There can be no doubt that this was error, but defendants argue that plaintiff was not prejudiced because, they assert, the record shows as a matter of law that the issues raised here are res judicata. An analysis of the judgment rolls in the prior actions shows, however, that this contention is unsound.

[1] In its primary aspect the doctrine of res judicata operates as a bar to the maintenance of a second suit between the same parties on the same cause of action. See Panos v. Great Western Pack. Co., 21 Cal.2d 636, 134 P.2d 242. It is clear and, indeed, conceded, that the two prior actions described above—the accounting suit by Jay as administrator of the estate of Clark, and the quiet title suit by Wolfe as receiver of the partnership—are based upon entirely different causes of action from plaintiff's action for damages for conspiracy to defraud.

[2] In its secondary aspect res judicata has a limited application to a second suit between the same parties, though based on a difference cause of action. The prior judgment is not a complete bar, but it "operates as an estoppel or conclusive adjudication as to such issues in the second action as were actually litigated and determined in the first action." Todhunter v. Smith, 219 Cal. 690, 695, 28 P.2d 916, 918. This aspect of the doctrine of res judicata, now commonly referred to as the doctrine of collateral estoppel, is confined to issues actually litigated. It is not an easy rule to apply, for the term "issue" as used in this connection is difficult to define, and the pleadings and proof in each case must be carefully scrutinized to determine whether a particular issue was raised even though some legal theory, argument or "matter" relating to the issue was not expressly mentioned or asserted. See discussion, Sutphin v. Speik, 15 Cal.2d 195, 99 P.2d 652, 101 P.2d 497; Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v.

[1] The court instructed the jury as follows:

"The term 'res adjudicata' is defined as a matter adjudged; a thing judicially acted upon or decided; a thing or matter settled by judgment. * * *"

"That only is deemed to have been adjudged in a former judgment which appears upon its face to have been so adjudged, or which was actually and necessarily included therein or necessary thereto. * * *"

"You are hereby instructed that if an issue has been determined in a former action, it is binding notwithstanding the parties litigant may have omitted to urge for or against it matters which, if urged, would have produced an opposite result. In other words, when an issue has been litigated, all inquiry respecting the same is foreclosed, not only as to matters heard but also as to matters that could have been heard in support of or in opposition thereto."

McConnell, 44 Cal.2d 715, 724, 285 P.2d 636; 3 Witkin, California Procedure, p. 1948 et seq.

[3] There is, however, little difficulty in applying the rule in the present case. The first action, by Jay as administrator of the estate of the deceased partner, sought an accounting, sale of partnership assets, payment of debts and distribution of the surplus. The defendant, sued as surviving partner, answered, denying that any sum was due. An interlocutory judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff, for an accounting from defendant, for the sale of the property and payment of the debts, and for the appointment of a receiver. This judgment determined issues relating entirely to the partnership business, its property and its liabilities. The plaintiff Jay, as administrator, was not even a defendant in the subsequent action by Clark for conspiracy and fraud, and the three defendants in the subsequent fraud action were not parties to Jay's accounting suit. The fraud and conspiracy theory of individual liability of persons not parties would have been completely irrelevant in Jay's action, and the issue was never raised.

The same is true of the second action by Wolfe as receiver of the partnership. The suit was to quiet title to defendant Clark's claim to assets of the partnership, including the newspaper, and Clark answered alleging a one-half interest in the assets, a claim for compensation for services, and a claim to a life insurance policy. Again the issues related solely to the rights of the parties as partners in the partnership property. The issue of personal liability of Lesher, who filed an answer as a fictitiously named defendant, and of Halcomb, who was not a party, for conspiracy to defraud, was irrelevant and in no way interjected.

[4] There remains for consideration a special aspect of the doctrine of res judicata which in California is expressed in section 439 of the Code of Civil Procedure: "If the defendant omits to set up a counterclaim upon a cause arising out of the transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, neither he nor his assignee can afterwards maintain an action against the plaintiff therefor." This compulsory counterclaim statute has the obvious purpose of avoiding multiplicity of actions and conflicting judgments. If Clark's claim for damages for conspiracy to defraud, against Lesher, Halcomb and Wolfe, could have been asserted as a counterclaim arising out of the transaction on which the complaint in either of the prior actions was founded, the present suit on that claim is barred.

[5] It is clear, however, that this is not the case. Even if we assume that the same "transaction" was involved in the prior suits and the present action, the parties were not the same in that the plaintiff in each of the prior actions was suing in a representative capacity—Jay as administrator and Wolfe as receiver of the partnership. Thus, an elementary test of a counterclaim, that it can be set up only by a defendant and against a plaintiff between whom a several judgment may be rendered, Code Civ.Proc. § 438, was not met. Neither of the representatives, in the capacity in which he asserted his claim to the partnership assets, could be subjected to a several personal judgment on an individual claim mainly directed against other persons. See Garrison v. Edward Brown & Sons, 25 Cal.2d 473, 476, 154 P.2d 377; 3 Witkin, California Procedure, p. 1593. Nor does Clark's claim for money damages against individual defendants "tend to diminish or defeat" the demand for recovery of partnership assets. See Code Civ.Proc. § 438; Zainudin v. Meizel, 119 Cal.App.2d 265, 268, 259 P.2d 469.

[6] It is true that if Clark was aware of his cause of action for conspiracy and fraud at the time of the two prior actions, he might have attempted to set it up by a cross-complaint. This would have involved the bringing in of new parties by order of court, and the court in its discretion could have denied permission on the ground that a complete determination of the controversy concerning the partnership assets did not require a trial of the suit for damages against the new parties. See Bracey v. Gray, 65 Cal.App.2d 282, 287, 150 P.2d 564; 3 Witkin, California Procedure, p. 1587. In any event, the choice was in Clark's hands. There is no compulsory cross-complaint statute; the bar of section 439 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies only where the cause of action may properly be pleaded as a counterclaim arising out of the transaction forming the foundation of the complaint. See Schrader v. Neville, 34 Cal.2d 112, 207 P.2d 1057.

Did the Assignment from Clark to Lesher Transfer the Cause of Action for Fraud?

[7] It was also pleaded as a special defense that the cause of action here asserted by Clark was assigned to Lesher under the agreement which led to the stipulated judgment in the quiet title action. By the terms of the agreement Clark and his wife assigned to Lesher "all of their right, title and interest of every kind and nature in and to the properties in the Estate" and "all claims of every kind, nature, and description that they have heretofore filed against said Estate, or which they might hereafter assert against said Estate," together with "their entire interest in the partnership * * * and in all assets of said partnership." The cause of action, being one for the fraudulent destruction of the good will of the newspaper, arose out of the violation of a right of property, and it was, therefore, assignable and could have been included in the agreement, if the parties so intended. Civ.Code, § 954; Offer v. Superior Court, 194 Cal. 114, 121, 228 P. 11; see Webb v. Pillsbury, 23 Cal.2d 324, 327, 144 P.2d 1, 150 A.L.R. 504; cf. American Trust Co. v. California etc. Ins. Co., 15 Cal.2d 42, 67, 98 P.2d 497.

[8] The case was tried on the theory that the question of whether the cause of action for fraud had been assigned to Lesher was to be determined from the face of the written instrument. Under this theory the construction of the writing was the responsibility of the trial court and not the function of the jury. O'Connor v. West Sacramento Co., 189 Cal. 7, 18, 207 P. 527; California Well Drilling Co. v. California Midway Oil Co., 178 Cal. 337, 341, 343, 177 P. 849; see Huebotter v. Follett, 27 Cal.2d 765, 770–771, 165 P.2d 193. The instructions of the court, however, erroneously left to the jury the legal question of the interpretation of the assignment.[2]

[9] Defendants urge that the error was not prejudicial, asserting that it can be said as a matter of law that under the terms of the instrument Clark transferred his cause of action to Lesher. We do not agree. The assignment is reasonably subject to opposed constructions with respect to whether the parties intended to include the cause of action for fraud. The broad language used might be fairly construed to mean that Clark parted with all rights arising out of his connection with the newspaper, including the right to recover for fraudulent injury to its good will. On the other hand, the assignment does not mention the cause of action for fraud or any claim against Lesher or the other defendants, and the reference to the "assets" of the newspaper might be understood as applying merely to items of property involved in operating the business and not to a right to recover for prior tortious injury to such property. Evidence relating to the negotiations which preceded execution of the assignment was introduced, but it was limited by the trial court to the separate defense that Clark was estopped to deny the transfer. The evidence could properly have been received as an aid to the construction of the instrument, but the court ruled that it was inadmissible for that purpose. As we shall see, the extrinsic evidence was conflicting, and, since the intention of the parties to the agreement may be determined by resolving the conflicts, we should not attempt to construe the assignment as a matter of law.

[2] The court instructed the jury as follows:
"The Defendants Lesher and Halcomb claim, as their first special defense, that prior to the commencement of this action the Plaintiff transferred, assigned and set over to the Defendant Lesher all of his right, title, and interest in and to the properties in the Estate of George A. Clark, Deceased, and all of his interest in and all of the assets of the partnership of Clark and Clark, doing business as 'Madera Daily Tribune and Mercury,' and all of the assets of the 'Madera Daily Tribune and Mercury,' and that as a result of said transfer and assignment, the Plaintiff has no basis for this action, since the cause of action, if any exists, actually belongs to the Defendant Lesher, and not to the Plaintiff."

Was Clark estopped to Deny Transfer of the Cause of Action?

Lesher and Halcomb rely on the defense that Clark is estopped to deny a transfer of the cause of action for fraud on the ground that he was guilty of a misleading course of conduct in the negotiations preceding the agreement. There is evidence that Clark's attorney orally represented to Lesher that Clark would accept $5,000 in settlement of all claims of every kind including "anything" that might or might not be in existence, and Lesher testified that he would not have entered into the agreement but for these representations.[3] Clark's attorney testified that he did not agree to settle anything which was not specifically set forth in the assignment and that he refused to stipulate to a release of all matters. Clark testified that he believed he had a cause of action for fraud and that he instructed his attorney that, if he had a claim, he did not want to lose it by a settlement. In limiting this evidence to the defense of estoppel, the court necessarily took the position that the assignment was clear and unambiguous and that allowing the evidence to be used for the purpose of interpreting the instrument would violate the parol evidence rule. In view of our conclusion that the assignment is ambiguous and that the extrinsic evidence was admissible to show the intention of the parties to the agreement, we need not determine whether the court, having assumed that there was no ambiguity, erred in receiving the evidence in connection with the defense of estoppel. See, e. g., Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. v. Buchanan, 8 Cir., 141 F. 877, 897; Continental Bank & Trust Co. v. W. A. R. Realty Corp., 265 App.Div. 729, 40 N.Y.S.2d 854; 20 Am.Jur. p. 962.

[10, 11] Halcomb was not a party to the assignment agreement, and the consideration for it was paid out of receivership assets in which he had no interest. There is no showing that he relied to his injury on Clark's conduct in the negotiations preceding the assignment, and he is, therefore, precluded from resorting to estoppel. Lusitanian-American Development Co. v. Seaboard Dairy Credit Corp., 1 Cal.2d 121, 128, 34 P.2d 139. Wolfe did not plead the defense of estoppel, and, it is, therefore, not available to him. We have no way of knowing whether the jury resolved the conflicting extrinsic evidence in favor of Lesher and based its verdict on the defense of estoppel or whether the verdict was based on one of the other defenses.[4] The jury may have found against Lesher on the evidence relating to estoppel and may have based its general verdict on a conclusion that the issues tendered by the complaint were res judicata or that Clark's cause of action was transferred by the written assignment. The errors committed by the court in submitting to the jury the defenses

[3] Testimony of Clark to the effect that he would not have executed the assignment had it contained a provision for release of the cause of action for fraud was stricken on the ground that it was not material to the defense of estoppel.

[4] The court instructed the jury as follows: "If you find against the Defendants on all of the special defenses now on trial before you, then you should return a verdict for the Plaintiff.

"On the other hand, if you find for all of the Defendants on any one or more of the special defenses now on trial before you, then I instruct you that you shall return a verdict in favor of the Defendants."

of res judicata and assignment relate to all defendants, and, in view of the uncertain state of the record, we are of the opinion that the errors were prejudicial.

The judgment is reversed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.
Charles M. HEAD, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 5893.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.
Aug. 10, 1956.
Rehearing Denied Sept. 6, 1956.

Criminal prosecution. The Superior Court, San Bernardino County, Martin J. Coughlin, J., entered judgment of conviction and defendant appealed. On motion to dismiss appeal, the Supreme Court, Carter, J., held that where defendant was convicted on September 22, 1955 and talked with prison officials on September 27, 1955 about filing notice of appeal and filed notice on October 6, 1955, under circumstances, defendant did all he could have done, pursued matter diligently and followed prison official's advice and defendant was entitled to appeal.

Motion denied.

Where defendant was convicted on September 22, 1955 and talked with prison officials on September 27, 1955 about filing notice of appeal and filed notice on October 6, 1955, under circumstances, defendant did all he could have done, pursued matter diligently and followed prison official's advice and defendant was entitled to appeal. Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

CARTER, Justice.

The state has moved to dismiss the appeal in this criminal proceeding on the ground that the notice of appeal was not timely filed as required by Rule 31, Rules on Appeal, specifying that an appeal in a criminal case must be taken within 10 days after rendition of judgment. On September 22, 1955, after trial by jury in which he was represented by counsel, defendant was convicted of the offense of permitting his wife to remain in a house of prostitution. He was thereupon sentenced to prison for the term prescribed by law. A written notice of appeal dated October 9, 1955, was filed with the clerk of the court on October 10, 1955, both of which dates are, of course, beyond the 10-day period.

Defendant endeavors to bring himself within People v. Slobodion, 30 Cal.2d 362, 181 P.2d 868, in which we held that there was a timely filing of a notice of appeal where defendant in a state prison did all he could do by delivering his notice of appeal to the prison authorities for mailing to the court within the 10-day period but the authorities did not mail it in time. The Slobodion case has been uniformly followed, see, People v. Graff, 104 Cal.App.2d 32, 230 P.2d 654; People v. Calloway, 127 Cal.App.2d 504, 274 P.2d 497; People v. Stinchcomb, 92 Cal.App.2d 741, 208 P.2d 396; People v. Frye, 117 Cal.App.2d 101, 255 P.2d 105; People v. Aresen, 91 Cal. App.2d 26, 204 P.2d 389, 957, and cases cited infra.

In his original affidavit in opposition to the state's motion to dismiss the appeal, defendant stated that after judgment he had no money to pay his trial attorney to take an appeal and has "very little schooling" and did not know how to appeal and had no counsel to advise him; that he did know there was a "dead line" on the taking of an appeal but did not know what it was; that after he was sentenced he was held by the sheriff of San Bernardino County (where he was convicted) until September 26, 1955, when he was transferred to the "Receiving Center" of the penal institution at Chino until October 6th when he was transferred to the state prison at Folsom (where he now is); that on September 27th he spoke to Mr. Sess who was in charge of one of the buildings at Chino, asking him about filing a notice of appeal and Sess told him he would have to see Mr. "Nathan"* for permission to file a notice of appeal; that he saw Naquin the next day and asked him about filing an appeal and was told by Naquin to wait until he was sent to the penal institution (Folsom) where it could be taken "care of"; that he told Naquin the judgment had been rendered on September 22nd and Naquin said he had ten "court days" after judgment; that he saw Naquin once or possibly twice thereafter but nothing was said about his appeal because "he thought he [Naquin] was taking care of it"; that he and Naquin "figured out together" that the tenth court day would expire on October 6th; that Naquin took him to "Smitty," a prisoner who typed, to fix his notice of appeal, and Smitty said he would do it; that on October 6th, the day he was transferred to Folsom, his notice was ready and he signed it, and he was told it would be "taken care of"; that from what he was told by Naquin and other prison officials his appeal would be satisfactory if he signed it and left it with them as he did on October 6th. Petitioner was represented by counsel when he opposed the state's motion to dismiss in the District Court of Appeal and when he filed a petition for hearing after the District Court of Appeal dismissed his appeal. In a supplemental petition for hearing he says that he did not ask Naquin, a "correctional officer," for legal advice but gave his written notice to him to be typed; that he gave his notice of appeal to "prison officials" on "December 28th 1956" (evidently meaning September 28, 1955) and tried to see Naquin to get his typed notice but was not allowed to do so until after the 10 days had expired; that he could not do as he wished without permission of the prison authorities; that Naquin told him that his notice of appeal would be typed and he would be called in time to meet the time requirement; that he has done all he could do to get his notice filed in time but was deprived of filing it in time by the prison authorities.

Naquin in his affidavits states that he is a correctional officer and defendant requested information about filing an appeal and he told him he could file one; that he was assisted in preparing one which was sent to the clerk of the court; that he was told Naquin could give him no legal advice or prepare appeal "briefs or documents as his appeal action may require"; that "without the inmate's [defendant's] central file for reference" he is not able to state as to the correctness of the dates in defendant's affidavit; that he believes defendant was given the attention and services prescribed and allowable by the agency to which he belongs. In a subsequent sworn statement Naquin said he had examined defendant's file and there is a note on the notice of appeal by Farrell, a prison records officer, that the notice of appeal was mailed October 6, 1955; that he cannot recall any "particular confusion" related to the filing of the notice as it is the practice to allow even late notices of appeal; that he is unable to find any other notations and he does not recall that defendant delivered a notice of appeal for "correction and/or typing" and "it would appear he did not" because the notice in this case is the same generally used.

* In his petition for hearing, defendant refers to Mr. Naquin as Mr. "Nathan." However, in his supplement to the petition for hearing, he correctly names the correctional officer Mr. Naquin.

It will be seen that there is no real dispute about defendant's assertion as to what occurred. Naquin merely says he does not remember and concludes that defendant's notice was late. Defendant's statement that he did not ask the correction officer for legal advice means little in light of his particular statements as to what did occur.

It thus appears that defendant filed the notice of appeal timely as far as was possible for him to do so or was lulled into a sense of security by the prison officials.

Defendant having done all he could have done and pursued the matter diligently and followed the prison official's advice, it would appear that he should not be deprived of his appeal. In the Slobodion case, supra, we stressed the factors that the prisoner had done all he could and had delivered his notice of appeal to the prison authorities but that the notice was not mailed to the clerk in time. In People v. Calloway, supra, 127 Cal.App.2d 504, 274 P.2d 497, the defendant was informed by the prison authorities that he had plenty of time to file his notice of appeal and would be given a pass to call on his counsel for the purpose of preparing and filing the notice. He was transferred to another prison, however, and placed in quarantine until the 10 days had expired. The court said 127 Cal.App.2d at page 506, 274 P.2d at page 498: "This evidence falls short of presenting the precise factual situation which obtained in People v. Slobodion, 30 Cal.2d 362, 181 P.2d 868, but, undenied as it is, it tends to make a prima facie showing that defendant was lulled into a false sense of security by a representative of the state, the opposite party in the litigation. Accordingly, as stated in People v. Graff, 104 Cal.App.2d 32, 34, 230 P.2d 654, 656, '* * * the facts in this case come close enough to the exception to the rule stated in People v. Slobodion (supra), 30 Cal.2d 362, 181 P.2d 868, that this court is of the opinion it would be better to consider and pass upon the contentions made by defendant.'" In People v. Frye, supra, 117 Cal.App.2d 101, 102, 255 P.2d 105, 106, it is said: "His [defendant's] notice of appeal, dated June 7, was received by the clerk of the trial court June 10, 1952, but under Rule 31 should have been received June 6. It appears from a letter of the warden of the state prison where defendant was incarcerated, that the defendant requested permission to forward his notice on June 5, 1952, 'but due to the necessary delay in procedure here, we were unable to arrange for his signing and mailing the Notice until today [June 9] * * * We assume that this Notice is timely within the rule of People v. Slobodion, 30 Cal.2d 362, 181 P.2d 868, and People v. Aresen, 91 Cal.App.2d 26, 204 P.2d 389, 957.' For those reasons we hold that the defendant made a constructive filing within the prescribed time limit and satisfied the jurisdictional requirement as contemplated by law." In People v. Rascon, 128 Cal.App.2d 118, 119, 274 P.2d 899 the court said: "Judgment was rendered on November 27, 1953; the notice of appeal, dated December 2, 1953, was filed December 9, 1953, two days late. In an affidavit appellant states that after judgment was rendered he was sent to the state prison at San Quentin, that on December 2, 1953, he went to the prison sociologist's office where he was interviewed by Mr. Faustman, that at that time he signed his notice of appeal and was told by Mr. Faustman that 'it would be in on time, and that he (Mr. Faustman) said that he would take care of mailing it for me.' Defendant avers: 'I therefore did all in my power to get my appeal in on time by giving it to an employee of the State, and I relied on his representation that it would be mailed on time.' Mr. Faustman, senior sociologist at San Quentin, whose duties consist of interviewing prisoners, preparing case summaries and handling inmate legal matters, in an affidavit declares himself 'at a loss to understand why there should have been the delay evident in this case.' However, he refutes none of the statements made in appellant's affidavit and concludes his affidavit by stating: 'I can only surmise that due possibly to the indirect method of handling the mail out of the Reception-

Guidance Center plus the enormous volume processed through the Mail Office at San Quentin every day it became misplaced, and so did not go out until 12–7–54.'

"This case comes within the rule set forth in People v. Slobodion, 30 Cal.2d 362, 181 P.2d 868, 871 * * *." See, also, People v. Cato, 136 Cal.App.2d 503, 289 P.2d 119; People v. Olgin, 137 Cal.App.2d 286, 290 P.2d 77; People v. Martiz, 130 Cal.App.2d 602, 279 P.2d 568; People v. Aresen, supra, 91 Cal.App.2d 26, 204 P.2d 389, 957; People v. Stinchcomb, supra, 92 Cal.App.2d 741, 208 P.2d 396; People v. Stinchcomb, 102 Cal.App.2d 626, 228 P.2d 69; People v. Graff, supra, 104 Cal.App.2d 32, 230 P.2d 654; People v. Kirk, 109 Cal. App.2d 203, 240 P.2d 630.

It thus appears that defendant has brought himself within the rules announced in the foregoing authorities and therefore the motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Lawrence Gene DOTSON, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5925.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.

Aug. 10, 1956.

Defendant was convicted in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Orla St. Clair, J., of murder, burglary and robbery, and he appealed. The Supreme Court, Shenk, J., held that proceedings before Juvenile Court, even in cases where a criminal charge is pending in Superior Court, are not criminal in nature and are not a stage in criminal proceeding, and that defendant's lack of representation in Juvenile Court proceeding had not resulted in a denial of due process of law.

Affirmed.

Carter, J., dissented.

1. Infants ⇨16.5

Proceedings before Juvenile Court, even in cases where criminal charge is pending in Superior Court, are not criminal in nature, but are in nature of guardianship proceedings in which State, as parens patriae, seeks to relieve minor of stigma of criminal conviction and to give him corrective care, supervision and training.

2. Constitutional Law ⇨306

Minor brought before Juvenile Court is as much entitled to constitutional guarantees as when subjected to criminal proceedings, but because of nature of proceedings, denial of those requirements which have been recognized as elements of fair trial does not necessarily deprive minor of due process of law in Juvenile Court proceedings.

3. Constitutional Law ⇨306

Fact that minor is not represented by counsel need not be a denial of due process in Juvenile Court, and it is only when such lack of representation of minor results in undue advantage being taken of him, or he is otherwise accorded unfair treatment resulting in deprivation of his rights, that it can be said that he has been denied due process of law.

4. Infants ⇨16.1

The law recognizes that a minor may have such a record of delinquency or his derelictions may be of such character that to make him a ward of Juvenile Court would not aid him or serve purposes of court, and determination of whether defendant is a "good subject" for consideration of Juvenile Court is a question resting within sound discretion of juvenile judge.

5. Constitutional Law ⟹268

Record on appeal from conviction for murder, burglary, and robbery would not sustain defendant's contentions that (1) absence of counsel in Juvenile Court proceedings, which culminated in determination that he was not a "good subject" for consideration of that court, and (2) inadequate representation in Superior Court had deprived him of due process of law. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 858.

6. Witnesses ⟹268(3, 6)

Scope of proper cross-examination may extend to whole transaction as to which witness has testified, or it may be employed to elicit any matter which may tend to overcome, qualify or explain testimony given by witness on his direct examination.

Lawrence Gene Dotson, in pro per., Donald D. Connors, Jr., San Francisco, under appointment by the Supreme Court, and J. Stewart Harrison, San Francisco, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., and Arlo E. Smith, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHENK, Justice.

The defendant Lawrence Gene Dotson appeals from a judgment of conviction of violations of sections 187 (murder), 459 (burglary) and 211 (robbery) of the Penal Code, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. He was sentenced to life imprisonment.

The defendant and an accomplice were interrupted by Francisco Herrera while in the act of ransacking his home. At gun point, Herrera and his party of two other men and two women were herded into a bedroom, where the women were barricaded in a closet and the men were bound and gagged. The men were forced to empty their pockets and all members of the party were required to give up the valuables on their persons, after which the defendant and his companion left. Herrera, who had been bound and gagged with strips of bedding and further secured with a blanket tied over his head and the upper part of his body, strangled to death before the other members of the party could extricate themselves and summon aid.

On the first day of November, 1954, the defendant and his companion appeared for arraignment upon an indictment in the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco. It appears in the record of that proceeding that the defendant and his companion were represented by counsel from the public defender's office and that they were "duly arraigned." They did not enter a plea. When it was learned that they were minors proceedings were suspended and they were taken before the Juvenile Court for possible proceedings therein pursuant to section 833.5 of the Welfare and Institutions Code. Following a hearing in the Juvenile Court for which no transcript of the proceedings was made, the following order was entered on the 5th day of November: "It appearing to the satisfaction of the Court that the above-named Gene Lawrence Dotson, a minor of the age of eighteen years, was on the 25th day of October, 1954, certified to the Juvenile Court by Department No. 12 of the Municipal Court of this City and County, and that criminal proceedings pending in said Municipal Court have been suspended against said minor by reason of his age;

"And it further appearing to the Court that the Grand Jury of this City and County has presented and filed in the Superior Court of this City and County on October 29, 1954, an indictment charging said Gene Lawrence Dotson with the same offense upon which he has been certified herein;

"And it further appearing to the Court, after consideration of the report of the Probation Officer, the prior record of the minor, the minor's character, the type of his offense, his actual age, and other relevant factors, that the said minor is not a fit subject for consideration under the Juvenile Court Law;

"It is hereby ordered that the said minor Gene Lawrence Dotson be remanded to the Superior Court in order that criminal proceedings be instituted against him under the General Law and the aforesaid Indictment."

As indicated by the order it must be assumed that the Juvenile Court, in disposing of the matter, considered that the defendant although a minor in years had been conducting himself as an adult. It appears in the record that he was married, had been moving about the country from job to job, had enlisted and been discharged from the Marine Corps, had a prior record of criminal conviction and had served at least one jail sentence.

On the 10th day of November the interrupted proceedings in the Superior Court were resumed and the defendant, represented again by counsel, pleaded not guilty to the offenses charged in the indictment and the case was set for trial. Continuances were granted on the 16th of November and on the 13th of December. Counsel for the defendant consented to the continuance in each instance. Trial was commenced on the 10th of January, 1955. At all stages of the trial the defendant was represented by counsel. On February 2 the defendant was found guilty in the first degree of each of the three counts. On appeal he assigns as error a claimed lack of representation by counsel in the Juvenile Court; that counsel was not provided until shortly before trial in the Superior Court, and that certain conduct on the part of the district attorney resulted in an unfair trial.

In an affidavit submitted by the defendant and referred to in his briefs the defendant states that he was without counsel in the Juvenile Court; that at that time he had no knowledge of the so-called felony murder doctrine; that he did not intend to harm the deceased; that he thought that he had as good an opportunity to defend in the Superior Court as in the Juvenile Court; that he therefore made no effort to have the matter retained in the Juvenile Court, and that he was thereby prejudiced by being subjected to the felony murder doctrine and the possibility of sentences of death or life imprisonment which would not be imposed in the Juvenile Court.

[1–3] There can be no question but that a defendant is entitled to be represented by counsel at all stages of a criminal proceeding. § 858, Penal Code. But proceedings before the Juvenile Court, even in cases where a criminal charge is pending in the Superior Court, are not criminal in nature. They are in the nature of guardianship proceedings in which the state as parens patriae seeks to relieve the minor of the stigma of a criminal conviction and to give him corrective care, supervision and training. In re Daedler, 194 Cal. 320, 228 P. 467; In re Dargo, 81 Cal.App.2d 205, 183 P.2d 282. While such minors are as much entitled to constitutional guarantees as when subjected to criminal proceedings, In re Poff, D.C., 135 F.Supp. 224; In re Contreras, 109 Cal.App.2d 787, 241 P.2d 631, nevertheless, because of the nature of the proceedings, the denial of those requirements which have been recognized as elements of a fair trial does not necessarily deprive one of due process of law in Juvenile Court proceedings. The fact that a minor is not represented by counsel need not be a denial of due process in the Juvenile Court. People ex rel. Weber v. Fifield, 136 Cal.App.2d 741, 289 P.2d 303; In re O'Day, 83 Cal.App.2d 339, 189 P.2d 525. It is only when by such lack of representation of the minor undue advantage is taken of him or he is otherwise accorded unfair treatment resulting in a deprivation of his rights that it can be said he has been denied due process of law. There is nothing in the present case to suggest such deprivation or unfair treatment.

In re Contreras, supra, 109 Cal.App.2d 787, 241 P.2d 631, is relied on by the defendant as holding that the absence of counsel in Juvenile Court proceedings is so grave an error as to justify release of the accused. The case does not stand for that broad proposition. It appeared in that case that the Juvenile Court considered improper and questionable evidence on which it declared the minor a ward of the court and committed him to the Youth Authority. It was pointed out by the court that the adjudication in that case thus deprived the minor of his liberty, confined him in a state institution and in the eyes of society was tantamount to a criminal conviction of acts which would have amounted to a felony in a proceeding under the general law. The court concluded that under the guise of acting to protect the minor the Juvenile Court had deprived him of constitutional guarantees which might have been preserved had he been represented by counsel. It ordered his release and quoting from In re Hill, 78 Cal. App. 23, 247 P. 591, 592, held that the "'regular processes of the law provided to produce evidence, and the ordinary rules established to aid courts in testing and weighing it, are not scrapped because the proceeding'" is one in the Juvenile Court. In re Contreras, supra, 109 Cal.App.2d at page 790, 241 P.2d at page 633; see also In re Poff, supra, 135 F.Supp. 224; In re Tahbel, 46 Cal.App. 755, 189 P. 804.

[4, 5] In the present case the Juvenile Court made no attempt to determine the defendant's complicity in any wrongdoing or to punish him within the scope of its statutory power. It merely ascertained that the defendant was not a "fit subject" for consideration in that court, and declined to exercise further jurisdiction over him. The determination of that question rested within the sound discretion of the juvenile judge. The law recognizes that a minor may have such a record of delinquency or his derelictions may be of such a character that to make him a ward of the Juvenile Court would not aid him or serve the purposes of the court. People v. Renteria, 60 Cal.App.2d 463, 141 P. 2d 37; 15 Cal.Jur.2d 631. It appears from the order of the Juvenile Court that the judge exercised his discretion with such considerations in mind, and in doing so under the circumstances here shown the defendant was not deprived of any constitutional right. We are aware of no authority which would deem the proceedings in the Juvenile Court in this particular instance to have been a stage in the criminal proceedings or to have resulted in a denial of due process of law.

As to the claimed lack of adequate representation by counsel in the Superior Court the defendant states that about 4:30 p. m. on January 9, 1956, an attorney from the public defender's office advised him that he would represent him; that he talked with the attorney for approximately fifteen minutes at that time; that the felony murder doctrine was not mentioned, and that he did not talk with counsel again until the trial commenced on the following morning. As previously stated, the record shows that the defendant was represented by counsel from the public defender's office at the arraignment on November 1, 1954, at the second arraignment on November 10, at the continuance on the 16th of November, at the continuance on the 13th of December, and at all other stages of the criminal proceedings. While the trial commenced on January 10, one day after the claimed initial consultation, the opening statements of counsel and the questioning of witnesses did not begin until January 13.

The defendant does not contend, and the record does not show in any respect, that there was a need for a conference longer than that which is claimed to have taken place; that a request was made for a longer or additional conference by either the defendant or his counsel; that consultation was in any way limited by the court or by the defendant's counsel; that counsel was not adequately prepared for trial, or that the defendant was in any way prejudiced by not having consulted counsel for a longer period. On the other hand a review of the record affirmatively shows that the evidence of the defendant's guilt was so overwhelming that no adequate defense could have been interposed; that his attorney conducted the defense against the charges as well as could reasonably have been expected, and that there is no evidence of a lack of preparation or of insufficient time in which to prepare. In this latter regard it appears that more than two months elapsed between arraignment and trial during which time the public defender was active in the case and had available to him the record of the proceedings before the grand jury. What further benefit may have accrued to the defendant by continued consultations with his attorney does not appear.

The cases relied on by the defendant are all cases in which a defendant was shown to have been prejudiced by an appointment of counsel in a manner or at a time which made adequate representation impossible. Powell v. State of Alabama, 287 U.S. 45, 53 S.Ct. 55, 77 L.Ed. 158; People v. Chesser, 29 Cal.2d 815, 178 P.2d 761, or by the appointment of counsel who failed to conduct himself in the best interests of the defendant, People v. Avilez, 86 Cal.App.2d 289, 194 P.2d 829, or by the affirmative denial of the right to consult with or be represented by counsel of the defendant's own choice at all stages of a criminal proceeding. In re Ochse, 38 Cal.2d 230, 238 P.2d 561; People v. Havel, 134 Cal.App.2d 213, 285 P.2d 317; People v. McGarvy, 61 Cal.App.2d 557, 142 P.2d 92; People v. Simpson, 31 Cal.App.2d 267, 88 P.2d 175; In re Snyder, 62 Cal.App. 697, 217 P. 777; In re Rider, 50 Cal.App. 797, 195 P. 965. In the present case a fair trial was not denied the defendant for any of the foregoing reasons.

[6] The defendant's contention that the district attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct is based upon three instances complained of. It is contended first that it was misconduct to question the defendant on cross examination concerning bad check passing in the State of Oregon. The defendant first raised this question when he testified on direct examination that he had passed a check in Oregon, and on cross-examination the district attorney further pursued the subject. Two of the questions asked concerning the number of checks passed were not answered on the advice of the court, and the district attorney succeeded in bringing out no information not testified to on direct examination.

It is next contended that the district attorney improperly asked whether the defendant had received an undesirable discharge from the Marine Corps. On direct examination the defendant had testified that he had been a member of the Marine Corps and had been discharged at the age of 17, and on cross-examination the district attorney brought out that the defendant had received a dishonorable discharge, later substituted by a general discharge under honorable conditions.

It is finally contended that the district attorney improperly brought to the jury's attention the fact that the defendant had served time in jail. Again this was first brought out on direct examination when the defendant testified that he had served six months in a county jail in Oregon, and denied having made statements that he had served time elsewhere. On cross-examination the district attorney obtained no further admissions from the defendant.

It is well established that the scope of proper cross-examination may extend to the whole transaction of which the witness has testified, or it may be employed to elicit any matter which may tend to overcome, qualify or explain the testimony given by a witness on his direct examination. People v. Westek, 31 Cal.2d 469, 476, 190 P.2d 9; People v. Tyren, 179 Cal. 575, 580, 178 P. 132. The defendant has failed to show that he was not adequately represented by counsel at all stages of the criminal proceedings; that any error occurred in the conduct of his trial, or that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct. He received a fair trial and his guilt was established beyond question.

The judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

CARTER, Justice.

I dissent.

It is my opinion that the minor here involved was deprived of due process of law because of lack of counsel in the juvenile court proceedings.

Defendant was accused of a serious felony; he was remanded to the juvenile court because of his age. In the juvenile court, the only question determined, so far as the record shows, is whether or not defendant was a fit subject for the consideration of that court. Since he was undoubtedly a minor, he was within that court's jurisdiction if that court, in the exercise of its discretion, saw fit to retain its jurisdiction over him. It cannot be denied that defendant's future would have been an entirely different matter had the juvenile court retained jurisdiction rather than remanding him to the superior court for trial on the felony charges. If defendant had been provided with counsel at that time so that he could have defended himself on the issue then involved, it is very probable that the outcome would have been different. The California Constitution, art. I, § 13, provides that in criminal prosecutions "in any court whatever" the party accused shall have the right to appear and defend in person and with counsel. It has been said, and is said again here in the majority opinion, that proceedings in the juvenile court are not criminal in nature even though the charge is a criminal one. It appears to me that when the charge is a criminal one, and particularly when it is as serious as the one involved here, that the proceedings should be considered criminal in nature and the accused be accorded all the safeguards intended for his protection. In In re Contreras, 109 Cal.App.2d 787, 789, 241 P.2d 631, 633, it was said: "While the juvenile court law provides that adjudication of a minor to be a ward of the court shall not be deemed to be a conviction of crime, nevertheless, for all practical purposes, this is a legal fiction, presenting a challenge to credulity and doing violence to reason. Courts cannot and will not shut their eyes and ears to everyday contemporary happenings." It was also said, 109 Cal.App.2d at page 790, 241 P.2d at page 633: "Surely, a minor charged in the juvenile court with acts denounced by law as a felony does not have lesser constitutional statutory rights or guaranties than are afforded an adult under similar circumstances in the superior court. * * * In practically all of the cases affecting juvenile court proceedings that have come to our attention, the minor has admitted the charge lodged against him and the only problem presented to the court was how to best guide and control the minor with a view to his rehabilitation and further development. In the case at bar however, the minor emphatically and at all times denied his alleged delinquency. Under such circumstances his liberty should not be taken from him until his guilt of the charges lodged against him was established by legal evidence. That however praiseworthy, according to the viewpoint of the individual, may be the motives of the juvenile court, that tribunal may not impinge upon the legal rights of one brought before it is emphatically set forth in Re Tahbel, 46 Cal.App. 755, 760, 761, 762, 763, 189 P. 804; in In re Hill, supra, 78 Cal.App. at pages 26, 27, 28, 247 P. 591; and in In re Rauch, 103 Cal.App.2d 690, 698, 230 P.2d 115. In the final analysis the juvenile court is a judicial institution." (Emphasis added.) In In re Poff, D.C., 135 F.Supp. 224, 227, the Contreras case was approved, and it was held that the legislative intent was to enlarge, not to diminish the constitutional protections afforded a minor. The court there concluded: "I hold only that where the child commits an act, which act if committed by an adult would constitute a crime, then due process in the Juvenile Court requires that the child be advised that he is entitled to the effective assistance of counsel, and this is so even though the Juvenile Court in making dispositions of delinquent children is not a criminal court."

In the majority opinion it is said that there is nothing in the present record to show that the minor defendant here was deprived of his rights or denied due process of law. When the gravity of the charge is taken into consideration, it seems to me that the lack of counsel to advise defendant was a deprivation of due process in the juvenile court proceedings which are judicial proceedings.

I would therefore reverse the judgment

Cr. 5688.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

July 13, 1956.

Prisoner's proceeding in habeas corpus to secure his release from custody in which he had been placed pursuant to warrant for interstate rendition. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held that where subsequent to judgment of conviction and imposition of sentence in Idaho the defendant had been extradited to Utah and served a sentence there, defendant was a fugitive from justice in Idaho and liable to extradition.

Writ heretofore issued discharged.

1. Habeas Corpus ⇨85(2)

In proceedings in habeas corpus to secure release from arrest pursuant to warrant for interstate rendition, affidavits of sheriff of county in state demanding rendition, were sufficient.

2. Extradition ⇨21

One of the purposes of the extradition statutes is to prevent criminals from escaping punishment.

3. Extradition ⇨22

State legislation on extradition is valid only to the extent to which it aids and is not inconsistent with the federal constitution and statutes.

4. Extradition ⇨22

The United States Constitution guarantees no right of asylum to any person who has committed a crime in one state and fled to another.

5. Extradition ⇨30

Prisoner removed by federal authorities from demanding state, are subject to extradition from asylum state as a fugitive from justice.

6. Extradition ⇨39

Power and duty of determining whether a sufficient showing has been made to warrant the extradition of the person demanded rests in the first instance on the governor of the asylum state.

7. Extradition ⇨39

In determining whether a sufficient showing has been made to warrant extradition of person demanded, the governor of the asylum state must determine (1) a question of law as to whether person demanded is substantially charged by an indictment or affidavit properly certified with a crime against laws of state from whose justice it is alleged that he has fled, and (2) a question of fact as to whether he is a fugitive from justice from the state demanding him.

8. Habeas Corpus ⇨21

Governor's judgment as to whether there has been a sufficient showing to warrant extradition of person demanded is not subject to judicial impeachment by habeas corpus unless it conclusively appears that person sought to be extradited could not be a fugitive from justice under the law.

9. Extradition ⇨30

Where subsequent to judgment of conviction and imposition of sentence in Idaho, defendant was extradited to Utah and served a sentence for a crime committed there, defendant was a fugitive from justice in Idaho and liable to extradition, since by honoring extradition request of Utah, Idaho was not estopped to assert that defendant was a fugitive from justice. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 1548.2, 1549.

Ernest L. Graves, Long Beach, for petitioner.

S. Ernest Roll, Dist. Atty. of Los Angeles County, Jere J. Sullivan, Deputy Dist. Atty., Los Angeles, for respondent.

FOURT, Justice.

Donald Lee Fedder, hereinafter referred to as the petitioner, has petitioned this court for a writ of habeas corpus, setting forth, among other things, that he is imprisoned and restrained of his liberty by the Sheriff of Los Angeles county at the county jail in Los Angeles pursuant to a warrant for the interstate rendition of petitioner.

He contends that the detention is illegal in that the affidavit of the Sheriff of Teton county, Idaho, is insufficient as a matter of law to state facts sufficient for the issuance of the warrant, and that petitioner is not a fugitive from Idaho and has not fled Idaho, as those terms are used or defined in Penal Code section 1548.2, or within the definition of such terms under the Constitution of the United States, in that Idaho unconditionally surrendered petitioner pursuant to a request from the Governor of Utah while petitioner was under conviction and sentence in Idaho, and without the consent and over the objection of petitioner, and further that Idaho, under the circumstances, waived its jurisdiction over petitioner, and has waived its right, or is estopped thereby, to now assert that petitioner is a fugitive from Idaho, or has fled Idaho.

The facts are substantially as follows. Petitioner was, on or about, October 28, 1950, in the county of Weber, Utah, charged with committing a felony in violation of certain provisions of the law of Utah, in that he, for his own gain, received stolen property. On February 28, 1951, petitioner pled guilty to the charge. He made an application for probation, and on March 19, 1951, signed an agreement setting forth the terms of probation and accordingly, on April 30, 1951, was placed in the custody and under the supervision of the Utah State Adult Probation Department.

Part of the terms of probation were that petitioner would make regular reports to the agent in charge each month; that he would not leave the state without first obtaining permission from the agent in charge; that he would obey all laws and refrain from illegal transactions, and would make restitution.

Imposition of sentence was continued from time to time. On November 19, 1951, one of the dates to which the matter was continued, the petitioner failed to appear and has failed to appear at all times thereafter. The matter was continued from date to date thereafter, until on December 26, 1951, a bench warrant was issued for his arrest. Bail was set in the sum of $5,000.

An order to show cause why the probation should not be revoked by the court and why the petitioner should not be committed forthwith to the Utah State Prison upon the affidavit filed by the probation officer, was issued June 2, 1952, returnable June 30, 1952.

The petitioner did not personally appear, but entered a motion to quash the order on several grounds, among them being that there was no formal adjudication of guilt ever made, that no written order pronouncing sentence was ever made, and that the court did not prescribe any of the conditions for probation. The court found that the probation agreement had been violated in that petitioner had left the state of Utah without permission; had failed to report as agreed upon and had made no restitution. The court found the petitioner guilty and set July 7, 1952, for sentencing. The petitioner appealed the cause to the Supreme Court of Utah, which court sustained the conviction and ruled against all of petitioner's contentions. That decision is reported in State v. Fedder, 1 Utah 2d 117, 262 P.2d 753, dated October 30, 1953.

On or about January 9, 1953, an amended complaint was filed in the Probate Court of Teton County, State of Idaho, wherein the State of Idaho, as plaintiff, charged the petitioner, as defendant, with burglary in the first degree. The complaint set forth, among other things, that the defendant, on or about December 29, 1952, committed a burglary in the first degree in Teton County, Idaho; that the defendant was a persistent violator of the law in that on or about March 19, 1940, he was convicted of burglary in the second degree in the district court in Lincoln County, Nevada, and that on or about April 10, 1941, he was convicted of burglary in the first degree in the district court of the third judicial district, County of Ada, State of Idaho. That case was set for trial on August 31, 1953. Petitioner, on August 28, 1953, moved for a continuance and it was granted. The case was then set for trial on September 3, 1953. At the time fixd for the trial the petitioner did not appear and the bail was forfeited. Petitioner's counsel contended at the time that petitioner was unable to be present for trial as he was in California, suffering from injuries received in an automobile accident. The court later ordered the bail forfeiture set aside upon certain conditions, and the cause was continued to October 20, 1953, for trial. A trial was had before a jury and on October 21, 1953, a verdict of guilty of burglary in the first degree was returned. Petitioner was duly arraigned for judgment on November 2, 1953, and sentenced to the state prison of Idaho for a term of not more than fifteen years.

The defendant was released from custody to appeal the conviction upon giving a bail bond in the sum of $3,000. On the appeal the Supreme Court of Idaho entered its decision on June 29, 1955, affirming the conviction. That case is reported in 76 Idaho 535, 285 P.2d 802.

The authorities of Utah finally located the petitioner in Idaho, and on or about January 26, 1954, the district attorney of Weber county, Utah, made an application to the Governor of Utah for a requisition upon the Governor of Idaho for the petitioner. In support of the application he set forth the necessary documents and instruments and stated that application had been made in June, 1952, and that the defendant appeared specially through his attorney to resist extradition; that the cause was appealed to the Supreme Court of Utah, and decided against the defendant; that the defendant was in Idaho Falls, Idaho, and was a fugitive from justice.

On March 10, 1954, the Governor of Idaho directed the sheriff of Bonneville county, Idaho, to arrest the defendant and deliver him to the agent of Utah. The petitioner was arrested March 16, 1954. He was released on a $1,000 bail bond. On April 14, 1954, the petitioner surrendered himself into the custody of the sheriff for the purpose of his hearing on a writ of habeas corpus to test and determine the validity of the extradition proceedings. The cause was continued from time to time, and on September 8, 1954, the application for the writ of habeas corpus was denied. A stay of execution until September 17, 1954, was granted and the bond was continued for such stay period.

The petitioner was apparently taken back to Utah and served a term for the offense of receiving stolen property and was thereafter released by the authorities of Utah. On July 20, 1955, the decision on petitioner's appeal to the Supreme Court in Idaho became final.

An order of recommitment was made April 27, 1956, by the court in Idaho, wherein it was recited that the petitioner was convicted and sentenced; that he was released to appeal said conviction by filing a bail bond in the sum of $3,000; that the Supreme Court affirmed the decision; that the defendant failed to present himself for execution of the judgment; that the sheriff made demand upon the sureties of the bail bond to produce the defendant, but they have been unable to do so and have, in writing, authorized the sheriff to have the defendant arrested that the execution of the judgment might be made; that the bail be forfeited and that any sheriff of the State of Idaho arrest the defendant.

On May 29, 1956, the Governor of Idaho signed a rendition demand for petitioner, addressed to the Governor of the State of California. On June 18, 1956, petitioner was ordered remanded to the custody of the Sheriff of Los Angeles county pursuant to a governor's extradition warrant and was by said Sheriff ordered to be delivered to the agent of the State of Idaho forty-eight hours hence.

[1] We will consider first petitioner's contention that the affidavit of the sheriff of Teton County, Idaho, is insufficient. In one affidavit the sheriff stated that he could not serve the order of recommitment because the petitioner could not be found in the county of Teton and State of Idaho. In another affidavit he stated that after he received the order he immediately commenced an investigation as to the whereabouts of petitioner and he learned that the petitioner had left the state of Idaho. We are of the opinion that the documents and affidavits were sufficient under the circumstances and were in proper order.

Next considering the claim that petitioner is not a fugitive from Idaho, Penal Code sections 1548.2 and 1549 are set forth in the footnote herein.[1] Section 1548.2 is substantially section 3 of the Uniform Criminal Extradition Act adopted in this state in 1937. Section 1549 is substantially section 5 of the Uniform Act. In the Commissioners' prefatory notes to the Uniform Act, it is stated (9 U.L.A. 169–170):

"The Federal Constitution, adopting substantially the language of the earlier articles of Confederation between the thirteen colonies provides, in section 2 of Article IV, U.S.C.A.Const., art. IV, § 2, cl. 2, that 'A person charged in any state with treason, felony, or other crime, who shall flee from justice, and be found in another state, shall on demand of the executive authority of the state from which he fled, be delivered up to be removed to the state having jurisdiction of the crime.'

[1] "§ 1548.2. [Form and requisite allegations of demand: Necessary accompanying documents: Form: Authentication.] No demand for the extradition of a person charged with crime in another State shall be recognized by the Governor unless it is in writing alleging that the accused was present in the demanding State at the time of the commission of the alleged crime, and that thereafter he fled from that State. Such demand shall be accompanied by a copy of an indictment found or by information or by a copy of an affidavit made before a magistrate in the demanding State together with a copy of any warrant which was issued thereon; or such demand shall be accompanied by a copy of a judgment of conviction or of a sentence imposed in execution thereof, together with a statement by the executive authority of the demanding State that the person claimed has escaped from confinement or has violated the terms of his bail, probation or parole. The indictment, information, or affidavit made before the magistrate must substantially charge the person demanded with having committed a crime under the law of that State; and the copy of indictment, information, affidavit, judgment of conviction or sentence must be certified as authentic by the executive authority making the demand."

"§ 1549. [Agreement for return to this state of person imprisoned or held in another: Conditions: Surrender of person who left other state involuntarily.] When it is desired to have returned to this State a person charged in this State with a crime, and such person is imprisoned or is held under criminal proceedings then pending against him in another State, the Governor of this State may agree with the executive authority of such other State for the extradition of such person before the conclusion of such proceedings or his term of sentence in such other State, upon the condition that such person be returned to such other State at the expense of this State as soon as the prosecution in this State is terminated.

"The Governor of this State may also surrender on demand of the executive authority of any other State any person in this State who is charged in the manner provided in section 1548.2 of this code with having violated the laws of the demanding State even though such person left such demanding State involuntarily."

"But notwithstanding the clarity of the above provision, the federal Congress, acting upon an opinion of Attorney-General Randolph, decided in 1793 that the section of the constitution was not self-executing, chiefly because it provided no machinery for its execution, and passed in 1793 an act which has been brought forward as sections 5278 and 5279 of the U. S. Revised Statutes of 1875, 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 662, 663 [18 U.S.C.A. §§ 3182, 3194, and 3195], * * *:

* * * * * *

"The above section of the Constitution and the above federal law form the basis of the interstate extradition of fugitive criminals in all the states. The Constitution creates the right to demand the fugitive, and the federal law creates the machinery, and they thus distinguish interstate extradition from international extradition which rests entirely upon treaties and is defined by treaty limitations."

Following the preparation of the Uniform Act in 1926, various amendments were made to section 5 thereof. The Commissioners' notes recite (9 U.L.A., supra, 172):

"Section 5 contains two paragraphs, added by the Conference in 1936. The second of these paragraphs authorizes the extradition of a criminal who, under the decisions of some states, has been held not to be a 'fugitive' because his departure from the state in which the crime was committed was under compulsory process. The first paragraph is intended to cover the situation of a man who is wanted for trial in one state and who is already serving a prison sentence in another state."

And further states (at page 191): "* * The reason for the second paragraph of this section lies in the fact that there is a conflict in the decisions upon the question whether a person who has been removed from a state under the compulsion of the authority of that state can be classed as a 'fugitive' from that state so that his return can be secured through extradition proceedings. See, In re Whittington, 1917, 34 Cal.App. 344, 167 P. 404; Hart v. Mangum, 1917, 146 Ga. 497, 91 S.E. 543; People ex rel. Hutchings v. Mallon, 1927, 245 N.Y. 521, 157 N.E. 842; State ex rel. Shapiro v. Wall, 1932, 187 Minn. 246, 244 N.W. 811 [85 A.L.R. 114]."

[2–4] One of the purposes of the extradition statutes is to prevent criminals from escaping punishment. State legislation on the subject matter is valid only to the extent to which it aids and is not inconsistent with the Federal Constitution and statutes. The Constitution guarantees no right of asylum to any person who has committed a crime in one state and fled to another. As was said in Brewer v. Goff, 10 Cir., 138 F.2d 710, at page 711:

"The Constitutional provision and the procedural statute were intended to provide a summary executive proceedings, by the use of which the closely associated states of the union could promptly aid one another in bringing to trial persons accused of crime in one state, but found in another beyond the reach of the state where the crime was committed. To this end, the courts have given the Constitution and statute a liberal construction in order to effectuate and expedite the administration of justice in the several states. Biddinger v. Commissioner of Police, 245 U.S. 128, 38 S.Ct. 41, 62 L.Ed. 193; Appleyard v. Massachusetts, 203 U.S. 222, 27 S.Ct. 122, 51 L.Ed. 161; Lascelles v. Georgia, 148 U.S. 537, 13 S.Ct. 687, 37 L.Ed. 549; Roberts v. Reilly, 116 U.S. 80, 94, 6 S.Ct. 291, 29 L.Ed. 544; * * *."

In the case at hand the petitioner was convicted of a crime, and the judgment remains unsatisfied, and for the purposes of this proceedings, he may be deemed to be a person charged with a crime within the meaning of the Constitutional and statutory terms. United States ex rel. Faris v. McClain, D.C., 42 F.Supp. 429.

[5] The general rule is set forth in 35 C.J.S., Extradition, § 10, p. 327, where it is said: "The mode or manner of a person's departure from the state generally does not affect his status as a fugitive from justice; so the fact that a person's departure was involuntary or under legal compulsion will not, under most authorities, preclude his extradition as a fugitive from justice (Ga.—Brown v. Lowry, 185 Ga. 539, 195 S.E. 759. N.Y.—People ex rel. Hutchings v. Mallon, 218 App.Div. 461, 218 N.Y.S. 432, reversing 126 Misc. 591, 214 N.Y.S. 211, and affirmed 245 N.Y. 521, 157 N.E. 842. Prisoner removed by federal authorities from demanding state is subject to extradition from asylum state as a fugitive from justice. U.S.—Spencer v. Hamilton, 8 Cir., 12 F.2d 976. Ga.—Scheinfain v. Aldredge, 191 Ga. 479, 12 S.E.2d 868. Ill.—People ex rel. McFadden v. Meyering, 358 Ill. 442, 193 N.E. 475. Kan.—Ex parte Martin, 142 Kan. 907, 52 P.2d 1196. Minn.—State [ex rel. Shapiro] v. Wall, 187 Minn. 246, 244 N.W. 811, 85 A.L.R. 114. N.J.—Ex parte Cohen, 104 N.J.Eq. 560, 146 A. 423. N.Y.—People [ex rel. American Surety Co.] v. Benham, 71 Misc. 345, 128 N.Y.S. 610. Wash.—Ex parte Anthony, 198 Wash. 106, 87 P.2d 302.), although there is authority to the effect that a person leaving a state in the custody of an officer is not a fugitive. (Cal.—In re Whittington, 34 Cal. App. 344, 167 P. 404.)"

In the Whittington case the defendant was charged with a crime in Texas and was delivered to California in extradition proceedings to answer a charge in this state. Later, after the defendant was brought to this state, the authorities decided not to prosecute. Texas then sought to extradite him for trial of the crime committed in Texas. In habeas corpus proceedings the California court ordered his release upon the grounds that he left the state through no voluntary act of his own and that the actions of Texas in delivering him to California, upon California's demand, constituted a waiver of jurisdiction over him. This case was decided in 1917, and was cited in In re Marzec, 25 Cal.2d 794, 154 P.2d 873, and in In re McBride, 101 Cal.App. 251, 281 P. 651, and distinguished in both cases. The case is clearly contrary to the weight of authority and has been criticized in Ex parte Martin, 142 Kan. 907, 52 P.2d 1196; State ex rel. Shapiro v. Wall, 187 Minn. 246, 244 N.W. 811; People ex rel. Hutchings v. Mallon, 126 Misc. 591, 214 N.Y.S. 211, reversed, 218 App.Div. 461, 218 N.Y.S. 432, affirmed 245 N.Y. 521, 157 N.E. 842; Ex parte Anthony, 198 Wash. 106, 87 P.2d 302; also in Moulthrope v. Matus, 139 Conn. 272, 93 A.2d 149, and in United States ex rel. Moulthrope v. Matus, 2 Cir., 218 F.2d 466, at page 468, the court said in reference to the Whittington case, it "seems not to have been generally followed."

[6, 7] The power and duty of determining whether a sufficient showing has been made to warrant the extradition of the person demanded rests, in the first instance, on the governor of the asylum state. Two questions are presented to the governor: (1) Is the person demanded substantially charged by an indictment or affidavit properly certified with the crime against the laws of the state from whose justice it is alleged that he has fled? (2) Is he a fugitive from justice from the state demanding him? The first is a question of law, while the second is a question of fact. 35 C.J.S., Extradition, § 15, p. 339.

[8] The governor's judgment thereon is not subject to judicial impeachment by habeas corpus unless it conclusively appears that the person sought to be extradited could not be a fugitive from justice under the law. Brewer v. Goff, supra, 138 F.2d 710, 712; Roberts v. Reilly, 116 U.S. 80, 6 S.Ct. 291, 29 L.Ed. 544; Appleyard v. Massachusetts, 203 U.S. 222, 27 S.Ct. 122, 51 L.Ed. 161; Hyatt v. People of State of New York ex rel. Corkran, 188 U.S. 691, 23 S.Ct. 456, 47 L.Ed. 657. For, as it is said in 35 C.J.S., Extradition, § 16, at page 345, "In the absence of proof to the contrary, it will be presumed that the governor acted in conformity with law in the issuance of his warrant, and the warrant or the recitals therein are prima facie evidence of the existence of the jurisdictional facts, although it is not conclusive proof of compliance with statutory requirements."

It was appropriately set forth in Appleyard v. Massachusetts, supra, 203 U.S. at pages 227–228, 27 S.Ct. at page 123, as follows: "So that the simple inquiry must be whether the person whose surrender is demanded is in fact a fugitive from justice, not whether he consciously fled from justice in order to avoid prosecution for the crime with which he is charged by the demanding state. A person charged by indictment or by affidavit before a magistrate with the commission within a state of a crime covered by its laws, and who, after the date of the commission of such crime, leaves the state,—no matter for what purpose or with what motive, nor under what belief,—becomes, from the time of such leaving, and within the meaning of the Constitution and the laws of the United States, a fugitive from justice, and if found in another state must be delivered up by the governor of such state to the state whose laws are alleged to have been violated, on the production of such indictment or affidavit, certified as authentic by the governor of the state from which the accused departed. Such is the command of the supreme law of the land, which may not be disregarded by any state. The constitutional provision relating to fugitives from justice, as the history of its adoption will show, is in the nature of a treaty stipulation entered into for the purpose of securing a prompt and efficient administration of the criminal laws of the several states,—an object of the first concern to the people of the entire country, and which each state is bound, in fidelity to the Constitution, to recognize. A faithful, vigorous enforcement of that stipulation is vital to the harmony and welfare of the states. And while a state should take care, within the limits of the law, that the rights of its people are protected against illegal action, the judicial authorities of the Union should equally take care that the provisions of the Constitution be not so narrowly interpreted as to enable offenders against the laws of a state to find a permanent asylum in the territory of another state."

Also, the Supreme Court of this state has taken the same view, as stated in In re Murdock, 1936, 5 Cal.2d 644, at page 648, 55 P.2d 843, at page 845, where it is said:

"It has long been understood that for the purposes of extradition between states it is immaterial what motive induced the departure from the state where the offense was committed. Drew v. Thaw, 235 U.S. 432, 439, 35 S.Ct. 137, 59 L.Ed. 302, and cases cited. It is sufficient under the federal Constitution (article 4, § 2) if he be found in the state where the warrant is issued. In Roberts v. Reilly, 116 U.S. 80, 92, 96, 6 S.Ct. 291, 300, 29 L.Ed. 544, it is said: 'To be a fugitive from justice, in the sense of the act of congress regulating the subject under consideration, it is not necessary that the party charged should have left the state in which the crime is alleged to have been committed, after an indictment found, or for the purpose of avoiding a prosecution anticipated or begun, but simply that, having within a state committed that which by its laws constitutes a crime, when he is sought to be subjected to its criminal process to answer for his offense, he has left its jurisdiction, and is found within the territory of another.'"

It is enough, if after committing a crime in one jurisdiction, the perpetrator departs and is later found in another. Hogan v. O'Neill, 255 U.S. 52, 56, 41 S.Ct. 222, 65 L.Ed. 497.

It has frequently been held that even if the prisoner was forcibly removed from the state by federal authorities he is still a fugitive from justice.

The Congress and the legislatures of the various states adopted extradition laws to elminate the respective boundaries of the states as far as possible to the end that each state or the federal government could reach out and bring to trial and justice offenders against its laws from any part of the country. In adopting section 1549 of the Penal Code the legislature never intended that California should be a haven and asylum for those in the position of the petitioner herein.

[9] We believe that the principles of law here related are the rules which should be followed in this case. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the proceedings are sufficient, that the petitioner is a fugitive from Idaho and that Idaho, by honoring the extradition request of Utah, is not estopped to assert that petitioner is a fugitive.

The writ heretofore issued is discharged.

It is ordered that after thirty days have elapsed from and after the filing of this opinion, the Sheriff of Los Angeles County, to whose custody the petitioner is remanded, shall deliver him into the custody of the state agent or agents of the State of Idaho.

143 Cal.App.2d 804

Richard McMURREN, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Betty M. McMURREN, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 5187.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Aug. 13, 1956.

Divorce action, wherein a cross-complaint to have marriage nullified was filed. The Superior Court, San Diego County, L. N. Turrentine, J., granted the relief sought by the cross-complaint, and the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that evidence sustained finding that plaintiff had previously married a third person and that such marriage had not been dissolved or annulled.

Affirmed.

Marriage 🔑60(7)

In purported husband's divorce action, wherein a cross-complaint to have marriage nullified was filed, evidence sustained finding that plaintiff had previously married a third person and that such marriage had not been dissolved or annulled.

Floyd H. King, Long Beach, for appellant.

Stephen C. Johnson, San Diego, for respondent.

MUSSELL, Justice.

Plaintiff, in his complaint for divorce filed herein, alleged that he and the defendant, Betty M. McMurren, were married in Portsmouth, Virginia, on August 4, 1951; that they separated on September 7, 1954; that there were no children the issue of said marriage and that there was no community property. The defendant, in her answer, admitted that the parties participated in the marriage ceremony at Portsmouth on or about August 4, 1951, and in her cross-complaint she alleged that ever since August 4, 1951, the plaintiff and defendant have been known as husband and wife and that there has been no other ceremony of marriage by or between them. It was further alleged in the cross-complaint that at the time of said purported marriage plaintiff was the husband of Terry Lynn McMurren, and that the marriage of said plaintiff and Terry Lynn McMurren had not been dissolved or annulled and was in full force and effect. The prayer of the cross-complaint was that the purported marriage between plaintiff and defendant on August 4, 1951, be declared null and void.

Trial was had on the issues presented by the pleadings. The court found that the allegations of the cross-complaint were true and rendered judgment that the marriage between cross-complainant and Richard McMurren was null and void.

The sole contention of appellant Richard McMurren is that "There is no substantial evidence to support a valid marriage under California law between plaintiff and Terry Lynn."

The evidence relating to the marriage of appellant and Terry Lynn is contained in the deposition of appellant and in the testimony of Terry Lynn at the trial. She testified that on March 9, 1951, she and appellant went to Tia Juana, Mexico; that "We went down to one of the justices of the peace, or whatever they call them down there, and we asked if we could get married and they said that we could"; that they were introduced to two Mexican people in the room who were to be witnesses; that she and appellant were asked to look over the papers; that they signed their names, raised their right hands and were "sworn in" regarding the truth of their statements; that appellant furnished a ring and placed it on her finger in the presence of the witnesses and that the officiating officer then pronounced them man and wife; that they gave their names and addresses to the officiating officer and then went back to Long Beach; that the marriage certificate or papers were sent to appellant and that he gave an address to which all documents were to be sent; that she and appellant lived together at Long Beach from March 9, 1951, for about a month, when he was transferred to the east coast; that she had not filed any divorce action against the appellant and had never received any divorce papers from him or from his attorney.

Appellant stated in his deposition that on March 9, 1951, at Tia Juana, Mexico, he married Terry Lynn; that he and Terry then returned to Long Beach; that they lived together for one week and he then left for the east coast; that he received a piece of paper as to the marriage in Tia Juana but that he had thrown it away; that he gave the clerk in Tia Juana his name and address; that he told his folks that he was married to Terry Lynn; that when he and Terry went to Tia Juana they filled out some papers and signed them and were told that they were married and that some further papers would be sent to him; that he and Terry did not take any oath or swear to any statements; that he did not know the official status of the man he saw in Tia Juana; that he paid him $30 and sent an additional $5 to him the following payday; that he and Terry spent about thirty minutes in the office in Tia Juana "filling out papers and asking questions."

The foregoing testimony and the reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom, together with the presumption that the marriage of March 9, 1951, was valid and legal are sufficient to support the findings and judgment of the trial court. In re Estate of Crawford, 69 Cal.App.2d 609, 160 P.2d 65; In re Estate of Chandler, 113 Cal.App. 630, 299 P. 110. In re Estate of Chandler, the facts were quite similar to those in the instant case. In the Crawford case the decedent and respondent, residents of Los Angeles, went to Tia Juana and while there, decedent went into an office to see if they could get married. When he came out, he told respondent they could get married and then they both went in. While in the office they signed papers and answered questions put to them by a Mr. Soriano. Decedent paid this man $23, whereupon he told them to stand up, pronounced them man and wife, and congratulated them. Before they left he told them they would get some papers later on. These papers were received by decedent and respondent by mail about two weeks afterward. They were received in evidence and show a proxy marriage in Juarez, Mexico, based upon the appearance of the parties at Tia Juana, and their nomination of proxies. The court held that, based upon the testimony of a marriage ceremony in Tia Juana and subsequent cohabitation of the parties, the court was entitled to apply the presumption that the marriage was valid and legal and that since there was substantial evidence in support of the presumption, the court was without power to set the marriage aside. The judgment is affirmed.

Abe RICHMAN, Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.
N. C. GREEN; Louis Fishman, Coast Elevator Company, a California corporation, Cammie Scott, Defendants, Louis Fishman, Appellant.
Civ. 21539.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.
July 27, 1956.

Action for injuries sustained in elevator in building. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Harold C. Shepherd, J., rendered a judgment from which a defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that where trustee held record title to building simply to hold or convey according to beneficiary's demand, and had no duties to perform or trust to administer, beneficiary, rather than trustee, was liable for injury sustained due to negligent maintenance of elevator in building.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error 🔑931(3)

Where findings and conclusions were filed by trial court, but not included in record on appeal, findings were deemed to have been made in favor of appellee on every allegation necessary to support judgment.

2. Carriers 🔑318(1, 12)

In action for injuries sustained in elevator in building, evidence sustained finding that defendant owned, maintained, operated and controlled elevator, and that injury was due to negligence of defendant in maintenance, operation and control.

3. Trusts 🔑72

Where first party paid consideration for purchase of building while second party took record title, second party held title as trustee. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 853.

4. Trusts 🔑62

A resulting trust is one implied by law to carry out intention of parties.

5. Trusts 🔑235

Where trustee held record title to property simply to hold or convey according to beneficiary's demand, and had no duty to perform or trust to administer, beneficiary, rather than trustee, was liable for injury sustained due to negligent maintenance of elevator in building.

Peter M. Winkelman and Leland & Plattner, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Joseph Schecter, Los Angeles, and George M. Dell, Beverly Hills, for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Appellant demands reversal of a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $9,642 damages for personal injuries allegedly sustained in an elevator accident. Richman sued Green and appellant Fishman as the alleged owners of the building in which the elevator was maintained.

By his answer, Green denied the majority of plaintiff's allegations; admitted that he was the "record owner" of the building, but alleged that "said property is in truth and in fact owned by Louis Fishman." Appellant's answer declared that "N. C. Green is the record owner" and admitted that Fishman "is an owner of the Stimson Building." At the trial of the cause, it was proved that Green took title to the property without payment of any consideration; that only Fishman paid the consideration and deemed himself to be sole owner of the building; that Green took title as an accommodation to his father-in-law, Fishman, inasmuch as the latter lacked facility in reading and writing English; that Green was never physically present in the building; nor was he ever a participant in its actual administration; nor collected any income from the building; nor paid any expenses; and was indemnified by appellant against liability to third persons. The sum total of the proof was that Green held bare legal title. The controversy having been submitted, the court made findings and conclusions in favor of respondent but relieved Green of liability and entered judgment against Fishman and the other defendants.

On motion of Green's attorney, this court by its order dismissed Fishman's appeal as to Green on June 8, 1956, for the reason that Fishman had no standing to complain of the success of Green in defeating liability. Curran v. Heslop, 115 Cal.App.2d 476, 483, 252 P.2d 378; Click v. Southern Pacific Co., 113 Cal.App. 528, 530, 298 P. 839; 3 Cal.Jur.2d, Appeal & Error, sec. 111, p. 568. As a consequence, appellant is reduced to the sole contention that Green, rather than he, is solely liable for the negligence which caused respondent's injuries.

[1, 2] Appellant did not elect to designate the trial court's decision for inclusion in the record although the judgment recites that the findings and conclusions were in fact filed. Thus, the record must stand as though findings had been waived by the litigants. Findings will be deemed to have been made in favor of respondent on every allegation of his pleadings necessary to support the judgment. Bekins Van Lines v. Johnson, 21 Cal.2d 135, 137, 130 P.2d 421; Snyder v. Snyder, 102 Cal.App.2d 489, 491, 227 P.2d 847; Childers v. Childers, 74 Cal.App.2d 56, 59, 168 P.2d 218. Therefore, the trial court impliedly found that Fishman was an "owner" of the building which housed the elevator and that he "maintained, operated and controlled" the elevator through his "agents, servants and employees * * * acting within the scope of their employment, agency and authority"; and because of "the fault and negligence of the defendants, and each of them, in the maintenance, operation and control of said elevator," the elevator fell while respondent was a passenger thereon resulting in severe injuries to respondent. No contention is made that the evidence does not support such findings. They are fully substantiated by the record.

[3–5] Appellant relies upon Johnston v. Long, 30 Cal.2d 54, 181 P.2d 645, to relieve him of liability. Note, 21 So.Cal.L.Rev. 199. That case sets forth the rule that a trustee or executor bears personal responsibility under the doctrine of respondeat superior for torts committed by an employee in the course of administration of an active trust or estate. Rest., Trusts, sec. 264, comment (b); cases collected, 3 (pt. 2) Bogert, Trusts and Trustees, 532; 2 Scott on Trusts, sec. 264; 43 Harv.L.Rev. 1122, 1124. The decision suggests but does not hold that the liability of the trustee is the primary liability while that of the trust estate or of the beneficiaries is only to reimburse the trustee where he is free from fault. Johnston v. Long, supra, 30 Cal.2d at page 62, 181 P.2d at pages 649, 650. Appellant seeks to bring himself within the operation of this rule by invoking the doctrine of resulting trust. In the words of the Civil Code, when a transfer of real property is made to one person, and the consideration therefor is paid by or for another, a trust is presumed to result in favor of the person by or for whom such payment is made. Civ.Code, § 853. Inasmuch as appellant paid the consideration for the purchase of the building while Green took record title, the latter held title as trustee. Appellant contends that as trustee, Green stands primarily liable for the results of the negligent operation of the elevator in the administration of the trust. However, appellant has failed to consider that the Johnston decision and the cases upon which it relies deal with torts committed in the administration of an active trust where the trustee actually controls the administration of the trust property. A resulting trust is one implied by law to carry out the intention of the parties. The trustee has no duties to perform, no trust to administer, and no purpose to carry out except the single one of holding or conveying according to the beneficiary's demand. Bainbridge v. Stoner, 16 Cal.2d 423, 428, 106 P.2d 423. In such a situation, where the beneficiary is the party who controls the operation and maintenance of the trust property, the beneficiary must accept the liability of a master for the torts of his servants committed in the scope and course of their employment. Scott on Trusts, sec. 264, pp. 1489–90; City of Denver v. Soloman, 2 Colo.App. 534, 31 P. 507, 510; Brazowski v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 280 Ill.App. 293; Eisenbrey v. ESTATE of Anna M. JOHNSTON, Deceased. Alfred R. Johnston, as Executor and as Heir, Appellant. *

Civ. 21614.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 1, 1956.

Proceeding in the matter of the judicial settlement of the first account current of executor of decedent's estate. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Burdette J. Daniels, J., entered an order settling the account, decreeing preliminary distribution, fixing fees of executor and attorney and interpreting decedent's will, and the executor appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held that will did not create a trust, but that, since West's Ann.Prob. Code, § 901 had been amended after death of testatrix, fees of executor and his attorney should be computed on the basis of the law in effect at time of settlement of account and making of order allowing such compensation and not on the basis of the law in effect at date of death.

Order reversed in part and cause remanded with directions, and order, in all other respects, affirmed.

1. Wills 🔑439

A will is to be construed according to intention of testator and where his intention cannot have effect to its full extent, it must have effect as far as possible.

2. Wills 🔑450, 470

A will must be read as a whole and all parts thereof must be construed together and in relation to each other so as to form, if possible, a consistent whole.

3. Wills 🔑448

A will should be interpreted, if possible, in such manner as to prevent intestacy.

4. Perpetuities 🔑6(2)

Any trust created by testamentary direction that assets of estate be held and administered by executor "until they liquidate themselves" would be void as violating rule against restraints on alienation. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 715.1, 771.

5. Perpetuities 🔑6(10)

The bare possibility of a violation of the rules against remoteness or restraints on alienation, as such possibility exists at date of inception of trust, is sufficient to bring such rules into operation, and a probability of such violation is not required. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 715.1, 771.

6. Perpetuities 🔑6(10)

Where declaration of trust may by any possibility suspend alienability beyond allowable period, no trust is created and no estate is vested in trustee. West's Ann.Civ. Code, §§ 715.1, 771.

---

* Opinion vacated 303 P.2d 1.

7. Trusts ⚷1

A trustee, an estate conveyed to him, a beneficiary, a legal purpose, and a legal term are essential to constitute a valid express trust, and while equity will in some instances make good the absence of the first requisite, if the estate conveyed or the beneficiary is lacking, or if there is no legal purpose or legal term, the trust must fail.

8. Trusts ⚷61½

Where a trust is void as an illegal restraint upon alienation, no title or right is acquired either by trustee or any beneficiaries. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 715.1, 771.

9. Wills ⚷849

Where a testamentary trust is void, testator dies intestate as to the property which he attempted to devise in trust.

10. Wills ⚷675

Testamentary direction that all assets of estate other than specified farm be held and administered by executor "until they liquidate themselves" merely indicated desire of testatrix that final distribution of estate be delayed until such time and did not create a trust, particularly in view of other provisions of will pointing only to outright distribution of estate free from any trust.

11. Executors and Administrators ⚷216(2), 489

Where testatrix died prior to 1955 amendment to Probate Code, statutory fees of executor and attorney for executor should be computed on the basis of the law in effect at time of settlement of account and making of order allowing such compensation and not on the basis of law in effect at date of death of testatrix. West's Ann. Prob.Code, § 901.

12. Executors and Administrators ⚷495(1)

Executor or administrator is entitled to fees on the basis of the value of only those assets of estate which have come into his possession and for which he has accounted. West's Ann.Prob.Code, §§ 901, 920.

13. Executors and Administrators ⚷475, 495(4)

Executor of domiciliary estate was not chargeable in his account with the value of realty and oil royalties in another state, which did not come into his possession, and any reference to such property was properly stricken from his account and executor was not entitled to fees on the value of such realty or oil royalties. West's Ann. Prob.Code, §§ 901, 920.

Leland J. Allen, Los Angeles, for appellant.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal from the order settling the first account current, decreeing preliminary distribution, fixing statutory and extraordinary fees of the executor and the attorney and interpreting the will of decedent.

Appellant contends that the trial court erred in (1) finding that no trust estate is created under the terms of the will; (2) fixing the statutory fees of the executor and the attorney for the executor pursuant to the law in effect prior to September 7, 1955 and (3) striking from the account current any reference to the real property and royalty interests in Texas.

The provisions of decedent's will, insofar as they are pertinent to this appeal, are as follows:

"Seventh: I direct that my farm at Hopkinton, Iowa be sold, if this has not been done before my decease, and the proceeds added to the value of my estate. All other assets to be held and administered by the Executor of my estate, until they liquidate themselves.

"Eighth: After the payment of the above set out cash bequests, I hereby direct that the Reformed Presbyterian Church Board of Foreign Missions of North America whose address is 209 Ninth Street, Pittsburgh, Pa., is to receive an undivided one-fourth interest of my entire estate, personal and real wherever situated, including the cash balance on hand after the payment of just debts, cash bequests and taxes. In case this Board ceases to exist, then in that event the remainder of such interest is to pass to the Presbyterian Church Board of Foreign Missions of U. S. A., whose address is 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City, N. Y.

"Ninth: The remainder of my estate shall be distributed as follows:

"a) One-third to my sister Mary Ensign's three children, namely—Evelyn Leininger, Russell Ensign and Elizabeth Groot, share and share alike. In case any one of the above named children of my sister Mary Ensign shall predecease me or before the final distribution of my estate, then in that event their respective share or shares shall be paid to their lawful issue, share and share alike.

"b) One-third to my brother James Johnston's nine children, namely—William Johnston, Elmer Johnston, Gracia Wimmer, Dorothy Moulton, Alfred Johnston, Harlan Johnston, Forrest Johnston, Bruce Johnston and Lorraine Shedeck, share and share alike. In case any one of the above named children of my brother James Johnston shall predecease me or before the final distribution of my estate, then in that event their respective share or shares shall be paid to their lawful issue, share and share alike.

"c) One-third to my brother William Johnston's four children, namely—Alice Fehlman, Clemna McIlrath, Ruth Johnston and Walter Johnston, share and share alike. In case any one of the above named children of my brother William Johnston shall predecease me or before the final distribution of my estate, then in that event their respective share or shares shall be paid to their lawful issue, share and share alike.

"Tenth: I do specifically and intentionally omit to provide for any other person or relative, as it is my specific intention to leave my property to be distributed as previously set forth * * *."

The trial court found that "the Will contains no words sufficient to create a trust in the assets of the estate." Appellant maintains that the language contained in paragraph Seventh of the will, providing that "All other assets to be held and administered by the Executor of my estate, until they liquidate themselves." clearly indicates that it was the desire of the testatrix that the assets of the estate remain intact until they "liquidate themselves" and that such desire is further emphasized by the succeeding paragraph in which she directs that the Reformed Presbyterian Church Board of Foreign Missions of North America "is to receive an undivided one-fourth interest of my entire estate, personal and real wherever situated * * *."

Appellant contends that the trial court should have held that the will created a trust in the remaining assets of the estate and that the desire of the testatrix can only be carried out by the appointment of the executor as trustee.

[1-3] A will is to be construed according to the intention of the testator and where his intention cannot have effect to its full extent, it must have effect as far as possible. Probate Code, § 101; In re Estate of Akeley, 35 Cal.2d 26, 28, 215 P.2d 921, 17 A.L.R.2d 647; In re Estate of Foley, 126 Cal.App.2d 810, 812-813, 273 P.2d 26; In re Estate of Spence, 57 Cal.App.2d 922, 925, 135 P.2d 419. A will must be read as a whole; all parts thereof are to be construed together and in relation to each other so as to form, if possible, a consistent whole, In re Estate of Northcutt, 16 Cal.2d 683, 689, 107 P.2d 607; In re Estate of Spence, supra; In re Estate of Foley, supra, and, a will should be interpreted, if possible, in such manner as to prevent intestacy. In re Estate of Sewall, 14 Cal.App.2d 554, 555, 58 P.2d 744.

[4] If the will in the instant case were construed as creating a trust, such trust would be void since it would clearly violate the rule against restraints on alienation.

Section 715.1 of the Civil Code provides: "The absolute power of alienation cannot be suspended, by any limitation or condition whatever, for a period longer than 21 years after some life in being at the creation of the interest and any period of gestation involved in the situation to which the limitation applies. The lives selected to govern the time of suspension must not be so numerous or so situated that evidence of their deaths is likely to be unreasonably difficult to obtain." Section 771 of the Civil Code provides: "The suspension of all power to alienate the subject of a trust, other than a power to exchange it for other property to be held upon the same trust, or to sell it and reinvest the proceeds to be held upon the same trust, is a suspension of the power of alienation, within the meaning of Section 715.1."

[5, 6] It is not the probability of a violation of the rules against remoteness or restraints on alienation that brings such rules into operation, but only the bare possibility as such possibility exists at the date of the inception of the trust. In re Estate of Sahlender, 89 Cal.App.2d 329, 348, 201 P.2d 69; In re Estate of Gump, 16 Cal.2d 535, 547, 107 P.2d 17. As stated in Sheean v. Michel, 6 Cal.2d 324, at page 328, 57 P.2d 127, at page 129: "'"The statute does not permit us to wait and see whether events may not so transpire that in fact no perpetuity (suspension) results, but if under the terms of the deed or will creating the trust, when properly construed, the instrument 'by any possibility may suspend' the absolute power of alienation beyond the continuance of lives in being, the instrument, whether a deed or will, is void, and no trust is created nor any estate vested in the trustees." In re Estate of Steele, 124 Cal. 533, 537, 57 P. 564.' In re Estate of Whitney, 176 Cal. 12, 15, 16, 167 P. 399, 401; In re Estate of Maltman, 195 Cal. 643, 649, 234 P. 898; In re Estate of Troy, supra, 214 Cal. 53, at page 57, 3 P.2d 930."

[7–9] To the constitution of every valid express trust it is essential that there should be a trustee, an estate conveyed to him, a beneficiary, a legal purpose, and a legal term. While equity will in some instances make good the absence of the first requisite, if the estate conveyed, or the beneficiary be lacking, or there be no legal purpose or legal term, the trust must fail. In re Walkerly's Estate, 108 Cal. 627, 650, 41 P. 772. Where a trust is void as an illegal restraint upon alienating, no title or right is acquired either by the trustee or any of the beneficiaries. If the trust is void, as to the property attempted to be devised in trust, the testator died intestate. In re Walkerly's Estate, supra, 108 Cal. at page 660, 41 P. 772; Booge v. Reinicke, 45 Cal.App.2d 260, 265, 114 P.2d 427.

[10] However, taking the will as a whole, it appears clear that the testatrix did not intend to create a trust. No trustee is named, nor are the powers of the trustees set forth. No purpose is stated and there is no definite term fixed. At most, the language directing that all other assets be held and administered by the executor of her estate "until they liquidate themselves" indicates a desire on the part of the testatrix that final distribution of her estate be delayed by the executor until such time. On the other hand, in paragraph Eighth of her will she directs that after the payment of certain cash bequests, the Reformed Presbyterian Church Board of Foreign Missions shall receive an undivided one-fourth interest of her entire estate and in paragraph Ninth directs that the remainder of her estate "shall be distributed" to certain named nieces and nephews. Such provisions point only to outright distribution, free from any trust. Therefore, the finding of the trial court that the will contains no words sufficient to create a trust in the assets of the estate is correct.

[11] Appellant's next contention is that the statutory fees of the executor and the attorney for the executor should be fixed on the basis of the law in effect at the time of the settlement of the account and making the order allowing compensation and not on the basis of the law in effect at the date of death. The question as to which law governs the fixing of the compensation for executors of the estates of decedents whose death occurred prior to the effective date of the amendment of September 7, 1955 to section 901 of the Probate Code was determined by us in the Estate of Edward J. Franklin, deceased, decided July 30, 1956, wherein we held that such fees should be computed on the basis of the law in effect at the time of the settlement of the account and making the order allowing compensation. Therefore, in the instant case the fees of the executor and the attorney for the executor should have been computed under section 901 of the Probate Code, as amended September 7, 1955.

[12] Finally, appellant contends that the real property and oil royalties in Texas should be included in his account and that he should be allowed fees on the amount thereof. This contention is without merit. It is provided in section 901 of the Probate Code that the executor "shall receive commissions upon the amount of estate accounted for by him * * *." Section 920 of the Probate Code provides that "Every executor and administrator is chargeable in his accounts with all of the estate of the decedent which comes into his possession, and with all the income, issues and profits of the estate; * * *." The rule is set forth in Re Estate of Simmons, 43 Cal. 543, the statutes at the time of that decision being in the same language as are the statutes now governing. The court stated, at pages 550–551, as follows: "We are of the opinion that an administrator cannot be said to have 'accounted for' an estate, in the sense of the statute, unless he shall first have taken it into possession. He is charged by the statute, as we have already seen, with the value of 'the whole of the estate of the deceased which may come into his possession,' etc. (Sec. 216); and it is made his duty to 'take into his possession all the estate of the deceased, real and personal.' (Sec. 194.) When he shall have taken the property into possession and accounted for it, he is entitled to compensation by way of commissions upon its value. Unless he take it into possession, he is not charged in his account with its value. He may, and doubtless would, incur a responsibility, should he fail to take it into possession when he lawfully might, if by such failure it should become ultimately lost to those entitled to its benefits; but as affording a basis for the allowance of commissions, the value of the estate which has been taken into possession, and having been in possession has been accounted for, is alone regarded." See also In re Ricaud's Estate, 70 Cal. 69, 71, 11 P. 471; In re Estate of Lampman, 15 Cal.2d 212, 215, et seq., 100 P.2d 488; In re Estate of Boggs, 33 Cal.App.2d 30, 32–33, 90 P.2d 814.

[13] The executor of the domiciliary estate not having possession of the real property in Texas, is not chargeable in his account with its value and he is, therefore, not entitled to fees thereon. The trial court properly struck from the account any reference to the real property and oil royalties in Texas.

The order is reversed insofar as it fixes the compensation of the executor and the attorney for the executor upon the basis provided by law prior to September 7, 1955, and the cause is remanded with directions to the court below to enter an order in accordance with the views herein expressed. In all other respects the order is affirmed.

This is an appeal from an order determining heirship and decreeing that the sum of $10,154.86 be distributed to the surviving widow as a part of the residuary estate. This amount is the testator's share of the proceeds from the sale of certain real estate mentioned in the second paragraph of the will of Gilbert S. Peyton, who died at 1:45 A.M. on December 15, 1954. This second paragraph, so far as material here, reads:

> "To my three sons, Gilbert Lewis Peyton, Wayne German Peyton, and Arnold Taylor Peyton, in equal shares, I give my interest in the New York property, which consists of the following:
> "Property at Crown Street and Bedford Avenue, Brooklyn, New York."

The seventh paragraph of this will provided as follows: "All the rest, residue and remainder of my property, real, personal and mixed, and of whatever nature, kind and description of which I shall die seized or possessed, or to which I may be entitled, which shall include all my bank accounts and all my insurance, * * * I give, devise and bequeath to my wife, Hazel S. Peyton."

Hazel S. Peyton was married to the deceased approximately three years prior to his death. His former wife, Leonore German Peyton, had died in San Diego in November, 1942. She owned a half interest in the real property here involved, on which there was a brick building. The other half of this property was owned by her brother Gale T. German. By her will she gave her interest in this property to her husband and their three sons, a one-fourth part to each. As a result, Gilbert S. Peyton and his three sons each acquired an eighth interest in this real property.

It appears, without question, that this real property was sold, that the full purchase price was paid, and that title passed to the purchaser on November 16, 1954. On November 17, 1954, Gale T. German, who lived in New York, wrote to Gilbert S. Peyton enclosing the checks given for the purchase price, amounting to a total of $79,692.81, saying that the bank refused to accept them for deposit (on the ground that the power of attorney he held was not sufficient) until they were endorsed by Mr. Peyton and the three sons, and asking him to sign the checks "and pass them along to the boys to sign, and have the last one return them to me." These funds were later deposited in the New York bank in an account under the name of "Gilbert S. Peyton & Gale T. German or survivor."

On December 10, 1954, Gale T. German drew checks on that account representing most of the net proceeds of this sale; a check to himself for $35,000, one to Gilbert S. Peyton for $8,750, and a check for $8,750 to each of the three sons. These checks require the signature of Gilbert S. Peyton and were sent to him and received by him on December 13, 1954. He signed the checks on that day and forwarded their checks to the three sons and to Gale T. German. He endorsed his own check, making it payable to a bank in Long Beach in which he carried his checking account. That check was mailed to the Long Beach bank on December 13 and was credited to his account in that bank on December 15, but obviously several hours after he had died. These checks were all paid by the New York bank on which they were drawn.

On August 18, 1955, the executor filed a petition for determination of heirship, setting forth the second and seventh paragraphs of the will and alleging that during a period of time which included the decedent's death, the "manager" of the New York property was in the process of liquidating said property; that on December 13, 1954, the decedent received a check dated December 10 for $8,750, "representing the bulk of his interest in the New York property"; that he endorsed said check for deposit by mail in his checking account in the Long Beach bank; that the executor has since received the sum of $1,404.86, representing the remainder of the decedent's share "in the distribution from the sale of the New York property" and his share of refunds on certain insurance policies; that the total of all proceeds from the New York property is $10,154.86; and that the three sons of the decedent claim this amount under the second paragraph of the will, and the widow claims it under the seventh paragraph. The prayer is that the court determine who are entitled to distribution of this portion of the estate. The widow filed an answer to the petition alleging that the property mentioned in the second clause of the will was sold by the decedent in his lifetime; that he did not own the same at the time of his death; that the proceeds of that sale passed to her under the seventh clause of the will; and that she is entitled to have that amount distributed to her.

The matter was submitted on stipulated facts and on various documents which were introduced as exhibits. The only reference to a partnership which appears in the evidence is the following. A letter written by Gale T. German on September 12, 1955, to the widow's attorney was introduced. In this letter German stated that title to the property on Bedford Avenue passed on November 16, 1954, and that the building was sold for cash. He also stated:

> "The building on Bedford Avenue and the Islip lots were handled as a partnership joint venture and we yearly made out a partnership return to the Internal Revenue Bureau and the partnership account was kept in the then Corn Exchange Bank & Trust Company that required both Mr. Gilbert

> S. Peyton and my signatures and naturally, all of the money received from the sale of the Islip lots and the Bedford Avenue building was deposited in that account."

There was also introduced a copy of a "partnership return of income" for 1953. The return was in the name of "Gale T. German et al" and stated that the principal business activity, and also the nature of the organization, was "joint venture." It listed certain rents as received from "brick building", and named as partners Gale T. German, Gilbert S. Peyton and the three sons. A similar partnership return for 1954 was also introduced in evidence.

The court filed a written decision reviewing the facts and expressing the opinion that the title to the property having passed and individual checks to the interested parties having been drawn and delivered, the real property in question was completely obliterated; and that the proceeds would pass to the widow "in spite of" the existence of any such partnership. Later, an "Order of Court" was filed finding that the sum of $10,154.86 was the interest of the testator in the proceeds from the sale of real estate in New York, which sale was made prior to his death; that all his right, title and interest in said real estate was disposed of in his lifetime; that this amount represented his interest in the proceeds from the sale of real estate, and should be distributed to the widow as a part of the residuary estate pursuant to the seventh paragraph of the will; and ordering and decreeing that this amount be distributed to the widow subject to the further administration of said estate.

The three sons have appealed from this order. They contend that the testator did not own any interest in the real estate described in the second paragraph of the will; that what he owned was an interest in a partnership which owned and held the legal title to that land; that an interest in a partnership is personalty and not an interest in land; that the testator's interest in the partnership never changed but the partnership merely altered its own assets; that death did not terminate the partnership; that the partnership funds were still intact in the partnership bank account at the testator's death; and that these partnership funds passed to them, since the testator intended to bequeath his interest in the partnership to them. It is further argued that the evidence, consisting of the statement made by Gale T. German in his letter of September 12, 1955, and the two partnership income tax returns, conclusively shows the existence of such a partnership; and that the respondent is inconsistent in claiming that there was no partnership since in that event the amount in question would have passed to Gale T. German as the surviving joint tenant in the New York bank account.

[1, 2] It may first be observed that Gale T. German has made no claim to this money, so far as here appears. Also, there is no evidence that the partnership, if it existed, ever held the legal title to this land. Everything in the record would tend to indicate the contrary. Assuming that some kind of a partnership existed for some purpose, the evidence is not sufficient to show that the testator's interest in this land was intended to be transferred to the partnership, or that it ever became a part of the partnership assets. While a partnership may be formed by oral agreement, and land standing in the name of one of the partners may under some circumstances be treated as partnership property, a clear showing which discloses such an understanding and intention among the partners is required. Perelli-Minetti v. Lawson, 205 Cal. 642, 272 P. 573. There is nothing here to indicate that the testator's interest in this land was ever conveyed to the partnership, and the evidence is not sufficient to establish an intention that it was to become partnership property. There is no evidence that the land was used in any business conducted by the partnership, that it was intended as a contribution to the assets of a business to be conducted, or that such a partnership was engaged in any sort of business. When the land was sold the checks for the purchase price were made payable to the individual owners, and the fact that the proceeds were immediately distributed to the owners as individuals indicates that the partners did not consider the land itself as partnership property. There was no real partnership in the ownership of the land in the usual sense, and the most that appears is that what Mr. German referred to as a partnership joint venture was actually merely a convenient arrangement for handling the rentals from the property and paying the taxes and other expenses.

Even under the theory that what the testator owned was a partnership interest in this land, and that he intended to bequeath that interest to the sons, the fact remains that neither he nor the partnership had any interest in the land at the time of his death, since the land had previously been sold and fully paid for. Any interest he had to give, whether a partnership interest or not, ended when the land was sold before he died.

[3] The real question on this appeal is not as to whether some sort of partnership existed, but is whether the provisions of the second paragraph of the will constitute a specific legacy or a general legacy that would also apply to and cover the proceeds from the sale of the specific property mentioned. By the terms of his will the testator gave his interest in a definite parcel of real property, whatever the form of that interest, to his sons. This was a specific gift of particular property, and the testator no longer owned that property at the time of his death. Under established rules it must be held that this was a specific legacy, and that the sale of the testator's interest in the land in question during his lifetime, with the transfer of title thereto, constituted an ademption of said legacy. In re Estate of McLaughlin, 97 Cal.App. 481, 275 P. 874; Estate of Benner, 155 Cal. 153, 99 P. 715; In re Estate of Babb, 200 Cal. 252, 252 P. 1039; In re Estate of Sorensen, 46 Cal.App.2d 35, 115 P.2d 241.

While the testator originally intended his interest in this real property to go to his sons, he failed to provide for a similar disposition of the proceeds from the sale of that interest under the circumstances which later developed. He did not change his will after he knew that the land had been sold, and the provisions of the will itself must be given effect. The findings made by the court are sustained by the evidence.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

David S. GRAY, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

RHEEM MANUFACTURING COMPANY, a corporation, Robert Fortina, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 16832.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

July 30, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 29, 1956.

Hearing Denied Sept. 25, 1956.

Action by government inspector for injuries sustained in accident in defendant's plant when lift truck bumped fire door, causing door to strike inspector. The Superior Court, Contra Costa County, Homer W. Patterson, J., rendered judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that evidence as to whether inspector had been given warning that the door might close was sufficient to take questions of negligence and contributory negligence to jury.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⚷930(1), 989

On appeal, reviewing court must accept evidence most favorable to verdict, disregarding conflicting evidence which may be more favorable to appellant.

2. Negligence ⚿136(24, 26)

In action by government inspector for injuries sustained in defendant's plant when lift truck bumped fire door, causing door to strike inspector, evidence as to whether inspector had been given warning that the door might close was sufficient to take questions of negligence and contributory negligence to jury.

3. Negligence ⚿140

Where question whether defendants had been guilty of negligence proximately causing injuries could not be decided as a matter of law, giving of instruction on unavoidable accident was not error.

4. Trial ⚿312(2)

In personal injury action, wherein jury was instructed to consider liability before damages and jury returned during deliberations for further instructions on issue of damages, before having definitely determined question of liability, rereading instruction that award should be made for certain items of damage "if any", followed by verdict of no liability, was not shown to have caused jury to reverse a previous determination of liability in favor of plaintiff.

5. Appeal and Error ⚿882(12)

A party cannot complain of instructions which he himself proposed.

6. Appeal and Error ⚿217

Where plaintiff, upon court's partial reinstruction of jury, did not suggest any further instruction in answer to court's request, plaintiff could not complain of failure to give complete instruction.

Hadsell, Murman & Bishop, San Francisco, for appellant.

Hauerken, St. Clair & Viadro, San Francisco, for respondents.

DOOLING, Justice.

This is an appeal by plaintiff David S. Gray from a judgment pursuant to a jury verdict in favor of defendants Rheem Manufacturing Company, a corporation, and Robert Fortina.

Appellant by this action sought to recover for personal injuries alleged to have been received by him when he was working as a business invitee of respondent Rheem Manufacturing Company (hereafter called Rheem).

At the time appellant received his alleged injuries he was employed by the United States Government as an inspector of Navy material. It was his duty to inspect shells manufactured by respondent Rheem. In order to do this appellant would select at least three shells from each particular carton of shells and carry them from the area of the plant where the cartons were placed to another room where he would make his inspection.

On April 7, 1953, at approximately 10 a. m. appellant was in the process of removing some shells from a carton so that he might inspect them. He was in a stooped-over position with his back to a fire door that was located in the plant area where he was working. As he was in this position a lift truck operated by one of respondent Rheem's employees, respondent Robert Fortina, hit the fire door causing it to come in contact with appellant.

[1] Appellant's first two arguments may be considered together, i. e. that the verdict for defendant is contrary to the evidence and contrary to law. It is axiomatic that on appeal we must accept the evidence most favorable to the verdict, disregarding conflicting evidence which may be more favorable to appellant. 4 Cal.Jur. 2d, Appeal and Error, § 606, pp. 485–487. With this rule in mind we quote the following from the testimony of respondent Fortina as to what occurred immediately prior to the movement of his equipment which brought the fire door into contact with appellant:

> "Q. And after you saw him there did you move your lift vehicle? A. No sir, not until I asked Mr. Gray to step to one side or look out for the door, that it might be bumped or moved in case I lifted up this one load, and it was awful close to the door.

> And I asked Mr. Gray to step to one side or move in case the pallet hit the door as I made my move.
> "Q. And where were you when you addressed those remarks to him? A. I was approximately two and one-half feet away from him on the truck. * * *
>
> "Q. Now when you addressed these remarks to Mr. Gray * * * did you get any response from him? A. Yes sir, I did.
> "Q. What did he say according to your recollection? A. The best I remember I asked him to step to one side or move, and he looked up at me and said, 'It's all right, go ahead and make the move.' * * *
> "Q. And then after you had warned him and you picked up the load, I understood you again blew your horn and you again warned him. A. Yes, sir.
> "Q. And did he reply to that warning? A. The best I can remember, at that time he said, 'It's okay to move, go ahead.'"

[2] It is futile for appellant with this testimony in the record to argue to an appellate court appellant's testimony that he heard no warning and made no response and other evidence of the noise in the plant which would operate against any warning being heard by appellant. The weight to be given to the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses were questions for the trial jury's determination. In support of the verdict we must presume that the jury accepted and believed Fortina's testimony that he twice warned appellant to get out of the way before he moved his lift truck, that he told him that he might bump and move the door because the load was "awful close to the door" and that appellant twice told Fortina in response to his warnings to go ahead.

Appellant testified that a safety catch on the door which would have prevented its moving had been blocked about a month before and that appellant was aware of this fact.

Accepting Fortina's evidence, as we must on appeal, whether it was negligence on Fortina's part to move the truck after twice warning appellant to get out of the way and having twice been invited by appellant to proceed, and whether it was contributory negligence on appellant's part to remain in the position of possible danger and invite Fortina to move his truck after being warned to move to a place of safety, both presented fact questions for the jury. Appellant argues that in any event it was negligence on Rheem's part to leave the safety catch off the door and to place the box of shells for his inspection so close to the door as to put him in a place of peril; but these factors were both as well known to appellant as to respondents and no harm could have come to appellant from either if he had moved from his position of possible danger when twice asked to do so by Fortina instead of twice advising Fortina to proceed. Under the facts of the case as narrated by Fortina it was for the jury to determine whether the invited movement was negligent in view of the other circumstances relied upon to establish negligence, having in mind that appellant was at least as fully aware of them as Fortina and invited Fortina's action with full knowledge of his position and the fact that the safety catch on the door was not operating.

Appellant moved the court for a nonsuit of the pleaded defenses of contributory negligence and unavoidable accident and moved for directed verdicts on the same defenses. These motions were denied and the court instructed the jury on both defenses. There was no error in this. What we have already said disposes of the defense of contributory negligence which, accepting Fortina's testimony, was a question for the jury.

[3] Our Supreme Court has held that it is not error to give an instruction on unavoidable accident in any case where it cannot be said as a matter of law that defendants were guilty of negligence which proximately caused the plaintiff's injuries. Parker v. Womack, 37 Cal.2d 116, 230 P.2d 823.

The case of Jensen v. Minard, 44 Cal.2d 325, 282 P.2d 7, 8, is not in point. The instruction on unavoidable accident was held in that case to cumulate an error in an instruction that "'(t)he mere fact that an accident happened * * * does not support an inference'" of negligence. In that case the decedent was killed by the discharge of a gun and the court pointed out that this instruction was error on the facts of that case because "(o)rdinarily * * * accidents of this sort do not occur if those using firearms use due care" and "the jury should not have been foreclosed from considering the evidence provided by the happening of the accident itself in determining whether defendant was negligent." 44 Cal.2d, at page 329, 282 P.2d at page 9. The court added at the same page that this error was aggravated by the instruction on unavoidable accident saying: "Considering these instructions together, the jury could easily be led to believe that prima facie the accident was unavoidable and was not owing to defendant's negligence." The court further found that the instruction as given was in conflict with another correct instruction "that ordinary care requires that one using firearms must use extreme caution." The facts of our case as set out above clearly make the reasoning of the court in the Minard case inapplicable.

Appellant finally contends that the court committed prejudicial error in its manner of reinstructing the jury at the jury's request. The court originally instructed the jury that they should first consider the question of the legal responsibility for the collision forming the basis of the action. They were then told that the instructions in regard to damages were intended to apply only where appellant was entitled to a verdict and that they would have no application if the liability of respondents was not established. The jury retired at 1:40 p. m. and later called for and received certain exhibits relative to both the liability and damage phases of the case. Then at 3:42 p. m. the jurors returned to the courtroom and the jury foreman stated:

> "The Foreman (Mr. Cruickshank): As foreman of the Jury we find that we are not in agreement on the aspect of assignment of damages. We don't know how to proceed in the matter. We want more instructions as to how we are to proceed to assess these damages. We don't know how to proceed.
> "The Court: Well, I am not sure that I understand what you mean. Have you made a determination as to liability?
> "The Foreman: We have, sir.
> "The Court: Well now, it's a matter of measure of damages—is that what you have in mind—that you want to know about?
> "The Foreman: We have, yes sir. What we would like specifically to know, sir, is—Many of the jurors feel that there should be an assessment against the Rheem Company for an amount equal to the amount of hospital bills incurred only and with no other consideration. * * *
> "The Foreman: We would like to respectfully request, sir, that the Judge read the last portion of an instruction relative to that which I have reference to now—relative to the damages. We would feel that we didn't understand clearly when we were charged.
> "The Court: You mean as to what elements you should consider?
>
> "The Foreman: Yes, sir.
> "The Court: Well, all right. I will read you what I think you have in mind, and when I get through, if there is anything further you need, why you just tell me about it."

The court then reread to the jury certain of the instructions relative to the damage issue. In these instructions the words "if any" were used to qualify such phrases as "the injuries proved to have been sustained," "amount of such damages," "anxiety and suffering," "expenses incurred," and "time lost." The court then said:

> "Now is that what you have in mind?
> "The Foreman: I think that will cover it, Your Honor, and I would like to correct any impression that I might have given that we have reached a formal agreement. We have not. We are just in the stage of arriving at it. That was to help us. That's it.
> "The Court: All right.
> "Does counsel have anything further—suggest anything further in view of the questions that have been asked?
> "Mr. St. Clair: No, I think that's fair, Your Honor.
> "Mr. Murman (appellant's attorney): If the Jury is satisfied.
> "Mr. St. Clair: I think if the Jury is satisfied, we are all satisfied.
>
> "The Court: All right. You will retire, then, with the Bailiff."

The jury retired at 3:48 p. m. and at 4:05 brought back a verdict for respondents.

[4, 5] It is appellant's contention that the jury had conclusively determined liability against respondents and that the court's manner of reinstructing, with the words "if any," led the jury to change their verdict. He relies on the original instruction telling the jury to determine the issue of liability before that of damages together with the fact that the jury asked for exhibits relevant to the damage issue to support his theory that liability had been determined in his favor prior to the reinstruction. He claims this theory is also supported by the foreman's affirmative answer to the court's question at the time further instructions were requested: "Have you made a determination as to liability?" However, the foreman subsequently stated that he would like to correct any impression that he might have given that the jury had reached a formal agreement. In view of this latter statement it cannot be said that the jury had definitely determined the question of liability. There is no indication in the record whether some or all of the "if any" instructions complained of were proposed by appellant, respondents, or were given on the court's own motion. Thus appellant has not met the burden of showing prejudicial error in regard to these instructions. Lynch v. Birdwell, 44 Cal.2d 839, 285 P.2d 919. Further it appears that appellant himself proposed two "if any" instructions and, having done so, he is in no position to complain. Abbott v. Cavalli, 114 Cal.App. 379, 300 P. 67. Moreover, the criticism of an identical qualification has been said to be hypertechnical. Newman v. Los Angeles Transit Lines, 120 Cal.App.2d 685, 262 P.2d 95.

[6] Appellant's objection that the jury were sent back to deliberate again without being completely instructed is answered by appellant's counsel's own comment in answer to the court's question: "Does counsel * * * suggest anything further * * *?" to which counsel for appellant replied: "If the Jury is satisfied." In Olson v. Standard Marine Ins. Co., 109 Cal.App.2d 130, 240 P.2d 379, 386, the court read some but not all of the instructions previously given and the jury indicated they were satisfied. No request was made by the appellant that other instructions be read. The court quoted from People v. Finali, 31 Cal.App. 479, 160 P. 850: "'Defendant was not entitled as matter of right to have instructions read which the jury had not called for or to have all the instructions on a given subject read when such as were read were satisfactory to the jury.'"

Judgment affirmed.

v.

SAN DIEGO TRANSIT SYSTEM, a corporation, and Dominic E. Diana, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 5176.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

July 27, 1956.

Action for damages arising out of intersection collision which occurred when eastbound bus after stopping between islands in center of divided through highway proceeded out into path of northbound automobile on through highway. The Superior Court of San Diego County, Gordon L. Howden, Judge Assigned, entered judgment for plaintiff northbound motorist and both defendant driver and defendant owner of bus appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that evidence as to whether northbound automobile and northbound truck, which automobile had passed prior to accident, were so close to intersection as to constitute an immediate hazard and thus require eastbound bus to yield right of way, was sufficient to present question for trier of fact.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Automobiles 🔑245(14)

In action for damages arising out of intersection collision which occurred when eastbound bus after stopping between islands in center of divided through highway proceeded out into northbound lane of highway and into path of northbound automobile, wherein defendants alleged driver of automobile was contributorily negligent for failure to yield right of way to bus which had allegedly entered intersection from through highway, evidence as to whether northbound automobile and northbound truck, which automobile had passed just prior to accident, were so close to intersection as to constitute an immediate hazard and consequently require bus entering through highway to yield right of way, was sufficient to present question for trier of fact. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 552 (a, b).

2. Automobiles 🔑171(5)

Where question as to whether automobile and truck proceeding north on through highway were so close to intersection with servient road as to constitute an immediate hazard, was one for determination by trier of fact, Vehicle Code section providing that driver approaching intersection on through highway shall yield right of way to vehicle, which has already yielded right of way to other vehicle on through highway and is about to enter and cross highway was not applicable. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 552(a, b).

3. Automobiles 🔑242(8)

In action for damages arising out of intersection collision which occurred when defendant's eastbound bus on servient highway, after stopping for stop sign, proceeded out into path of northbound automobile on through highway, owner and driver of eastbound bus had burden of proving contributory negligence on part of driver of northbound automobile.

4. Trial 🔑395(3, 5)

Findings of fact should be definite and certain and so framed that the defeated party can specify intelligibly particular findings which they claim are not supported by the evidence, but findings should be of ultimate facts and it is not always necessary to state probative or evidentiary facts where finding of ultimate facts includes a finding of all of the probative facts necessary to sustain it.

5. Trial 🔑404(1)

A finding, if possible, is to be given such a construction as will uphold the judgment.

6. Trial 🔑395(3)

Where trial court's finding in certain regard generally followed allegations of complaint, defendant on appeal could not successfully attack findings as not sufficiently specific.

7. Damages ⟹132(1)

Award of $6,500 damages to wife who suffered possible cerebral concussion with resultant headaches, painful laceration of tongue, sprained neck and contusions in that area and on her body, laceration of forearm and permanent disfigurement by scar, sprained lower sacroiliac and pains in subsequent pregnancy, and who also was required to undergo operation on nose, as result of accident and award of $1,500 to husband, who suffered many contusions and abrasions on his body and strained left shoulder resulting in continual painful bursitis, as result of such accident, were not excessive.

Lindley, Lazar & Scales and John H. Barrett, San Diego, for appellants.

Byron F. Lindsley, San Diego, for respondents.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Plaintiffs and respondents, Omer W. McGuire (hereinafter referred to as plaintiff), and his wife, brought this action against defendant and appellant San Diego Transit System, a corporation, and the driver of a school bus, for damages as a result of a collision of plaintiff's automobile with defendant's 36-foot long bus at an intersection of Linda Vista Road (a city street in the area of Kearny Mesa) and U. S. Highway 395 (a through divided arterial highway), on June 10, 1953. Defendants denied negligence and alleged contributory negligence of plaintiff. A trial without a jury resulted in a judgment for plaintiffs for $10,535.52.

At the point where the freeway (which runs in a general north-south direction) is intersected by Linda Vista Road, it is no longer a freeway, but is a boulevard for through traffic. Stop signs were posted along Linda Vista Road for traffic entering the freeway from the southwest. Linda Vista Road approaches the intersection at an angle and at a point where various traffic islands control the movement of traffic. The intersection is broad. The opposing traffic lanes of the highway are each 24 feet wide, consisting of two lanes separated by a 30-foot center island strip. Drivers who approach the intersection on Linda Vista Road and wish to cross the highway must cross both north and southbound lanes of traffic and then leave easterly by way of Aero Drive.

Plaintiff, a stranger to the intersection, was driving his Ford car north on the easterly lane of the freeway. The bus driver approached the freeway on Linda Vista Road from the west, stopped at the boulevard stop sign, and then proceeded to cross the southbound traffic lane and, as it traveled into the 30-foot island strip and came to a stop or a "rolling stop" at the west edge of the northbound traffic lane, it then moved out into that lane to cross the highway into Aero Drive.

It is the testimony of plaintiff that just after he came over the crest of the hill he noticed the bus about 500 feet from him, stopped at the stop sign; that it continued into the center island and appeared to stop, when plaintiff was about 100 feet from the intersection; that he was traveling about 45 miles per hour at the time (the speed limit was 55 miles per hour on the freeway); that the bus driver "zoomed" out to cross the freeway and that there was nothing he could then do because the bus blocked both northbound traffic lanes at the time; that he applied his brakes and swerved to his right to avoid the collision and sideswiped the bus with his car. It struck it near its front portion and ended up in Aero Drive. Plaintiff testified he saw no other vehicles or trucks in the northbound lane at the time but said there was southbound traffic approaching from the north so he could not travel in that direction to avoid the accident.

The bus driver testified he stopped at the stop sign and no traffic was approaching from the north; that he proceeded into the center island and came to a rolling stop; that he then observed a red truck approaching in the west northbound lane, about 500 feet from him at about 35–45 miles per hour; that he saw no other car in that direction; that believing he had time to cross the northbound freeway, he quickly accelerated the engine and was pulling across it at 5–10 miles per hour, without further looking toward the south, when he then heard the screeching of brakes; that he then turned and saw plaintiff's car coming toward the bus, about 2 feet from it; that the bus was then practically off the highway; that he continued on and came to a stop some 80 feet east on Aero Drive.

A truck driver testified that he was driving a heavily loaded red truck at about 45 miles per hour on the easterly northbound lane of the freeway and, seeing the bus stop at the intersection and then move into the island and starting to move onward, he said to himself, "Oh, no, not now", so he moved over into the west northbound lane to miss the bus and just about then plaintiff's car passed his truck in the east northbound lane at about 75 miles per hour; that about that time the bus driver "shot out" in front of both of them and plaintiff applied his brakes and swerved to his right. The truck driver applied his brakes and just missed hitting the bus after it passed in front of him.

There was considerable other evidence pertaining to skid marks and the position of the respective vehicles, as well as testimony of the school children as to their version of the accident.

As we construe defendants' claim on appeal, the evidence is not sufficient to show negligence on the part of the bus driver and if so, the evidence conclusively shows contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff for failure to yield the right of way at the intersection, under section 552, subdivisions (a) and (b), Vehicle Code. They cite such authority as Casselman v. Hartford A. & I. Co., 36 Cal.App.2d 700, 98 P.2d 539; Grasso v. Cunial, 106 Cal.App.2d 294, 235 P.2d 32; and Couchman v. Snelling, 111 Cal.App. 192, 295 P. 845.

[1, 2] A mere notation of the facts shows that the trial court was justified in finding contrary to defendants' claim. A jury might well have believed that both the red truck and plaintiff's car were so close to the intersection as to constitute an immediate hazard. Accordingly, section 552, subdivisions (a) and (b) of the Vehicle Code could not be applied to defendant. Dawson v. Williams, 127 Cal.App.2d 38, 273 P.2d 75; Graf v. Garcia, 117 Cal.App.2d 792, 256 P.2d 995; De Priest v. City of Glendale, 74 Cal.App.2d 464, 169 P.2d 17; Zwerin v. Riverside Cement Co., 52 Cal.App.2d 715, 126 P.2d 920; Almanerz v. San Diego Electric Ry. Co., 15 Cal.App.2d 423, 59 P.2d 513; Mason v. San Diego Elec. Ry. Co., 57 Cal.App.2d 17, 133 P.2d 841.

[3] The evidence does not show contributory negligence as a matter of law and the burden of proving it was upon the defendants. Anthony v. Hobbie, 25 Cal.2d 814, 818, 155 P.2d 826; Davis v. Franson, 141 Cal.App.2d 263, 296 P.2d 600.

Complaint is made in reference to the form of the findings. It is argued that although the court found defendant driver "did negligently drive and operate a passenger bus * * * in the aforesaid intersection * * * and did cause said bus to enter upon said highway number 395 in a negligent, reckless * * * careless manner in the path of a Ford automobile * * * driven by plaintiff * * * in a careful, prudent and lawful manner", it should have specially found the violations of law which defendants committed, or the particular facts indicating a breach of duty on their part; that there was no specific finding as to the speed of plaintiff's car at the time and no finding as to which driver had the right of way.

[4, 5] The findings generally followed allegations of the complaint. It is true that findings of fact should be definite and certain and so framed that the defeated party can specify intelligibly the particular findings which they claim are not supported by the evidence. However, findings should be of ultimate facts and it is not always necessary to state the probative or evidentiary facts where a finding of ultimate facts includes a finding of all of the pro-bative facts necessary to sustain it. A finding is, if possible, to be given such a construction as will uphold the judgment. Gantner & Mattern Co. v. Hawkins, 89 Cal.App.2d 783, 201 P.2d 847; Pellegrino v. Los Angeles Transit Lines, 79 Cal.App.2d 40, 179 P.2d 39; Morrow v. Learned, 55 Cal.App. 745, 204 P. 234; Ryan v. San Diego Elec. Ry. Co., 52 Cal.App.2d 460, 126 P.2d 401; 24 Cal.Jur. 984, Sec. 213.

[6] As heretofore stated, the question whether defendants had the right of way at the intersection was a factual one. Even if it be assumed that defendant had the right of way at the time of his original entry into the intersection, the fact that the bus was stopped in the center portion of the street and later continued on in the face of oncoming traffic, without due caution and circumspection, might well justify a finding of negligence of the bus driver. The question of the speed of plaintiff's car was in dispute and his conduct, at the time, may have justified a finding of lack of negligence on his part.

[7] The claim that the award of damages was not supported by the evidence is not well taken. Mrs. McGuire, according to plaintiff's evidence, suffered a possible cerebral concussion with resultant headaches. Her tongue was painfully lacerated on the left side. She had a sprained neck and contusions in that area and on her body. Her right forearm was lacerated and permanently disfigured by a scar. The left lower sacroiliac was sprained and she suffered pains in her subsequent pregnancy. She subsequently underwent an operation on her nose which changed the shape of it, and it still bleeds at times and becomes congested. The award to her was $6,500. Her husband suffered many contusions and abrasions on his body and a strained left shoulder resulting in continual painful bursitis. His award was $1,500. The remainder of the award was for automobile damage and other special damages. There could be no basis for a complaint in this respect. All of these claims were considered on a motion for new trial and rejected, and consideration should be given to this fact. Hartzell v. Myall, 115 Cal. App.2d 670, 252 P.2d 676.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

Alice Maude McCOSKER and Stanley McCosker, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 8792.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

July 13, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 7, 1956.

Hearing Denied Sept. 6, 1956.

Action in unlawful detainer to recover possession of realty. The Superior Court, Lake County, Benjamin C. Jones, J., rendered judgment in favor of defendants, and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that judgment quieting title to realty as against parties named as purchasers in written agreement by plaintiffs' predecessors in title to sell such realty did not affect interest of parties in possession of realty, whom plaintiffs had excluded from participation in quiet title action, though chargeable with notice that they claimed title to realty under prior recorded judgment against purchasers named in agreement and as purchasers at execution sale of named purchasers' interest under agreement.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Landlord and Tenant ⚷290(1)

Relation of landlord and tenant must be shown to exist between plaintiff and defendant in order to maintain action in unlawful detainer to recover possession of realty, and if defendant proves nonexistence of such relation, plaintiff must fail.

2. Landlord and Tenant ⚷291(11)

In action in unlawful detainer to recover possession of realty, plaintiffs had the burden of proving relationship of landlord and tenant and a holding over after termination of such relationship.

3. Vendor and Purchaser ⚷232(1)

Owners of realty subject to written agreement by their predecessors in title to sell such realty to others were chargeable with notice that, though not named as purchasers in agreement, parties in possession of realty under recorded judgment, showing that they were entitled to claim one-half of interest accruing to named purchaser by execution of agreement and part payment of purchase money, and as purchasers at execution sale of named purchasers' interest under agreement claimed title to realty under such agreement.

4. Judgment ⚷707

Judgment quieting title to realty as against parties named as purchasers in written agreement by plaintiffs' predecessors in title to sell such realty did not affect the interest of persons in possession of realty, whom plaintiffs had excluded from participation in quiet title action, though plaintiffs were chargeable with notice that they claimed title to the realty under recorded judgment against named purchasers and as purchasers at execution sale of named purchasers' interest under agreement.

5. Landlord and Tenant ⚷290(1)

Action in unlawful detainer is limited to those cases in which the relation of the parties is such that tenant is estopped from denying landlord's title.

6. Forcible Entry and Detainer ⚷6(1)

Where plaintiffs claimed title to realty under judgment quieting their title as against purchasers named in written agreement by plaintiffs' predecessors in title to sell such realty and defendants in possession of realty claimed title thereto under prior recorded judgment against such purchasers and as purchasers at execution sale of named purchasers' interest under agreement, plaintiffs' remedy was by quiet title or ejectment action and they could not recover possession of realty as against such defendants in unlawful detainer action.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal by plaintiffs Fredericksen from a judgment in favor of defendants in an action in unlawful detainer filed on July 22, 1952, to recover possession of certain real property in Lake County.

Plaintiffs and appellants are the owners of said real property subject to a written contract, dated September 5, 1944, which will be referred to as the Hand contract, whereby appellants' predecessors agreed to sell the property to James M. McCosker, Jr. and Helen McCosker, his wife. Under the terms of this agreement, the purchasers made a down payment and agreed to pay the balance seven years later, that is, on September 5, 1951.

On March 4, 1949, James M. McCosker, Sr., and Alice Maude McCosker, his wife, brought an action against the McCoskers, junior. A judgment was entered which awarded the McCoskers, senior, the sum of $9,341.69 and also declared in their favor a resulting trust in an undivided one-half of the interest of the McCoskers, junior, in said lands under the Hand contract. That judgment was recorded in Lake County records on August 28, 1951. On appeal in McCosker v. McCosker, 1954, 122 Cal.App.2d 498, 265 P.2d 21, this court affirmed said judgment. On September 27, 1951, the McCoskers, senior, purchased at sheriff's sale, held in execution of said judgment, all the interests of the McCoskers, junior, in said real property. Certificate of sale was recorded on October 15, 1951. On October 2, 1951, after the sale, but before recordation of the certificate, the Fredericksens brought action No. 6311 in the Superior Court of Lake County against the McCoskers, junior, and two fictitious defendants, designated as John Doe and Richard Roe, to quiet title to this same real property.

Respondents here made an abortive attempt to become parties to that action. It is unnecesary to relate the history of that attempt. Appellants here were successful in excluding them and in their briefs properly assert respondents were never parties. On December 10, 1951, a judgment was entered which quieted the Fredericksens' title against the McCoskers, junior, and which declared the judicial forfeiture of the Hand contract. Respondents here were and remained in possession of the subject property.

In the complaint in this action it was alleged that prior to the beginning thereof and until May 1, 1952, respondents held possession of said property at sufferance; that a notice had been given to terminate the tenancy; that respondents stayed in possession and still continue to hold the same as tenants of plaintiffs; that a notice had been given to pay rent or surrender possession of said property; that respondents had refused to do either; that defendants unlawfully hold over and continue in possession after default in the payment of rent and without the permission of the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs prayed for two months' rental and recovery of possession. The answer put in issue all the material matters alleged in the complaint, and set up claim of title, denying tenancy.

The trial court adopted findings that prior to the filing of the complaint in this action and until May 1, 1952 defendants did not hold possession of this property at sufferance; that plaintiffs did not lease at any time; that defendants are not in possession of said property by reason of any lease or as tenants of plaintiffs but are in possession as owners. The court concluded that, since in unlawful detainer the relation of landlord and tenant is essential, appellants could not prevail.

[1] In this case the determination that the defendants were not tenants, if supported by the evidence, is sufficient to defeat the action.

> "* * * In order that such an action may be maintained, the conventional relation of landlord and tenant must be shown to exist. In other words, the action is limited to those cases in which the tenant is estopped to deny the landlord's title; and when a defendant in an action which under our Code is the equivalent of one in unlawful detainer proves the nonexistence of such relation, the plaintiff must fail." Francis v. West Virginia Oil Co., 174 Cal. 168, 170, 162 P. 394, 395, citing Richmond v. Superior Court, 9 Cal.App. 62, 63, 64, 98 P. 57.

[2–6] If the relation of landlord and tenant never existed, then appellants did not have a cause of action in unlawful detainer against respondents. Steinback v. Krone, 36 Cal. 303, 310. The burden was upon appellants to prove the relationship of landlord and tenant and a holding over after its termination. The proof they offered failed to establish this. Appellants proved the deraignment of their title as grantees of the former owner of the property subject to whatever rights were outstanding under the Hand contract. They introduced in evidence the record of their suit to quiet title against the McCoskers, junior, to which action respondents here were not parties. Nevertheless, it is the claim of appellants that they proved the McCoskers, junior, had defaulted under the Hand contract and received a decree of the court terminating their rights thereunder which, as appellants put it, ended the contract. It is in this last assumption that appellants err. The judgment terminated the contract as to the McCoskers, junior, but had no effect as to the interests of the McCoskers, senior, who were in possession under a recorded judgment showing that, notwithstanding they did not appear to have been named in the contract as purchasers, they were in fact parties thereto entitled to claim one-half interest accruing to the McCoskers, junior, by the execution of that contract and the part payment of the purchase money. This record of the judgment between the McCoskers, with the possession of the McCoskers, senior, under that judgment, gave notice to appellants that they were claiming title and the right to complete title under the Hand contract. Proper inquiry under such constructive notice would have revealed to appellants the proceedings in execution of the McCosker v. McCosker judgment, whereby the McCoskers, senior, purchased the remaining interest of the McCoskers, junior; and though they began their action just before the recordation of the certificate of sale, yet under the circumstances they were charged with knowledge of the interest of the McCoskers, senior, passing by the sale. When, therefore, they omitted the McCoskers, senior, in their action they brought against the McCoskers, junior, they did so, knowing that any judgment that they might obtain in such an action would not foreclose the rights of the McCoskers, senior, whom they had not only omitted to name as parties, but whom they had excluded from participation in the litigation. Having thus achieved their exclusion, they cannot thereafter be heard to claim that the McCoskers, senior, were in anywise affected or their interest terminated by the judgment they thereafter procured. The trial judge in a memorandum which appears in the record succinctly and completely disposed of the contentions of appellant in the following manner:

> "The whole concept of unlawful detainer is based on the existence of a tenancy (Francis v. West Virginia Oil Co., 174 Cal. 168 [162 P. 394]). See Vol. 15 Cal.Juris. P. 851, Landlord and Tenant, Section 278, where it is said: 'The action of unlawful detainer is maintainable only where the relation of landlord and tenant subsists. While it is not necessary to show an express demise or letting, the facts must show, impliedly, at least, that the defendant occupies as tenant of the plaintiff, and this must be something more than a mere quasi tenancy. In other words, unlawful detainer is limited to those cases in which the relation of the parties is such that the tenant is estopped to deny the landlord's title.'
> "In this case the defendants are disputing the plaintiffs' title which fact was a public record prior to the time when this suit was filed. This appears from the judgment in McCosker v. McCosker, No. 5817, and the sale of the land to the defendant Alice Maude McCosker at sheriff's sale on September 27th, 1951, * * *.
> "Neither the notice of April 25th, 1952, nor the three day notice to quit of June 18th, 1952, upon which this action is based, created any right or estate in the defendants in the questioned lands. If anything, it was only a threat against the claim of title of Mrs. Alice Maude McCosker.
>
> "Mrs. Alice Maude McCosker claims title through a judgment against James McCosker, Jr., et ux., plus a purchase at Sheriff's sale prior to the filing of this action. Plaintiffs claim title by virtue of a judgment against the same defendants upon their default. As between the parties to this action the whole title is and has always been in contest ever since the suit against James McCosker, Jr. was commenced. * * * Plaintiffs' remedy, obviously, is by quiet title or ejectment where the question of title can be tried."

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

v.

George C. SHINTAFFER and Violet L. Shintaffer, his wife, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 8847.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 21, 1956.

Action by electrical corporation to foreclose mechanic's lien which it claimed it had gained by furnishing certain electrical panel for use in rice drying plant which defendants built on a defendant's land, when defendants had contracted with a dryer corporation to let all engineering necessary and to purchase from the dryer company all conveying and elevating equipment. The County Court, Yuba County, Warren Steel, J., entered judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McMurray, J. pro tem., held that evidence supported trial court's findings that plaintiff was only a materialman of a materialman and not entitled to lien under statute.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Mechanics' Liens ⟹281(1)

In action by electrical corporation to foreclose mechanic's liens which it claimed it gained by furnishing certain electrical panel for use in rice drying plant which defendants built on a defendant's land, when defendants had contracted with a dryer corporation to let all engineering necessary and to purchase from the dryer company all conveying and elevating equipment, evidence supported trial court's findings that electrical corporation was only a materialman of a materialman and, not entitled to lien under statute. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 1181.

2. Mechanics' Liens ⟹108

Where equipment is placed in building constructed by another, work done in placing equipment is but completion of contract to deliver, regardless of whether engineering was required to place it or whether another was to supervise installation. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1181.

Ralph Leon Isaacs, San Francisco, Albert J. McGuire, of counsel, for appellant.

Manwell & Manwell, Marysville, for respondents.

McMURRAY, Justice pro tem.

Appellant sued respondents to foreclose a mechanic's lien which they alleged they gained by furnishing a certain "Square D" control panel for use in a rice drying plant which respondent built.

George C. Shintaffer, a farmer, commenced construction of a rice drying plant upon certain property he owned. This plant consisted of a building with bins and other equipment besides the machinery and equipment which constituted the actual drying unit. The trial court found that appellant here had dealt with a materialman, namely the Universal Drier Corporation, and, therefore, found that appellant was not entitled to a lien under the provisions of section 1181 of the Code of Civil Procedure since appellant was a materialman of a materialman. The "Square D" control panel here involved was only a small portion of the equipment furnished to Shintaffer by the Universal Drier Corporation. It was delivered to the job and was billed to the Universal Drier Corporation by appellant.

During the course of building the rice drying plant respondent Shintaffer entered into a written order which provided in part "Universal Drier Corporation agrees to engineer and purchase for George Shintaffer all elevating and conveying equipment for his plant. * * * George Shintaffer agrees to let all engineering necessary for installation of the above conveying equipment, and will purchase from Universal Drier all conveying and elevating equipment. Discounts as above will be made on presentation of invoice and payment will be made within 10 days after receipt of invoices. * * * Receipt is hereby acknowledged for $1,000 for down payment on the above equipment." There was another agreement whereby Universal was to render certain supervision. Appellant contends that this document shows that Universal was something more than a materialman, either in the nature of an agent, contractor, designer, or consulting engineer or a combination of any of these capacities.

[1] A reading of the quoted portion of this agreement is sufficient to show that an ambiguity exists. The trial court, in order to resolve that ambiguity, heard considerable testimony upon the dealings between the parties. In determining what construction to put upon the instrument, the trial court was required to resolve several questions of fact upon which there was conflicting evidence. Its determination that the evidence showed merely that Universal Drier Corporation was a materialman rather than an agent or anything other than a materialman is amply supported by substantial evidence. The provision in the contract that "Shintaffer agrees to let all engineering necessary for installation of the above conveying equipment" does not necessarily compel the conclusion that Universal was more than a materialman. The contract is essentially one for the sale and purchase of equipment. The evidence which was admitted to shed light upon the ambiguities contained in the contract is sufficient to support the trial court in its finding that Universal Drier was only, in fact, a materialman.

[2] The cases of Roebling's Sons Co. v. Humboldt, etc. Co., 112 Cal. 288, 44 P. 568, and Bryson v. McCone, 121 Cal. 153, 53 P. 637, both stand for the proposition that where equipment is placed in a building constructed by another, the work done in placing the equipment is but the completion of the contract to deliver. The fact that certain planning or engineering was required in the instant case should not change this well established rule. Neither should the fact that Universal was to supervise the installation of the drier change the result. For other cases to the same effect, the case of Hihn-Hammond Lumber Co. v. Elsom, 171 Cal. 570, 154 P. 12, and the cases cited therein are particularly apposite here. Since the finding and judgment of the trial court in this respect must be affirmed, the other point raised by appellant regarding the timeliness of the filing of the notice of purported lien becomes moot as appellant, being a materialman of a materialman, would not be entitled to a lien regardless of the date of completion. Hertel v. Emireck, 178 Cal. 534, 174 P. 30; Wolfsen v. Smyer, 178 Cal. 775, 175 P. 10; Bell v. Scudder, 78 Cal.App.2d 448, 177 P.2d 796.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Aug. 8, 1956.

Action was brought for damages arising out of an automobile collision. The Superior Court of San Diego County, Joe

L. Shell, J., entered an order granting defendants' motion for new trial, and the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that where Superior Court announced at hearing of motion for new trial that trial court was granting defendants' motion for new trial on ground of insufficiency of the evidence, but, through some inadvertence or excusable neglect, court's minutes, as entered by clerk under date of May 27, 1955, did not reflect true order of court because they left out the ground "insufficiency of the evidence," and on October 11, 1955 counsel for all parties stipulated that true order of court could be entered nunc pro tunc in connection with written minute entries concerning motion for new trial, and court then ordered minutes amended by specifying insufficiency of evidence as ground on which motion for new trial was granted, plaintiff could not on appeal rely on conclusive presumption under statute providing that when new trial is granted on ground of insufficiency of evidence, order shall so specify in writing and shall be filed with clerk within 10 days, otherwise, on appeal from such order, it will be conclusively presumed that order was not based on that ground.

Order affirmed.

McInnis, Hamilton & Fitzgerald; William T. Fitzgerald; and John L. Stennett, San Diego, for appellant.

James C. Henderson and John Coker, San Diego, for respondents.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

These actions arose out of an automobile collision. A jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff Hoffman in the sum of $1,367.38. On May 27, 1955, a minute order was entered granting a motion for a new trial. The plaintiff Hoffman has appealed from that order.

The appellant concedes in his brief that at the hearing of the motion for a new trial the court announced from the bench that he was granting the motion on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, and the sole ground of the appeal is that it must be conclusively presumed that the order granting a new trial was not based upon the insufficiency of the evidence, and that there are no other grounds upon which that order could be based. It is argued that no order has ever been filed showing that the motion was granted on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence, or on any other ground; that under the provisions of Section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure it will be conclusively presumed that such an order was not based upon the insufficiency of the evidence unless that ground is specified in writing and filed with the clerk within ten days after the motion is granted; that a minute entry is not a sufficient compliance with that section; and that no other grounds for granting the motion can be here considered since no affidavits were filed as required by Section 658, when the application is made for a cause mentioned in the first four subdivisions of Section 657. In the closing brief it is argued that the minute entry was corrected by a nunc pro tunc order made on October 11, 1955; that since this nunc pro tunc order was not filed within ten days it must be conclusively presumed that the new trial was not granted on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence, as held in Dempsey v. Market Street Ry. Co., 23 Cal. 2d 110, 142 P.2d 929; and that since the court had no authority to enter a nunc pro tunc order such authority could not be conferred upon it by stipulation. The respondents contend that the order as entered was sufficient. It is also argued that it may also be assumed that a new trial was granted on the ground of excessive damages, subdivision 5 of Section 657, since it appears from the evidence that the appellant suffered very minor injuries, lost no time from his work, did not see a doctor for four or five days, and proved special damages which left a balance of $800 for personal injuries.

It was held in Whitley v. Superior Court, 18 Cal.2d 75, 113 P.2d 449, that the entry of a minute order was not a sufficient written order under the 1939 amendment to Section 657, and that the court had no power to enter nunc pro tunc orders correcting the record after the expiration of the ten-day period provided for in Section 657. In Dempsey v. Market Street Ry. Co., 23 Cal.2d 110, 142 P.2d 929, 932, the Whitley case was overruled insofar as the sufficiency of a proper minute order is concerned, but apparently approved as to the holding that Section 657 places a limit on the time within which the record may be corrected by a nunc pro tunc order.

The only order granting a new trial which appears in the clerk's transcript here is a minute order dated May 27, 1955, which reads, aside from formal parts: "Motions for a new trial. Argument by counsel of record. The Court grants the motion for a new trial for insufficiency of the evidence. Notice waived." However, the reporter's transcript shows a proceeding on October 11, 1955, with counsel for all parties present. The respondents' attorney stated that at the time the motions for a new trial were presented the parties were represented by counsel and arguments submitted; that at that time the court made its order from the bench granting the motions for a new trial on the insufficiency of the evidence; that through some inadvertence or excusable neglect the minutes of the court, as entered by the clerk under date of May 27, 1955, did not reflect the true order of the court in that they left out the ground "insufficiency of the evidence," as ordered by the court; and that "It is my understanding that counsel at this time will stipulate that the true order of the court may be entered nunc pro tunc in connection with the written minute entries of the records in this case." Counsel for all parties then said, "So stipulate," and counsel for the appellant added "That being for the purpose of correcting the minute entry only." The court then ordered the minutes amended by specifying the insufficiency of the evidence as grounds upon which the motion was granted. Counsel for the appellant then suggested that "Rather than getting the record all fouled up with those situations, why don't we agree at this time that the clerk's transcript be corrected, * * *". The court replied, "I just added the words." Counsel for the appellant then said: "Why doesn't it just appear like this in the original transcript on appeal?" and opposing counsel replied "So stipulated."

In the Dempsey case the court pointed out that it would be unreasonable to so interpret Section 657 as to require an appellate court "to presume conclusively a fact which the certified record itself shows to be false and contrary to fact." It would seem equally unreasonable to require an appellate court to conclusively presume a fact to be true which all parties conceded in the trial court, and concede here, is not true. The only order appearing in the clerk's transcript states that the motion for a new trial is granted on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence, and the record is in this condition because of the stipulation of all parties that the record should be prepared in that manner. Because of these circumstances no new nunc pro tunc order was entered. While the effect may be the same the record was corrected in advance with the consent of all parties.

[1-3] Section 657 should not be interpreted as forbidding the correction of the minutes, after ten days, when the parties stipulate that this may be done and that the record shall be prepared that way. The basic purpose behind Section 657 was to obtain a definite record of what actually occurred, thus avoiding both disputes as to what was done and possible afterthoughts. This purpose was fully accomplished here, and the statute should not be construed as intended to prevent the same result being reached by the agreement of all parties concerned. In Kohlstedt v. Hauseur, 24 Cal.App.2d 60, 74 P.2d 314, 316, in speaking of the statutory steps with respect to a motion for a new trial, but before the 1939 amendment to Section 657, the court said: "* * unless the prescribed steps are taken in accordance with the Code, the right to move for new trial does not exist as against one who stands on the statute and insists upon strict compliance therewith." The idea there suggested is sound. While the appellant had a right originally to insist on his rights under the statute he should not be allowed to waive those rights in open court and then, after stipulating to the true fact, appeal on the ground that the court was without power to accept his stipulation and to make the correction which he stipulated might be made. Under these circumstances, this court should not be required to conclusively presume a fact which is contrary to the record as now certified, and is contrary to the actual fact as stipulated to in the trial court and as admitted here.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

Morton WILLIAMS, a Minor, by Martin Larson, his guardian ad litem, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

SAN DIEGO UNIFIED SCHOOL DISTRICT, a governmental agency, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 5177.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

July 30, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 21, 1956.

Hearing Denied Sept. 25, 1956.

Action against school district for student's loss of sight of eye sustained at age eleven during course of study. The Superior Court, San Diego County, C. A. Paulsen, J., entered judgment for school district and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that the evidence sustained the finding that plaintiff was not so physically or mentally incapacitated during 90-day period as would authorize tardy filing of claim under statute requiring claims against school district for personal injuries to be filed within 90 days after accident.

Affirmed.

1. Schools and School Districts ⚷112

Minority of injured person in and of itself does not preclude operation of statute which requires claims against school districts for personal injuries sustained because of negligence of district board, its officers or employees to be presented in writing and filed with clerk within 90 days after accident occurred. West's Ann. Education Code, § 1007.

2. Schools and School Districts ⚷121

In action against school district for student's loss of sight of eye sustained at age 11 during course of study, evidence sustained finding that plaintiff was not so physically or mentally incapacitated during 90-day period as would authorize tardy filing of claim. West's Ann.Education Code, § 1007.

3. Appeal and Error ⚷996

The conclusion of a trier of fact from evidence or testimony that is reasonably susceptible of conflicting or opposing inferences will not be set aside by an appellate tribunal, and where different conclusion may reasonably be drawn from different minds, the trial court's findings are not to be disturbed on appeal.

4. Schools and School Districts ⚷121

In action against school district for student's loss of sight of eye sustained at age of 11 in accident during course of study, evidence supported finding that school district was not estopped by its conduct or advice given by it or its agent from asserting defense that claim was not filed within statutory time. West's Ann.Education Code, § 1007.

Huntington P. Bledsoe, San Diego, for appellant.

James Don Keller, Dist. Atty., Carroll H. Smith, Deputy Dist. Atty., McInnis, Hamilton & Fitzgerald, San Diego, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Plaintiff and appellant, Morton Williams, (hereinafter referred to as plaintiff) through his guardian ad litem Martin Larson, brought this action on October 29, 1952, against defendant and respondent San Diego Unified School District, a governmental agency, alleging that on May 17, 1944, when plaintiff was 11 years old, and during one of the courses of study of medieval history at an elementary school class which he was attending, he was directed to jump on a board which had been so placed that when a rock was placed on the opposite end it would catapult and hurl the stone in the air; that in so doing the rock flew against plaintiff's face and destroyed the sight of his left eye. He then alleges that within the time required by law there was filed on behalf of plaintiff, with the secretary and clerk of defendant school district, a verified claim in reference to said accident and injury.

In a second cause of action he claims lack of proper supervision on the part of defendant's teacher and agents. In a third cause of action, he realleges all of the paragraphs contained in the first cause of action by reference, and alleges that within 92 days after May 17, 1944, a claim was filed, as indicated, but states that it was not filed within the required 90 days because plaintiff was wholly incapacitated physically and mentally, by reason of his said injuries, to file it within said 90 days. In a fourth cause of action there is a similar allegation as that contained in the third cause of action, and he alleges failure to file a claim within 90 days upon various grounds, indicating that plaintiff's mother had consulted a legal representative of defendant school district within the statutory period concerning the procedure to recover for the plaintiff, and was informed and advised to place the matter of the claim in the hands of some attorney friend of said legal agent; that the mother did this, without the knowledge of plaintiff, and said friend filed a claim on the ninety-second day for only $10,000; that neither said defendant's agent nor his friend advised plaintiff's mother that said claim should be filed within 90 days after May 17, 1944, and neither plaintiff nor his mother knew of such requirement; and that, accordingly, defendant is estopped to assert the statute of limitation.

As a fifth cause of action, the provisons of the fourth cause of action are realleged by reference and it is therein claimed that defendant on August 29, 1944, denied the claim filed on the ground of lack of negligence on its part and at no time raised any objection to the statutory time limit, and accordingly the defendant waived the time limit imposed by law. Judgment for $92,500 is sought.

In a ruling on a demurrer and motion to strike, the court denied the motion to strike and overruled the demurrer to the first, second and third causes, and sustained the fourth and fifth claimed causes of action with permission to amend. No amendment was made and defendant answered the remaining causes of action, admitted certain allegations, and alleged that a claim was filed but not within the statutory period, and then denied, generally, the remaining allegations. A subsequent motion by defendant for judgment of dismissal was denied as to the fourth and fifth claimed causes of action. On a trial of the issues, the court rendered a memorandum opinion finding the district guilty of negligence, and that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence as alleged; that it was admitted that the claim was filed 92 days after the injury, but since plaintiff was a minor and incapacitated for the entire 92 days, his strict compliance could be excused. It then stated that inasmuch as the claim thus filed was for only $10,000, the judgment would be in that sum. Thereafter, the court modified its memorandum opinion stating that a careful review of the evidence convinced him that the evidence would not support a finding that the boy had been unable, either physically or mentally, for 90 days to file a claim and that there was not sufficient evidence as to the conduct of defendant or its agents which would constitute an estoppel or waiver of the filing of the claim within the statutory period. With reluctance, the court accordingly directed findings and judgment in favor of defendant. Accordingly findings were signed and judgment was entered.

A motion was made by plaintiff to modify and correct the judgment by showing that plaintiff should take nothing on the first, second, and third causes of action, and as to the fourth and fifth causes they were dismissed for failure of plaintiff to amend after demurrers were sustained with leave to amend, and because no evidence was introduced on those causes of action. On June 22, 1955, the court amended the judgment accordingly. This appeal is from the judgment as thus amended.

[1] The principal question presented involves the failure of plaintiff to file a claim within 90 days after the injury, as provided by section 1007 of the Education Code. One argument is that this section is not applicable to minors of the age of plaintiff. It has been held by a divided court that this fact in and of itself does not preclude the operation of the section. Artukovich v. Astendorf, 21 Cal.2d 329, 131 P.2d 831; Redlands High School Dist. v. Superior Court, 20 Cal.2d 348, 125 P.2d 490.

[2, 3] It has been held, however, that upon a proper showing and because of a person's mental and physical incapacity during the prescribed period, such time may be extended during such incapacity. Schulstad v. City and County of San Francisco, 74 Cal.App.2d 105, 168 P.2d 68. The court found that plaintiff had not brought himself within the exception and held that the claim was not filed within the statutory period. Evidence was taken upon the subject and it discloses, generally, that plaintiff was studying medieval history and the subject of the catapult, and was assigned the duty of going out into the school yard and erect a model or something of that nature with one other boy, and report to the class the results; that in testing it, as indicated, he injured his eye; that he was taken to a doctor and he could not see out of his eye; that on subsequent occasions, about twice a week, he was taken by his mother or father to the doctor's office for treatment; that while at home in the month of May, he was in bed and told to remain quiet; that in June and July his eye was bandaged and he was confined to his home, except when he went to the doctor's office; that in August the bandage was taken off intermittently, and he was allowed to stay on the porch for a limited time; that he went back to school on September 15, but was not permitted to take part in any sport. He testified he was ambulatory during this period, and could see out of his right eye; and that he was able to intelligently counsel with his parents.

Plaintiff's mother, by deposition, testified she and her husband immediately took the boy to the doctor and continued to drive him there during May, June, July and August; that about two and a half months after the accident she went to see the then attorney for the defendant, who referred her to another attorney; that she consulted this one and stated the case to him; that the boy was not present; that later, after several phone calls, she again called at the attorney's office and signed some paper he had prepared, and about two weeks later her husband received a letter from the school board dated August 31, 1944, denying the claim; that she then went to her attorney's office and inquired as to the reason, but she did not tell the boy about these proceedings. There was testimony that immediately after the accident it was reported to the principal. After the admission of this testimony the case was submitted on briefs. From this evidence it is clear that the trial court was justified in holding, as a factual question, that plaintiff, even considering his age, was not so physically or mentally incapacitated during the 90-day period as would authorized a tardy filing of the claim. Artukovich v. Astendorf, supra; Myers v. Hopland Union Elementary School Dist., 6 Cal.App.2d 590, 44 P.2d 654; Kline v. San Francisco Unified School Dist., 40 Cal.App.2d 174, 104 P.2d 661, 105 P.2d 362; Slavin v. City of Glendale, 97 Cal.App.2d 407, 217 P.2d 984. The conclusion of a trier of fact from evidence or testimony that is reasonably susceptible of conflicting or opposing inferences will not be set aside by an appellate tribunal, and where different conclusions may reasonably be drawn by different minds the trial court's findings are not to be disturbed on appeal. Kelley v. Upshaw, 39 Cal.2d 179, 246 P.2d 23; Potter v. Pacific Coast Lumber Co., 37 Cal.2d 592, 234 P.2d 16.

[4] The finding that defendant was not estopped from asserting the defense that the claim was not filed within the statutory time is equally supported by the evidence. There was no sufficient showing made that by any conduct on the part of the defendant was plaintiff or his mother deceived by any advice given by it or its agent, or any wrong conduct such as was related in Farrell v. County of Placer, 23 Cal.2d 624, 145 P.2d 570, 153 A.L.R. 323, relied upon by plaintiff.

As to the fourth and fifth causes of action, even assuming (which we do not) that the facts related in the complaint would be sufficient to constitute an estoppel, or to hold that there was a substantial compliance with the statute, there was no proof or offer of proof which the trial court rejected which would support these allegations. The record shows that plaintiff stood upon the allegations of the complaint and refused to amend. The court did not foreclose him from presenting evidence in support of it. In fact, the conduct of counsel for plaintiff indicated, to some extent, that he had abandoned this claim. In his opening statement on the issues to the trial judge he remarked as to these causes of action: "I think I can demonstrate that the ruling was erroneous, but I don't know whether we will even take that up or not. I don't think it will be necessary." Counsel for defendant then remarked "* * as I understand it, we are here today to try three causes of action, and that is all.

That is the only three that are in issue. The Court: On that statement of facts, I take it that we are down to three? Mr. Bledsoe: Yes, your Honor." We see no merit to the claim that the court was authorized to and should have given plaintiff judgment on these alleged causes of action. The amended judgment dismissing them was proper.

Judgment affirmed.

v.

Fred J. RUSSELL et al., Defendants and Respondents.*

Civ. 21413.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 9, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 4, 1956.

Hearing Granted Oct. 4, 1956.

Action to acquire an easement for highway purposes over owner's land. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Caryl M. Sheldon, J., entered judgment awarding owner severance damages and condemner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held that evidence supported finding that enlarging state highway by narrowing dedicated right of way of parallel county road upon side opposite from that on which owner's commercial property abutted, substantially impaired owner's right of access to county road.

Affirmed.

1. Municipal Corporations 🔑663(1)

An owner of property abutting on a public street has a property right in the nature of an easement in the street which is appurtenant to his abutting property and this is his private right as distinguished from his right as a member of the public.

2. Eminent Domain 🔑106

Municipal Corporations 🔑663(1)

The owner of property abutting upon a public street has an easement of ingress and egress to and from his property or the right of access over the street to and from his property, and compensation must be given for an impairment thereof.

3. Eminent Domain 🔑100(6)

A compensable injury to the right of an owner of abutting property is incurred by the narrowing of a street in front of his premises even where the portion vacated is on the opposite side of the street.

4. Eminent Domain 🔑221

Where question arises in eminent domain proceedings as to whether abutting property owner's right of access to street has been substantially impaired, it is a question for the court and not the jury.

5. Eminent Domain 🔑223

Where question arose in eminent domain proceeding as to whether or not abutter's right of access had been substantially impaired, trial court passed upon the question when it ruled on the admission of evidence and gave its instructions to the jury.

6. Eminent Domain 🔑223

In eminent domain proceeding wherein question arose as to whether abutting property owner's right of way had been substantially impaired by narrowing of road on side opposite from that on which his property abutted, even though court did not make special findings on such issue, its findings to the effect that there was an impairment were implicit in the verdict awarding compensation.

* Opinion vacated 309 P.2d 10.

7. Eminent Domain ⚷220

In eminent domain proceedings, the trial judge's view of the property and of construction of highway was independent evidence which supported determination or implicit findings in verdict that impairment of owner's right of access existed.

8. Eminent Domain ⚷205

In eminent domain proceedings, evidence supported finding that enlarging state highway and narrowing dedicated right of way of parallel county road upon side opposite from that on which owner's commercial property abutted substantially impaired owner's right of access to such county road even though the paved portion of roadway itself was not narrowed.

9. Eminent Domain ⚷205

In proceeding to acquire an easement across owner's land for construction of highway, evidence supported jury award of severance damages which included impairment of abutting owner's access to county road which had been narrowed by construction of highway.

10. Eminent Domain ⚷203(1)

In proceedings to acquire easement over owner's land abutting upon county road, there was no error in admission of testimony to the effect that narrowing of county road by construction of parallel state highway destroyed use of owner's land as commercial property.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment in a condemnation action wherein the defendant was awarded severance damages in the sum of $33,499.83.

The action was brought to acquire an easement for public road and highway purposes over property described in the complaint. The complaint alleges that the parcel to be taken is a part of a larger parcel and the prayer asks that damages incidental to the taking be ascertained and assessed. The answer admits that the parcel to be taken is only a part of a larger parcel and alleges that the taking and the construction of the improvement cause a damage. The issue of damages is therefore joined by the pleadings of the parties.

The parcel to be taken was unimproved, about 287 feet in length and varied in width from 6 feet to 28 feet and was about 5,064 square feet in area. That parcel was a part of a larger parcel all owned by the defendant. The larger parcel was generally rectangular in shape with an area of about 105,000 square feet. The entire property in question was zoned for commercial usage, fronting and abutting upon the north side of a county road called Firestone Boulevard, hereinafter referred to as the County road. The County road consisted of a dedicated right of way 52 feet in width, of which the center 28 feet had been paved allowing for vehicular and other travel in both directions and complete with curbs and gutters on each side. The County road ran parallel to, and adjoined on the south side, State Highway Route No. 174, also known as Firestone Boulevard, hereinafter referred to as the State highway. There was no connection or paved crossover between the State highway and the County road along their common boundary. Figure 1 illustrates the "before" position and measurements of the defendant's property and its relationship to the roadways. Figure 2 illustrates the "after" position and measurements of the defendant's property and its relationship to the roadways.

The relocation of the County road was necessitated by the widening of the State highway for the construction of a railroad overpass. The reconstruction of the County road resulted in the elimination of a 12-foot strip on the south side of the County road. In other words, the County road was reduced from 52 feet to 40 feet in width, or a reduction of about 23 percent, although the paved portion of the road remained the same. In addition, a paved connection between the County road and the State highway was constructed where Elmcroft Avenue and the State highway connect.

The evidence indicated that respondent's damages were not based upon any loss of light, air or view with respect to the County road, thereby resolving the matter to the question of loss or impairment of access.

Appellant asserts that the sole question presented by this appeal is whether the trial court erred in not ruling as a matter of law that respondent's easement of access in and to the abutting County road had not been substantially impaired. It is appellant's contention that since the uncontradicted evidence showed that the road had been reconstructed in exactly the same relationship to the land as to the grade, width of roadway, and intervening parkway strip, the only difference being the elimination of an unimproved 12 foot wide strip on the other side of the County road separating and dividing that road from a heavily traveled State highway, there was no substantial loss or impairment of respondent's right of access.

The property in question was a part of a subdivision known as Tract No. 16767, apparently developed in about 1950. The political subdivision having control of subdivisions at that time imposed certain conditions and requirements on the subdividers, among such conditions and requirements being that a road (the County road here) 52 feet in width be dedicated to the County; that, at the property owners' expense, it be paved with a roadway 28 feet in width; that it be provided with curbs and gutters and that a 12-foot parkway and sidewalk area be provided on each side of the paved and curbed roadway. The subdivision map was recorded on October 31, 1950. Apparently, the subdividers complied substantially with all of the conditions and requirements made by the political subdivisions concerned with the property.

[1, 2] As stated in Bacich v. Board of Control, 23 Cal.2d 343, at pages 349–350, 144 P.2d 818, at page 823: "It has long been recognized in this state and elsewhere that an owner of property abutting upon a public street has a property right in the nature of an easement in the street which is appurtenant to his abutting property and which is his private right, as distinguished from his right as a member of the public. That right has been described as an easement of ingress and egress to and from his property or, generally, the right of access over the street to and from his property, and compensation must be given for an impairment thereof."

[3] Also, in People v. Ricciardi, 23 Cal.2d 390, at page 397, 144 P.2d 799, at page 803, the court stated: "The courts of this state, from time immemorial and in cases too numerous to mention, have declared and enforced the abutting property owner's right to a free and convenient use of and access to the highway on which his property abuts. [Citing cases.] It was declared in the case of Eachus v. Los Angeles, etc., Ry. Co., supra, 103 Cal. 614, at page 617, 37 P. 570, 42 Am.St.Rep. 149, that this right of ingress and egress attaches to the lot and is a right of property as fully as is the lot itself and any act by which that easement is destroyed or substantially impaired for the benefit of the public, is a damage to the lot itself, within the meaning of the constitutional provision under which the owner is entitled to compensation.

"It is also the settled law that: 'An abutting owner has two kinds of rights in a highway, a public right which he enjoys in common with all other citizens, and certain private rights which arise from his ownership of property contiguous to the highway, and which are not common to the public generally; * * *. An abutting landowner on a public highway has a special right of easement and user in the public road for access purposes, and this is a property right which cannot be damaged or taken away from him without due compensation. [Citing cases.]' Lane v. San Diego Electric Ry. Co., 208 Cal. 29, 33, 280 P. 109, 111."

In Rose v. State of California, 19 Cal. 2d 713, at pages 727–728, 123 P.2d 505, at page 514, the court said: "The abutting owner's easement of access arises as a matter of law * * * and its nature and extent have been set forth in the numerous decisions which have considered the question. Thus, it is established that the easement of access is a matter of law peculiar to the individual owner, and an unreasonable interference with such an easement is an injury necessarily different from the injury suffered by the general public. * * It is an easement in the public highway upon which his land fronts. [Citing cases.] The right extends to a use of the highway for purposes of ingress and egress to his property by such modes of conveyance and travel as are appropriate to the highway and in such manner as is customary or reasonable. See Lewis, Eminent Domain, 3d Ed., p. 190."

The appellant here contends that the right of access does not extend to the full width of the dedicated right-of-way, but only to the paved portion thereof and that therefore there was no substantial loss or impairment of respondent's right of access since a duplicate paved portion of equal size has been provided.

In support of its contentions appellant cites Rose v. State of California, supra; Beckham v. City of Stockton, 64 Cal.App. 2d 487, 149 P.2d 296; McDonald v. State of California, 130 Cal.App.2d 793, 279 P.2d 777; Brown v. Board of Supervisors, 124 Cal. 274, 57 P. 82, and Bigley v. Nunan, 53 Cal. 403.

All of the cited cases are distinguishable from the case now before us. In the Beckham case the complainant owned property, no part of which was taken for construction, and which was beyond the intersection and within the first block from the street in question. In the construction an underpass was made and as a result thereof claimants could no longer go directly from their property across the next intersecting street and to the downtown area. The court held that mere inconvenience and circuity of travel beyond an intersecting street resulting from the construction of an improvement therein do not furnish a basis for recovery of damages by landowners whose properties abut on a street which intersects the street on which the improvement is constructed; that in order for the landowner to recover there must be an infringement of some right which he possesses in connection with his property; and such property right is that of reasonable use of the street fronting the property in either direction to the next intersection. Such right the plaintiffs still had.

In the McDonald case, plaintiffs claimed damages because they formerly passed directly across the county road, upon which their property fronted, to and into a state highway which lay next to and parallel with the county road. The state had constructed a wall 11 feet inside of the county road thus making direct passage to the state highway impossible, and necessitating travel on the county road to the next intersecting street before the state highway could be entered. A demurrer to the second amended complaint was sustained because the pleadings showed that appellants did not own property abutting on the state highway and did not have direct access thereto. The appellate court stated, 130 Cal.App.2d at page 797, 279 P.2d at page 780: "However, appellants do not complain of the fact that the wall was placed within the original surface area of the county road rather than upon its common boundary with the state highway. They claim only that their abutters' rights in the state highway have been damaged. * * * Thus, the real issue presented is whether or not the appellants, upon the construction of the state highway, ipso facto acquired a right to have no barrier erected between said state highway and that portion of Plumas Street [county road] upon which their properties abutted."

Brown v. Board of Supervisors, supra, 124 Cal. 274, 57 P. 82, merely holds that the narrowing of a street is not ipso facto an impairment of the right of access. The board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco passed an order declaring the northerly 31 feet of Turk Street to be closed and vacated. The owners of the lands abutting upon the southerly side of the street instituted proceedings for a review of the action of the board and a judgment annulling the order upon the ground that in adopting it the board acted in excess of its jurisdiction. The court held that the act of the board was a legislative act performed in the exercise of a discretionary power intrusted to them as a legislative body and that it was not the exercise of any judicial function which may be reviewed upon certiorari. In answer to the contention that the board had no jurisdiction to adopt the order without at the same time providing for an assessment of damage that would be sustained thereby and providing for its payment, the court stated, 124 Cal. at pages 280–281, 57 P. at page 83: "The property which an abutting owner has in the street in front of his land is the right of access and of light and air, and for an infringement of these rights he is entitled to compensation. * * * The appellants herein do not, however, claim that the reduction in the width of the street will in any respect interfere with their enjoyment of light and air, or that access to their lots is in any degree impaired. * * * The damage which the appellants may sustain by reason of a diminution in value of their lands is consequential, and damage for which they are not entitled to compensation. (Citing cases.)"

Bigley v. Nunan, supra, 53 Cal. 403, was not a condemnation proceeding but was an action to abate a nuisance caused by the erection of a fence in the highway in front of plaintiff's property, and for damages. The access from the plaintiff's lot to the street had not been cut off or impeded. The court held that if plaintiff and his immediate neighbors had more occasion to pass through the street than the public at large, this was an inconvenience in degree only and was not an injury in kind different from that sustained by the public; that the nuisance may be abated or removed, and to give damages on account of the decreased value of the land would be to give damages for all the injury the premises would ever sustain, which would be clearly wrong.

In a majority of the cases in other jurisdictions the right of an owner of property to compensation for damages suffered by the narrowing of a street in front of his premises has been sustained, even where the portion vacated is on the opposite side of the street. 18 Am.Jur. 860; 49 A.L.R. 1255. In City of Tulsa v. Hindman, 128 Okl. 169, 261 P. 910, 55 A.L.R. 891, it was held that where a city widens or opens a street for automobile and motor-truck traffic to its entire width, thereby consuming all space theretofore assigned and set apart for sidewalks or footroads, it is liable to abutting property owners for any consequential damages resulting to such property.

In Fry v. O'Leary, 141 Wash. 465, 252 P. 111, 49 A.L.R. 1249, the south 13 feet of a street were vacated over the protests of the landowners whose property abutted the opposite side. The court in holding that the resulting damage was compensable, stated, 252 P. at page 113: "We think it also clear under the uniform weight of authority that one who is an abutting property owner upon a street or alley, any portion or the whole of which is sought to be vacated, has a special right and a vested interest in the right to use the whole of the street for ingress and egress, light, view, and air, and, if any damages are suffered by such an owner, compensation is recoverable therefor. It follows therefore, that if appellants' light, air, view, or access is materially diminished, as alleged in the complaint, they are entitled to have the same passed upon by a jury regularly impaneled to determine the amount thereof. Ridgway v. City of Osceola, 139 Iowa 590, 117 N.W. 974.

"Respondents contend that the vested interest of an abutting property owner in a street extends only to the middle of the street, and that therefore appellants are not abutting property owners as to the 13 feet vacated, which is across the street. But this position is untenable. Carried to its logical conclusion, the council could vacate all the street opposite appellants' property, leaving but a 30-foot street, and still appellants have no cause for complaint because not abutting owners. Yet there can be no doubt that, under most circumstances, property on a street only 30 feet in width would not be as valuable as on one twice as wide, for there would be only half as much space for light, air, view, and means of access. An abutting property owner's vested interest is to the full width of the street in front of his land, and he is entitled to use the whole thereof for egress and ingress, light, air, and view, and for any substantial or material diminution of any of these rights he is entitled to recover in damages."

[4–6] Appellant further contends that the trial court, as a matter of law, must make a finding as to whether the abutter's rights of access have been substantially impaired, prior to submitting the matter to the jury. It is true that it is within the province of the trial court, and not the jury, to pass upon the question whether under the facts presented the abutting landowner's right of access will be substantially impaired. However, this the trial court did when it ruled on the admission of evidence and in its instructions to the jury. Also, if the court does not make special findings on the issue its findings thereon are implicit in the verdict awarding compensation. People v. Ricciardi, supra, 23 Cal.2d 390, 144 P.2d 799.

[7] Two witnesses testified for respondent and each stated that it was his opinion that there was a damage to the remaining parcel. One witness stated that it was his opinion that such damage was $69,373, and the other testified that it was his opinion the damage was $68,034. Each testified that by reason of the relocation and construction of the County road the highest and best use of respondent's property had changed from a retail commercial development to a residential development. The court and jury viewed the property, the area and the constructed improvement. The trial judge was in a position to and, in our opinion, he did fairly exercise his discretionary power. His view of the property and of the construction by the state is independent evidence to support the determination or finding implicit in the verdict that an impairment of access existed. Neel v. Mannings, Inc., 19 Cal.2d 647, 654, 122 P.2d 576; Wheeler v. Gregg, 90 Cal.App.2d 348, 366, 203 P.2d 37; City of Oakland v. Adams, 37 Cal.App. 614, 617, 174 P. 947; Hatton v. Gregg, 4 Cal.App. 537, 540–541, 88 P. 592. In the case of County of San Diego v. Bank of America National Trust & Savings Ass'n, 135 Cal.App.2d 143, at page 149, 286 P.2d 880, at page 884, the court stated as follows: "It is the rule in California that in a condemnation action, in absence of a showing of passion or prejudice, the finding of a jury when supported by substantial evidence will not be set aside on appeal. [Citing cases.]"

Also, in Rose v. State of California, supra, 19 Cal.2d 713, at pages 728–729, 123 P.2d 505, at page 514, the court said: "It is well settled that where there is evidence to support a finding that substantial and unreasonable interference with the landowner's easement of access or right of ingress and egress has been caused as the result of an obstruction in the street or highway on which his property abuts, an appellate court will not say as a matter of law that such finding is erroneous. O'Connor v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 122 Cal. 681, 55 P. 688; Smith v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 146 Cal. 164, 79 P. 868, 106 Am.St.Rep. 17; Fairchild v. Oakland & Bay Shore Ry. Co., 176 Cal. 629, 169 P. 388.

"The issues before the trial court in the case at bar were, whether plaintiffs' right of access to Jackson Street was substantially and unreasonably impaired by the construction of the subway, and, if so, the amount of damage suffered as the result of such interference. These matters are for the trier of the facts and only where the evidence does not support a finding of substantial and unreasonable interference should the court decide the issue as a matter of law."

[8, 9] The case of Anderson v. State of California, 61 Cal.App.2d 140, 142 P.2d 88, holds that the view alone will support a verdict if it is within the range of testimony. The trial court heard the testimony of all witnesses, received and examined all exhibits, viewed the property, and reweighed the evidence before denying appellant's motion for new trial. See, People v. Adamson, 118 Cal.App.2d 714, 725, 258 P.2d 1020.

[10] Appellant further contends that there were errors of law committed which were prejudicial to it. It is claimed that the testimony of the witness Little for the respondent should have been stricken. The substance of the testimony of the witness was that before the construction the remaining property was adapted to commercial activities and that after the reduction of the street the remaining property was no longer commercial; that the County road is now too narrow to service a commercial development and that the remaining property cannot now be utilized for commercial activities and is therefore less valuable. The testimony was proper and the motion to strike it was properly denied. Substantially the same situation prevailed as to the testimony of respondent's witness Ross.

It is our conclusion that there was ample evidence to support the judgment and there was no prejudicial error to appellant.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

HARTFORD STEAM BOILER INSPECTION & INSURANCE COMPANY, a corporation, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 5164.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Aug. 2, 1956.

Hearing Denied Sept. 25, 1956.

Action by workmen's compensation carrier against one whose negligence had caused injuries resulting in death of employee, to recover sums which carrier had paid for medical and burial expenses of employee. The Superior Court of San Diego County, William A. Glen, J., entered judgment for the carrier, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Burch, J. pro tem., held that fact that compensation carrier had assisted employee's heirs in maintaining death action against tort-feasor whose negligence had caused employee's death and had therein successfully asserted lien for death claim which it had paid did not preclude it from maintaining instant action to recover medical and burial expenses which it had paid on any theory that it was thus subjecting tort-feasor to double liability, that it had split its cause of action, that it had waived its right to recover such amount by not asserting them in death action, or that it had become estopped to pursue instant action by procuring partial recoupment.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Death ⟹84, 86(2), 88

Damages redressed in wrongful death action are for loss of support and consortium and nothing can be recovered therein for medical and hospital bills. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 377.

2. Workmen's Compensation ⟹2205, 2210

That compensation carrier had assisted employee's heirs in maintaining death action against tort-feasor whose negligence had caused employee's death and had therein successfully asserted lien for death claim which it had paid did not preclude it from maintaining subsequent action against such tort-feasor to recover medical and burial expenses which it had paid on any theory that it was thus subjecting tort-feasor to double liability, that it had split its cause of action, that it had waived its right to recover such amount by not asserting them in death action, or that it had become estopped to pursue action by procuring partial recoupment. BURCH, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff, Pacific Employers Insurance Company, a corporation, is the insurance carrier for Quality Industries, Inc., whose employee came to his death by reason of the explosion of a boiler in the employer's laundry business. It has been established that the negligence of the defendant, Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection & Insurance Company, a corporation, was the proximate cause of the injuries and resulting death of the employee.

The widow and minor children of the deceased employee obtained a judgment of $18,500 against the defendant in a wrongful death action instituted by them under Section 377 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The damages sought and recovered in that action were for loss of consortium and support. The plaintiff actively assisted the heirs in that action and was fully informed of the proceedings had therein. The plaintiff had disbursed to the plaintiffs therein the sum of $3,220 by way of death benefits, and the court made an order allocating out of the judgment to the plaintiff the said amount. The court found at the same time that the plaintiff had paid, in addition, hospital and medical bills in the sum of $3,874.42 and reasonable burial expenses in the amount of $400 "which latter two sums these plaintiffs will not reimburse to said workmen's compensation carrier." The present action was thereupon instituted to recover those two sums. The trial judge, who also presided in the other action, rendered judgment for plaintiff. A finding was made with reference to the death action that: "Plaintiff claimed its lien against the judgment therein to the extent of $3220 which sum plaintiff had paid as death benefits to the said heirs who were plaintiffs in said action" and plaintiffs accepted same with "full and complete knowledge" of the fact that the action had been filed, tried and adjudicated but filed no lien for the medical-hospital bills and the burial expense. Judgment went for plaintiff, and defendant urges that the above facts are fatal to recovery because plaintiff has made its election to pursue its judgment lien right, Labor Code, Secs. 3856–3860; that plaintiff has neglected to join as party plaintiff in the heirs' action, Labor Code, Sec. 3853, or to bring a separate action which might have been consolidated with the heirs' action, Labor Code, Sec. 3852; that having failed to exercise its full rights under any of these statutory remedies, the plaintiff is now estopped.

[1, 2] It is conceded in this case that the heirs of the employee had their right of action against the defendant by reason of Section 377 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The damages redressed to them in that action are for loss of support and consortium. Nothing was or could be recovered therein by them for medical and hospital bills, Gallup v. Sparks-Mundo Engineering Co., 43 Cal.2d 1, 10, 11, 12, 271 P.2d 34. The allowance of a lien to the employer's insurance carrier for death benefits paid diminished the carrier's claim under Section 3852 of the Labor Code, pro tanto, against the tort feasor, and mitigated the damages which the section authorizes plaintiff to recover. Of importance to the wrongdoer is that he not be subjected to double liability for the same wrong by reason of the several causes of action which may arise under the act and the general law. Eckman v. Arnold Taxi Co., 64 Cal.App.2d 229, 148 P.2d 677. No double liability results in the circumstances present here. The tort is redressed but once by construing the codified act, Labor Code, Secs. 3850–3862, as the court below has construed it in regard to the wrongful death action.

[3] The law of industrial accidents is limited to legislation under Constitution, Article XX, Section 21. "* * * the Labor Code does not purport to alter the correlative rights and liabilities of persons who do not occupy the reciprocal statuses of employer and employee. Our Workmen's Compensation Laws were not designed to relieve one other than the employer from any liability imposed by statute or by common law." Baugh v. Rogers, 24 Cal.2d 200, 214, 148 P.2d 633, 641, 152 A.L.R. 1043.

[4, 5] It is true that the employer's lien attaches to the "entire amount" of a judgment for any damages obtained by an employee, Heaton v. Kerlan, 27 Cal.2d 716, 166 P.2d 857. It is also true that the word employee "includes * * * any other person to whom a claim accrues by reason of the * * * death of" the employee, Labor Code, Sec. 3850, and when an action is established by the act it survives the death of the employee, Labor Code, Sec. 3851. However, the act does not create the wrongful death action nor abridge or control the damages recoverable therein. The wrongful death action is not based upon the injury to Conley, but upon his death. Had there been no death there could have been no such action. The injury might have been the foundation of an action had he lived. These causes of action not only inhere in different parties but proceed on different grounds—one for a wrongful injury, the other for a wrongful killing.

> "The latter is not a survival of the former on the death of the injured person, but is another and independent action, founded upon an event subsequent to the injury, and prosecuted by another plaintiff for the violation of a right appertaining to [them], and not to the intestate." State ex rel. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp. v. Dickerson, 160 Ohio St. 223, 115 N.E.2d 833, 835; see also International Mercantile Marine Co. v. Lowe, 2 Cir., 93 F.2d 663, 115 A.L.R. 896.

[6] The employer insured under the act to effect its purposes is entitled to the protections the act affords him, and these rights inure to the carrier by subrogation.

These considerations bring us to the conclusion that plaintiff has neither split a cause of action nor waived his rights under Section 3852, Labor Code, nor become estopped to pursue this action by procuring partial recoupment elsewhere.

The judgment is affirmed.

E. A. TALIAFERRO, Petitioner and Appellant,

v.

JUSTICE COURT OF The MARTINEZ JUDICIAL DISTRICT, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 16865.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

July 23, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 22, 1956.

Hearing Denied Sept. 13, 1956.

Petition for writ of mandate to compel justice court and the judge thereof to settle a statement on appeal from misdemeanor conviction. The Superior Court, Contra Costa County, Homer W. Patterson, J., entered an order denying the petition for writ of mandate, and petitioner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Devine, J. pro tem., held that petition was properly denied where reporter's transcript of trial in justice court, demanded by petitioner, had not been received and record did not show that such demand had been withdrawn at time petition was filed, though petitioner had also demanded a transcript of so much of the evidence as he might find necessary in order to correct any possible errors in settled statement.

Order affirmed.

1. Mandamus 🔑167

A petition for writ of mandate speaks as of the date of its filing.

2. Mandamus 🔑61

Writ of mandate would not issue to compel a justice court or judge thereof to settle a statement on appeal from misdemeanor conviction, where reporter's transcript of trial, demanded by petitioner, had not been received and record did not show that unqualified demand for such transcript had been withdrawn at time petition for writ of mandate was filed, though petitioner had also demanded a transcript of so much of the evidence as he might find necessary in order to correct any possible errors in the settled statement. Rules on Appeal from Municipal and Inferior Courts in Criminal Cases, rules 3, 7.

3. Criminal Law 🔑260(7)

Where defendant demanded both a settled statement on appeal from misdemeanor conviction in justice court and reporter's transcript, upon failure of defendant to file such transcript within the time allowed, as extended, justice court should ignore his limited demands for transcript of so much of the evidence as he might find necessary in order to correct any possible errors in settled statement and should proceed to settle the statement. Rules on Appeal from Municipal and Inferior Courts in Criminal Cases, rules 3, 7.

4. Criminal Law 🔑260(7)

Where settled statement on appeal from misdemeanor conviction in justice court does not give a fair record on appeal, under Rules on Appeal, additions to the record may be made for good cause on order of superior court. Rules on Appeal from Municipal and Inferior Courts in Criminal Cases, rules, 3, 7, 9.

E. A. Taliaferro, San Pablo, in pro. per. for appellant.

DEVINE, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from an order of the superior court denying a petition for writ of mandate to compel a justice court and the judge thereof to settle a statement on appeal from a misdemeanor conviction. Respondent justice court states that it is quite willing to settle the statement, and that the only reason it has not done so is that at the time of the filing of the petition for the writ of mandate, petitioner had demanded a transcript of the reporter's record of the trial and that said transcript had not been received. Rules 3 and 7 of the Rules on Appeal from Municipal Courts and Inferior Courts in Criminal Cases, reported in 26 Cal.2d 25 et seq. as amended in 29 Cal.2d 1 et seq. provide for a settled statement, or a transcript, or both, to constitute the record on appeal, and petitioner had demanded both. Thus the justice court contends it was simply deferring settlement of the statement in order to carry out petitioner's own request for the transcript.

[1, 2] Petitioner contends that his demand for a transcript was a limited one, in that it was expressed to be a demand only for those portions of the evidence which he might find necessary in order to correct any possible errors in the settled statement. However, there is in the record, in addition to the limited demand of which petitioner speaks, an unqualified demand for a reporter's transcript. (Appendix A, Respondent's Brief.) Petitioner states that he abandoned this unlimited demand, but we find no place in the record where such abandonment was made known to the court. The petition for the writ of mandate speaks as of the date of its filing (21 Cal.Jur. 15) and since it does not appear that the demand for the transcript was withdrawn at that time, even if we were to consider petitioner's brief before us as constituting a withdrawal of his original demand, the petition for writ of mandate must be denied.

[3] Although what has been said above is sufficient for the decision of this appeal, we think that it is proper to say something for the guidance of the justice court in event the unqualified demand for transcript should be withdrawn (or proof of withdrawal made, if, in fact, the withdrawal actually has been made but proof thereof has not heretofore been placed in the record), or for use when the time for filing the transcript under that demand has expired. Petitioner insists that he is entitled to something less than a full transcript. He contends that he is entitled to have a transcript of parts of the evidence, and that he is entitled to have this partial transcript included as part of the record on appeal if he is not satisfied with the settled statement. That is, he wishes the statement to be settled first, and then, if he deems it erroneous in any respect, to have so much of the transcript as he desires included in the record. The rules on appeal do not provide for any such procedure, but refer to a settled statement, a transcript, or both. Therefore, the justice court, upon the failure of the petitioner to file the full transcript within the time, as extended, should ignore the limited demand of petitioner and should proceed to settle the statement.

[4] Petitioner is not without remedy if the settled statement fails to give a fair record on appeal. Rule 9 of the Criminal Appeals Rules, 26 Cal.2d 29 provides for additions to the record to be made on good cause on the order of the superior court and the appellate department of that court will be eager to have before it a full and fair record of the proceedings.

The order denying the petition for writ of mandate is affirmed.

Civ. 5172.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

July 24, 1956.

Rehearing Granted Aug. 21, 1956.

Guardian's action on behalf of minor for personal injuries received by minor when bicycle on which he was riding collided with automobile of defendant motorist who was traveling in opposite direction. The Superior Court, San Diego County, Joe L. Shell, J., entered judgment for defendant motorist and guardian appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that, among other things, no prejudicial error was committed with respect to instructions on imputing negligence of bicycle driver to minor who was riding on rear luggage rack of bicycle at time of collision.

Affirmed.

Opinion vacated 301 P.2d 55.

1. Automobiles ⟹246(28)

In action by bicycle passenger who was riding on rear seat thereof at time of collision between bicycle and defendant motorist's automobile, court's instruction as to right and duties of bicycle riders was sufficient.

2. Trial ⟹296(3, 4)

In personal injury action by bicycle passenger who was riding on rear luggage rack of bicycle at time of collision with automobile instruction as to amount of caution required of a motorist and a bicycle rider, when considered in connection with other instructions, sufficiently covered subject matter.

3. Negligence ⟹93(8, 14)

Contributory negligence of a driver of a vehicle is not ordinarily imputed to his passenger or guest.

4. Negligence ⟹93(14)

Where there is nothing in common between the passenger and driver of a vehicle except a common destination and a common purpose in going there, the negligence of the driver is not to be imputed to the passenger.

5. Trial ⟹260(8)

In bicycle passenger's action for personal injuries received when bicycle on which he was riding collided with opposite direction motorist, in view of other instructions given concerning contributory negligence of passenger, no prejudicial error was committed in refusing to give passenger's proffered instructions to effect that he was a guest and negligence of bicycle driver could not then be imputed to him.

6. Appeal and Error ⟹216(1)

Where objections by plaintiff's counsel to certain questions were sustained, and an affidavit of one of the jurors showed that there was a remark by juror that something must have been bad because plaintiff's attorney would not allow witness to testify, plaintiff could not claim error by court in not instructing jury on own motion to disregard any questions to which objections were sustained, when no instructions were offered by plaintiff on subject.

7. Appeal and Error ⟹499(1)

Where record failed to show clearly the alleged erroneous conduct of defense counsel in referring to inability of defendant to pay a judgment, and no indication was in the record that an objection was made at that time or request was made of court to instruct the jury to disregard it, from record, court could not say that prejudicial error had resulted.

* Opinion vacated 301 P.2d 55.

Melvin M. Belli, San Francisco, amicus curiae.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Plaintiffs and appellants, Helen Tomson and her son, Ernest Tomson (aged 15) through his mother as guardian ad litem, brought this action against defendants and respondents for claimed damages for injuries resulting from a collision on the night of June 10, 1952, between a bicycle operated by one John Simmons (aged 13) and on which Ernest was riding tandem and a car owned by defendants Gladys and William McPhail and operated by defendant Anthony Kischassey (aged 17). His parents are also named herein as defendants. The accident occurred on Garfield Avenue, the paved portion of which is 18 feet wide with 3 foot shoulders, near La Mesa. It runs in a general north-south direction. Chatham Street runs in an east-west direction and forms a "T" intersection with Garfield Avenue.

Anthony was driving the car east on Chatham and proceeded to turn north on Garfield. About that time he noticed two boys on bicycles proceeding northerly on Garfield, one near the center line and one near the east edge of the pavement. He said he noticed no boys approaching him on the west side of Garfield but apparently Ernest and John were riding in a southerly direction, without the aid of lights on John's bicycle, which he was steering. As Anthony started to pass the two cyclists, he proceeded on the west side of Garfield and came in collision with the bicycle on which Ernest was riding tandem. He was seated on a permanently attached luggage rack over the rear wheel. It knocked the boys to the ground and injured Ernest quite severely. The speed of the defendants' car was fixed at about 10–20 miles per hour at the time. John invited Ernest to ride on the rack of his bicycle to take Ernest home. A jury verdict was rendered in favor of defendants. The principal complaint on appeal involves instructions which were given and refused and claimed misconduct of defense counsel.

On voir dire examination of one juror, plaintiffs' counsel, after asking the same question of the five previous jurors without objection, propounded a question as to whether the juror had any prejudice, one way or the other, in the event the evidence showed two people were riding on the same bicycle. Objection was then made by defendants' counsel and he stated as a reason that there might be some question of law involved "concerning the propriety of that activity". The objection was overruled and the juror remarked that he had been informed that it was against the law for two children to ride on the same bicycle and if so, he "might be prejudiced in that matter." He was immediately informed that the court would admonish him as to the law and no further objection was made. It later admonished the jury to erase the form of objection from their minds since it had not then been established that such conduct was against the law and indicated that the court would later instruct on this subject. Thereafter the court gave, at the request of defendants, an instruction in the language of section 586.5 of the Vehicle Code, which provides:

> "Unlawful riding. No person shall ride, and no person driving a motor vehicle shall knowingly permit any person to ride on any vehicle upon any portion thereof not designed or intended for the use of passengers. This provision shall not apply to an employee engaged in the necessary discharge of his duty or to persons riding within or upon vehicle bodies in space intended for any load on said vehicle."

Plaintiffs' counsel contends that this was the only law in support of the juror's information that it was a violation of the law to ride tandem on one bicycle and that the section itself does not prohibit such an act. In La Fleur v. Hernandez, 84 Cal.App.2d 569, 574, 191 P.2d 95, it was questioned whether that section was applicable where the passenger was riding on the handlebars of a bicycle. It concluded, however, that the error, if any, was not prejudicial.

Section 31 of the Vehicle Code defines a vehicle as a "device in, upon or by which any person or property is or may be propelled, moved or drawn upon a highway, excepting a device moved by human power * * *." That section especially eliminates a bicycle in the definition of a vehicle. Section 32 defines a motor vehicle and likewise excludes a self-propelled bicycle. The only section of the Vehicle Code which could possibly include it is section 452, which provides that every person riding a bicycle or riding or driving an animal upon a highway shall be granted all of the rights and shall be subject to all of the duties applicable to the driver of a vehicle, but this division (9) excepts those provisions which by their very nature can have no application. Section 596.5 is included within division 9 (traffic laws). It therefore appears that it might possibly apply to riding a bicycle upon a highway but it would be difficult to hold that it applied to a horse being ridden bareback and double. Apparently, in James v. Myers, 68 Cal.App.2d 23, 156 P.2d 69, a similar question arose where a motorcycle operator and his companion were riding on the single seat of the vehicle intended and designed for the exclusive use of the operator. The court held it was a violation of section 596.5 of the Vehicle Code. If it could be applied to a motorcycle under section 452, the trial court was justified in submitting the question of its application to a bicycle to the jury. No prejudicial error resulted in this respect.

[1] The trial court refused plaintiffs' proffered instruction in the language of BAJI 147 as to the standard of care or conduct of children, claiming it was "inapplicable". The reason it was inapplicable is not indicated. Here, the plaintiff was 15 years of age and the operator of the bicycle was 13. The evidence produced might well have justified the giving of this instruction. A similar instruction in Blanton v. Curry, 20 Cal.2d 793, 129 P.2d 1 (12 year old child) and Gunter v. Claggett, 65 Cal.App.2d 636, 151 P.2d 271 (18 year old boy) and Kelley v. City and County of San Francisco, 58 Cal.App.2d 872, 137 P.2d 719 (13 year old boy and a junior traffic officer acquainted with traffic and safety laws) was approved. In fact, defendants might have been entitled to a similar instruction. However, the court did give an instruction that bicycle riders have the same right as automobile drivers to the use of the streets and the former are chargeable with only such ordinary care for their own safety as a person of like age, intelligence and experience would exercise under the same or similar circumstances. We conclude that this instruction sufficiently covered the subject matter. Hicks v. Ocean Shore Railroad, Inc., 18 Cal.2d 773, 117 P.2d 850.

[2] The court also refused plaintiffs' proffered instruction in the general language of BAJI 138–A and 201–F, with modifications, in reference to the amount of caution required of the driver of a motor vehicle and also that of a bicycle rider. This type of instruction was approved in O'Brien v. Schellberg, 59 Cal.App.2d 764, 770, 140 P.2d 159. However, the proffered instructions modified the BAJI instructions to the extent that they were objectionable. The court did give a general instruction on this subject with the statement that it is the duty of the driver of a motor vehicle using a public highway to be vigilant at all times and to keep the vehicle under such control that to avoid a collision he can stop as quickly as might be required of him by eventualities that would be anticipated by an ordinarily prudent driver in a like position, and it is his duty to exercise ordinary care at all times to avoid placing himself and others in danger and to exercise ordinary care at all times to avoid a collision. This instruction, when considered in connection with other instructions, sufficiently covered the subject matter. Luis v. Cavin, 88 Cal.App.2d 107, 198 P.2d 563.

A more serious question arises as to the refusal of the trial court to give plaintiffs' proffered instruction to the effect that if plaintiff was enjoying the hospitality of John Simmons and was riding on the bicycle for his own pleasure or on his own business without making any return to or conferring any benefit on him, other than the mere pleasure of his company, then plaintiff Ernest Tomson was a guest and the negligence of the driver is not then imputed to a guest. Instead, the court gave an instruction in the general language of BAJI 210–E to the effect that if John was negligent and his negligence contributed in some degree as a proximate cause to the injury of plaintiff, the jury must determine whether John's negligence should be imputed to plaintiff, thus constituting contributory negligence on his part, and barring recovery by him; that to so impute negligence, it must find plaintiff and the driver were then in joint or common possession and control of the bicycle, with the two having equal rights to be heard in its control and management. The court then gave an instruction in the language of section 622 of the Vehicle Code as to the requirement of a lamp on a bicycle and it then gave an instruction to the effect that if "a party to this action" conducted himself in violation of the Vehicle Code, you are instructed that such conduct constituted negligence as a matter of law but would be of no consequence unless it was a proximate cause of the injury.

The argument is that the driver of the bicycle was not a "party to this action" and plaintiff could not be said to be violating the Vehicle Code in reference to lights and accordingly, the judge erred in instructing the jury that plaintiff could be found guilty of negligence as a matter of law in this respect; that he failed to point out in his instructions the difference in the legal status of a guest as distinguished from the driver of the bicycle and accordingly, the instruction was tantamount to the giving of an instruction that the negligence of either must be imputed to plaintiff.

[3, 4] The rule is well established that the contributory negligence of a driver of a vehicle is not ordinarily imputable to his passenger or guest. Pope v. Halpern, 193 Cal. 168, 173–174, 223 P. 470. Where there is nothing in common between a passenger and a driver of a vehicle except a common destination and a common purpose in going there, the negligence of the driver is not to be imputed to the passenger. Campagna v. Market Street Ry. Co., 24 Cal.2d 304, 149 P.2d 281. In the instant case the jury was not directly so instructed but it was told that if it found John was negligent, it must also determine whether the negligence should be imputed to plaintiff, and before it could be imputed, it must find that plaintiff and the driver were then in joint or common possession and control of the bicycle. It thereafter told the jury that contributory negligence "is negligence on the part of the person injured which cooperating in some degree with the negligence of another helps in proximately causing the injury of which the former thereafter complains" and that "to prove that a violation of a statute, such as those charged in this case, was excusable and justifiable so as to overcome the presumption of negligence, the evidence must support a finding that the violation resulted from causes or things beyond the control of the person charged with the violation."

[5] There was evidence that a rider or a passenger on a bicycle could affect control of the operation by the manner in which he distributed his weight. While the instructions given were somewhat confusing and did not fully cover the subject matter, there was a fair presentation of the legal question involved and the ultimate application of that principle was left to the jury to decide. We conclude that no prejudicial error resulted. Weaver v. Carter, 28 Cal.App. 241, 152 P. 323.

[6] Further complaint is made because the trial judge sustained objection to questions propounded by defendants' counsel to one of his witnesses who was called as an expert to testify in reference to the behavior of a bicycle under certain given circumstances. Apparently, the court believed him unqualified to answer the questions and sustained the several objections. The claim of plaintiffs is that the court should have instructed the jury, on its own motion, to disregard any question where objections were sustained. This claim is based on an affidavit of one of the jurors that one juror remarked to the others in the jury room that the witness must have known something important about the accident which "must be bad" for the plaintiffs because plaintiffs' attorney would not let him testify. No instruction was offered by plaintiffs on the subject. No prejudicial error could be based on this claim. Ornales v. Wigger, 35 Cal.2d 474, 218 P.2d 531.

A more serious question is jointly raised by counsel for plaintiffs and for amicus curiae. By stipulation, the argument to the jury and on the motion for new trial was not reported. Plaintiffs now claim that in the argument to the jury, defendants' counsel stated that his client was "a young man" and that "In the event you were to give plaintiffs a verdict of say $5,000, how much would you think Anthony could pay on such a judgment? $50 a week? Assuming that he could pay as much as $50 a week, it would take him 100 weeks to pay $5,000. Any higher verdict would take a comparable longer time to pay; and anything like $25,000 would be entirely out of the question for him to pay." In some sort of a hearing before the trial judge, after this appeal had been taken, counsel for plaintiffs endeavored to have counsel for defendants agree as to what was said in the argument to the jury in this respect. He denied that such statement was made and claims he only referred to how long it would take to earn $5,000, and that that sum would go a long way, and that he made no remark about defendant's ability to pay.

[7] Had plaintiffs' claim affirmatively appeared as a part of the record of the argument to the jury, it would have been error for either counsel to refer to the ability or inability of a defendant in any such action to respond to the judgment rendered. By such conduct, counsel invites error on the part of plaintiff to show that defendants are in fact insured and any such conduct, if prejudicial, might well call for a reversal of the judgment if proper objection is made at the time and a request made that the court instruct the jury to disregard the statement. Olsen v. Standard Oil Co., 188 Cal. 20, 204 P. 393; Drotleff v. Renshaw, 34 Cal.2d 176, 208 P.2d 969. Apparently, the authorized record before this court does not indicate that objection to the argument was made at the time and no request was then made to the court to instruct the jury to disregard it. There was a conflict in the supplemental reporter's transcript as to what was said in the argument in this respect and the court made no finding on the subject. Apparently, these questions were previously discussed on the motion for new trial, which was denied. Some consideration must be given to this fact in determining whether any claimed error was prejudicial. From the record before us it does not appear that prejudicial error resulted. Walling v. Kimball, 17 Cal.2d 364, 110 P.2d 58.

The judgment is affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Floyd Augustus PERRY, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5602.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

July 24, 1956.

Prosecution for attempted robbery. After trial by jury in the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Aubrey N. Irwin, J., defendant and another were convicted. Defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Parker Wood, J., held that evidence supported the verdict.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⚷1160

In prosecution for attempted robbery, resolution of conflict in evidence was for jury in first instance, and then for consideration of trial judge upon motion for new trial; where trial court approved jury's finding, District Court of Appeal could not weigh evidence or disturb such finding and action of trial court if there was substantial evidence to support verdict.

2. Robbery ⚷24(1)

Evidence sustained conviction for robbery.

Harrison M. Dunham, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Arthur L. Martin, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Defendant Perry and one Boyce were charged with attempted robbery. In a trial by jury they were convicted. Perry appeals from the judgment.

Appellant asserts that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict.

Mr. Thompson, the manager of a food market in Los Angeles, testified that on July 11, 1955, about 9:30 a. m., while he was inside the market and about 15 feet from the entrance, he saw the two defendants enter the store—Boyce entered first and Perry was about 3 feet behind him; Perry went to the front of the butcher counter; Boyce walked toward the witness, pulled a gun, stuck the gun in the witness' back and said, "[L]et's go into the back"; then the witness and Boyce walked about 50 feet and entered a room at the back of the store; Boyce then made the vegetable man (who was in that room) lie on the floor and he made the witness lie on the vegetable man; then he tied the vegetable man's hands; then, after telling the witness to get up, he put a gun in the witness' back and told him to go to the front of the store and wait on the two customers (who were at the cash register) "as if nothing was happening"; when the witness arrived there, defendant Perry was standing about five feet from the check stand; Perry had a hat on; the witness waited on the two customers; then Perry asked for two packages of Viceroy cigarettes; the witness gave the cigarettes to him but he did not offer to pay for them; at that time the witness was still in fear of the gun; Perry was then standing in front of the witness with his right hand in his (Perry's) coat pocket, and Perry said to the witness, in a firm voice, "Close the door up. Lock it"; at that time Boyce had gone behind the butcher counter and had taken the butcher into the back room; then the witness went to the double doors in front of the store and closed one of them; at that time another customer came in, and Perry "motioned with his hand in his pocket" for the witness to get behind the counter and wait on the customer; the customer did not stop at the check stand, and when Perry turned his head and was watching the customer the witness (manager) ran out the front door of the store.

Mr. Chang, the butcher, testified that one of the defendants asked him about ham; he (witness) did not remember which defendant asked that; one of the defendants, who had something "like metal" in his hand, ordered the witness to go to the back room; the witness felt "this metal" in his back when he was ordered to the back room; he thought it was Boyce who ordered him to the back room; when the witness arrived in the back room he saw the vegetable boy lying on the floor; the man who ordered him to the back room tied him (witness) up.

Mrs. Premo testified that on said July 11, about 9:30 a. m., she was in the alley by the market and she saw Perry run from the front of the store and get into a Buick car that was parked in the alley, and saw him drive away "as fast as he could"; he was not wearing a hat.

Mr. Hirabayashi, the vegetable boy, testified that when he was in the back room he saw Boyce and Mr. Thompson (the manager) come into that room, and at that time Boyce had a gun in the back of the manager; Boyce told the witness to lie on the floor; the manager lay on the witness;

Boyce tied the witness' hands, and then told the manager to go to the front of the store; in a couple of minutes Boyce forced the butcher into the back room and forced him to lie on the floor.

Officer Hall testified that on said July 11, about 9:30 a. m., he saw Boyce, who was crouched in shrubbery in a fence corner, at a place about a block from said market; he arrested Boyce; and on the opposite side of a house from the place where he arrested Boyce, he found a gun (Exhibit 1).

Officer Gildea testified that he and Officer Aselin had a conversation with Perry on July 13; in that conversation Perry said: He and Boyce went into the market and he "took the manager at the cashier's stand"; a customer walked in, and Perry turned his back momentarily to the manager and at that time the manager ran out of the market; then Perry yelled, "Jimmy," several times; "Jimmy," who was Boyce, did not answer; then Perry ran out of the store, jumped in his car and drove away. Officer Gildea testified further that on said July 13 he and Officer Aselin had a conversation with Perry and Boyce when both defendants were present; he (Gildea) asked Boyce if he went into the market with Perry and proceeded to the meat market; he replied, "Yes"; he (Gildea) asked Perry if he was the one who took the manager; he replied, "Yes"; then Perry said that he was to be known as Frank, and Boyce was to be known as Jimmy. Boyce said that he took the butcher to the rear of the store and tied him up. Perry said that after he yelled, "Jimmy," several times he ran to his car and left the scene. Boyce said that when he came from the back of the store no one was in the store, and then he "took off." Officer Gildea said to Perry, "Did you simulate a gun?"; he replied, "Yes, I used the top of an oil can, an oil can spout." Officer Gildea also testified that he found two packages of Viceroy cigarettes under the front seat of Perry's Chrysler automobile; he did not find any cigarettes in the glove compartment of that automobile.

Officer Aselin testified that he and Officer Gildea had a conversation with Perry and Boyce when both defendants were present; he (Aselin) asked Boyce who went to the front of the meat market; he replied that it was Perry, because Boyce went to the check stand where the manager was; Perry said that was correct; Boyce said that he took the manager to the rear room, and that after tying the produce man in that room he (Boyce) returned the manager to the front check stand, where Perry was standing, and then Boyce took the butcher to the rear room and tied him; Perry said that after Boyce left with the butcher, and after Perry had told the manager to lock the doors, a customer came in, and Perry turned to see what the customer was going to do and then the manager went out the front door; Boyce said that after he came from the rear room no one was in the store, and he called "Frank" several times, and no one answered and he walked out.

Defendant Perry testified that on said July 11 he parked his car in a parking lot by said store and went to the meat counter in the store and talked with the butcher about a ham; while the butcher was trimming a ham that Perry selected, Perry went to the check stand and purchased two packages of cigarettes; at that time a little fellow came into the store, and as the little fellow passed the check stand the manager "broke and ran out" of the store; then Perry looked at the little fellow, who had come in, and he was walking fast toward the back and went out of sight; Perry looked around and did not see the butcher or the Seven-Up man who had been in there, and that left Perry alone in the store and it indicated to him that "something was happening in that store," so he (Perry) ran fast to his car, jumped in it and left in a hurry. He testified further that he saw Boyce in the back of the store but he did not know at that time that it was Boyce; he left fifty cents on the counter as payment for the cigarettes; he put the cigarettes in the glove compartment of his automobile; he had two automobiles—a

Buick and a Chrysler; he did not tell the manager to lock the store; he (Perry) was not wearing a hat; he had been convicted of three felonies and had served terms in prison therefor; the last time he saw Boyce, before said July 11, was in 1951 in an institution in Kern County. He denied that he made the statements which the officers said that he made during the conversations with the officers.

Boyce did not testify.

Appellant argues to the effect that the evidence did not connect him with the attempted robbery; that he could have been convicted only under the theory of association, he having admitted that he had known Boyce in prison, and he (Perry) being the only other colored man in the market when Boyce attempted to commit robbery; that the manager's testimony was unreliable, because he said that appellant was wearing a hat, and Mrs. Premo and appellant said he was not wearing a hat; that the testimony of the officers regarding a conversation with Boyce and appellant "are so contrary" as to be unbelievable; that the testimony of the witnesses who were in the market negates the testimony that anyone shouted, "Jimmy" or "Frank"; the testimony of the officers was false, because Officer Gildea said he found two packages of Viceroy cigarettes under the front seat of a Chrysler automobile, whereas the testimony established that appellant was driving a Buick on the morning of the attempted robbery; that the testimony of the officers was false, because appellant and Boyce denied that they were interrogated when both defendants were together in the same room. Appellant also argues that the affidavit of Boyce, filed herein upon the motion for a new trial, should establish conclusively that appellant's testimony should be believed. In that affidavit Boyce stated that he had not seen Perry since 1951 and had had no contact with him since returning to Los Angeles at the end of Boyce's term in prison; that Boyce never told the officers that he and Perry planned to rob the market and had worked out a system of signals; various statements of the officers (therein specified) were false; Perry is innocent of the charges.

Most of those arguments point out that there were conflicts in the evidence. The matter of determining the conflicts in the evidence was for the jury. This court may not weigh the evidence. If there was substantial evidence to support the jury's determination of the facts, this court is not empowered to change that determination. Some of the evidence, in the light favorable to the prosecution shows: that the defendants entered the store together; that, in addition to the activities of Boyce (wherein Boyce threatened the manager, butcher, and vegetable man with a gun and also tied the butcher and vegetable man), the appellant, while moving his hand "about" in his coat pocket and using an oil-can spout to simulate a gun, demanded that the manager give cigarettes to him, and the appellant also commanded the manager to close and lock the store doors; that appellant did not pay or offer to pay for the cigarettes; that appellant called for Boyce by calling the name "Jimmy"; that when Boyce did not answer the call, the appellant ran out of the store, ran to his automobile, and drove away in a hurry. That was substantial evidence in support of the verdict.

[1] It is true that the manager said that appellant was wearing a hat, and that Mrs. Premo and appellant said that he was not wearing a hat. The resolution of that conflict in the evidence was for the jury in the first instance, and then for the consideration of the trial judge upon a motion for a new trial; and the trial court having approved the finding of the jury, this court may not disturb such finding and the action of the trial court if there was substantial evidence to support the verdict. (See People v. Farrington, 213 Cal. 459, 463, 2 P.2d 814.) The testimony of the officer that he found two packages of Viceroy cigarettes under the seat of defendant's Chrysler automobile did not necessarily present a conflict in the evidence. Appellant said that he had two automobiles—a Chrysler and a Buick. Mrs. Premo said he drove away in a Buick. Appellant was not arrested until the next day after the attempted robbery. The officer's testimony was a statement as to where he found two packages of cigarettes and was not a statement that appellant drove away in a Chrysler.

[2] No useful purpose would be served by a further summary of the evidence or by discussion of other details of the evidence. The assignments of error relate only to factual matters. The evidence supports the verdict.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.
ADOBE CREEK LODGE et al., Defendants,
Henry Waxman, Defendant and Appellant.
No. 16561.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.
July 30, 1956.

Hearing Denied Sept. 25, 1956.

Action by business invitee against resort and resort owner for injuries sustained when a piano, pushed and pulled toward the front of a stage bv two 13 year old boys, went over the edge and onto business invitee who sat on steps in front of stage. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Edward Molkenbuhr, J., entered judgment for business invitee and resort owner appealed therefrom and from an order denying resort owner's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that handling of the piano by the boys was not a danger known to resort owner and was not a danger of a type that resort owner had the duty of anticipating and guarding against, especially since nothing similar had occurred during the five or six years piano had been on the stage.

Judgment and order reversed with directions.

Opinion, 294 P.2d 729, vacated.

1. Negligence 🔑32(1)

Owner owes to an invitee duty to exercise reasonable care in maintaining premises in a safe condition so as not to injure such invitee.

2. Negligence 🔑48, 59

Where business invitee at recreational resort was injured when 600 pound upright piano was inadvertently pushed off sloping, cement stage by two 13 year old boys, who had moved it from rear of stage to find lost dart, the circumstances of the handling of the piano by the boys was not a danger known to resort owner and was not a danger of a type that resort owner had the duty of anticipating and guarding against, especially since nothing similar had occurred during five or six years piano had been on the stage.

Cooley, Crowley, Gaither, Godward, Castro & Huddleson, San Francisco, for appellant.

Herron & Winn, John Wynne Herron, San Francisco, for respondent.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

Plaintiff, a business invitee at defendant Waxman's recreational resort, sat down on the steps in front of a stage which was enclosed in front by a heavy canvas curtain. A piano, pushed and pulled toward the front of the stage by two 13-year-old boys, went over the edge and onto plaintiff, to her serious injury.

Plaintiff obtained a verdict for $54,980 which was reduced to $42,500 as the condition for an order denying a new trial. Defendant's principal point in support of his appeal from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is that plaintiff failed as a matter of law to prove that her injuries were proximately caused by defendant's negligence.

The stage was enclosed at the rear and either side by a wall and covered with a roof. The boys entered out of curiosity and engaged in throwing a dart from wall to wall. It disappeared in the vicinity of the piano so they moved the piano away from the wall toward the center of the stage. Failing to find the dart, they undertook to move the piano back into place, one pulling and the other pushing. One of the boys said it at first moved a little hard, so they both tried a little harder and "finally it started moving." The other boy, asked if it moved rather freely as they went toward the front, said "No, sir, I don't believe so." As one of the boys expressed it, as one was pushing and the other pulling, "it sort of swerved around * * * and then one of the casters went off, and it started falling." The other boy said "for some reason we got it too close to this first step here, and we misjudged the place and it started to topple over on one caster." Ann Sargent, one of the members of plaintiff's group testified that, hearing noises which attracted her attention (the noise of rolling, like skates or wheels), she opened the curtains at the front of the stage, saw the piano and on it a boy stretched out lying across the top of the piano. The other boy was in a "pushing position" behind one end of the piano.

The stage, 30 feet wide by 15 feet deep, had a smooth cement surface and, for drainage purposes, sloped 5 inches in 15 feet.

The piano was normally kept with its back against the left side wall, about 3 or 4 feet from the front of the stage. According to one of the boys that was where it was when they began moving it. The other boy placed it near the middle of the rear wall with one end against the wall.

The piano had been placed there for the use of patrons. It was an upright, weighed about 600 pounds and was about 5 feet high. It had double wheel casters for ease of movement. An expert witness testified that with this type of piano, when a caster drops off onto a lower surface, there is a tendency to throw the piano over. It has a narrow board across the bottom which makes it easier to tip it over in the back and hard to handle on a dolly even, "it always wants to roll." If this bottom board were wider it would be safer.

Defendant testified that he had owned the piano in question for about five or six years prior to the date of the accident. He knew that the surface of the stage was slightly slanted for drainage purposes. He did not know that a cement surface is conducive to the rolling of a piano. There was a standard place where the piano was kept when not in use. He had no rule that the piano could not be moved without securing permission of the management. He had instructed his foreman to put the piano in its regular place when it was not there. He knew that people moved the piano from its regular place. He thought that he could move the piano by himself.

Defendant had no blocks or chains or other means of fastening the piano at its normal location. There was a horizontal 8-inch x 8-inch timber at the front edge of the stage floor extending 5 feet toward the center from either end, secured to a verticle 8-inch x 8-inch timber which ran from the floor to the roof.

The piano had been on the stage some four or five years, ever since it was installed, with the possible exception that during the winter it would be removed and be put away. It was old-fashioned but a good instrument and in good working condition when he acquired it. One of the boys testified that he tried the keys but no sound came out. Defendant did not know what condition the piano was in at the time of the accident. He did not determine what condition it was in.

There was no evidence that anyone had previously been injured as a result of his own or another's use of this piano on this stage.

[1] The basic applicable principle is that the "duty owed by an owner to an invitee is to exercise reasonable care in maintaining his premises in a safe condition so as not to injure such invitee. Butcher v. Queen City Iron & Metal Co., 99 Cal.App.2d 25, 221 P.2d 265." Ashley v. Jones, 126 Cal.App.2d 328, 332, 271 P.2d 918, 920.

There was nothing about the piano itself or its mere presence upon the stage that constituted a hazard to invitees. This piano, despite its large ball-bearing casters and the smoothness and slope of the stage, was neither a self-propelling nor a "free-wheeling" instrument; it moved with difficulty. It was foreseeable that patrons might move the piano about upon the stage as might suit their convenient use of the stage. But that was not an operation which of itself would render the premises foreseeably unsafe for invitees. Nor was that the causative factor here.

[2] It was the handling of the piano in such a manner as to push one corner of it (one of the casters) over the edge and off the stage that caused the instrument to topple over and injure plaintiff. That was not a danger known to the defendant, nor one which under the circumstances of the case his duty of reasonable care charged him with anticipating and guarding against, especially in view of the lack of any similar occurrence during the four or five years this piano had been on this stage.

One of the most recent cases persuasive of this view is Porter v. California Jockey Club, Inc., 134 Cal.App.2d 158, 285 P.2d 60. A nonsuit was affirmed in an action brought by a patron of a race track who was injured when another patron running upstairs collided with her. Mr. Justice Dooling, speaking for the court, said: "In passing upon the motion for nonsuit the trial judge asked: 'should the track assume not only that a man is going to run but that he is going to run right into a person standing in the space that he must occupy, and guard against that?' This question pointed up the weakness of plaintiff's case. It was established that spectators were in the habit of congregating on the stairways at the start of each race and that bettors were in the habit of running to place bets at the last moment; but there was no evidence of any prior negligent conduct on the part of even one spectator. The liability of the landowner to provide against injury to an invitee from the act of another is based upon the fact that the landowner has notice of prior conduct from which he could reasonably anticipate that such injury might occur. Edwards v. Hollywood Canteen, 27 Cal.2d 802, 810, 167 P.2d 729; Terrell v. Key System, 69 Cal.App.2d 682, 159 P.2d 704; Stockwell v. Board of Trustees [of Leland Stanford Jr. University], 64 Cal.App.2d 197, 148 P.2d 405; Rest. Torts, sec. 348.

"An injury of the sort which occurred to appellant could only happen if the conduct of the spectator who ran into her so violently as to knock her down was either negligent or wilful. It is axiomatic that in the absence of conduct to put him on notice to the contrary a person is entitled to assume that others will not act negligently or unlawfully. Leo v. Dunham, 41 Cal.2d 712, 715, 264 P.2d 1. We are satisfied that there was no evidence of any facts in this case which would reasonably put respondent on notice that one spectator would run violently into another so as to put the duty upon it to take steps to guard against such contingency. Such cases as have considered a like question in other jurisdictions support this conclusion. Futterer v. Saratoga Ass'n, etc. [Breed of Horses], 262 App.Div. 675, 31 N.Y.S.2d 108; Carr v. Mile High Kennel Club, 125 Colo. 251, 242 P.2d 238; Dahna v. Clay County Fair Ass'n, 232 Iowa 984, 6 N.W.2d 843." 134 Cal.App.2d at page 160, 285 P.2d at page 61.

Of the additional similar cases which could be cited, the following should suffice: Olson v. Whitthorne & Swan, 203 Cal. 206, 263 P. 518, 58 A.L.R. 129, customer was hit by swinging door when leaving store, nonsuit affirmed; Schwerin v. H.

C. Capwell Co., 140 Cal.App. 1, 34 P.2d 1050, plaintiff going down on an escalator was injured by small boys who were attempting to ascend, nonsuit affirmed; Worcester v. Theatrical Enterprises Corp., 28 Cal.App.2d 116, 82 P.2d 68, theater patron kicked in back by intoxicated patron, order for judgment notwithstanding the verdict affirmed; Fitzgerald v. Million Dollar Theatre, Inc., 61 Cal.App.2d 17, 141 P.2d 935, plaintiff injured by blow on the head received while viewing a motion picture performance, judgment for defendant affirmed; Barnes v. J. C. Penney Co., 190 Wash. 633, 70 P.2d 311, customer in aisle of store was struck by child riding tricycle that was on display, order for new trial reversed and dismissal of action directed.

Plaintiff's authorities are readily distinguishable. For example, among them are these: Harvey v. Machtig, 73 Cal.App. 667, 239 P. 78, involved an invitee at a public resort who was injured by the collapse of a tree upon which there was a platform used for entertainment purposes and presented factual issues because there was substantial evidence that the tree was decayed to such an extent that the decay was plainly visible to the casual observer. The plaintiff in Spore v. Washington, 96 Cal.App. 345, 274 P. 407, a business invitee, delivering coal, tripped over a loose board of a wooden walk and the court took notice of the fact that such a structure deteriorates with age and exposure to the weather and observed that a jury might easily have concluded that the slightest inspection would have disclosed to the defendant the conditions actually existing. In Martin v. Los Angeles Turf Club, Inc., 39 Cal.App.2d 338, 103 P.2d 188, 190, a race track patron descending a stairway stepped on a bottle and fell and there was evidence that before and after the accident there was "'all kinds of stuff, including beer bottles, pop bottles'" etc., on the steps. The plaintiff in Basye v. Craft's Golden State Shows, 43 Cal.App.2d 782, 111 P.2d 746, was hit by a deflected bullet at a shooting gallery and there was evidence of negligent failure to make reasonable inspection to see that the apparatus and the methods of operation were reasonably safe, including evidence that the beaverboard used to prevent this kind of accident was badly perforated and in a deteriorated condition.

Those circumstances were distinctly different from the lack of an evidentiary basis for charging the defendant Waxman with foreseeability of and legal responsibility for the causative factors which operated in the instant case.

The judgment and the order appealed from are reversed with directions to the trial court to grant the defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Daniel RISSMAN, Defendant and Respondent.

Cr. 5512.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

July 27, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 6, 1956.

Defendant was indicted for soliciting two persons to offer, accept, and join in offer and acceptance of, bribes, and for grand theft. From an order of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, David Coleman, J., setting aside the indictment on defendant's motion, the People appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that evidence before grand jury was sufficient to establish reasonable cause for indictment as warranting finding that defendant was active conspirator in plan to solicit persons to offer, accept, or join in offer and acceptance of bribes for issuance of liquor licenses by State Board of Equalization or, if facts proved did not show solicitation of bribes, that defendant obtained money by false pretenses or by trick and device.

Order reversed with instructions to deny motion.

1. Indictment and Information ⇨10.2(1)

To warrant denial of motion to set aside indictment, proof need not be so complete as to justify conviction of accused, but probable cause is shown if man of ordinary caution would be induced by evidence heard by grand jury to believe and seriously entertain strong suspicion of accused's guilt. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 995.

2. Indictment and Information ⇨137(4)

An indictment will not be set aside, if there is some rational ground for assuming possibilities that an offense has been committed and that accused is guilty thereof. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 995.

3. Indictment and Information ⇨10.2(10)

Direct proof of formal understanding between parties to alleged conspiracy is not required as basis of an indictment or information.

4. Indictment and Information ⇨10.2(8)

To warrant indictment for soliciting persons to offer, accept, and join in offer and acceptance of bribes, state was not bound to prove that parties actually came together, mutually discussed their common design, and after reaching formal agreement, set out on their previously agreed course of conduct. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 653f.

5. Conspiracy ⇨47

The extent of assent of minds involved in conspiracy may be inferred by jury from proofs of facts and circumstances apparently indicating, when taken together, that they are parts of same complete whole.

6. Indictment and Information ⇨137(4)

On motion to set aside indictment, question is not whether accused is guilty of crime charged, but only whether evidence received by grand jury was sufficient to establish reasonable cause to warrant return of indictment. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 995, subd. 2.

7. Indictment and Information ⇨10.2(8, 11)

Evidence before grand jury was sufficient to establish reasonable cause for return of indictment for soliciting two persons to offer, accept, and join in offer and acceptance of bribes, and for grand theft in taking money from each of them, as warranting finding that accused was active conspirator in plan to solicit such persons to offer, accept, and join in offer and acceptance of bribes for issuance of liquor licenses by State Board of Equalization, or, if facts proved did not show solicitation of bribes, that accused obtained money by false pretenses or by trick and device. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 487, subd. 1; § 653f.

8. Indictment and Information ⇨129(1)

When a statement of facts shows that a crime has been committed and there is doubt as to particular crime, indictment may allege facts in separate counts and charge accused with as many specific crimes as may be deduced from such facts.

On Motion for Rehearing

9. Indictment and Information ⇨10.2(2)

Where testimony before grand jury, returning indictment for soliciting persons to offer, accept, and join in offer and acceptance of bribes, and for grand theft in taking money from each of such persons, proved existence of conspiracy between accused and two witnesses, testimony quoting conspirators was admissible to prove accused's criminal intent as against objection that it was hearsay. West's Ann. Pen.Code, § 487, subd. 1; § 653f.

10. Indictment and Information ⇨137(3)

Admission of some incompetent testimony before grand jurors is insufficient to upset indictment, where sufficient competent evidence was adduced on every element of crimes alleged.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellant.

Grossman & Rosen, Herbert Grossman, Los Angeles, for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Respondent was indicted for having violated section 653f of the Penal Code in that (count I) he did solicit Caspar Berger to offer and accept and join in the offer and acceptance of a bribe, November 15, 1952. Count III charges the same crime in that on December 25, 1952, he did solicit Albert Levin to do a similar act. Count II charges grand theft in that on November 15, 1952, he violated section 487(1) of the Penal Code by taking more than $200 in lawful money, the personal property of Caspar Berger. Count IV charges grand theft in that on December 25, 1952, respondent did take more than $200 in lawful money, the personal property of Albert Levin. Pursuant to motion under section 995(2) of the Penal Code, the court set aside the indictment.

From the entire record it appears that in 1952 some person in the office of the Board of Equalization had divulged to certain favored friends that he would cause on-sale liquor licenses to be issued to applicants who would pay extravagant sums therefor. Two individuals who were encouraged to discover potential applicants were Dick Stovall and William Ferguson. The latter was then business representative of the Bartenders' Union while his associate was secretary-treasurer of that Union.

Ferguson testified to the following facts: After a meeting of the business agents, secretary and president of the Union, in November 1952, Stovall told Ferguson that he had or could procure as many as eight on-sale liquor licenses and asked Ferguson whether the latter knew anyone in the market for such a license at a price of $5,500; that the actual amount required by the officer of the Board of Equalization was $2,400 and that Ferguson's commission on a sale would be 50 per cent of the excess over the cost of the license.

Two bartenders, Jay Teale and Karl Berge, visited Ferguson to inquire where they could get a license for a friend, to wit, Caspar Berger at 912 West Pico Street. Ferguson called on Berger and told him the price was $5,500, all cash, no checks. Berger promptly accepted the offer. When Ferguson reported to Stovall his sale to Berger, he was directed to advise Berger to make his application at the office of the Board. The applicant followed instructions and in due season the license was issued. Thereupon Stovall accompanied Ferguson to Berger's saloon and received the $5,500 from their applicant. The currency was placed in a large, white business envelope which Ferguson inserted into his inside coat pocket. The pair thereupon visited the Moose Lodge where they delivered it to Rissman. Nothing was said about the white envelope or its contents but the trio retired to the clubroom and partook generously of alcoholic beverages.

Ferguson testified that during the same period, one Karl Berge inquired whether "I knew how he might get a license for a friend who managed a bowling alley in El Monte"; that he visited the bowling hall and met Mr. Jones, the manager; after Jones had explained that Mr. Taylor owned the place, Ferguson unfolded his proposition and stated his price was $5,500. Jones asked whether he might raise the price $1,000 to which Ferguson assented. When Jones offered to get from Taylor a cashier's check for $6,500, Ferguson assured him the check would not be cashed until the license had been issued, but Stovall rejected the offer and said only cash would be acceptable. Thereafter, Taylor called at the Union, met Ferguson and asked for reassurance that he was dealing with a person whose word was good and could produce according to his promise. Taylor gave Stovall the money. While it was not seen by Ferguson, Taylor and Stovall mentioned $6,000 several times.

After Berger and Taylor had procured their licenses, Stovall paid Ferguson $300 and the latter paid Jay Teale $125 and Karl Berge $50. Ferguson called upon Rissman at the New Palace Cafe and protested the small sum paid him. Together they called upon Stovall at the Union and after Rissman's conversation with Stovall, the latter paid Ferguson another $100. When the latter spoke to Rissman about his demand for more money, respondent replied: "These licenses cost more than we thought they would cost. We have been out quite a bit of money and, honestly, this is all we received. You are getting more than we got. In the future you give us $4,000. Anything above that will be yours."

Berger's Testimony

Caspar Berger testified that Stovall told him he would receive special consideration if he made the purchase. When Caspar indicated to Jay Teale that a license could be had for $4,500, Teale told him that the "Old Man," i. e. Mr. Bonelli, then a member of the Board, would not sell a license for less than $6,000. While Berger was hesitating to pay such price, a liquor officer told him: "You are started on this license deal; if you back out you will antagonize them and you may never get a license." For fear of consequences, Berger paid the $6,000 for which Ferguson gave him an IOU. He suffered many delays before receiving a license, but after he had paid the money, Ferguson and Stovall returned and said: "The Old Man just bawled the devil out of us for deducting $262.50; said the price was a flat $6,000."

After he began operating under his "on-sale" license, officers of the Board of Equalization harassed him by frequent calls when they said Berger did not have enough spoons and forks or food and required him to purchase more of such equipment and suspended his license for failing to keep food sales up to requirements, contrary to the fact.

The Levin License

Prior to the preceding events, Paul Bershin became acquainted with Rissman in August 1952 when he discussed with respondent the latter's ability to get a new on-sale liquor license. Such conversations were repeated until December 1952 when respondent told Bershin he was in a position to get a new license issued by the Board of Equalization. Acting upon such statement by Rissman, Bershin introduced him to Albert Levin, whereupon they discussed the advantage of "putting a whiskey license in a beer spot" and it would be worth more money. Levin told Rissman he had no place to put a license. After they had discussed the licensing of a bar at 3129 West 8th Street, Rissman said: "You can make application for the location for the license prior to the time the bar is built; licenses have been issued to vacant lots where buildings have later come on there." Rissman's offer to get Levin a license for $3,500 was agreeable to the latter and it was issued. Levin, however, sold his license to Mike Musso for $6,000.

Albert Levin corroborates in detail the testimony of Mr. Bershin whose office address was used for Levin's application. Bershin introduced him to Rissman at the New Palace Cafe where an agreement was promptly made for the sale of a license to Levin for $3,500. When Levin returned the following day, the price was raised to $4,000, and Rissman said his people would accept no less for a new license from the State Board. Rissman told him to use 3129 West 8th Street as the address on his application; that it would not be necessary for him to have a legitimate bar there. Levin paid $4,000 in currency to Bershin who delivered it to Rissman in Levin's presence. The application was prepared and Levin, under Rissman's instructions, called at the Board's office in the Black Building, asked to see Mr. Moran. The license was issued in the early days of 1953. Levin testified that he sold the license four months later for $6,000.

The Sale to Kinnard

Bershin testified that about the time of the negotiations of Levin and Rissman, respondent had met Cecil Kinnard about a whiskey license for his beer bar at 310 East 5th Street; that Kinnard desired a whiskey license and inquired of Bershin whether the Board was issuing licenses. He was told to see Rissman. He did see respondent who offered to secure a new license for Kinnard for $3,500.

Mr. Kinnard declined to testify "on the grounds that his answers might incriminate him."

John Petiva testified that he knew Kinnard was going to get a license and heard him say so. Bershin told the witness that he would get him $200 or a new suit of clothes. He heard Bershin say to Kinnard that the only reason the witness was there was because Bershin had promised Petiva a license for someone else. After he knew the license had been issued to Kinnard, Petiva and Bershin drove to a local store where Kinnard presented a new suit to Petiva.

Admissions of the Underlings

Prior to the appearance of the foregoing witnesses before the grand jury, the law-enforcing agencies attempted to obtain information in aid of the investigation. Raymond J. Stonehouse, a special agent for the attorney general, conferred with Ferguson and Stovall; Stovall had stated that in August 1952 he had called at the Board of Equalization. He there met Mr. Hansen and asked whether he could get a license for the Bartenders' Union. Hansen referred him to Moran who took his name and address and two months later when he returned to the Board, he was directed to apply for a liquor license which he duly received. At first Stovall denied all knowledge of Ellis Taylor, but after inspecting a photostat of his own receipt to Taylor, he denied only having anything to do with the license issued to Caspar Berger. He knew the latter had met Ferguson at the 912 Club many times and that on one occasion Berger gave Ferguson an envelope containing some money and thereafter he and Ferguson visited with Rissman at the Moose Lodge. Stovall stated to Mr. Stonehouse that Taylor had come to the Bartenders' Union to ascertain what Stovall could do about a liquor license; that he telephoned Moran at the Board's office and told him that Taylor was in his office and wished a license; then Moran directed him to take $6,000 from Taylor and send him to the Board to file his application. He said that subsequently he met Moran in the drugstore below the office of the Board and gave him $6,000 which was to pay Moran for the license issued to Stovall at the Bartenders' Union. For many years he had known Rissman and that the latter had been indicted with Bonelli. He asserted that he knew of no connection Rissman had with liquor licenses, but Moran "got a good word from the Old Man," meaning Bonelli. He said for the first time, about a year and a half ago he had heard the rumor that somebody had paid extra to get a license but that so far as he knew, licenses are issued for the statutory fees.

On the eve of Ferguson's appearance before the grand jury, Stovall visited him at the home of Victor De Marchi in Los Angeles. He told Ferguson that he was going to state his name and address but would answer no questions that might incriminate him and thought it "would be the wise thing for all of us to do so." He said there was no use in bringing Rissman's name into this; that they had nothing to fear; that Brizell of the Union and Mr. Moran of the Board of Equalization were both dead. "My gosh, I wish I'd have gone to Texas with you and stayed down there." After Stonehouse had interviewed Ferguson, the latter called at the Mardi Gras and attempted to engage Rissman in conversation, but respondent "didn't remember me." After a few words had passed, Rissman stepped into another room, returned with Stovall and said: "You have nothing to fear; Moran is dead; you go get a night's sleep."

[1, 2] To warrant the denial of a motion under section 995 of the Penal Code, it is not necessary that the proof be so complete as to justify a conviction of the accused. Probable cause is shown if a man of ordinary caution would be induced by the evidence, heard by the grand jury, to believe and seriously entertain a strong suspicion of the guilt of the accused. Bompensiero v. Superior Court, 44 Cal.2d 178, 183, 281 P.2d 250. An indictment will not be set aside if there is some rational ground for assuming the possibility that an offense has been committed and the accused is guilty of it. Ibid.

[3–5] Direct proof of a formal understanding between parties to the conspiracy is not required as the basis of an indictment or information. It was not necessary for the State to prove that the parties actually came together, mutually discussed their common design and after reaching a formal agreement, set out upon their previously agreed course of conduct. The extent of the assent of minds which are involved in a conspiracy may be, and from the secrecy of the crime, usually must be, inferred by the jury from the proofs of the facts and circumstances which, when taken together, apparently indicate that they are parts of the same complete whole. Lorenson v. Superior Court, 35 Cal.2d 49, 56, 216 P.2d 859.

[6] The question is not whether the accused is guilty of the crime charged but only whether the evidence received by the grand jury was sufficient to establish reasonable cause to warrant the return of the indictment. People v. Sears, 124 Cal.App. 2d 839, 841, 842, 269 P.2d 683.

[7, 8] The evidence was sufficient to warrant a finding that Rissman was an active conspirator in a plan to solicit persons to offer or accept or to join in the offer and acceptance of a bribe for the issuance of liquor licenses by the State Board of Equalization.

The evidence proves that an applicant sought to file an application with the Board, but it was denied; that he was subsequently contacted by one of the conspirators and told that by paying $4,000 to $6,000, a license would be granted. When the money was paid to one of the conspirators, the applicant was directed to proceed at a specified time to a particular Board office and see a named liquor control officer who would accept the application. He did so and his application was accepted.

It is the rule that when from a statement of facts it appears that a crime has been committed and there is a doubt as to the particular crime, the indictment may allege the facts in separate counts and charge the accused with as many specific crimes as may be deduced from such facts. Therefore, if the facts proved did not show a solicitation of a bribe, they established a violation of section 487(1) of the Penal Code: obtaining money by false pretenses or by trick and device. Such practice was approved in People v. Adams, 137 Cal.App. 2d 660, 290 P.2d 944; People v. Chamberlain, 96 Cal.App.2d 178; People v. Sears, 124 Cal.App.2d 839, 853, 269 P.2d 683.

It is supererogation to observe that the facts disclosed before the grand jury in the matter of sales by the regulatory Board of on-sale liquor licenses for extravagant sums of money to indiscriminate persons is a matter of grave concern. Such evidence indicates that while virtue sleeps, vice is rampant; while men of honor are endeavoring to construct an enduring state, termitical bipeds are gnawing the foundations of the capitol; while an industrious people confidently strive for the amelioration of our social order, they are shocked, to a realization that their aims are being thwarted and their struggle might end in frustration. A trial of the instant action may not only result in bringing a miscreant to justice or in defeating his plans, but, also, the welfare of society may thereby be reinforced to the discomfort of lurking enemies of the State.

The order is reversed with instructions to deny the motion.

Order Denying Motion for Rehearing

PER CURIAM.

[9, 10] In his petition for rehearing, respondent emphasizes the point that certain testimony given before the grand jury was hearsay. There are two answers to this criticism: namely, the testimony proved that a conspiracy existed between respondent and the witnesses Stoval and Ferguson, therefore testimony quoting those conspirators was admissible to prove the existence of criminal intent; also, the presence of some incompetent testimony before the grand jurors is not sufficient to upset an indictment when, as here, sufficient competent evidence was adduced upon every element of the crimes alleged. People v. Nathanson, 134 Cal.App.2d 43, 45, 284 P.2d 975; McFarland v. Superior Court, 88 Cal. App.2d 153, 158–159, 198 P.2d 318.

Hearing Denied Sept. 25, 1956.

Action involving right to rents. The Superior Court, Sonoma County, Donald Geary, J., denied defendants' motion for change of venue and ordered certain defendants to deposit rents with County Clerk, and aggrieved defendants appeal. The District Court of Appeal, McMurray, J. pro tem., held that cause of action against defendants' lessees was not so unsubstantial as to disclose that they were not necessary or proper parties for venue purposes.

Order denying motion for change of venue affirmed; purported appeal from other order dismissed.

1. Venue 🔑22(1)

Where a defendant is properly named in one cause of action and is a resident of county where action is brought, venue for entire action is in that county. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 395.

2. Venue 🔑41

On motion for change of venue, it is enough to maintain venue in county where action is brought that cause of action purported to be stated against a resident defendant be apparently pleaded in good faith.

3. Venue 🔑22(3)

In determining whether a resident defendant has been joined solely for purpose of having action tried in county of his residence, real issue is whether plaintiff had reasonable ground for belief in good faith that plaintiff had a cause of action against resident defendant.

4. Venue 🔑72

On hearing of motion for change of venue, court should not try, upon conflicting affidavits, issues of fact going to merits of cause of action stated against resident defendant.

5. Venue 🔑22(3)

In action concerning right to rents, wherein defendant's lessees were joined as parties defendant in action brought in county of lessees' residence, cause of action against lessees was not so unsubstantial as to disclose that they were not necessary or proper parties for venue purposes.

McMURRAY, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from an order of the Superior Court of Sonoma County denying the motion of defendants Overholtzer for a change of venue and from an order requiring certain defendants to deposit rents with the County Clerk. The plaintiff, Phyllis B. Dennis, filed a complaint seeking declaratory relief and damages against the defendants Overholtzer and seeking declaratory relief against the other defendants named. The defendants W. V. Dennis, Jr., and John W. Bryson filed affidavits opposing the motion for change of venue on the ground that each of them was a resident of the County of Sonoma where the action was originally filed.

Appellants strenuously urged that Dennis, Jr., and Bryson are joined only in their capacities as lessees under a lease from the Overholtzers and that since it appears from their pleadings that they are not, in fact, adversary parties to the plaintiff Dennis they are not necessary and proper parties. Furthermore, that, since they admit the existence of the lease but merely state in their answers that they do not know whether to pay the moneys due under the lease to plaintiff Dennis or defendants Overholtzer, no controversy can exist between them and the plaintiff. In other words, the appellants base their appeal mainly upon the proposition that Dennis, Jr., Bryson and Livermore are not necessary or proper parties but are merely stakeholders.

The briefs in this matter have been of small assistance to the court as they are replete with arguments as to the merits of the action and contain many splenetic references to opposing parties and counsel.

[1, 2] In the complaint on file it is alleged that an actual controversy exists between the plaintiff and the defendants as to their rights and duties in respect to certain real property and the rentals which may become due. The trial court upon its hearing decided that Bryson and Dennis, Jr., were residents of Sonoma County and proper and necessary parties to the action. This was in accordance with the statement in Monogram Co. of California v. Kingsley, 38 Cal.2d 28, 237 P.2d 265, to the effect that under the provisions of Code of Civil Procedure, Section 395, where a defendant is properly named in one cause of action and he is a resident of the county where the action is brought, the venue for the entire action is in that county. Appellant seeks to have this court review the merits of the pleadings on file in order to find that defendants Dennis, Jr., and Bryson are not proper or necessary parties. The rules here applicable are stated in Gottesfeld v. Richmaid Ice Cream Co., 115 Cal.App.2d 854, 856, 252 P.2d 973, 975:

> "* * * '[I]f the allegations in question did no more than shadow forth the semblance of a cause of action, they would be proof against assault upon the ground that they were sham and frivolous. * * * It is enough * * * upon the hearing and determination of the demand for a change of venue, that the cause of action purported to be stated against the * * * defendant was apparently pleaded in good faith, and is not, prima facie, so glaringly and vitally defective as to be beyond correction by amendment.' McClung v. Watt, 190 Cal. 155, 160–161, 211 P. 17, 20; Mills v. Brown, 205 Cal. 38, 41, 269 P. 636; Freeman v. Dowling, 219 Cal. 213, 216, 25 P.2d 980; Independent Iron Works, Inc., v. American President Lines, Ltd., 35 Cal.2d 858, 860, 221 P.2d 939."

[3, 4] Assuredly in this case there is a sufficient statement of a cause of action to shadow forth the semblance of a cause of action against defendants Dennis and Bryson. The case of Gottesfeld v. Richmaid Ice Cream Co., supra, further states with clarity the rules and duties of a court upon a motion for change of venue. That case stated that under the facts there presented the change of venue granted was proper, but the language is apposite here. In that opinion, 115 Cal.App.2d at page 856, 252 P.2d at page 975, it is said:

> "In determining the question whether the resident defendant has been joined solely for the purpose of having the action tried in the county of his residence 'the real issue for determination by the trial court was whether plaintiff, in joining the resident defendant as a party, had reasonable grounds for the belief in good faith that the plaintiff had a cause of action against the resident defendant.' California Collection Agency v. Fontana, 61 Cal.App.2d 648, 653–654, 143 P.2d 507, 510; White v. Kaiser-Frazer Corp., 100 Cal.App.2d 754, 758, 224 P.2d 833; Freedman v. Imperial Cattle Co., 112 Cal.App.2d 593, 597, 245 P.2d 986. It is also the rule 'that upon the hearing of such motion, the court should not try, upon conflicting affidavits, the issue of fact going to the merits of the cause of action stated against the resident defendant.' Imperial Cattle Co., supra, 112 Cal.App.2d at page 596, 246 P.2d 986."

[5] Here, the trial court was confronted with a question of fact on the motion for the change of venue. It determined that question adversely to the appellants. In so doing, we are of the opinion that it acted properly and legally in view of the foregoing rules.

[6] The purported appeal from the order of the trial court requiring certain defendants to deposit rents with the County Clerk is not, in our opinion, such an order as to be appealable since it is not within the purview of any of the code sections on appeal. The order denying defendants Overholtzer's motion for a change of venue is affirmed, and the purported appeal from the order requiring certain defendants to deposit rents with the County Clerk is dismissed.

Civ. 21152, 21158.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

July 27, 1956.

Hearing Denied Sept. 18, 1956.

Action for declaratory judgment to determine liability of vehicle liability insurers. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, William J. Palmer, J., entered judgment from which an appeal was taken. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, J. pro tem., held, inter alia, that where liabilities arising out of operation of truck were covered by two policies of primary insurance issued by separate insurers and a policy issued by one of them providing excess coverage over its other policy, liability for claims was to be prorated until limits of liability on each of the primary policies were fully utilized and balance was then to be borne by the policy providing excess coverage and fees for defense of action arising out of liabilities were to be prorated at same ratio.

Judgments reversed.

1. Action ⚷59

Where actions are consolidated, there should be but one set of findings and one judgment.

2. Appeal and Error ⚷1008(3)

Where none of trial court's findings were based on any conflict in evidence but were legal conclusions or conclusions of fact arrived at in interpreting insurance policies, any errors in findings were errors of law and not of fact, and findings were not binding upon reviewing court.

3. Insurance ⚷512½

Even though, under liability policy issued to motor carrier, its driver was deemed a named insured by virtue of provision making policy comply with financial responsibility laws, driver was not a named insured under excess liability policy issued by another insurer where driver was not indicated therein as named insured, it did not purport to cover any one other than named insureds therein, did not expressly or by implication incorporate any conditions or insuring agreements of primary policy or contain any omnibus clause or provisions relating to financial responsibility. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 415.

4. Insurance ⚷512½

Where, under liability policy issued to motor carrier, its driver was deemed a named insured because of provision affording coverage to comply with financial responsibility laws of state, an excess liability policy issued by same insurer providing coverage in excess of that provided by excess policy issued by second insurer and providing compliance with financial responsibility laws afforded coverage to driver, even though, because of its provisions, excess liability policy issued by second insurer did not cover driver.

5. Insurance ⚷146(2)

In absence of circumstances indicating contrary intention, terms used in policy, like words used in any other contract, are to be construed in their ordinary and popular sense rather than according to strict legal meaning. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 654, 1644, 1925, 1928, 1929.

6. Insurance ⚷435.8

"Owner" as applied to motor vehicles is commonly understood to designate person in whom title is vested either as legal owner or as registered owner. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 654, 1644, 1925, 1928, 1929.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Owner".

7. Insurance ⚷435.8

For purposes of vehicle liability policy which was issued to lessee of oil truck and which excluded as insured the "owner" of vehicle, insured's lessor which had furnished truck and driver and which itself had leased truck from owner was not an "owner" so as to be excluded from coverage. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 654, 1644, 1925, 1928, 1929.

8. Insurance ⚷435.8

Omnibus clause of liability policy issued to lessee of truck, properly construed, included as insured the lessor which had furnished truck and driver.

9. Insurance ⚷146(3)

Exceptions in contract of insurance are to be construed most strongly against insurer and in favor of insured and if they are susceptible of two meanings, one most favorable to insured is to be adopted.

10. Automobiles ⚷197(3)

Where lessor of truck furnished driver to lessee which had right to exercise supervision and control over truck and driver, lessee was liable for any negligence of driver in operation of truck, under doctrine of respondeat superior.

11. Insurance 🔑435.13

Provisions of liability policy, issued to lessee of truck providing that excluded as insured were owner of vehicle and its employees, properly construed, excluded as employees only employees, of owner of hired automobile, who were acting for and on behalf and under control of such owner and not persons who were acting for and under direction of named insured and who were entitled to coverage by virtue of policy provision making policy conform to financial responsibility laws, and policy afforded coverage to one who was general employee of lessor, but who, at time of accident, was under supervision and control of lessee.

12. Insurance 🔑512½

Where two automobile liability policies providing primary coverage contained clauses which provided that if insured was covered, partially or wholly, by other insurance, benefits of such insurance were required to be exhausted before recourse could be had under such policy, fact that one of such policies qualified "other insurance" by words "valid and collectible" did not require that such policy be exhausted before resort could be had to other policy, and liability was to be prorated between policies up to their respective limits of liability.

13. Insurance 🔑512½

Where liability arising out of operation of truck was covered by two policies of primary insurance issued by separate insurers and a policy issued by one of them providing excess coverage over its other policy, liability for claims was to be prorated until limits of liability on each of the primary policies were fully utilized and balance was then to be borne by the policy providing excess coverage, and fees for defense of action were to be prorated in same ratio.

[1] These actions for declaratory relief both involve the interpretation to be placed upon the same policies of insurance. The cases were consolidated for the purposes of the trial, but separate findings of fact and judgments were entered in each action.[1]

Hereinafter the first case named in the title will be called the Oil Base action; and the second one, the Scherer action.

In the Scherer action plaintiff, by his complaint, sought to have it declared that he was an insured under the policies of insurance issued by each of the insurance companies who is a defendant, and was entitled as such an insured to be indemnified in accordance with the provisions of the various policies. He joined as defendants Hardware Mutual Insurance Company (hereinafter called Hardware); Transport Indemnity Company (hereinafter called Transport); Security Mutual Casualty Company (hereinafter called Security); Mercury Transport Company (hereinafter called Mercury); Southwest Tank Lines (hereinafter called Southwest); and others.

The plaintiff Oil Base, the named insured in the policy issued by the defendant Hardware and one of the named insureds in the policies issued by defendant Transport and defendant Security, sought by its amended and supplemental complaint to have its rights as against Transport, Security, and Hardware, under the policies issued by them, and the obligations of said insurers under said policies, declared. It also sought a money judgment on account of attorney's fees and costs of defense of certain actions hereinafter mentioned brought against it, and for the sum of $100,000 against Hardware on account of payments made in the settlement of the claim of one Smith, to which claim further reference is hereinafter made.

[1] The record here well illustrates the merit of the rule enunciated in Wolfson v. Beatty, 118 Cal.App.2d 392, 257 P.2d 1017, that where actions are consolidated there should be but one set of findings and one judgment.

The facts are not in dispute, and the findings made by the trial court in each action insofar as any issues here are concerned are not based upon any conflict in the evidence but upon the trial court's interpretation of the various contracts involved.

The relevant facts are:

The defendant (in the Scherer action) Southwest was the owner of a certain tractor and semitrailer. By lease dated June 1, 1952, it leased this equipment to the defendant Mercury for a period of one year. The lease provided that during the term of the lease the equipment should be solely and exclusively under the direction and control of Mercury.

On the 5th of November, 1952, Mercury leased the equipment to Oil Base for a period of one month. The purpose of the lease was to enable Oil Base to transport certain drilling mud to Texas by use of its own equipment, Mercury not having an interstate commerce license which would enable it to contract this work. This lease provided that Mercury would furnish required lubricants and fuel and one or more competent drivers, and that during the period of the lease the equipment should be "solely and exclusively under the direction and control of the Lessee."

Pursuant to the lease last mentioned, the equipment was delivered to Oil Base at its plant in Compton, California, on the 5th of December, 1952. At that time the equipment was in the charge of Scherer and another driver furnished by Mercury; at that time the truck was loaded by Oil Base, and Scherer and his co-employee were given detailed directions by Oil Base as to the route to be followed and the times of day during which they should travel while in Texas.

On the morning of November 8, 1952, while returning to Compton, California, from Texas, the equipment, while being driven by Scherer, collided with a vehicle driven by one Smith and in which one Lowe, the owner of the vehicle, was riding. In this accident both Smith and Lowe sustained serious injuries.

At the time of the accident the following policies of insurance were in effect: Policy No. CGAL 476238, issued by Hardware to Oil Base as its named insured, with limits of liability of $100,000 each person, $300,000 each accident. By the insuring agreements of this policy Hardware undertook, under coverage A, to "pay on behalf of the insured all sums which the insured shall become legally obligated to pay as damages because of bodily injury * * * at any time resulting therefrom, sustained by any person and caused by accident." By the insuring agreements it further undertook to "defend any suit against the insured alleging such injury * * *." The word insured is defined by the insuring agreements of the policy as follows:[2] "The unqualified word 'insured' includes the named insured and also includes * * (2) under coverages A and B, any person while using an owned automobile or a hired automobile and any person or organization legally responsible for the use thereof, provided the actual use of the automobile is by the named insured or with his permission, and any executive officer of the named insured with respect to the use of a non-owned automobile in the business of the named insured. The insurance with respect to any person or organization other than the named insured does not apply under division (2) of this insuring agreement:

[2] This clause is hereinafter referred to as the "omnibus clause."

"* * *

"(d) with respect to any hired automobile, to the owner thereof or any employee of such owner."

By the conditions of the policy the term owned automobile is defined as "an automobile owned by the named insured." The term hired automobile is defined as one used under contract by or loaned to the named insured and which is not owned or registered in its name. The term non-owned automobile is defined as "any other automobile," the term automobile being defined as a "land motor vehicle or trailer * * *."

It is further provided by the conditions of the policy as follows: "Such insurance as is afforded by this policy for bodily injury liability * * * shall comply with provisions of the motor vehicle financial responsibility law of any state or province which shall be applicable with respect to any such liability arising out of the ownership, maintenance or use during the policy period of any automobile insured hereunder, to the extent of the coverage and limits of liability required by such law, but in no event in excess of the limits of liability stated in this policy * * *." [3]

Transport issued its policy No. 12–101 in which Mercury Transport Company, Mercury Tank Transport, and Southwest Tank Lines were named as insureds, the company's liability under which was $10,000 each occurrence. By rider executed and attached to the policy at the time of the lease made by Mercury to Oil Base, Oil Base was named as an insured.[4]

By the insuring agreements of this policy Transport agreed "To pay on behalf of the insured all sums which the insured shall become legally obligated to pay for damages, arising out of the occupation of the named insured, as a result of bodily injury * * *." It further agreed to defend or settle all suits filed against the insured and to pay all costs of investigation and litigation.

By the terms of the policy the term named insured is defined to mean the insured named in the declarations. The unqualified word insured is defined to mean "any partner, executive officer, managing employee, director or stockholder" of the named insured while acting within the scope of his duties.

Paragraph 6 of the conditions of the policy provides in substance that the insurance afforded by the policy shall comply with the provisions of the motor vehicle responsibility law of any state or province, and for all practical purposes is identical with that contained in the policy issued by Hardware.

Security issued to the same named insureds as are named in Transport's policy No. 12–101 its policy No. T–212, entitled "Excess Loss Contract." By the declarations of the policy it is provided, "Company's Maximum Liability: $40,000.00 each occurrence over $10,000.00 primary each occurrence, such primary coverage with Transport Indemnity Company * * *." The only persons named as insureds in this policy are the persons so named in the declarations. There is no omnibus clause such as that contained in the Hardware policy.

By section 1 of the insuring agreements the company agreed to indemnify the insureds for all sums which they should by law be liable to pay and shall pay, or by final judgment be adjudged liable to pay, on account of bodily injuries sustained by any person. By section 2 it is in substance provided that Security should only be liable for the ultimate net loss in excess of $10,000 or of such greater amount as the insured shall be covered by primary insurance, but only up to the sum of $40,000. By section 3 it is agreed that liability under the policy should not attach until the insureds or their primary carriers should have paid the amount named in item 5 of the declarations.

[3] The provisions of this as well as other policies involved as to "other insurance" are quoted post.

[4] The effect of the endorsement as performed by the court below is to make Oil Base a named insured in both policies issued by Transport and in the policy issued by Security. This is made clear by paragraph XIX of the findings.

Coincidentally with the issuance of its policy No. 12–101 and Security's policy No. T–212, Transport issued its policy No. 12–102, the named insureds in this policy being the same as in its policy No. 12–101. The limit of liability stated in the policy was $950,000 in excess of $50,000 each occurrence.

Specifically as to the policy being one of excess rather than primary insurance, the policy contains the following provisions:

"Excess Provisions:

"In consideration of the premium at which this policy is written, it is hereby agreed that the Company's limit of liability hereunder shall apply as excess insurance over underlying primary insurance policies issued by Transport Indemnity Company for $10,000 and issued by Security Mutual Casualty Co. for $40,000.

"Notwithstanding anything in this policy to the contrary, it is further agreed that this policy is subject to the same terms (except as respects the premium, the limit of liability, and except as otherwise provided herein) as are contained in or may be added to the primary insurance policy for $10,000 issued by the Transport Indemnity Company.

Except as to the limits of liability and the provisions of the declarations as to the coverage being excess coverage, the insuring agreements and conditions of the policy are identical with those of Transport's policy No. 12–101.

Shortly after the occurrence of the accident in question, Oil Base reported it to both Hardware and Transport, and upon the filing of the actions by Smith and Lowe, tendered the defense of these actions to both companies. Each of the companies denied obligation to defend the actions upon the ground that their policies were policies of excess insurance and the policy of the other company was the primary coverage, and that therefore the issuer of that policy was the one obligated to defend the actions. Scherer also demanded of each company that it assume the defense on his behalf of the actions brought by Smith and Lowe, and both companies denied liability upon the grounds that he (Scherer) was not an insured under their respective policies. Scherer and Oil Base then employed their own counsel to defend these actions.[5]

After the commencement of the present actions for declaratory relief, the claim of Smith was compromised and he was paid the sum of $360,000. Of this sum, $260,000 was paid by Transport and its excess carriers, and $100,000 was paid by Oil Base, this sum being loaned it by Transport under an agreement that it should be repaid, without interest, only out of such money as it might recover from Hardware upon its policy. All parties agreed that the settlement should not prejudice the claims of Oil Base or its subrogees against Hardware, and that the amount paid was reasonable. After the judgments were entered in the present actions, the claim of Lowe was settled for the sum of $75,000.[6]

By its judgment in the Scherer action, the trial court declared that: (1) Scherer was not entitled to coverage or protection under the Hardware policy; (2) Scherer was not entitled to protection under the Transport policies or the Security policy; (3) neither Mercury nor Southwest was entitled to coverage or protection under the Hardware policy; (4) Mercury and Southwest were entitled to protection under the Transport policies and the Security policy; (5) Transport's liability with respect to the claims of Smith and Lowe under its policy No. 12–101 was a sum not exceeding $10,000; (6) Security's liability upon the claims of Smith and Lowe was a sum not exceeding the sum of $40,000, and this liability attached only after the full utilization of the indemnity provided by Transport's policy No. 12–101; (7) Transport's liability under policy No. 12–102 as to the claims of Smith and Lowe was in a sum not exceeding $950,000, and this liability attached only after the full utilization of the indemnity provided by its policy No. 12–101 and Security's policy, to-wit: indemnity in the aggregate sum of $50,000; (8) Transport and Security were obligated to defend and to pay the cost of investigation and of the defense of Mercury and Southwest in the actions brought by Smith and Lowe. It further declared that the judgment was not one for the payment of money but only one declaring the rights, duties, and obligations of the parties.

[5] In each of the answers filed by the defendants in the actions brought by Smith and Lowe, negligence on the part of Scherer is denied and contributory negligence of the plaintiff is alleged.

[6] We are so advised by counsel in their briefs and we assume for the purposes of our decision that that compromise was made under an agreement by the parties of like effect to that under which the Smith claim was settled.

From this judgment Scherer has appealed as against that portion of the judgment which declares he is not entitled to protection under any of the policies issued by the defendants Hardware, Transport, and Security.

Transport, Security, Southwest, and Mercury have appealed from that portion of the judgment which affects them. We will consider the questions raised by their appeals in connection with their appeal from the judgment in the Oil Base action.

Scherer's Appeal

The trial court found that at the time and place of the accident in which Smith and Lowe were injured, Scherer was driving the equipment in question with the consent and permission of Oil Base and Mercury; that he was "the agent but not the employee of Oil Base and was acting in the scope and course of his employment as such agent." It further found that at said time Scherer was also acting as the general employee of Mercury but that Oil Base had the exclusive possession and control of the equipment and "had the right to exercise supervision and control over" Scherer.

[2] After findings which consist of recitals of the effect of or quotations from the policies of insurance issued by Hardware, Transport, and Security, the court reached the conclusion and found as a fact that Scherer was not an insured under any of the policies in question. In its conclusions of law it stated the same conclusion.[7]

It was not contended at the trial that Scherer was an insured under the policies issued by Transport and Security, nor in the briefs originally filed on this appeal did Scherer contend that the court erred in its finding and conclusion that he was not entitled to protection under those policies.

After the oral argument on this appeal the Supreme Court rendered its decision in Continental Cas. Co. v. Phoenix Const. Co., supra. The court there had before it for interpretation a policy which is in the exact terms of Transport's policy No. 12–101 in the case at bar, and it there held that paragraph 6 of the conditions of the policy[8] in effect incorporate section 415 of the Vehicle Code into the policy and thereby make the driver of the vehicle an insured. By supplemental briefs filed here, counsel for Transport now concede that Scherer was an insured under Transport's basic policy, and that the trial court's findings and conclusions to the contrary are in error.

[7] None of these findings are based upon any conflict in the evidence but are in fact the legal conclusions or conclusions of fact arrived at by the court in interpreting the policies and the lease of the equipment by Mercury to Oil Base. Therefore any errors therein are ones of law and not of fact, and the findings are not binding upon this court, In re Estate of Platt, 21 Cal.2d 343, 352, 131 P.2d 825; Continental Cas. Co. v. Phoenix Const. Co., 46 Cal.2d 423, 296 P.2d 801.

[3] It is now the contention of Transport and Security, however, that Scherer is not entitled to coverage under the policy issued by Security or the excess policy (No. 12–102) issued by Transport. We are in agreement with this contention insofar as Security's policy is concerned. There is nothing in this policy that purports to cover anyone other than the persons named as insureds therein, nor does it expressly or by implication incorporate any of the conditions or insuring agreements of Transport's primary policy.[9] Scherer was not a person named as an insured in this policy, and as the policy contains no omnibus clause nor any provisions relating to the financial responsibility laws of the state, it is impossible to read into it any coverage of Scherer.

[4] What we have just said as to the Security policy is, however, not applicable to Transport's policy No. 12–102 (excess insurance in the sum of $950,000). This policy is, so far as its insuring agreements and conditions are concerned, identical with the excess Transport policy construed by the Supreme Court in Continental Cas. Co. v. Phoenix Const. Co., supra, see 46 Cal.2d 423, 296 P.2d 801. In view of this decision of the Supreme Court we must construe this excess policy as covering Scherer.

The trial court found that Mercury was the owner of the equipment leased by it to Oil Base, and that therefore Hardware's policy did not cover either Mercury or Scherer because of the provision of that policy which excepted from the coverage granted by division 2 of paragraph 3 of the insuring agreements (the omnibus clause) the owner or the employee of the owner of a hired automobile.

[5–7] We believe that the trial court erred in holding that Mercury was the owner of the equipment within the meaning of the policy. In the absence of circumstances indicating a contrary intention, the terms used in a policy of insurance, like the words used in any other contract, are to be understood in their ordinary and popular sense rather than according to their strict legal meaning, Civil Code, § 1644; Pendell v. Westland Life Ins. Co., 95 Cal.App.2d 766, 770, 214 P.2d 392; Bastian v. British American etc. Co., 143 Cal. 287, 290, 77 P. 63, 66 L.R.A. 255, although their precise meaning may depend upon the subject matter of the contract and the circumstances surrounding that subject matter and the parties. The word owner as applied to motor vehicles is commonly understood to designate the person in whom title is vested either as a legal owner or as a registered owner. That it was so understood by the parties here is evident from the fact that no contention was made by counsel for any of the parties at the trial of this action that the word owner as used in the clause of the contract in question had any other meaning. The trial court however did not apply the ordinary meaning of the word ownership, but applied section 654 of the Civil Code which provides that "The ownership of a thing is the right of one or more persons to possess and use it to the exclusion of others"; and concluded that inasmuch as Mercury had, under its lease, the exclusive right to the possession of the equipment, it was the owner thereof. Followed to its logical conclusion, the court's reasoning would have made Oil Base, rather than Mercury, the owner of the equipment, for Oil Base had the exclusive right to possess and use the equipment at the time of the accident.

There can be no doubt that Mercury was the owner of the interest in the equipment which vested in it under its contract with Southwest, but that interest consisted only of the right to temporary possession and use of the equipment subject to the obligation to return the property to Southwest and to use ordinary care for its preservation and safety and to repair any deterioration or injury occasioned by its want of ordinary care, Civil Code, §§ 1925, 1928,

[9] The terms of this policy are entirely different from those of the excess policy which was construed by the Supreme Court in Continental Cas. Co. v. Phoenix Const. Co., supra.

1929. It was not the owner of the property but only of a limited right in the property.

[8] In the absence of the provisions of the policy upon which the trial court relied in excluding Mercury and Scherer as insureds under the policy, there could be no doubt that both would have been included as insureds under the omnibus clause.

[9] Exceptions in a contract of insurance are to be construed "most strongly against the insurer and in favor of the insured and if susceptible of two meanings, the one most favorable to the insured is to be adopted." Pendell v. Westland Life Ins. Co., supra, 95 Cal.App.2d at page 770, 214 P.2d at page 395. Mah See v. North American Acc. Ins. Co., 190 Cal. 421, 425, 213 P. 42, 26 A.L.R. 123; Bayley v. Employers' etc. Corp., 125 Cal. 345, 58 P. 7. The word owner is certainly susceptible of meaning the legal or registered owner, and if we assume that it is also susceptible of meaning a person in possession under a lease, still the meaning which will grant coverage rather than exclude coverage should be adopted. If it had been the intention of the insurer to except the letter of a hired vehicle who was not an owner from the coverage granted by the omnibus clause, it would have been a simple matter to have made the exception clear by the addition of the word letter to that clause, so as to make it read "with respect to any hired automobile, to the owner or letter thereof, or any employee of such owner or letter." Further, the policy itself negates any intent that the word owner should mean one whose rights in the property were only those of a hirer, for it distinguishes between automobiles which the insured had the right to use and possess and which are not owned by or registered in its name from automobiles which are "owned" by it.

Respondent has not directed our attention to any case in which the word owner, as used in a policy of automobile insurance, was given the meaning assigned to it by the trial court or in which was applied the definition of ownership as set forth in section 654, Civil Code. On the contrary, all the decisions which have been called to our attention have held that a hirer is not an owner. See Williams v. General Insurance Co., 8 Cal.2d 1, 63 P.2d 289; Harbor Supply Co. v. Motor Boat Astorian, 116 Cal. App. 563, 2 P.2d 1004; United Pacific Ins. Co. v. Ohio Casualty Ins. Co., 9 Cir., 172 F.2d 836.

[10] Assuming, however, that within the meaning of the policy Mercury was the owner of the equipment, Scherer is nevertheless entitled to coverage. The trial court found that Scherer was the general employee of Mercury but that at the time of the accident was the agent of Oil Base and was acting in the scope and course of his employment as such agent, and that Oil Base then had the right to exercise supervision and control over Scherer and the truck and trailer. Oil Base was therefore liable, as found by the trial court, for any negligence of Scherer, under the doctrine of respondeat superior, as stated by the trial court in its memorandum of decision; and unless the exception stated in the omnibus clause of the policy applies, he was clearly an insured under that clause of the policy. He was also an insured by virtue of paragraph 8 of the conditions of the policy ("Financial Responsibility Laws Coverages A and B") as that clause is interpreted by the Supreme Court in Continental Cas. Co. v. Phoenix Const. Co., supra.

[11] We believe that the policy is subject to the interpretation that it was only employees of the owner of a hired automobile who were acting for and on behalf and under the control of such owner who were excepted from the exception of the omnibus clause contained in the policy, and that it was not the intent to except from the coverage of the policy those persons who were acting for and under the direction of the named insured and who were entitled to coverage by virtue of clause 8 of the conditions of the policy. This interpretation being the one most favorable to the insured, it must be adopted, Mah See v. North American Acc. Ins. Co., supra;

Pendell v. Westland Life Ins. Co., supra; Bayley v. Employers' etc. Corp., supra.

We therefore hold that Scherer is an insured under the policy issued by Hardware; that Scherer is an insured under Transport's policy No. 12–101; that Scherer is not an insured nor entitled to coverage under the policy issued by Security; that Scherer is an insured under Transport's policy No. 12–102 and is entitled to indemnity against the claims of Smith and Lowe for the amount of said claims which exceeds the sum of $50,000.[10]

Appeals in the Oil Base Case

What we have said in disposing of Scherer's appeal is applicable to and disposes of all questions raised by the appellants in their appeals from the judgment in the Oil Base case except those questions relating to the proration of the losses among the policies.[11]

The judgment entered in the Oil Base action declared that Oil Base is entitled to coverage and protection under the Hardware policy, that Hardware's liability to Oil Base as to the claim of Smith is in a sum not to exceed $100,000, and as to the claim of Lowe is in a like sum. It further declared that Oil Base was entitled to coverage and protection under Transport's policy No. 12–101 and that Transport's liability under that policy was not to exceed $10,000 for the occurrence in which Smith and Lowe were injured; that Oil Base was entitled to coverage and protection under Security's policy No. T–212; that Security's liability under policy No. T–212 was in the sum of $40,000 on account of the occurrence and that liability under that policy attached only after the full utilization of the sum of $10,000 provided for in the Transport policy.

It further declared that Oil Base was entitled to coverage and protection under Transport's policy No. 12–102; and that Transport's liability under that policy was in a sum not to exceed $950,000 for said occurrence and that liability under said policy did not attach until the full utilization of indemnity provided for by policy No. 12–101 and Security's policy No. T–212. It further declared that the Transport policies and the Security policy constituted one integrated insurance structure with an aggregate maximum liability of $1,000,000 and that said insurance (in the sum of $1,000,000) was concurrent insurance with the Hardware policy.[12]

It then declared formulas for the proration of the losses between the integrated policies on the one hand and the Hardware policy on the other. To illustrate the formula first set forth in the judgment, it provides that the $360,000 loss occasioned by the Smith claim should be paid 10/110ths by Hardware and 100/110ths by the "Transport/Security Mutual structure."

We have reached the conclusion that the trial court was in error in treating the three policies as one policy with a limit of $1,000,000, and that being so in error, the formula by which it decreed the liabilities of the companies should be prorated is likewise in error.

We are of the opinion that as to the Smith claim, Hardware's policy and Transport's policy No. 12–101 should prorate the Smith claim until the limits of liabilities of each policy have been fully utilized and that the balance of that loss must be borne by Security and Transport's policy No. 12–102; that as to the Lowe claim, that loss must be prorated between the Hardware policy and Transport's policy No. 12–102.[13]

[10] Inasmuch as Smith's claim has been liquidated in the sum of $360,000 and that amount paid, Transport's contribution to that settlement must be deemed to have been made on behalf of Scherer as well as on behalf of the other persons covered by its excess policy. Policy No. 12–102 attaches to the Lowe claim, as that claim is clearly in excess of the $50,000 over which the policy was excess insurance.

[11] Counsel have extensively argued the question as to whether Scherer was the agent or the special employee of Oil Base, but inasmuch as the trial court found that he was acting for Oil Base in driving the truck and was under its direction and control, we do not see that it is of any importance what terminology is used in describing his status. We will therefore not further treat of that question in this opinion.

[12] This results in attaching both Security's policy and Transport's policy No. 12–102 to the risk at the same time that policy No. 12–101 and Hardware's policy attached.

There is no question but that except for the Transport policy, Hardware's policy would have been primary insurance in the sense that it would attach to the loss immediately upon the happening of the occurrence; nor can there be any question that except for the Hardware policy, Transport's policy No. 12–101 would have been primary insurance in the sense that it would have immediately attached to the risk upon the happening of the occurrence.

Both Hardware's policy and Transport's policy No. 12–101 contain clauses as to the effect of other insurance covering the risk. Hardware's policy in this regard provides: "If the insured has other insurance against a loss covered by this policy * * * the insurance under this policy with respect to loss arising out of the maintenance or use of any hired automobile or out of the use of any non-owned automobile shall be excess insurance over any other valid and collectible insurance available to the insured, either as an insured under a policy applicable with respect to such automobile or otherwise." The Transport policy provides: "If there is other insurance against an occurrence covered by this policy, this insurance shall be deemed excess insurance over and above the applicable limits of such other insurance."

[12] Counsel for Transport ingenuously argue that because the Hardware policy qualifies other insurance by the words valid and collectible and the Transport policy does not use those words, that the Transport policy is excess insurance over the Hardware policy and that therefore the Hardware policy must be exhausted before resort may be had to the $10,000 of coverage provided for by Transport's policy.

This argument is not sound, for as stated by the trial court in its memorandum of decision, "Regardless of differences in phraseology, each says the same thing, and this is what it says: 'If for the same loss that brings this policy into play, the insured is covered, partially or wholly, by other insurance, the benefits of that other insurance must be exhausted before recourse may be had under this policy.'" So construed, neither policy would attach to the risk and the insured would be deprived of coverage. Under this circumstance the court must prorate the loss between the two policies up to their respective limits of liability, Air Transport Mfg. Co. v. Employers' Liability Assurance Corp., 91 Cal. App.2d 129, 204 P.2d 647; Oregon Auto. Ins. Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guar. Co., 9 Cir., 1952, 195 F.2d 958.

[13] If the loss on the Smith claim is prorated between Hardware and Transport's policy No. 12–101, the result is that the insurance provided by Transport's policy will not have been fully utilized until the insurance provided by Hardware's policy is likewise fully utilized. That is to say, that as Transport's policy No. 12–101 is in the sum of $10,000 and Hardware's is in the sum of $100,000, for each dollar that Transport applies to the loss Hardware must apply ten; so that each policy will be exhausted at the same time and $110,000 of the Smith loss paid.

The trial court found, and its decree declares, that Security's policy did not attach to the risk until the insurance provided by Transport's $10,000 policy was exhausted; and as we have shown this was not exhausted until Hardware's policy was likewise exhausted. Further than this, by the express terms of the second paragraph of its insuring agreements and paragraph G of its conditions, Security's policy did not attach to the risk until not only the indemnity provided by Transport's policy No. 12–101 had been exhausted but until any insurance purchased by the insured for a greater amount than $10,000 had been exhausted. Oil Base was, as we have heretofore shown, a named insured in the Security policy, and the Hardware policy constituted insurance purchased by it in addition to the insurance provided to it by Transport's policy No. 12–101.

[13] Inasmuch as we have found Scherer to be an insured under all the policies except that of Security, no question remains as to which company would be first liable as the insurer of the ultimate tortfeasor.

Transport's policy No. 12–102 did not attach to the risk until the insurance provided by its policy No. 12–101 and Security's policy had been fully utilized. By its terms and by the findings and decree of the trial court, this policy did not attach to the risk until Transport's $10,000 policy and Security's $40,000 policy were exhausted; and as we have heretofore shown, neither of those policies was exhausted until the indemnity provided by the Hardware policy had been applied to the loss.

The indemnity furnished by the policies should therefore be applied to the Smith loss as follows:

From Transport's policy No. 12–101	$ 10,000.00
From Hardware's policy	100,000.00
From Security's policy	40,000.00
From Transport's policy No. 12–102	210,000.00
total	$360,000.00

This application exhausts Transport's policy No. 12–101 and Security's policy. It leaves available under Transport's policy No. 12–102, for application to the payment of the Lowe claim, $740,000; and this insurance is no longer excess insurance because the loss that it was made excess to has been incurred and paid and the policies which it was made excess to have been exhausted. It must therefore prorate the Lowe loss with the $100,000 of indemnity provided for by the Hardware policy. There is therefore a total of $840,000 of insurance available as to the Lowe claim, and the loss on that claim should therefore be prorated 10/84ths to Hardware and 74/84ths to Transport.

Hardware, and Transport under its policy No. 12–101, are both obligated to pay the expense incurred by Oil Base and by Scherer in the defense of the action brought by Smith; this expense is to be prorated in the same ratio as we have held the first $110,000 of the Smith claim should be prorated between them.

Hardware, and Transport under its policy No. 12–102, are obligated to pay the expense incurred by Oil Base and by Scherer in the defense of the action brought by Lowe, these expenses to be prorated in the same ratio as we have held the Lowe claim should be prorated by them.

The judgments are reversed with directions to the trial court to in each case amend its conclusions of law and enter a judgment declaring the relative and respective rights and obligations of the parties to that action in accordance with the views expressed in this opinion. It shall also, in action No. 613–386, award judgment to Oil Base as against Hardware in the sum of $100,000, together with interest at 7 per cent, on account of the moneys paid by Oil Base in settlement of the Smith claim; and in the further sum of $1,086.22, together with interest at 7 per cent, on account of attorney's fees and costs incurred by Oil Base in the defense of the actions brought against it by Smith and Lowe, being respectively actions No. 610–750 and No. 620–224 in the Superior Court, State of California, in and for the County of Los Angeles; and it shall also award judgment in favor of Oil Base and against Transport in the sum of $108.63 on account of the attorney's fees and costs incurred by Oil Base in the aforesaid action.

Oil Base, Transport, Mercury, and Scherer shall recover their costs on appeal against Hardware.

Peter E. BAUMERT, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Charles L. GOVAKER and Sears, Roebuck and Company, a corporation, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 21441.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Aug. 6, 1956.

Action for injuries sustained by motorcyclist when he collided with oncoming vehicle which negotiated left turn in front of motorcyclist at intersection. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Leon T. David, J., rendered a judgment of nonsuit, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that evidence raised questions for jury with regard to reasonableness of motorcyclist's speed and his conduct in attempting to avoid collision.

Reversed.

1. Trial ⟹139(1)

A judgment of nonsuit is justified only in case of judgment for plaintiff would be unsupportable in law.

2. Automobiles ⟹168(9)

Vehicle Code subsection prescribing speed of 15 miles per hour for vehicle traversing intersection at which view is obstructed expressly excepts vehicles proceeding on through highway, and where motorcycle was traveling on avenue protected by stop signs at intersection, 15 mile per hour speed limit was inapplicable. West's Ann. Vehicle Code, §§ 82.5, 510, 511(a) (3).

3. Automobiles ⟹171(4, 13)

It was duty of motorist turning left at intersection to yield right-of-way to oncoming vehicle if such vehicle was so close to intersection as to constitute immediate hazard, and driver of oncoming vehicle would have right to expect turning motorist to obey law in that particular, unless he knew, or in exercise of ordinary care should have known, that turning motorist did not intend to yield right-of-way. West's Ann. Vehicle Code, §§ 511 (c), 551 (a).

4. Automobiles ⟹245(78)

In action for injuries sustained by motorcyclist when he collided with oncoming vehicle which negotiated left turn in front of motorcyclist at intersection, evidence raised questions for jury with regard to reasonableness of motorcyclist's speed and his conduct in attempting to avoid collision. Stephen J. Grogan and Henry N. Cowan, Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment of nonsuit in a personal injury action arising out of a collision between his motorcycle and a car driven by defendant Govaker. It was stipulated at the trial that Govaker was an employee of defendant Sears Roebuck and Company and was acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the accident. The case was tried to a jury.

The evidence as interpreted most favorably to plaintiff, Overton v. Vita-Food Corp., 94 Cal.App.2d 367, 210 P.2d 757, is as follows: The accident occurred at about 11 a. m. on August 12, 1953 at the intersection of Anza Avenue and West 104th Street. Anza Avenue is a main thoroughfare for north-south traffic and is protected by boulevard stop signs. At the time in question there was no posted speed limit for traffic northbound on Anza Avenue through the 104th Street intersection, though just north of 104th Street there was a sign indicating that the speed limit from that point north was 25 miles per hour. There was no center line on Anza Avenue, which was 60 feet wide with a 4 foot raised concrete barrier dividing the northbound and southbound lanes.

Plaintiff was proceeding north on Anza at about 35 or 40 miles per hour. He was riding his motorcycle in the most easterly lane. When he was 100 or 200 feet south of the 104th Street intersection a passenger car was proceeding north in the lane to his left and was about 25 or 30 feet ahead of him. As plaintiff approached the intersection, the passenger car slowed down to make a left turn onto 104th Street. Defendant was driving south on Anza, with the intention of making a left turn onto 104th Street.

Defendant's version of the accident was testified to by the investigating officer, who had a conversation with him shortly after the collision. Defendant said that he stopped at the intersection and at that time saw the northbound passenger car which had entered the intersection preparatory to turning left on 104th Street. The car obscured defendant's vision of Anza Avenue to the south, but defendant proceeded to make his left turn into the intersection. As he was crossing the northbound lanes of traffic on Anza, he saw plaintiff's motorcycle coming north at what appeared to be a pretty rapid speed. He tried to accelerate so as to clear the intersection. He saw the motorcycle bearing down on him and it appeared to swerve to the right. Defendant said he thought that if the motorcycle could have swerved to the left, the collision could have been averted. On cross-examination, the officer testified that defendant told him that he had made two stops, once when he entered the intersection and once in the intersection, and that he started to proceed east after seeing the northbound car making its left turn onto 104th Street.

Plaintiff testified that he was travelling in the northbound lane closest to the eastern edge of Anza Avenue, that he first saw defendant's car as it emerged from behind the northbound passenger car, which obscured his vision of the intersection. It was then in the center of the two northbound traffic lanes. Defendant moved slowly across the intersection and then abruptly stopped, in plaintiff's path, in such a position as to block the lane in which plaintiff was traveling. At this time plaintiff was about 30 to 35 feet south of defendant's car. Plaintiff applied his brakes and swerved to the left so as to clear the rear end of defendant's car, but he was unable to avoid a collision. The right side of his motorcycle struck the right rear fender of defendant's car. Plaintiff was thrown off the motorcycle and landed about 25 feet from the point of impact, sustaining severe injuries.

A motion for nonsuit was granted at the close of plaintiff's case on the ground that the evidence disclosed contributory negligence as a matter of law. We are of the view that the case should not have been taken from the jury.

[1] It is too well settled to require citation of authority that a judgment of nonsuit is justified only in case a judgment for the plaintiff would be unsupportable in law.

Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiff, the testimony of plaintiff and the investigating officer would have supported a finding that defendant was negligent in executing his left turn onto 104th Street in the face of possible oncoming traffic while his vision was obscured by the other car, and in stopping abruptly in plaintiff's path. Without conceding this, defendant contends that any asserted negligence on his part is immaterial since plaintiff's own testimony established beyond peradventure that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. In this connection, defendant argues that plaintiff was negligent as a matter of law in approaching the intersection at a speed of 35 or 40 miles per hour at a time when his vision of southbound traffic was obscured by the northbound car making a left turn onto 104th Street. The argument is unsound.

[2] Section 510 of the Vehicle Code reads as follows: "Basic Speed Law. No person shall drive a vehicle upon a highway at a speed greater than is reasonable or prudent having due regard for the traffic on, and the surface and width of, the highway, and in no event at a speed which endangers the safety of persons or property." Subject to the rule of reasonableness contained in Vehicle Code section 510, section 511 sets forth certain prima facie speed limits applicable under various conditions. Defendant asserts that the prima facie speed limit governing plaintiff's conduct at the intersection is to be found in Vehicle Code section 511, subdivision (a) (3).[1] But that subsection expressly excepts automobiles proceeding on a through highway. Vehicle Code section 82.5 defines a through highway as "a highway or portion thereof at the entrance to which vehicular traffic from intersecting highways is required by law to stop before entering or crossing the same, and when stop signs are erected as provided in this code." As Anza Avenue was protected by stop signs at the 104th Street intersection, the 15 mile per hour speed limit is inapplicable.

[3] Plaintiff argues, on the other hand, that since there were no signs limiting speed northward on Anza until beyond the intersection, the prima facie speed limit was 55 miles per hour. Vehicle Code, § 511, subd. (c). As to speed the question was, however, whether plaintiff's speed was reasonable under the circumstances. That was a question of fact. Whether plaintiff should have slowed down on approaching the intersection and whether in the exercise of ordinary care he could have swerved so as to avoid a collision were questions related to his alleged negligence. Under section 551 (a) of the Vehicle Code it was defendant's duty to yield the right-of-way if plaintiff was so close to the intersection as to constitute an immediate hazard. Plaintiff, if free from negligence, would have had the right to expect defendant to obey the law in this particular, unless he knew or in the exercise of ordinary care would have known that defendant was not intending to yield the right-of-way. Greenwood v. Summers, 64 Cal.App.2d 516, 521, 149 P.2d 35.

[4] The questions as to the reasonableness of plaintiff's speed and of his conduct in attempting to avoid a collision were, in view of the evidence, within the province of the jury. Also the questions whether plaintiff proceeded in the expectation that a southbound driver intending to make a left turn would yield the right-of-way to him and whether he was justified in relying thereon were also pertinent to the defense of contributory negligence. These questions as well as the question of the proximate cause or causes of the collision could reasonably have been answered in plaintiff's favor and they should have been submitted to the jury. Plaintiff made out a sufficient prima facie case and we think the court was not warranted in deciding as a matter of law that defendant was free from negligence or that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.

The judgment is reversed.

Hazel M. TRENTHAM, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 5158.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

July 11, 1956.

Rehearing Denied July 31, 1956.

Vendor brought action against purchaser and his wife to recover possession of realty. The Superior Court of Imperial County, Elmer W. Heald, J., entered judgment adverse to the vendor, and the vendor appealed. The District Court of Appeal,

---

[1] "(a) 15 miles per hour: * * *

"(3) When traversing any intersection of highways if during the last 100 feet of his approach to such intersection the driver does not have a clear and unobstructed view of such intersection and of any traffic upon all of the highways entering such intersection for a distance of 100 feet along all such highways, except on a through highway or at a traffic-controlled intersection."

Griffin, J., held that where contract for sale of realty provided that at any time during continuance of default or violation by purchaser, vendor, at his option, could terminate the contract, and that the vendor should then be entitled to possession of the realty and that purchaser should have no further rights or equities in the realty, and, on default by the purchaser, vendor did not exercise his option to terminate the contract, no cause of action to recover possession or declare a forfeiture accrued, and vendor's action to recover possession of the realty was not barred by limitations.

Judgment reversed.

1. Limitation of Actions 🔑15

Provision in contract for sale of realty that at any time during continuance of default or violation by purchaser, vendor, at his option, might terminate the contract and be entitled to possession of the realty and that the purchaser should have no further rights or equities in the realty, was a waiver by the purchaser of the statute of limitations insofar as vendor's right to declare a default and recover possession of the realty was concerned. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 318, 337, 343.

2. Vendor and Purchaser 🔑143, 187

The general rule pertaining to contracts is that a condition that title shall be made, or the price shall be paid, on or before a day named, may be waived by party entitled to performance at the day, or, if he goes on treating the agreement as still binding after default has been made, he cannot afterwards turn around and set up the delay or default as creating a forfeiture and, therefore, a defense.

3. Vendor and Purchaser 🔑187

After forfeiture of a contract for default has been waived, time becomes essential thereafter only where the vendor makes it so by proper notice and demand.

4. Limitation of Actions 🔑44(1)

Where contract for sale of realty provided that at any time during continuance of default or violation by purchaser, vendor, at his option, could terminate the contract, and that the vendor should then be entitled to possession of the realty and that purchaser should have no further rights or equities in the realty, and, on default by the purchaser, vendor did not exercise his option to terminate the contract, no cause of action to recover possession or declare a forfeiture accrued, and vendor's action to recover possession of the realty was not barred by limitations. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc., §§ 318, 337, 343.

5. Husband and Wife 🔑270(3)

Waiver by husband of statute of limitations in contract for purchase of realty signed by husband as purchaser, constituted a waiver by wife of the statute of limitations, insofar as her rights to the realty were concerned. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., §§ 318, 337, 343; West's Ann.Civ. Code, §§ 172, 172a.

6. Equity 🔑67

The defense of "laches" is a creature of equity and is a species of equitable estoppel.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Laches".

7. Equity 🔑84

The defense of laches should not be applied where the result will be inequitable and unjust without making adequate equitable provision for its application.

8. Ejectment 🔑39

Insofar as action possessed the essential characteristics of the old legal action of ejectment, it was an action at law and not in equity, and defense of laches would not ordinarily be available, but, insofar as equitable relief was sought, the defense of laches was available.

9. Vendor and Purchaser 🔑299(1)

Where vendor was lulled into a false sense of security that if a forfeiture of contract for sale of realty was not declared, purchaser would eventually cure his default and obtain title by virtue of deed mentioned in contract, but instead the purchaser endeavored to circumvent provisions of the contract and secured title by means of tax sales brought about by his own failure to pay taxes, which he solemnly agreed by the contract to pay, purchaser and his wife could not rely on defense of laches in action by vendor to recover possession of the realty, unless provision was made, as a condition precedent, that payments and interest be paid to the vendor as provided in the contract.

10. Vendor and Purchaser ⚷190

A purchaser in possession of realty under an executory contract for its purchase cannot purchase the realty at a tax sale and set up the title so acquired against his vendor, particularly where he has stipulated to pay the taxes.

11. Vendor and Purchaser ⚷190

A purchase under an executory contract for the purchase of realty may purchase the realty at a tax sale, if the vendor has accepted a surrender of the contract, or if the contract has terminated prior to the tax sale.

12. Taxation ⚷674

Neither husband nor wife can obtain a tax title in opposition to the other when they are in joint possession of realty.

13. Taxation ⚷674

Husband, while in joint occupancy of realty with his wife, cannot acquire a tax title valid as against her.

14. Taxation ⚷674

Where some member of the family or other confederate of the owner of realty acquires a tax deed thereto from the State or other taxing agency, equity will examine the transaction to see whether it was a fraudulent conveyance, and, if it is ascertained to be such, the purchaser will be held a trustee, or the entire transaction will be held a redemption by the original owner. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 2224.

15. Vendor and Purchaser ⚷190

Where contract for the purchase of realty had not been terminated when purchaser purchased the realty at tax sale, the purchaser did not, as against the vendor, acquire title to the realty by the tax sale, and no title, greater than possessed by the purchaser, passed to wife by virtue of joint tenancy deed, at most, wife held realty subject to trust. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 2224.

16. Limitation of Actions ⚷103(4)

Where purchaser failed to pay taxes on realty as required by contract for purchase of realty, and purchaser then purchased the realty at tax sales without knowledge of vendor, and vendor brought suit against purchaser and wife to enforce trust as to the realty a few months after discovery of the wrongful taking of legal title by the purchaser, the action was not barred by limitations. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 338, subd. 4, 343.

17. Adverse Possession ⚷79(1)

Where neither vendor nor purchaser repudiated contract for sale of realty, and purchaser failed to pay taxes as required by contract, and purchaser, without knowledge of vendor, purchased the realty at tax sales, purchaser and his wife, did not acquire title by adverse possession, since there was no possession hostile to vendor.

Whitelaw & Whitelaw, El Centro, for appellant.

Horton & Knox, El Centro, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Defendant and respondent and her late husband, Max Trentham, were named as defendants in a complaint filed by plaintiff and appellant (who is now 82 years of age) wherein plaintiff sought to recover for alleged payments due and money advanced to defendants in payment of certain acreage in Imperial county, and taxes due. A bar by the statute of limitations precluded recovery on this theory. In a third amended complaint plaintiff alleged that on February 1, 1918, he was the owner of 90 acres of land and, on that date, sold it on contract to defendants for $6,500, payable in installments of $1,000 yearly, plus interest at seven per cent. The purchaser agreed to pay all taxes and assessments before delinquency. This contract was not recorded until January 25, 1952. (Mrs. Trentham did not sign the contract and claimed she knew nothing about its terms.) It then provided that if vendee failed to pay any installments, interest or taxes before delinquent, then, during the continuation of such default, vendor, at his option, might terminate the contract. Defendants went into possession at that time and became in default after two installments had been paid. No interest was paid after August 1, 1923, and taxes levied on the property were not thereafter paid by defendant. It appears that plaintiff advanced defendant, Mr. Trentham several hundred dollars to pay delinquent taxes up to that time. The evidence shows that the property was infested with "Camelthorn weed" and authorities prohibited the use of a great portion of the land for crops and grazing for fear of spread of the pest. Defendants were unable to farm it to any extent but did live upon it and used it to raise hogs. The property greatly deteriorated in value as the infectious weed increased. The authorities entered upon the land and for over ten years fought the existence of the weed. Apparently, plaintiff, who then resided elsewhere, knew of the prevailing conditions but no action was taken by him, due to his friendship to Mr. Trentham, to dispossess defendants or to reclaim his property from them or to pay the delinquent taxes.

Plaintiff and Mr. Trentham were formerly employed by the Imperial Irrigation District and had great confidence in each other. Plaintiff claims he relied on defendant's honesty in paying his obligations when able to do so and, accordingly, no action was taken by him. The district took title to the property in 1931 and in 1936 for delinquent taxes, and the Trenthams remained in possession of it. This property was sold by the district in May, 1940, and Mr. Trentham was the purchaser at such sale. There was a similar sale by the state and the tax title was secured by him on June 15, 1943. On July 2, 1943, he created a joint tenancy to this property with his wife. Mr. Trentham died before trial of the action. No claim was filed in his estate. The administrator was not substituted as a party defendant. Plaintiff alleged he had no knowledge of the tax deeds and subsequent deeds mentioned until January, 1952.

Plaintiff now claims, on the filing of the action on August 21, 1952, he terminated the contract of purchase. He seeks recovery of the property and to have a declaration that defendant, Mrs. Trentham, holds the property in trust for plaintiff's benefit. He also prays for possession, and to have title quieted in him. In a second claimed cause of action he alleges, by reason of the conduct of the parties, defendants waived the right to enforce the statute of limitations against him, if applicable, alleges the death of Mr. Trentham, and that Mrs. Trentham alone claims title by reason of the joint tenancy deed.

Defendant Hazel M. Trentham (hereinafter referred to as defendant), in answer to the third amended complaint, denies generally the allegations contained therein and alleges that the action is barred by the statute of limitations; that defendants were in adverse possession of the property and paid taxes thereon for more than five years, and claims title by prescription; that plaintiff's claim to the property is unjust because the property was partially infested with the weed at the time of the signing of the contract, was quarantined and could not be farmed; that it was worthless and the taxes and assessments exceeded its value; that the infestation has been practically eradicated; that the land is now level and has been almost freed of alkali by extensive drainage and other improvements and is now improved with feeding pens and outbuildings, all totaling in value in excess of $60,000; that to forfeit the property under plaintiff's claim would be inequitable and unfair and amount to unjust enrichment after standing by and permitting these improvements without protest or previous claims.

The court found generally in favor of defendant and particularly found that plaintiff had no actual knowledge, as such, of the tax deeds and subsequent deeds until January, 1952, but did know, in 1943, that the taxes on the property were delinquent and knew the legal consequences; that it was not true that defendant did know of the contract and defaults which had occurred thereunder; that there was no waiver of the statute of limitations in the contract as to foreclosing the purchaser's interest in event of default; that defendant also acquired title by adverse possession; that in 1943 the fair market value of the property did not exceed $4,500 and at the time of the trial it had been improved to a value in excess of $50,000; that since 1943 plaintiff had knowledge of facts which should and would place a reasonable man on inquiry as to whether his right in the property had been adversely affected; that it would be unfair and unjust enrichment to now forfeit the property to plaintiff; that plaintiff has been guilty of laches in failing to assert his claim; that his claims are barred by the statute of limitations, Sections 318, 337 and 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that defendant is not estopped from setting up the defenses urged. Judgment was accordingly entered against the plaintiff.

The first question to determine is whether the action was barred by the statute of limitations as indicated. The contract of purchase recites in part that vendee agrees to buy from vendor the property involved for $6,500, as indicated, and vendee, during the life of the contract, is entitled to possession, subject to the conditions of it; that if vendee pays said purchase price and taxes within the terms and manner aforesaid, vendor will execute and deliver a deed, but if vendee fails, "then at any time thereafter during the continuance of such default or violation, the vendor, at his option, may terminate this contract, time being the essence of this contract, and thereupon the vendor shall be entitled to the possession of said property and the vendee shall have no further rights or equities in the premises or under this contract, or to the moneys theretofore paid to the vendor."

[1] Plaintiff concedes that an action to recover the advance tax loans and balance due under the contract would be barred by said statute but claims that the provision above quoted was tantamount to and operated as an agreement by the parties to waive the application of the statute of limitations in so far as plaintiff's right to declare a default and recover possession of the property is concerned. He relies upon such authority as Hasman v. Canman, 136 Cal.App. 91, 28 P.2d 372 and Atlas Finance Corp. v. Kenny, 68 Cal.App.2d 504, 157 P.2d 401 to the effect that such a statute may be waived for all time. We conclude that under the provisions of the contract and the evidence no statute of limitation applied. The Trenthams were in possession all of these years by virtue of this agreement. At least the plaintiff believed so. As late as March 13, 1943, defendant's then attorney, Mr. Williams, wrote plaintiff at Reno, Nevada, that he tried to learn of plaintiff's whereabouts for some time; that the Trenthams send best wishes; that the state passed a law which allowed it to collect rent from occupants of tax delinquent land and were endeavoring to collect rent from them and this "necessitates Mack getting title to his land in some manner." He asked plaintiff to send a quitclaim deed to him and enclosed a $1 check for notary fee. Plaintiff answered and returned the check with the statement that he "positively and absolutely will not sign a quitclaim deed without material consideration"; and that Trentham entered into a valid contract for the purchase of this property; that "he has been in possession of same probably since 1918 and still owes $2,800 (sic) ($5,800) on the purchase price, plus a $600.00 loan and taxes which I paid. Therefore, I feel that I should have a little consideration for past favors and not insisting that he fulfill his contract or move. I would be receptive to taking the property back, cleaning up back obligations, and starting over." It therefore affirmatively appears that plaintiff did not abandon the contract. Plaintiff did not exercise his option to terminate the contract and accordingly, no cause of action to recover possession or declare a forfeiture accrued.

Vendor was not entitled to possession until he had exercised this option. It was not until plaintiff filed his complaint on August 21, 1952, that he declared therein that he terminated the contract. No demand was made upon the vendee for the payments and no tender of a deed was made by plaintiff. Plaintiff was not in default and the court so found. It also found that the default of defendant was "continuous and unrelieved" and "not cured".

[2, 3] It is the general rule pertaining to contracts that a condition that the title shall be made, or the price shall be paid, on or before a day named, may be waived by the party entitled to performance at the day, or if he goes on treating the agreement as still binding after default has been made, he cannot afterwards turn around and set up the delay or default as creating a forfeiture and, therefore, a defense. (Pomeroy on Contracts, Sec. 337.) After forfeiture for default has been waived, time becomes essential thereafter only where the vendor makes it so by proper notice and demand. The decisions proceed upon the theory that the vendor cannot use his own indulgence as a trap in which to catch the purchaser. 39 Cyc., p. 1384; Lifton v. Harshman, 80 Cal.App.2d 422, 182 P.2d 222; Thein v. Sticha, 93 Cal.App.2d 295, 209 P.2d 13; Boone v. Templeman, 158 Cal. 290, 110 P. 947; Uren v. Troup, 110 Cal.App.2d 419, 242 P.2d 895.

[4, 5] Plaintiff came back to the valley in 1935, had dinner with the Trenthams, and no mention was made that defendants did not intend to perform the contract according to its terms. It should be here noted that defendant thereafter secured a tax deed from the irrigation district and the state, but no mention was made to plaintiff of these facts. It appears that it was not until January, 1952, when plaintiff actually discovered this fact and this action was soon commenced. We must then conclude, notwithstanding the findings of the court to the contrary, that the action was not barred by the statute of limitations and that the contract was not abandoned. Plaintiff was under no legal obligation to exercise his right to a forfeiture and recover possession under the contract. Since there was a waiver of the statute of limitations in the contract signed by the husband, it would also constitute a waiver by the wife in so far as her rights to the property under it would be concerned. Civ. Code, §§ 172, 172a; Davidson v. Click, 31 N.M. 543, 249 P. 100, 47 A.L.R. 1016; Catlin v. Mills, 140 Wash. 1, 247 P. 1013, 47 A.L.R. 545; 11 Am.Jur., Community Property, Sec. 64.

[6–9] The defense of laches is a creature of equity and is a species of equitable estoppel. It should not be applied where the result would be inequitable and unjust without making adequate equitable provision in its application. Brownrigg v. DeFrees, 196 Cal. 534, 238 P. 714; Neet v. Holmes, 25 Cal.2d 447, 154 P.2d 854; Bigelow on Estoppel, 484. It was held in Trail v. Firth, 186 Cal. 68, 198 P. 1033, that laches is a defense which may be interposed to a suit in equity, whereby the plaintiff will be refused equitable relief because of his delay in bringing his suit, although the suit is commenced within the statutory period of the limitation. Here, it affirmatively appears that plaintiff was lulled into a false sense of security that if a forfeiture was not declared, Trentham would eventually cure the default and obtain title by virtue of the deed mentioned in the contract. Instead, Trentham endeavored to circumvent the provisions of the contract and secure title by means of a tax sale brought about by his own failure to pay the taxes which he solemnly agreed to pay. In so far as the action possesses the essential characteristics of the old legal action of ejectment, it is an action at law and not in equity and the defense of laches would not ordinarily be available. However, in so far as equitable relief is sought, this defense is available. Southern Pacific Land Company v. Dickerson, 188 Cal. 113, 204 P. 576; Ohanian v. Kazarian, 123 Cal.App. 196, 11 P.2d 42; Doherty v. Courtney, 150 Cal. 606, 89 P. 434. The defense of laches, therefore, should not be applied in this case unless, in furtherance of equitable relief, provision is made as a condition precedent that the Trenthams have a reasonable opportunity to fulfill their contract and make the payments required, together with interest thereon, as provided in the agreement. In Mayer v. West, 96 Cal.App. 31, 36, 273 P. 849, it is held that a vendee who appeals to a court of equity to defend him against the legal title to land, of which he is in possession, must do equity by paying or offering to pay the price which he agreed to pay. It cites Woodard v. Hennegan, 128 Cal. 293, 60 P. 769, 771, where it is said:

> "'The defendant having by his answer repudiated the contract, and having refused to pay the balance due, the plaintiff can maintain the present action to recover possession. . . . The defendant could have set up in his answer the agreement to convey, his willingness to perform and offer to perform on his part by paying the balance found to be due, and the court, by its decree, could have, while giving the plaintiff the amount due, also fully protected the rights and equities of defendant.'" See also Trail v. Firth, supra, 186 Cal. 68, 198 P. 1033.

[10–16] It is a fundamental rule that a vendee in possession of land under an executory contract for its purchase by the land at a tax sale cannot set up the title so acquired against his vendor, particularly where he has stipulated to pay the taxes. 85 C.J.S., Taxation, § 809g. A vendee may purchase the land at a tax sale where the vendor has accepted a surrender of a formal contract to sell or where the contract has terminated prior to the tax sale. Neither husband nor wife can obtain a tax title in opposition to the other when they are in joint possession. The husband, while in joint occupancy with his wife, cannot acquire a tax title valid as against her. Where some member of the family or other confederate of the owner of land acquires a tax deed thereto from the state or other taxing agency, equity will examine the transaction to see whether it was a fraudulent conveyance, and, if it is ascertained to be such, the grantee will be held a trustee, or the entire transaction will be held a redemption by the original owner. 85 C.J.S., Taxation, § 809d, et seq. See also Gipson v. Spears, 134 Cal.App.2d 370, 376, 285 P.2d 968, citing from Garvey v. Byram, 18 Cal. 2d 279, 115 P.2d 501, 136 A.L.R. 1137; and quoting from Christy v. Fisher, 58 Cal. 256, 258, it is said:

> "'It is well settled that one who is under a moral or legal obligation to pay the taxes is not in a position to become a purchaser at a sale made for such taxes. If such person permits the property to be sold for taxes, and buys it in, either in person or indirectly through the agency of another, he does not thereby acquire any right or title to the property, but his purchase is deemed one mode of paying the taxes.'" See also Garvey v. Lashells, 151 Cal. 526, 91 P. 498; 25 Cal.Jur. 689, 690.

Under this theory Mr. Trentham did not, as against plaintiff, acquire title to the property by the tax sales and, accordingly, no title, greater than that possessed by him, passed to the defendant wife by virtue of the joint tenancy deed; at most, she holds it subject to the trust. See 26 Amer.Jur., Husband and Wife, Sec. 127; Jarkieh v. Badagliacco, 75 Cal.App.2d 505, 170 P.2d 994 and Section 2224 Civil Code. The attempted enforcement of the trust was begun in August, 1952, a few months after actual discovery of the wrongful taking of legal title. Under these circumstances, the action was not barred under section 338, subdivision 4, or section 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Calkins v. Calkins, 63 Cal. App. 292, 218 P. 611; Hansen v. Bear Film Company, Inc., 28 Cal.2d 154, 168 P.2d 946; Runge v. Gilbough, 99 Tex. 539, 91 S.W. 566.

[17] The finding that defendant acquired title by adverse possession is not substantially sustainable from the record. In Kerns v. McKean, 65 Cal. 411, 4 P. 404, where the vendee enters into possession under his agreement of sale, there can be no hostile possession by him unless it was clearly manifested to his vendor by unequivocal acts. The element of the adverse possession is a prerequisite. Thomas v. England, 71 Cal. 456, 458, 12 P. 491. There was no apparent repudiation of the contract by the Trenthams or by plaintiff and possession would not become adverse until such repudiation was brought home to the parties. 2 Cal.Jur.2d, Adverse Possession, Sec. 25; Kerns v. Dean, 77 Cal. 555, 559, 19 P. 817; 1 A.L.R. 1329; Runge v. Gilbough, supra, 99 Tex. 539, 91 S.W. 566.

Under section 1213 of the Civil Code the recordation of a conveyance is constructive notice to subsequent purchasers and mortgagees only. Under the facts established, Mr. Trentham acquired no title by the tax deeds and accordingly, must have been in possession of the property under the contract of sale. Defendant, Mrs. Trentham, may not rightfully claim she acquired title by virtue of the tax deeds. Accordingly, she would not be protected under the statute of limitations provided in section 318 of the Code of Civil Procedure. McKelvey v. Rodriquez, 57 Cal.App.2d 214, 223, 134 P.2d 870.

A new trial should be had and, if necessary, the pleadings should be amended and any indispensable parties necessary to render a judgment in accordance with the equities indicated should be added.

The judgment is reversed.

July 11, 1956.

Rehearing Denied July 30, 1956.

Hearing Granted Sept. 6, 1956.

Action for malicious prosecution. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Beach Vasey, J., dismissed complaint after sustaining demurrer without leave to amend, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeals, Doran, J., held that defendants who allegedly conspired to make false charges which resulted in plaintiff's dismissal from school position and which were found to be untrue on plaintiff's appeal to Personnel Board could be held liable for malicious prosecution, irrespective of whether Board could be considered a judicial body or one exercising similar power.

Judgment reversed with instructions.

1. Pleading 🔑193(5)

Only issue involved in demurrer hearing is whether complaint, as it stands, unconnected with extraneous matters, states a cause of action.

2. Pleading 🔑214(1)

On demurrer, allegations of complaint must be regarded as true.

Defendants who allegedly conspired to make false charges which resulted in plaintiff's dismissal from school position and which were found to be untrue on plaintiff's appeal to Personnel Board could be held liable for malicious prosecution, irrespective of whether Board could be considered a judicial body or one exercising similar power. Desmond & Desmond, Walter Desmond, Jr., Long Beach, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Lee B. Stanton, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

The complaint herein, for malicious prosecution alleges, as stated in appellant's brief, "that seven named defendants were officers or employees of the State Department of Education or of Long Beach State College of said Department; that each of said defendants, for the purpose of getting plaintiff discharged from his position as professor at Long Beach State College, falsely, maliciously and without probable cause conspired to accuse him of gross immorality and unprofessional conduct in committing base, vile and depraved acts while employed as such professor; that defendants Vial, Pond and Egolf, in pursuance of said conspiracy and aided, advised and abetted by the other defendants, swore to affidavits falsely accusing plaintiff of committing such acts, and filed said affidavits with defendant Bryant, a dean of said college; that because of the alleged acts and the recommendation of defendant Peterson, the college president, plaintiff was dismissed by the State Director of Education, defendant Simpson; that after a hearing by the State Personnel Board it was unanimously found by said Board that the reasons for plaintiff's dismissal were not true, and he was restored to his position effective as of the date of his dismissal; that plaintiff suffered certain items of damage because of the aforesaid acts; and that defendants should be assessed exemplary damages because their actions were malicious".

Following the sustaining of demurrers to the complaint, a First Amended Complaint was filed, making certain minor changes, and adding a reference to the State Personnel Board as being an "agency with adjudicatory powers conferred by Article XXIV, Section 3 of the California Constitution", to which demurrers were sustained without leave to amend, and judgments of dismissal entered thereon.

It is appellant's contention that "This action for malicious prosecution is properly based upon proceedings before an administrative agency", and that the State Personnel Board "is an agency with judicial powers that performs judicial functions which can serve as the basis for a malicious prosecution suit". Appellant also urges that "The rule of immunity of public officials from civil liability does not relieve respondents of their liability"; that the acts in question were done outside the scope of the officials' authority.

The appellant's brief, as well as that of respondents, notes that there are three California decisions holding that a malicious prosecution action must be predicated upon a judicial proceeding and cannot be based upon an administrative proceeding. It is claimed, however, that these decisions have become outmoded because, as said in Melvin v. Pence, 76 U.S.App.D.C. 154, 130 F.2d 423, 426, 143 A.L.R. 149, 153, "Much of the jurisdiction formerly residing in the courts has been transferred to administrative tribunals", and that "The same harmful consequences may flow from the groundless and malicious institution of proceedings in them as does from judicial proceedings similarly begun". The Restatement of the Law of Torts, Volume 3, Section 680, containing similar statements, is likewise cited.

In Cosulich v. Stempel, 1927, 81 Cal.App. 278, 253 P. 344, it was held that a malicious prosecution action will not lie against one who maliciously, falsely and without probable cause, files with the Real Estate Commissioner an information under oath accusing an applicant for a broker's license of dishonesty and misconduct.

The Cosulich case was followed and cited with approval in Hayashida v. Kakimoto, 1933, 132 Cal.App. 743, 23 P.2d 311, where a complaint for malicious prosecution based upon defendants' alleged false statements, was held defective in failing to show that United States immigration authorities in detaining plaintiff as an alien, were acting in a judicial capacity or performing anything more than an administrative function.

Likewise, in Lorber v. Storrow, 1937, 22 Cal.App.2d 25, 70 P.2d 513, 514, citing the Hayashida opinion, it was held that the state real estate commissioner, in reference to the revocation of licenses, is not exercising quasi-judicial powers, and hence that such proceedings "lack a necessary element upon which to base these actions for malicious prosecution".

As said in appellant's brief, "If the law were static the rule of these cases could just as validly be supported today," but it is also true, as appellant states, that "Since 1937 California has kept pace with the federal and other state governments in creating an administrative procedure system when none existed before". It is this development, appellant argues, "that has outmoded these three California decisions".

That administrative agencies are now handling many of the former functions of the courts cannot be denied. And from a layman's viewpoint, at least, these agencies seem nothing less than judicial in nature, whatever they may be called. In many instances, as in the present case, the individual has no option and the controversy is required to be submitted to the commission or other agency. Yet, according to the respondents' contention, and the judgment appealed from, this litigant who is required to go to such agencies, has no action for malicious prosecution.

The appellant professor, who had been summarily discharged from a college position, had no recourse under the Education Code, Section 20393, other than to ask for a hearing before the State Personnel Board. At this hearing the serious charges against appellant were found to be untrue. "All this was accomplished", as stated in appellant's brief, "under a system prescribed by statute which allows no recourse to courts until after the administrative remedies have been exhausted, and then only by the party against whom the decision of the State Personnel Board has been rendered. Appellant here was successful in getting a unanimous decision from that Board in his favor; and of course, took no steps to have the matter reviewed by a court".

Citing Boren v. State Personnel Board, 1951, 37 Cal.2d 634, 639, 234 P.2d 981, the respondent avers that "The State Personnel Board does not exercise judicial power even though it is a constitutional body; but exercises only quasi-judicial powers". This, however, seems no more than a play on words. Whatever the terminology, the fact remains that these so-called administrative agencies do render decisions of the utmost importance, on issues which were formerly determined by the courts. And, in the instant case, the complaint, as amended, expressly alleges that the Board is an "agency with adjudicatory powers conferred by Article XXIV, Section 3 of the California Constitution".

[1, 2] As said by this court in the recent case of Griffith v. Department of Public Works, 141 Cal.App.2d 376, 296 P.2d 838, 842, "the only issue involved in a demurrer hearing * * * (is) whether the complaint, as it stands, unconnected with extraneous matters, states a cause of action". The rule is well established that the allegations of the complaint must be regarded as true; whether plaintiff will be able to satisfactorily establish the allegations is immaterial. The question is one of law only, and if the plaintiff has on any theory stated a cause of action, a trial on the factual issues is warranted.

[3] The present complaint, like that in the Griffith case just cited, charges a conspiracy on the part of various officials; it sets out the various elements of malicious prosecution and alleges that as a result of such conduct plaintiff has been wrongfully deprived of a college professorship and damaged in reputation. As hereinbefore indicated, if the only objection to the complaint is that as a matter of law the State Personnel Board should not be considered a judicial body or one exercising similar powers, such objection, under the modern development of administrative procedure, cannot be deemed adequate ground for sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend.

The view just indicated is consistent with and follows the more modern rule set forth in the Restatement of the Law of Torts, Volume 3, Section 680, which is quoted in the annotation starting on page 157 of 143 A.L.R. following the case of Melvin v. Pence, supra, hereinbefore cited. The language of the Restatement is as follows: "One who initiates or procures the initiation of civil proceedings against another before an administrative board which has power to take action adversely affecting the legally protected interests of the other is subject to liability for any special harm caused thereby, if (a) the proceedings are initiated (i) without probable cause to believe that the charge or claim on which the proceedings are based is well founded, and (ii) primarily for a purpose other than that of securing appropriate action by the board, and (b) the proceedings have terminated in favor of the person against whom they are brought".

The respondents' other principal objection to the complaint is based upon the rule of immunity of public officials from civil liability. In this connection, respondent's brief avers that "The pleadings on file herein show, and the Court took judicial notice of the fact that the 'School Respondents' acted in their official capacities"; that such being the case, malicious prosecution will not lie, regardless of malice. Respondents also rely upon the presumption that the defendants, "as public officers, are presumed to have regularly and properly performed their duties".

[4] There can be no argument concerning the rule of non-liability of public officers, but such rule is predicated upon the proposition that the officials have acted within the scope of authority. The converse of this rule is equally important; namely, that if such individuals step outside and beyond the proper scope of official functions and duties, their official position affords no protection against civil liability.

[5] In the instant case the question of the exact nature of the defendants' acts is one of the utmost importance, and one which should not be summarily disposed of on the hearing of a demurrer. It should also be borne in mind that not all of the defendants named occupy official positions, and it would seem that a conspiracy between officers and private individuals to secure the appellant's dismissal would hardly classify as one within the proper scope of official authority.

[6] Respondents' statement that the pleadings show that "school respondents" acted in their official capacities, is not borne out by the record; all that the complaint does is to mention the official position of certain defendants. The fact that one occupies an official position and the question whether certain acts are within the scope of authority, are matters of a widely different nature, and the latter question is an important part of plaintiff's cause of action. Nor could a court rightly take judicial notice of whether the defendants' conduct in a particular case, came within the scope of official duty; such a question might easily require detailed and definite proof.

Nor is it important whether the complaint contains the precise allegation that defendants' acts were outside "the scope of authority". At best, such would be in the nature of a statement of a conclusion. Regarding the allegations of the complaint as true, as must be done, and considering the complaint as a whole, it is clear that the defendants are charged with serious acts which may be actionable whether the defendants are officials or ordinary citizens. While it may well be that the complaint could be improved upon in certain particulars, its defects cannot be deemed fatal.

[7] A liberal rule of pleading has always prevailed in this state and plaintiff should be accorded the benefit of such liberal policy. Obviously, such rule will apply whether the defendants are officials or individuals. The sustaining of a de-murrer without leave to amend, and entry of judgment thereon, is a matter of the utmost importance, and unless a high degree of care be exercised by a trial court, such procedure may easily work irreparable damage by denying plaintiff the right to a plenary trial of the issues. Such appears to be the situation in the instant case. No substantial merit is found in any of respondents' contentions, and the complaint, as amended, cannot be deemed vulnerable on either general or special demurrer.

The judgment is reversed, with instructions to overrule the demurrers to the complaint, to allow respondents a reasonable time within which to file answers, and to proceed to a trial on the merits.

The SAN MATEO CLINIC, a copartnership, et al., Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 16867.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

July 25, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 24, 1956.

Hearing Denied Sept. 13, 1956.

Action by physician against co-partnership which operated clinic and in which he had formerly been a member to recover accounts receivable to which he was allegedly entitled. The Superior Court, County of San Mateo, Edmund Scott, J., entered a judgment adverse to the plaintiff and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, J., held that evidence established that plaintiff, at time he re-entered into practice in partnership upon returning from military service, consented to be bound by prior written provisions of articles of copartnership providing that any partner who withdrew from partnership and practiced in community, as plaintiff did, would waive right to accounts receivable, and that, under circumstances, provision was valid one for liquidated damages.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Partnership 🔑242(5)

In action by former partner against medical copartnership to secure share of accounts receivable which he alleged to be entitled to, evidence on issue of whether oral partnership agreement entered into at time plaintiff left military service and rejoined partnership incorporated provision of prior written partnership agreement whereunder any partner who left partnership to practice in designated area would waive rights to accounts receivable supported findings adverse to him. Whether contract is one for liquidated damages or for penalty is to be determined in accordance with facts and circumstances of each case, and amount fixed as liquidated damages must bear some reasonable relation to loss. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1671.

4. Damages 🔑80(1)

KAUFMAN, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant copartnership in an action by one of the partners to secure his share of the accounts receivable due to defendant clinic at the time of his withdrawal therefrom.

Appellant, Dr. Thomas Farthing, in his amended complaint, alleged an oral partnership agreement with his former partners and Dr. Myers, his replacement, entered into upon his return to the San Mateo Clinic on October 20, 1945, following service with the United States Army; that this agreement contained only two terms, namely, that appellant should begin immediately to receive an equal proportionate share of the current net income and that he should reach full parity with the other members of the partnership in so far as accounts receivable were concerned, in nine years after his admission and that such share in said accounts would increase proportionately during said nine-year period until he reached full parity therein.

Respondents denied that the agreement was limited to the above two terms, alleging that oral agreements with appellant were based on the written partnership agreement dated June 7, 1943, entitled "Articles of Copartnership, and conditioned on the oral agreement of appellant to abide by and accept the same terms and conditions applicable to the respondents who were then partners in the clinic. Respondents alleged that appellant's retirement and election to practice medicine in San Mateo on September 1, 1951, waived his interest in accounts receivable under Article 7(e) of the 1943 copartnership agreement.

Article 7(e) of the 1943 agreement, after setting forth how the final interest in accounts receivable should be determined, provided that such sum should be paid at the rate of $400 per month until paid, and that such retiring partner shall be entitled to said monthly payments "only so long as he shall not engage in the practice of the medical profession within any of the cities of San Mateo, Burlingame and/or Hillsborough, and that upon so engaging in such medical practice within any of the said cities, his right to any of the unpaid money from the partnership shall automatically cease and terminate."

The Second Defense analyzed Article 7(e) of the 1943 agreement as a reciprocal compensatory clause giving appellant upon retirement, the election to receive (1) an incalculable portion of the partnership's joint clientele in consideration of his waiver of his conditional right to his share of accounts receivable; or, (2) payment of his share in accounts receivable in consideration of his not taking an incalculable portion of the joint clientele.

The Third Defense sets forth Article 7(e) as a provision for liquidated damages in event the retiring partners compete, alleging that it was the understanding of the parties that the loss to the partnership in such event would be incalculable. No express covenant not to compete was alleged. Certain known losses were alleged, one being the loss of 96 obstetrical cases from respondents' clientele with an average charge of $175 per case.

The trial court found that appellant withdrew from the clinic on August 31, 1951, and opened his office in San Mateo on September 1, 1951, for the practice of his specialties; that appellant's agreement of partnership included provisions that he would receive a full parity share in net cash receipts, and that his interest in accounts receivable would reach full parity over a nine-year period, commencing October 20, 1945, in accordance with the progressive percentage formula set forth in Article 4 of the 1943 Articles of Copartnership. It was further found that the loss was considerable, but not calculable; that the agreement provided that the retiring partner would be paid his then interest in accounts receivable at the rate of $400 per month unless he exercised his optional right to practice medicine in the City of San Mateo; that the retiring partner had the choice to practice in San Mateo or elsewhere, but that if he chose to practice in San Mateo, he agreed to waive his interest in accounts receivable as partial compensation to his partners for their incalculable loss; that appellant so waived his interest in said accounts by his election. It is our view that the findings find support in the evidence before the trial court.

At the trial there was evidence that appellant joined the San Mateo Clinic on January 1, 1940. On January 1, 1941, he became partner under Articles of Copartnership executed with Doctor Holmes, and respondents, Doctors Mawdsley, Prindle, Ray Mohun, Key and Knorp. This agreement did not contain a waiver clause similar to Article 7(e) of the 1942 and 1943 agreements, but had been deleted from the agreements prior to its execution. Article 4 of this agreement and formula adopted by the partnership and set forth in the minutes of the February 10, 1941 meeting, established for appellant a progressive percentage formula to full parity in net cash income from 1940 to January 1, 1949, when he should reach full parity. No parity period for accounts receivable is provided for in this agreement or these minutes.

Only one partner retired from the clinic other than appellant, between 1940 and 1955, and he had received full payment for his share of accounts receivable before he returned to practice in San Mateo.

The clause relating to waiver of accounts receivable was again made part of the copartnership agreement in 1942 as Article 7(e) thereof. This agreement was signed by appellant.

The 1943 Copartnership Agreement signed on June 7, by the same respondents who had signed the 1942 agreement, with the addition of respondent Myers who had become associated with the clinic prior to appellant's departure for the service. This agreement was nearly identical to the 1942 agreement, differing only in that it provided for admitting Myers at full parity in net cash income and establishing a 9-year graduated scale for parity in accounts receivable at the end of that period.

When appellant left for the service he was paid his full share of accounts receivable as of June 1, 1943, under Article 7 of the 1942 agreement (which is the same as Article 7(h) of the 1943 agreement) prior to his return to the clinic on October 20, 1945.

Appellant took part in partnership meetings at which new partners were admitted. In a meeting on March 26, 1946, he voted against, but agreed to accept the nine-year parity period in accounts receivable, voted for by the majority, which appears to have been the usual period applied to a new partner. He took an active part in partnership affairs until he left the clinic. He was particularly concerned with admission of new partners and was Chairman of the Retirement Committee from November, 1947 until December 9, 1949.

[1] The first question to be determined is whether or not the so-called waiver or compensatory clause as set forth in Article 7(h) of the 1943 agreement is a part of the oral agreement between appellant and respondents. No new written agreement was signed by the partners from 1943 until June, 1952. The 1942 agreement which appellant had signed expired by its terms in 1950, but it had been superseded by the 1943 agreement which by its terms expired December 31, 1952.

Although appellant denied having heard any discussion relative to the 1943 agreement prior to his departure for the army, the minutes of the partnership show that he attended meetings and made motions at meetings in August, October and December 1942, wherein the proposed 1943 draft of the Articles was discussed. He would then have notice that this agreement was intended to govern the affairs of the partnership until 1952. He admitted having had discussions with Dr. Myers as to what terms that doctor should insist upon in the 1943 agreement, and his parity period in accounts receivable. The trial judge could therefore conclude that the appellant was fully aware that the partnership upon his return was governed by the terms of this agreement which was to extend to 1952.

Appellant was in close communication with the original partners during the period of his army service. During that time he was paid the sum of $5,224.25 at the rate of $400 per month in accordance with Article 7(e) of the 1942 agreement. The 1943 agreement specifically recognized this obligation to appellant in Article 7(h). Appellant visited the clinic on February 28, 1944 and the partnership paid the premium on his malpractice insurance on September 26, 1944, when he made inquiry to the clinic concerning it. The clinic contacted him by letter of September 20, 1945, in regard to his views concerning allowing a Dr. Holmes to reenter the partnership on terms of a limited practice at variance with terms applicable to partners in appellant's specialty. This letter arranged a telephone conference to discuss the matter, and stated that the members unanimously desired that appellant and Dr. Myers continue as members.

Appellant reentered the partnership on October 20, 1945 and immediately received a full parity share in net cash income, as he had been receiving in 1943 before he left. It was not until the meeting of March 26, 1946, that terms were discussed with appellant regarding his parity period in accounts receivable. Because he had been paid off his interest in such accounts when he went into the army, it was pointed out that he would not accumulate an interest in accounts receivable to gain parity in less than the customary nine years. Appellant disagreed with this view but agreed to abide by the majority vote. It was decided that the nine-year period would apply, calculated according to the usual formula. The nine-year formula was set forth in the 1943 agreement as applied to Dr. Myers. The actual formula, however, originated in the minutes of a meeting in February 1941.

Respondent emphasizes that because appellant had been paid off his accounts receivable share in 1943, he knew from that agreement which had provisions similar to the 1943 agreement, that the parity period in Article 4 had no significance except in relation to Article 7 which provided for payment of that interest. It appears to be an inescapable deduction that the parity periods have no purpose except to determine the amount owing in accounts receivable to the partner upon separation from the partnership. The parity periods apparently did not enter into the determination of current cash income of the partners.

There is evidence that at a later period appellant acknowledged the 1943 agreement as the governing partnership agreement. Respondent Knorp testified that the Retirement Committee considered only the 1943 agreement, rather than the 1941 and 1942 agreements in working out a retirement plan to replace Article 5 of the 1943 agreement. The minutes of a meeting in 1948 show that appellant stated that the committee would continue working toward "a draft of something that can be written into our partnership agreement" and that it was important to set up the framework of some retirement plan now. All drafts of the plan were captioned "Draft * * * for insertion into Partnership Agreement" and all were numbered "Article No. 5."

The purpose of the waiver clause was considered at these meetings, for it was testified that the new Article 5 finally adopted on December 9, 1949, as immediately effective, provided that any partner over sixty-five years of age might leave the clinic and practice in any location without forfeiture of his interests in accounts receivable. In view of his work on this provision, and his vote in favor of it, it can certainly be inferred that appellant had knowledge that the partners were bound by the 1943 agreement.

Other new partners were admitted after discussion with them of the terms of the partnership agreement—the 1943 agreement. Minutes of meetings accepting new members state that they were admitted "subject to the terms of our partnership agreement." Dr. Knorp testified that when the partners held a meeting concerned with arranging for the construction of a new building, the 1943 agreement was read to the group. It was not referred to as the 1943 agreement, but as "our partnership agreement."

When appellant withdrew from the partnership, he addressed his letter to the head of the Executive Committee. The new Article 5, adopted December 9, 1949, provided that membership of the Retirement Committee should be the personnel of the Executive Committee then in office. Although appellant claimed that a committee was to be appointed to determine procedure for his retirement, the plan outlined in the new Article 5 actually was followed. This required that the Retirement Committee submit any retirement plan to the membership, and this was done at the meeting of June 18, 1951.

It appears that the conduct of appellant as disclosed by the above narrated events was sufficient to support an inference that he assented to be bound by the waiver provision in the 1943 Articles of Copartnership. Appellant cites authorities to the effect that the law will not imply specific terms of a contract such as those relating to waiver, penalty, or forfeiture, but admits that the meeting of minds may be implied from the parties' declarations and conduct. We think the conduct and declarations above discussed, show that the waiver provision was a part of the partnership contract.

[2] Is the waiver clause a valid provision? Appellant asserts that it is not, since it clearly provides for a penalty or forfeiture. The law does not favor either contracts in restraint of trade or agreements for liquidated damages. Section 16602 of the Business and Professions Code permits partners to agree that none of them will compete in a similar business in the same town or a specified part thereof. Section 1671 of the Civil Code permits the parties to a contract to so agree to liquidated damages when the amount of actual damage sustained by a breach thereof would be impracticable or extremely difficult to determine.

[3] Whether a covenant is for liquidated damages or for a penalty will be determined in accordance with the facts and circumstances of each case. Better Food Markets v. American District Telegraph Co., 40 Cal.2d 179, 253 P.2d 10, 42 A.L.R. 2d 580. The amount fixed as liquidated damages must represent a reasonable endeavor to estimate a fair compensation for the loss that may be sustained, and must bear some reasonable relation to such loss. Hill v. Hearron, 113 Cal.App.2d 763, 249 P.2d 54.

[4] There was testimony concerning discussions as to why 7(e) was put back into the partnership agreements of 1942 and 1943, after having been deleted from the 1941 agreement. The partners recognized the fact that a doctor might leave the group and carry his patients with him and that it would be difficult to measure the loss in specific amounts because the practice was a mutual one, no one being able to claim any particular patient, that for the protection of the clinic it was felt in accounts receivable on coming into the same community to practice, that this would be a fair protection both ways.

Respondents alleged loss of 96 obstetrical cases for which the clinic charged an average of $175 per case. Appellant admitted that since his departure from the clinic he had called on it for nearly 205 case histories. Thus it can be seen that respondent in less than two years since appellant's withdrawal has already suffered a loss that may well be equivalent to or greater than the amount of appellant's share in the accounts receivable. There is no way of calculating the future loss that will be suffered through the loss of this group of patients. See, Franz v. Bieler, 126 Cal. 176, 56 P. 249, 58 P. 466; Potter v. Ahrens, 110 Cal. 674, 43 P. 388. It is obvious that the measure selected is reasonably related to the anticipated loss. The interest in accounts receivable of a partner who was nearing parity would be much greater than that of one at the bottom of the scale, and a better established partner usually would take a much greater share of business from the clinic than would a partner who was not as well established.

[5] Respondent argues that even if the clause is viewed as a forfeiture, appellant has not produced evidence to qualify for relief under section 3275, Civil Code, providing relief for forfeiture for non-wilful breach upon making full compensation. Bird v. Kenworthy, 43 Cal.2d 656, 277 P.2d 1; Baffa v. Johnson, 35 Cal. 2d 36, 216 P.2d 13; Barkis v. Scott, 34 Cal.2d 116, 208 P.2d 367.

The trial judge notes in his memorandum decision, which views the provision as one for liquidated damages, that both parties have agreed that the provision is illegal insofar as it attempts to apply to Burlingame or Hillsborough. Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16602.

The findings of fact appear to be based on the theory that the agreement gave rise to a contract giving a retiring partner the choice of continuing to practice in the same locality as the respondent by waiving his interest in accounts receivable or of practicing elsewhere and receiving payment, such waiver to constitute partial compensation for the incalculable loss thereof although there is also a finding that it was impracticable and extremely difficult to calculate the damage in the event a partner elected to engage in practice in San Mateo.

[6] Respondent contends that this is a true alternative contract, because appellant has the option to practice in San Mateo by giving up his interest in the accounts in return for business of the clinic which he may take away, or practicing elsewhere and collecting payment. See, 3 Williston on Contracts, Rev.Ed. 2194, sec. 781. It was held in Miller v. California Trust Co., 15 Cal.App.2d 612, 59 P.2d 1035, that an agreement to return loaned stock or pay its value as determined at the time of the loan, was a true alternative contract since no duty was breached by failure to return the stocks. This case relied on a Massachusetts case, Smith v. Bergengren, 153 Mass. 236, 26 N.E. 690, 10 L.R.A. 768, in which defendant agreed not to practice medicine in a certain town so long as plaintiff practiced therein, but that he should have the right to practice there upon payment of a certain sum. The court held that this was a price agreed upon for the privilege of practicing there, and not a contract for liquidated damages. However, as appellant points out, he already has the privilege of practicing medicine anywhere in this state. Respondent cannot withhold that privilege from him. That is undoubtedly true. But appellant may contract that if he exercises that privilege he will compensate his former partners to some extent at least for the business which he expects to take from them. Such agreement cannot be held to be without consideration, for respondent clinic has undoubtedly contributed in some degree to the establishment of appellant in the community.

[7] Appellant contends finally that an oral agreement not to compete for an unlimited time is within the statute of frauds and therefore unenforceable. Civil Code, § 1624(1). This defense was raised for the first time on appeal. It is considered waived unless presented in the pleadings or during trial. 23 Cal.Jur.2d 444, sec. 153.

We hold that the judgment of the trial court may be sustained on either of the two theories discussed and there being no prejudicial error in the record, the judgment may be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

Morris TRIEBER and Caroline Trieber, Plaintiffs, Cross-Defendants and Appellants,

v.

Samuel GAYNE, Defendant, Cross-Complainant and Respondent.

Civ. 16796.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

July 31, 1956.

Hearing Denied Sept. 25, 1956.

Action by first stockholder against second stockholder to cancel a note which first stockholder had given second stockholder upon second stockholder's obtaining a loan and lending the money to corporation. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Daniel R. Shoemaker, J., rendered judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that evidence sustained finding that the consideration for note was to be corporation's indebtedness to first stockholder in the same amount, and that the agreement did not contemplate that corporation should execute a note to first stockholder.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Bills and Notes ⇐518(1)

In action by first stockholder against second stockholder to cancel note which first stockholder had given second stockholder upon second stockholder's obtaining a loan and lending the money to corporation, evidence sustained finding that the consideration for first stockholder's note was to be corporation's indebtedness to first stockholder in the same amount, and that the agreement did not contemplate that corporation should execute a note to first stockholder.

Joseph A. Brown, San Francisco, for appellants.

Morris M. Grupp, San Francisco, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice.

Appellants, husband and wife, sought by their second amended complaint to cancel a note given by them to respondent in the principal sum of $1,000 on the ground of failure of consideration. Respondent answered and cross-complained, by his cross-complaint seeking a recovery on the note. From a judgment in favor of respondent on both complaint and cross-complaint this appeal is taken.

In October, 1952, appellant Morris Trieber and respondent each owned 25 percent of the outstanding capital stock of Gayne Sales Co., a corporation. One Arian and Jerry Gayne, the respondent's son, likewise each owned 25 percent of such stock. At that time Arian and appellant Morris Trieber were in active management of the business of the corporation, Arian being its president and Trieber its secretary.

The corporation was in need of funds and respondent, accepting his testimony (as we must do on appeal), proposed to Morris Trieber that respondent would borrow $2,000 from his bank and advance it to the corporation: "If the corporation will give me a note for $1,000 and if you and your wife will give me a note for $1,000 * * * I said that that is the only basis, to borrow the money from the bank and loan the money to the corporation, on that condition * * * I said, 'If you accept my proposition, if you and your wife will give me a personal note for $1.000 and the corporation $1,000, I will then go to the Bank of America and borrow $2,000 from them and help the corporation out by giving the check to the corporation.'"

To this Trieber agreed and thereafter delivered the note for $1,000 dated October 29, 1952, executed by himself and his wife with respondent as payee. Respondent also received a promissory note of the corporation for $1,000 dated the same day and signed by Arian as president and Trieber as secretary. The corporation received respondent's personal check for $2,000 dated October 30, 1952, and respondent testified that he borrowed the $2,000 from his bank on the same day.

The corporation became insolvent and neither Trieber nor respondent recovered any money from it. It is appellants' theory that respondent agreed that Morris Trieber was to receive a promissory note from the corporation for $1,000 and that since he did not receive such a note there was a failure of consideration for the $1,000 note executed by appellants to respondent.

Respondent testified flatly that there was no such agreement. He testified:

> "Q. Did you ever mention anything at all about the corporation giving Trieber a note? A. Never. * * *
> "Q. Was there something said to you that he was going to get a note from the corporation? A. No, he never mentioned it. * * *
> "Q. You said nothing was said about getting a note from the corporation? A. At the time, there was nothing said about him getting a note from the corporation * * * I assumed that he took a note for himself."

[1] The court found in accordance with this testimony:

"That it is not true that the sole consideration to be given to plaintiffs and cross defendants * * * was a note to be issued by the corporation, but that said consideration was the indebtedness of the corporation to the said plaintiff and cross defendant Morris Trieber for One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) advanced to said corporation on behalf of said Morris Trieber by the said Samuel Gayne, and it is not true that there was a failure of consideration in that the said note was not executed, as the failure to execute said note did not extinguish the obligation of Gayne Sales Co., Inc., to the said Morris Trieber."

[2] This finding, supported as it is by substantial testimony, that it was no part of the agreement of the parties that the corporation should issue a note to appellant Morris Trieber, is sufficient to support the judgment.

The fact that at the time Trieber made no effort to secure such a note is also corroborative of the fact that there was no such agreement. Trieber in his testimony could give no explanation why, if it was a part of such agreement that he was to receive the corporation's note, he did not insist upon it at the time. He testified:

> "A. I don't know why it wasn't issued at that time, but it wasn't issued.
> "Q. Did you raise any question at that time to Mr. Arian about it?
> "A. No, I don't remember what the reason was that it wasn't issued at that time."

Appellants' counsel now argues that no note was issued at the time because Trieber as secretary could not execute such a note in favor of himself. Trieber did not so testify and, furthermore, a corporate officer who deals fairly with a corporation may lend it money, Schnittger v. Old Home, etc., Min. Co., 144 Cal. 603, 78 P. 9; Santa Cruz R. Co. v. Spreckles, 65 Cal. 193, 3 P. 661, 802, and may take its note, Merrill v. Normandie Corp., 110 Cal.App. 621, 294 P. 774. No reason appears why, if the agreement was as he now claims, Trieber did not seek the authorization of the other members of the board of directors for the execution to him of the corporation's note, to be executed by the president or other non-interested officer or officers.

It is true that much later, after respondent had acquired Arian's stock and become president of the corporation, Trieber demanded of respondent that such a note be executed by the corporation and in May of 1953 a resolution of the board of directors was adopted authorizing the execution of such a note which respondent refused to sign. But it is clear that if the execution of such a note was no part of the promised consideration, as found by the trial court, the failure or refusal to execute it could not operate as a failure of consideration.

Judgment affirmed.

STATE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA, Respondent.

No. 16913.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

July 13, 1956.

Proceeding on motion to terminate stay of execution previously granted. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that where attorney general made prima facie case showing that continuance of stay would be against public interest, and petitioner failed to file opposition to motion although given opportunity to appear before court in informal hearing for such purpose, stay would be terminated.

Order accordingly.

1. Administrative Law and Procedure 🔑674

Under civil procedure section providing for stay of operation of any administrative order or decision pending judgment of court on such order or decision, District Court of Appeal possesses discretionary power to terminate a stay granted at any time the court is convinced that continuance of the stay would be against public interest. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1094.5.

2. Administrative Law and Procedure 🔑674

Where attorney general made prima facie case showing that continuance of stay of execution granted would be against public interest, and petitioner failed to file opposition to attorney general's motion, although given opportunity to appear before court in informal hearing for such purpose, and continuance of stay would violate public morals and public welfare and would be against public interest, stay would be terminated. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1094.5.

James Martin MacInnis, Harry P. Glassman, San Francisco, for appellants.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Charles A. Barrett, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

[1] This is a motion by the attorney general to terminate the stay of execution granted by this court on July 28, 1955, to appellant under the discretionary power granted by section 1094.5(f) of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under that section there can be no doubt that this court possesses the discretionary power to terminate the stay at any time that the court is convinced that the continuance of the stay is against the public interest. Bogart v. Board of Medical Examiners, 99 Cal.App. 2d 170, 221 P.2d 168; West Coast, etc., Co. v. Contractors', etc., Board, 68 Cal.App.2d 1, 155 P.2d 863; § 1094.5(f) of Code of Civ.Proc.

[2] Respondent has made a prima facie showing that the continuance of the stay would be against the public interest. Appellant has not seen fit to file opposition to the motion, nor, although given the opportunity, to appear before the court at an informal hearing for the purpose of opposing the motion. The facts of the case are fully set forth in our opinion filed June 28, 1956, Ciro's of San Francisco v. State Board of Equalization, Cal.App., 299 P.2d 703. From the facts set forth, and for the reasons set forth in the motion, it is our opinion that the continuance of the stay would violate public morals and public welfare, and would be against the public interest. For that reason the stay is terminated, such termination to become effective at the close of business today, Friday, July 13, 1956. It is so ordered.

Lawrence C. JONES, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Gerald E. SHEARS, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 21427.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

July 24, 1956.

Action was brought against deputy sheriff for damages for assault. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Kurtz Kauffman, J., entered judgment for plaintiff and an order denying motion of deputy sheriff for a new trial, and the deputy sheriff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that evidence sustained finding that plaintiff was not reaching for his pocket when deputy sheriff shot plaintiff.

Judgment affirmed, and appeal from order dismissed.

1. Sheriffs and Constables 🔑129

In action against deputy sheriff of county for damages for assault, wherein deputy sheriff contended that he acted in self-defense and that plaintiff unlawfully resisted arrest, plaintiff was not required to comply with statutes requiring the filing of claims for injury or damage caused by the negligence of a public employee, since the action was not based on negligence. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 1981, 2003.

2. Pleading ⚷237(1)

Motion of defendant to amend his answer to conform to proof was addressed to sound discretion of trial court.

3. Appeal and Error ⚷959(3)

Ruling of trial court in denying the motion of defendant to amend his answer to conform to the proof would not be disturbed on appeal in absence of a showing of clear abuse of discretion.

4. Pleading ⚷237(3)

Where defendant, who was a deputy sheriff, in action against him for assault, filed his answer stating that he arrested plaintiff for driving through a red traffic light and driving on left side of highway in violation of Vehicle Code at time when he shot plaintiff, and alleged that he was forced to pursue plaintiff and that during pursuit plaintiff attempted to force defendant's automobile off highway, and more than a year later, at conclusion of trial of the assault action, defendant moved to amend his answer to allege that he arrested plaintiff for assault with a deadly weapon in violation of Penal Code, without any satisfactory explanation as to why he had not made motion more seasonably, trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying motion. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 245.

5. Assault and Battery ⚷44

In action against deputy sheriff for damages for assault, it was immaterial that trial court found that deputy sheriff shot plaintiff while deputy sheriff was arresting plaintiff for traffic violations rather than for assault with a deadly weapon in violation of the Penal Code, since in either case the deputy sheriff had no right to shoot the plaintiff. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 43; West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 245.

6. Assault and Battery ⚷35

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel, and Wm. E. Lamoreaux, Deputy County Counsel, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Herbert W. Simmons, Jr., Los Angeles, Charles B. Johnson, Pasadena, for respondent.

FOX, Justice.

Plaintiff recovered a judgment for $30,000 damages against defendant for an assault. Defendant appeals.

In his complaint plaintiff charged that defendant "wrongfully, unlawfully and violently assaulted" him by firing "a shot from a loaded gun at plaintiff," the bullet entering the left side of plaintiff, just below his rib cage, and lodging in his spine; that he received serious injuries, some of which are permanent in nature. He further charged that "the defendant acted maliciously and was guilty of a wanton disregard of the rights" of plaintiff.

In his answer defendant stated he was a deputy sheriff of Los Angeles County and that on the occasion in question, as such officer, he was in the process of placing plaintiff under arrest for a public offense committed in his presence, to wit, driving through a red light at an intersection and driving on the left side of the highway; that plaintiff unlawfully resisted arrest; that he used only such force as was necessary to place plaintiff under arrest; that such force consisted of his firing a shot from his service revolver, the bullet entering plaintiff's left side; that plaintiff's injury was caused by his unlawful resistance of defendant while the latter was acting in the lawful discharge of his duty as a peace officer. Defendant further alleges that after the commission of said public offenses and prior to the arrest of the plaintiff, defendant was forced to pursue plaintiff during the course of which pursuit plaintiff attempted to force defendant's automobile off the highway; that defendant succeeded in causing plaintiff to bring his car to a stop and while defendant was about to place plaintiff under arrest, plaintiff "advanced toward defendant in a threatening manner, refused to put his hands up on command, and reached his right hand toward his rear pocket, from which said actions defendant had reasonable cause to believe, and did believe, that said plaintiff was about to assault defendant with a deadly weapon; that acting on said belief and in self-defense," defendant shot plaintiff.

The locale of this unfortunate affair was on Mountain Avenue, just south of Huntington Drive, in the city of Monrovia. The time was approximately 6:00 o'clock, Sunday afternoon, September 2, 1951. After having had refreshments at a drive-in on the southeast corner of Mountain Avenue and Huntington Drive, plaintiff, who was accompanied by Miss Ages and Sherman Buchanan, drove out on Mountain and turned south. Apparently this highway accommodated only two lanes of traffic—one each way. It had occasional holes or depressions in it, rough shoulders, and a line of telephone poles on the east side. Plaintiff's automobile was a 1941 Mercury, in good mechanical condition except that one of the front wheel bearings was a little loose which caused the car to shake a bit when it hit a bump. Jones was driving south on Mountain at a speed of 20 to 25 miles an hour when he observed a car behind him being driven by defendant, who acted as though he wanted to pass on two or three occasions but dropped back each time. Jones testified his car swerved across the center line once because he hit a rut in the road. Finally defendant waived his revolver and "hollered" that Jones stop. Jones pulled to the side of the highway and stopped. Defendant, who had his family and his brother-in-law and his family with him, stopped behind the Jones car. Both plaintiff and defendant got out of their cars and approached each other. Jones' account of what then transpired is that he took "two or three steps" in the direction of defendant who commanded: "Get your hands up"; that he stopped and "as I proceeded to get my hands up I was shot." As might be expected, defendant's account of the events leading up to the shooting is somewhat different. He claims that in attempting to pass Jones the latter had forced him "to turn very sharply to avoid a collision" and that the left wheels of his car were forced off the paved portion of the road onto the shoulder. Upon a repetition of this experience, defendant exhibited his revolver and ordered Jones to stop. Defendant's version of the events that took place after he and plaintiff got out of their cars is as follows: "I had my badge in my left hand and my gun in my right hand, and as he got out of the car I told him to put up his hands and stay where he was. He took about three or four steps toward me and then his right hand reached in his right pocket and he turned at the same time so his left side was more or less facing me and I couldn't see his right hand. At that time I shot him. I also before that hollered to him that I am a deputy sheriff, and 'Put up your hands' and I hollered as loud as I can."

Plaintiff denied he reached toward his rear pocket with one of his hands. He did not have either a gun or a knife on his person.

After this incident, Shears filed a criminal complaint in the Monrovia justice court charging Jones with assault with a deadly weapon, a felony, in violation of section 245 of the Penal Code. This was based on Jones' asserted actions in trying to force Shears' car off the highway. Jones was held to answer but the case was dismissed in the superior court on motion of the district attorney "on the ground of insufficient evidence."

At the conclusion of the instant trial, defendant moved to amend his answer to conform to proof and offered for filing an amended answer wherein he alleged that he arrested Jones for "assault with a deadly weapon, in violation of section 245 of the Penal Code, a felony." The motion was denied.

The court found that Shears committed the acts here in question in his official capacity as a deputy sheriff of Los Angeles County in the process of placing Jones under arrest for a misdemeanor, to wit, driving through a red light in violation of the Vehicle Code, and driving on the lefthand side of a highway also in violation of said code; but that Jones had not in fact committed such offenses and that Shears had not seen him do so and had no knowledge of any such traffic violations on the part of Jones. The court found that "plaintiff * * * did not resist or attempt to prevent his arrest by the defendant" and "did not advance towards the defendant * * * in a threatening manner or refuse to put up his hands on command of the said defendant * * * and that the plaintiff * * * did not reach his hand towards his rear pocket or make any movement whatsoever." That plaintiff gave defendant "no reasonable cause or any cause to believe the plaintiff * * * was about to assault the defendant * * * with a deadly weapon or with any weapon whatsoever"; that plaintiff had no weapon in his possession and that defendant had no fear that plaintiff intended to cause him any harm, or attempt to resist arrest. The court further found that defendant in his official capacity as a deputy sheriff of Los Angeles County, "did wrongfully, unlawfully and violently assault the plaintiff" by firing a shot from a loaded revolver at plaintiff, which lodged in plaintiff's spine and which has not been and cannot be removed. Finally, the court found that in so doing, defendant acted "maliciously and was guilty of a wanton disregard of the rights" of the plaintiff.

In seeking a reversal, defendant's principal contention is that "the filing of a verified claim with the defendant and the county was a necessary prerequisite to maintaining the action." This contention is based on sections 1981 and 2003 [1] of the Government Code. The material portion of section 1981 reads: "Whenever it is claimed that any person has been injured * * * as a result of the negligence or carelessness of any public officer or employee occurring during the course of his service or employment * * * a verified claim for damages shall be presented in writing and filed with the officer or employee and the clerk or secretary of the legislative body of the * * * county * * *."

It will be noted that section 1981 requires the filing of a written verified claim with the officer or employee and with the clerk of the legislative body of the county as a condition to maintaining an action where a person claims that he has been injured as a result of the negligence or carelessness of such public officer or employee occurring during the course of his service or employment. It is apparent that section 2003 of the Government Code deals with the same subject matter, viz., injury caused by the negligence of a public employee.

[1] Plaintiff takes the position that since these code sections requiring the filing of claims specifically refer to injury or damage caused by the negligence of a public employee they do not apply to his case and therefore he was not required to file any claim either with the officer or the county.[2] His thesis is that his action is not based on negligence. An examination of the record discloses that his position is sound.

In his complaint plaintiff does not charge defendant with negligence but with the commission of an assault and battery upon him by firing a shot at him which entered his left side. He charges that "The defendant acted maliciously" in so doing. In his answer defendant does not allege that he negligently shot plaintiff. He asserts that he acted in self-defense, and that plaintiff "unlawfully resisted arrest," whereupon he "used only such force and no more" as "was reasonably necessary to place plaintiff under lawful arrest." His testimony was in harmony with these allegations. However, the trial court did not give credence to his story. The court found that in shooting plaintiff, defendant committed an "assault" upon him and that in so doing he acted "maliciously." The evidence supports this finding. Thus, upon the basis of the pleadings, the evidence and the findings, this is not an injury caused by the negligence of the defendant while acting in his official capacity but rather an intentional tort, Lowry v. Standard Oil Co., 63 Cal.App.2d 1, 5, 146 P.2d 57, and as such it is not within the purview of sections 1981 and 2003 of the Government Code. Reynolds v. Lerman, 138 Cal. App.2d 586, 292 P.2d 559. It was therefore not necessary for plaintiff to file a claim with the defendant and the county.

[1] This section was enacted at the 1951 legislative session and became effective September 22d of that year. This was 20 days after the incident that is the basis of the instant suit. Assuming, but without so deciding, that the section became effective in time to be applicable to the within action, we quote its provisions:

"A cause of action against an employee of a district, county, city, or city and county for damages resulting from any negligence upon the part of such employee while acting within the course and scope of such employment shall be barred unless a written claim for such damages has been presented to the employing district, county, city, or city and county in the manner and within the period prescribed by law as a condition to maintaining an action therefor against such governmental entity."

[2-4] Defendant vainly argues that the court prejudicially erred in denying his motion to file an amended answer to conform to the proof. Defendant, of course, knew the charge on which he was arresting Jones. Not long after this affair he filed a criminal complaint against Jones charging him with a violation of Penal Code section 245, a felony. He undoubtedly testified at Jones' preliminary hearing in the Monrovia justice court on October 11th when Jones was held to answer in the superior court. It was after these events that defendant filed his answer stating that he arrested Jones for having committed a misdemeanor in his presence, to wit, driving through a red traffic light and driving on the left side of the highway in violation of the Vehicle Code. He then alleged that "defendant was forced to pursue said plaintiff during the course of which pursuit the plaintiff attempted to force defendant's automobile off the highway." More than a year later and at the conclusion of the trial, defendant moved to amend his answer to allege that he arrested Jones for "assault with a deadly weapon, in violation of section 245 of the Penal Code, a felony," without any satisfactory explanation as to why he had not made this motion more seasonably. Such a motion is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court and its ruling will not be disturbed in the absence of a showing of a clear abuse of discretion. We find no such showing here.

[5] Furthermore, there was obviously no prejudice to defendant, for the trial court found Jones "did not resist or attempt to prevent his arrest by the defendant" and that he "gave the defendant no reasonable or any cause to believe that the plaintiff * * * was about to assault the defendant * * *." On the basis of these findings as to plaintiff's conduct it could make no difference whether defendant was arresting him for a misdemeanor or a felony. In either case he had no right to shoot him. Civ.Code, § 43. It follows that it is wholly immaterial that the court found the shooting took place while Shears was arresting plaintiff for traffic violations in accordance with his statements in his verified answer rather than for a violation of section 245 of the Penal Code.

[6] Defendant's contention, that finding VII to the effect that at the time defendant was placing plaintiff under arrest "the plaintiff did not advance towards the defendant * * * in a threatening manner and refuse to put up his hands on command of the said defendant * * * and that the plaintiff * * * did not reach his hand towards his rear pocket or make any movement whatsoever" is not supported by the evidence, is lacking in merit. In addition to the evidence to which we referred in the statement of the case, supra, the following transpired during the cross-examination of plaintiff by defendant's counsel:

"Q. Were you still moving towards him at the time he shot? A. I took about three or four steps and stopped.

"Q. Did you stop before he shot? A. When I stopped he said, 'Get your hands up,' and I stopped.

"Q. Did you put your hands up immediately? A. I put my hands up.

"Q. What did you do prior to putting your hands up? A. Nothing.

"Q. You did not reach toward your rear pocket with one of your hands? A. No * * *.

"The Witness: I did not reach for nothing.

"Q. By the Court: Did you have anything in your rear pocket when you put your hands up? A. I had a handkerchief * * *.

"Q. By the Court: Were you reaching for your handkerchief? A. No, I just put my hands up."

On re-cross examination of plaintiff these questions and answers appear:

"Q. You also testified you stopped and put your hands up when he ordered you to and you did not make any movement toward your rear pocket, is that correct? A. When he said 'Get your hands up' I put my hands up.

"Q. You recall I asked you if you reached for your rear pocket and you said you did not? A. I did not."

In this connection reference should be made to the testimony of Mrs. Mary Louise Johnson, who lived at 1434 South Mountain Avenue, in front of whose home the cars stopped. She heard "some yelling" and went to the front door. She saw the parties get out of the cars. Shears "started walking up to the front car. The other fellow [Jones] just stepped outside of his car. * * *

"Q. Then what happened? A. Then Mr. Shears shot him."

She further stated that the parties were less than ten feet apart; that Jones "had just stepped out—away from the door of the car * * *." It is apparent that the evidence is ample to support the challenged finding.

[7] Defendant seeks to discredit plaintiff's testimony by showing that he made statements on other occasions in conflict with his testimony on the witness stand. This was a problem for the trial judge. This court may not reweigh the evidence or reevaluate the credibility of the witnesses.

The attempted appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial is dismissed. The judgment is affirmed.

v.

Eva F. BRINK, Defendant and Appellant.

No. 16777.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.
July 30, 1956.

Action for divorce wherein husband obtained final decree incorporating interlocutory decree which required payment of $1,800 to wife, though such obligation had been discharged by order of bankruptcy court after interlocutory and before final decree. The Superior Court of Alameda County, James R. Agee, J., ordered quashed a writ of execution which had been issued, and the wife appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that the obligation was not revived by husband's obtaining the final decree.

Affirmed.

1. Divorce ⚷254

Property rights of parties to divorce suit were defined and determined by interlocutory decree, and where such decree had become final, court retained no power to modify it with respect to property rights.

2. Divorce ⚷172

Even though final divorce decree is not entered, interlocutory decree becomes a conclusive adjudication and is res judicata with respect to all issues determined.

3. Divorce ⚷243

Failure of final divorce decree to include alimony provision of interlocutory decree does not relieve husband of his previously adjudicated obligation.

4. Bankruptcy ⚷433(7)

Where final divorce decree incorporated by reference provisions of interlocutory decree, including declaration that husband owed wife a specified amount, which had been discharged in bankruptcy after interlocutory decree was rendered but could not be canceled on record for another ten months, the final decree gave no new life to the discharged obligation. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 675b.

5. Bankruptcy ⚷434

Husband's application for final divorce decree, supported by affidavit reciting that requirements of interlocutory decree had been fully complied with and that husband was not in default in any thereof, did not constitute "promise" to pay obligation of $1,800 alimony, which was included in interlocutory and final decree notwithstanding discharge in bankruptcy subsequent to interlocutory decree, and hence did not revive the discharged debt. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1606.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Promise".

6. Bankruptcy ⚷434, 436(1)

Action to recover debt which had been discharged in bankruptcy must be based upon new promise, and it must appear that new promise was clear, distinct, unconditional, and unequivocal. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 1606.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

The sole question is whether or not by applying for and obtaining a final decree of divorce plaintiff revived his obligation to pay defendant $1,800 (a part of their property settlement agreement which had been incorporated into the interlocutory decree of divorce), an obligation which defendant concedes was discharged by an order of the bankruptcy court made after the interlocutory and before the final divorce decree.

Holding that the obligation was not revived, reaffirmed or reacknowledged, the trial court ordered quashed a writ of execution which had been issued to enforce payment of the obligation.[1] We find no basis for a reversal of that order.

[1–3] We start with the premise that the property rights of these parties were defined and determined by the interlocutory decree and that where, as here, that decree has become final the court retains no power to modify it with respect to these property rights. Dupont v. Dupont, 4 Cal.2d 227, 228, 48 P.2d 677; Leupe v. Leupe, 21 Cal.2d 145, 148, 130 P.2d 697; Harrold v. Harrold, 127 Cal.App.2d 582, 583, 274 P.2d 183; Parnham v. Parnham, 32 Cal.App.2d 93, 96, 89 P.2d 189. "Even though a final decree is not entered, the interlocutory decree becomes a conclusive adjudication and is res judicata with respect to all issues determined." Leupe v. Leupe, supra, 21 Cal. 2d 145, 148, 130 P.2d 697, 699. The "failure of the final decree to include the alimony provision of the interlocutory decree does not relieve petitioner [the obligor] of his previously adjudicated obligation." Wilson v. Superior Court, 31 Cal.2d 458, 464, 189 P.2d 266, 270. The only sanction for modification of the interlocutory in a situation such as this would be that afforded by section 675b of the Code of Civil Procedure, which permits a bankrupt, one year after his discharge, to apply for an order cancelling the judgment. That remedy, because of the one year feature, was not available and would not have become available until some ten months after plaintiff applied for and obtained the final decree.

[1] The minute order of March 3, 1955, granted the motion to quash. A formal written and signed order containing findings of fact was filed March 4. Defendant has appealed from both orders.

The minute order was the determinative order because it required no findings and did not indicate that a formal written order was contemplated.

The written order, though more or less perfunctory in nature, did serve the purpose of specifically identifying the writ of execution and declaring it quashed and of directing the sheriff to release to plaintiff any property seized pursuant to the writ; hence, need not be treated as a complete nullity, especially since the parties hereto have not so treated it. See Perez v. Perez, 111 Cal.App.2d 827, 829–830, 245 P.2d 344.

[4] Accordingly, in the instant case, when the final decree incorporated by reference the provisions of the interlocutory, it incorporated them as it found them; including, for example, a declaration that plaintiff owes defendant $1,800, an obligation which though already discharged could not be cancelled of record for another ten months. In short, the final decree gave no new life to the $1,800 discharged obligation.

[5, 6] It is in this frame of reference that we should view plaintiff's application for the final decree. His affidavit therefor recited the date and place of entry of the interlocutory decree and declared that since the granting of the interlocutory the parties had not been reconciled, nor had they lived together, nor cohabited; that all the requirements of the interlocutory "have been fully complied with on the part of the moving party herein, and he is not in default in any thereof" [a correct statement as to the $1,800 obligation which had been discharged in bankruptcy]; that both parties are living, no motion to set aside or annul the interlocutory is pending and undetermined, and that no appeal has been taken or is pending. We do not find here a "promise" to pay the discharged obligation, within the meaning of the word "promise" as used in section 1606 of the Civil Code. "When a debt has been discharged by proceedings in insolvency, or has become barred by the statute of limitations, the remedy to enforce the payment of the debt is gone, but the moral obligation to pay it still remains, and is a good consideration for a new promise to make such payment. Chabot v. Tucker, 39 Cal. 434; McCormick v. Brown, 36 Cal. 180 [95 Am.Dec. 170]. And it is well settled that when an action is brought to recover such a debt it must be based upon the new promise, and to support the action it must appear that the promise was clear, distinct, unconditional, and unequivocal." Lambert v. Schmalz, 118 Cal. 33, 35, 50 P. 13; emphasis added. See also Jackson v. Shaw, 20 Cal.App.2d 740, 742–743, 68 P.2d 310.

When plaintiff sought and obtained the final decree he applied for and obtained neither more nor less than he had the right and the power to apply for and obtain. We cannot spell out of that a "promise" to pay the discharged obligation. That is distinctly different from the situation which obtained in Davison v. Anderson, 125 Cal.App.2d Supp. 908, at page 909, 271 P.2d 233, at page 235, where the defendant in an action against him upon the original debt entered a general denial but did not mention his discharge in bankruptcy and when the case was called for trial "stipulated without reservation that judgment might be entered against him", pursuant to which stipulation judgment was entered against him. That bears no similarity to plaintiff's application for a final decree in the instant case.

In the words of Presiding Justice Barnard in Jackson v. Shaw, supra, 20 Cal App.2d 740, 744, 68 P.2d 310, 313, "we conclude that, under the circumstances shown by the record, the respondent has not forfeited his right to set up his discharge in bankruptcy as against an execution issued upon this judgment, and that the motion to recall the execution was properly granted."

We find it unnecessary to discuss the authorities upon which defendant relies. She ignores the relationship between the interlocutory and the final decrees in a divorce action and treats the order appealed from as if it were predicated upon an unwarranted collateral attack upon the final decree instead of an interpretation of those decrees viewed in the light of the impact of the discharge in bankruptcy.

The orders appealed from are affirmed.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment based upon an order sustaining, without leave to amend, a demurrer of defendant Jerry Holmes to her second amended complaint, hereinafter referred to as the complaint. The facts alleged therein are as follows: Defendants Holmes and Third Doe are the owners and operators of The Ranch House, a restaurant and eating establishment open to the public. At about 10:30 p. m. on November 27, 1953, plaintiff "was a guest and patron of said establishment," and at that time and place and without any cause or provocation on her part, plaintiff was assaulted by defendants First Doe and Second Doe, "who were also patron guests and patrons of said establishment at the special invitation of the defendants Jerry Holmes and Third Doe." Plaintiff also alleges that "prior to said vicious and unprovoked attack on plaintiff, said First Doe and Second Doe made several threats on plaintiff and that said defendant Jerry Holmes was present and had knowledge of the said threats on plaintiff; that said Jerry Holmes was informed and made aware of the same, and that he, knowing of said threats on plaintiff could have protected said plaintiff; that said defendant owed plaintiff a legal duty and obligation to protect her against such attacks by patrons and guests in that she was a patron and business invitee; that said Jerry Holmes in violation of his said legal duty did so negligently and carelessly refuse to interfere and stop said First Doe and Second Doe from attacking and assaulting plaintiff, and while said vicious attack and assault was being made and inflicted on plaintiff, said Jerry Holmes did nothing to prevent said First Doe and Second Doe from attacking plaintiff." It is also alleged that "as a direct and proximate result of said assault," plaintiff suffered personal injuries, for which she seeks $10,000 general damages and special damages in an as yet unascertained amount. There is also a prayer for exemplary damages.

Defendant's demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend upon the ground that defendant owed no duty to plaintiff to protect her against an assault by a third person on the premises. We are of the view that this holding was erroneous, and that the complaint states a cause of action against defendant.

[1–4] Although the owner of a place of business is not an insurer of the safety of his invitees, it is well settled that he is required to exercise reasonable care for their safety, and is liable for injuries resulting from a breach of this duty. Tuttle v. Crawford, 8 Cal.2d 126, 63 P.2d 1128; Hinds v. Wheadon, 19 Cal.2d 458, 121 P.2d 724; Vaughn v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 95 Cal.App.2d 553, 213 P.2d 417; Girvetz v. Boys' Market, Inc., 91 Cal.App.2d 827, 828, 206 P.2d 6; 65 C.J.S., Negligence, § 45, p. 521. He is liable for harm caused by any dangerous condition on the premises, whether natural or artificial, if he knew of it, or, by the exercise of reasonable care, could have discovered it. Travis v. Metropolitan Theatres Corp., 91 Cal.App.2d 664, 205 P.2d 475; Blumberg v. M. & T. Incorporated, 34 Cal.2d 226, 209 P.2d 1; 2 Rest. Torts § 343. His duty to his invitees is performed by either warning them of danger or by using ordinary care to keep the premises in a reasonably safe condition. Blumberg v. M. & T. Incorporated, supra; Delk v. Mobilhomes, Inc., 118 Cal.App.2d 529, 258 P.2d 75. But he is not required to warn invitees of obvious dangers, as he is entitled to assume that invitees will perceive the obvious by the use of their own senses. Delk v. Mobilhomes, Inc., supra; Shanley v. American Olive Co., 185 Cal. 552, 197 P. 793; Dingman v. A. F. Mattock Co., 15 Cal.2d 622, 104 P.2d 26. Thus the owner's duty is usually rationalized on the ground that he has superior knowledge of an existing danger of which his invitees are unaware. If he is ignorant both actually and constructively of the danger, he is not liable. Perbost v. San Marino Hall-School, 88 Cal.App.2d 796, 199 P.2d 701; Mautino v. Sutter Hospital Ass'n, 211 Cal. 556, 296 P. 76.

[5–7] Innumerable cases have applied these rules to situations where an invitee is injured due to some natural or artificial condition on the premises. But the owner's duty to his invitees extends beyond protection against injuries due to the conditions of the premises. He must use reasonable care to protect them against injury through the negligent or wrongful acts of other invitees on the premises where he has reasonable cause to anticipate such acts and the probability of injury resulting therefrom. 65 C.J.S., Negligence, § 45, p. 533; 2 Rest.Torts § 348. As Prosser says (Prosser on Torts, 1941 edition, 643–4): "In particular, the possessor must exercise the power of control or expulsion which his occupation of the premises gives him over the conduct of a third person who may be present, to prevent injury to the visitor at his hands. He must act as a reasonable man to avoid harm from the negligence * * * of other persons who may have entered it, or even from intentional attacks on the part of such third persons. He is required to take action only when he has reason to believe, from what he has observed or from past experience, that the conduct of the other will be dangerous to the visitor; and in the ordinary case a warning will be sufficient, unless it is apparent that, because of lack of time or the character of the conduct to be expected, it will not be effective to give protection." We are of the view that the law imposes a duty upon the owner of a restaurant to use reasonable care to protect his invitees against assaults by third persons also upon the premises.

Although there is no direct authority in California upon this point, the principle has been inferentially recognized by the Supreme Court, Cole v. Rush, 45 Cal.2d 345, 352–353, 289 P.2d 450, and a number of cases from other jurisdictions have specifically so held. (See cases collected in 106 A.L.R. 1003.) A person who enters a restaurant to eat a quiet meal has the right to assume that the management will use reasonable care to guard him against injury. A restaurant keeper may not sit idly by when he knows that one of his customers is likely to be assaulted by a third person on the premises, and leave it to the customer to extricate himself from danger. In many of the cases the negligence of the proprietor consisted of the failure to warn the customer of danger of which the proprietor had knowledge, which, of course, is not the basis of plaintiff's claim of negligence. Defendant had no knowledge of threatened injury from third persons which was not also possessed by plaintiff. Under the rule we have stated the proprietor's duty arises from his control over the premises and his power to restrain or expel offenders against the peace and safety of the premises.

In this connection, plaintiff relies strongly on two fairly recent California cases, Edwards v. Hollywood Canteen, 27 Cal.2d 802, 167 P.2d 729, and Thomas v. Studio Amusements, Inc., 50 Cal.App.2d 538, 123 P.2d 552. In the Edwards case, plaintiff, a volunteer hostess at the Hollywood Canteen, recovered damages against defendant on the ground that defendant was negligent in permitting her dancing partner to engage in boisterous dancing without her consent. In the Thomas case, plaintiff, who was roller skating on defendant's rink, recovered damages on the ground of defendant's negligence in failing to control reckless roller skating by another skater. In both situations, plaintiff was injured in the very type of activity for which the premises were held open to the public. This fact, however, was not given as a reason for the holding of liability. In Edwards v. Hollywood Canteen, supra, 27 Cal. 2d 802, at page 810, 167 P.2d 729, at page 733, the court cited the Restatement, Prosser, 35 Mich.L.Rev. 843 and 43 Yale L.J. 886 and stated "From the foregoing it is clear that the occupier is under a duty to protect visitors such as plaintiff by taking appropriate measures to restrain conduct by third persons which he should be aware of and which he should realize is dangerous."

Defendant argues that in any event plaintiff's injuries were not caused by any negligence on his part, but were due to the independent acts of the assailants. This contention is without merit. The assault was the very hazard which imposed upon defendant a duty to interfere on behalf of plaintiff. There are other questions suggested by the allegations of the complaint, namely, whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to leave the premises when she was threatened, whether defendant was negligent in failing to interfere, and whether his interference would have prevented the assault. These are factual questions as to which the allegations of the complaint are sufficient and which can only be answered upon a trial of the issues.

The allegations of the complaint are, we think, sufficient to state a cause of action against defendant.

The judgment is reversed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Donald Michael FOOTE, Raymond De Forest Johnson, and William E. Curtis, Defendants and Appellants. *

Cr. 1073.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

July 31, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 13, 1956.

Hearing Granted Aug. 30, 1956.

Defendants were convicted in the Superior Court, San Diego County, John A. Hewicker, J., of robbery in the first degree and conspiracy to commit same, and they appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that there was ample substantial evidence to support the verdicts.

Affirmed.

1. Conspiracy ⚷47

Robbery ⚷24(1)

Convictions for first-degree robbery and for conspiracy to commit first-degree robbery were sustained by evidence.

2. Criminal Law ⚷427(2)

Fact of conspiracy must be proved before evidence of declarations of one alleged conspirator is admissible against another, but only prima facie evidence of fact is required.

3. Criminal Law ⚷364(1), 422(6)

Where division of loot taken in robbery had not been made and escape of defendants had not been accomplished when statement was made to officers by one of defendants, such statement was admissible, in prosecution for robbery and conspiracy to commit same, as a declaration of conspirator while conspiracy was in effect, and was also admissible under doctrine of res gestae, and was admissible whether one of defendants was present or not.

4. Witnesses ⚷255(9)

In prosecution for robbery and conspiracy to commit same, there was no error in permitting prosecuting attorney to read certain grand jury testimony to witness to refresh her recollection, notwithstanding contention that reading of such testimony was improper inasmuch as witness had not said that she did not remember.

5. Criminal Law ⚷369(2), 371(12)

Evidence of commission of other crimes or degrading acts falling short of crime is, as a rule, incompetent if not relevant for special purposes; but such evidence is admissible if it tends logically, naturally and by reasonable inference (1) to establish any fact material for People or (2) to overcome any material matters sought to be proved by defense; and where such evidence was relevant to show intimate connection between defendants, in prosecution for robbery and conspiracy to commit same, and their motives, there was no error.

Where recordings contained statements by one defendant relating to immaterial matters and contained language which should not have been heard by jury, defense counsel should have been permitted to make timely objections to such matters and language; but there being no reasonable probability that result more favorable to defendants would have been reached in absence of error in playing recordings without first exhibiting them to defense counsel and without deleting therefrom immaterial matters and some of language used, error would not require reversal. MUSSELL, Justice.

Appellants Foote, Johnson and Curtis were charged in count one of an indictment with the crime of robbery, committed on or about July 31, 1955, in that by means of force and fear they took from one Richard Thielges the sum of $800, the personal property of Midway Drive-In Theatre in San Diego. It was also alleged in said count that appellants Foote and Johnson were armed with deadly weapons at the time of the commission of the offense. In count two, the three appellants were charged with the crime of conspiracy to commit first degree robbery, committed on or about July 31, 1955, and seven overt acts occurring on July 31, 1955, in furtherance of the conspiracy were alleged, to wit: 1. That appellants met at 4944 Collingwood Street, San Diego; 2. That they were in a 1950 Mercury automobile in San Diego; 3. That appellants Curtis and Johnson were in an automobile in the vicinity of Diamond and Ingraham Streets in San Diego; 4. That appellants Curtis and Johnson were stopped in a 1950 automobile by San Diego police officers and that they drove off to avoid detection and apprehension; 5. That appellants took a Luger type gun and a Woodman automatic pistol from the Collingwood address; 6. That appellants Curtis and Johnson abandoned the 1950 Mercury automobile in the vicinity of the Collingwood address to avoid detection and apprehension; and 7. That appellants Curtis and Johnson, to avoid detection and apprehension, "swapped" automobiles in the vicinity of Malden and Collingwood Streets. Appellant Johnson was charged in the third count of the indictment with the crime of possession of a firearm capable of being concealed upon the person by one previously convicted of a felony, committed on or about August 29, 1955, in that said appellant had been previously convicted of a felony and that he had in his possession and control a firearm having a barrel less than 12 inches in length, to wit, a 38 calibre Smith and Wesson revolver. It was further alleged in said count three that Johnson had suffered prior felony convictions of first degree robbery in 1947 and second degree burglary in 1951, and that he had served terms of imprisonment therefor in the state prison at San Quentin. It was also alleged in said count three that appellant Curtis had suffered a prior felony conviction of second degree robbery in 1949 and that he had served a term of imprisonment therefor in the state prison at San Quentin.

The three appellants pleaded not guilty to the charges in the first two counts of the indictment. Johnson admitted the two prior convictions with which he was charged and Curtis also admitted his prior conviction of a felony as alleged in the indictment. Subsequently, Johnson pleaded guilty as charged in count three of the indictment. A jury trial was had which resulted in verdicts finding the three appellants guilty as charged in counts one and two of the indictment and fixed the degree of the offense as charged in count one as robbery in the first degree. The jury also found that appellants Foote and Johnson were each armed with a deadly weapon at the time of the commission of the robbery and a similar finding as to appellant Curtis was ordered stricken by the court. Motions for a new trial were denied as to each appellant and they were sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison. Appellant Johnson was adjudged an habitual criminal. Each of the three appellants appeals from the judgments of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellants Curtis and Johnson contend that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdicts and judgments and all three appellants contend that the court erred in its rulings and that the deputy district attorney who represented the People at the trial was guilty of prejudicial misconduct.

The pertinent facts, summarized, are as follows: On July 31, 1955, at about 10:00 p. m., Richard Thielges, who was employed as a ticket taker and cashier at the Midway Drive-In Theatre in San Diego, was alone in the ticket office at the entrance to the theatre and when his back was turned, he felt an object against it and upon turning around, saw that it was a gun, which appeared to be a German Luger. The man holding the gun was wearing a silk stocking mask over his face and a blue suit. Thielges was ordered to open up the ticket office and while he was so engaged, a second man appeared, who also had a silk stocking over his head and was carrying what appeared to be a German Luger type gun. He was wearing an orange colored shirt. The man in the blue suit walked with Thielges to the ticket office door and the other man remained stationary. Both men kept their guns drawn. Thielges handed over the cash box on the table in the office upon being ordered to do so by the man in the blue suit and the two men then pulled out the 'phone. They then left, after ordering Thielges to stand in the center of the ticket office. After their departure, Thielges went to the theatre snack bar and called the police. He testified at the trial that the total amount of money taken by the robbers was about $800, some of which consisted of coins rolled in paper, stamped with the name "St. Brigids Church". Thielges further testified at the trial that appellants Johnson and Foote resembled the two men who took the money, both as to weight and height, and that the two guns introduced in evidence by the prosecution resembled the guns held by the robbers at the theatre.

At about 10:00 p. m. on the night of the robbery, two police officers, after receiving information concerning the robbery, were observing traffic three or four miles from the theatre and stopped a 1950 Mercury automobile in which three men were riding in the front seat. The man who was riding on the passenger side was wearing a blue suit and as the spotlight from the police car shone upon him, he looked toward the police car and made a "ducking motion". Appellant Foote emerged from the Mercury and walked back to the police car, and the two men remained in the Mercury. When the two men remaining in the Mercury were ordered by the officers to step out with their hands in view, the man in the center slid under the wheel, put the car in gear and sped away. Almost at the same time, the man in the blue suit turned around and looked directly at one of the officers. This man was appellant Johnson. The officers fired eight shots at the departing automobile, and after placing appellant Foote in their car, attempted unsuccessfully to catch the departing Mercury. Within fifteen or twenty seconds after the firing of the shots, the officers asked appellant Foote who was driving the Mercury, and he replied, "All I know is his name is Bill", and stated that the man in the blue suit was "Terry" Johnson. When asked why the other two men had driven away, he stated that he had no idea. Appellant Foote was asked if he knew where Johnson might go. He stated that Johnson lived with him occasionally and that he might go to Foote's place at 4944 Collingwood Drive. When the officers arrived at this address, Officer Desch observed the abandoned Mercury about 100 feet from the Foote residence. The officer searched the Mercury and found three rolls of coins on the floorboards. Other coins were found and one of the rolls had the marking "St. Brigids Church". There were bullet holes in the car and a pair of rubber gloves and the toe part of a pair of brown stockings were found in the back of the car.

The police officers took Foote, who was wearing a yellow or orange shirt, to the drive-in theatre and Thielges there stated that he could not make a positive identification but that Foote resembled one of the men. The officers asked Foote about the coins found in the Mercury and he said he knew nothing about them. He stated that he had not been in the vicinity of the theatre that evening. However, later he stated that he and the others went past it but did not stop and that the others had not been out of his sight for two or three hours.

Mabel Foote, the mother of appellant Foote, testified that she was residing at 4944 Collingwood Drive with her son and her husband. Appellant Johnson, whom she knew as "Terry" Johnson, had stayed at their residence some of the time during June and July, 1955, and shared the same bedroom with her son. Appellants Foote and Johnson had worked for Scripps Institute of Oceanography, including work on boats. In the late afternoon of July 31, 1955, Johnson came to the Foote residence, accompanied by Mary Talamantes and appellant Foote, and about an hour later appellant Curtis arrived. He had been to the Foote residence once or twice previously and was known to Mrs. Foote as "Bill". Appellant Foote left the house around 9:00 p. m. and Mrs. Foote did not know if anyone left with him. Later that night, shortly before the arrival of the police, Mrs. Foote heard a car door slam and a car starting up. She took it for granted that it was appellant Curtis' car; it sounded as if it was in the vicinity of where he had parked and as far as she knew, there was no other car in the area. She heard a man's voice, which seemed to come from this car, and this voice said something like "Terry, hurry up or I am going to leave you." She saw Johnson come in through the entry hall door and then leave with Mary Talamantes. The police car arrived a few minutes later with her son. The two guns in evidence had been kept in her home. They were not found the night of the robbery but were discovered the next day under the mattress on her son's bed. Both guns were then loaded.

On August 29, 1955, a number of officers surrounded a building at 1028 24th Street in San Diego. Officer Paul Walk knocked on the door and his knock was answered by Mary Talamantes. Walk kicked the door open and jumped into the room with a drawn gun. Appellant Johnson lay on the bed and was covered with a sheet. When Johnson started to put his hands beneath the sheet, Walk told him to raise them above his head and when he complied, Walk pulled the sheet off and saw that there was a loaded .38 calibre Smith and Wesson revolver by Johnson's right hip. The officers found ammunition on the premises and a hypodermic "outfit".

Police Officer Robert Manchester had a conversation with appellant Foote at the police station on August 1, 1955, and Foote there stated that at about 8:00 p. m. on July 31, 1955, he, Johnson and Curtis left the Foote residence about 9:00 p. m. and stopped at a bar but did not go in; that they drove past the Midway Drive-In Theatre and were stopped by a police car; that while he was talking with the officers, his own automobile suddenly left the scene; that Curtis was driving it, as far as he knew, and that he, Foote, had no knowledge how the roll of coins got in the automobile.

On August 1, 1955, the officer had a conversation with appellant Curtis in which Curtis stated that he had gone to the Foote residence the night of July 31, 1955; that he left there between 8:00 and 8:30 p. m. and went to the home of his girl friend, arriving there shortly after 9:00 p. m.; that they drove around for about an hour, then returned to her place, where they retired. He denied going anywhere with Johnson and Foote.

On August 29, 1955, Manchester had a conversation with appellant Johnson at the city jail. Johnson stated that he was not in the automobile when it was stopped and the shooting took place. The following day Officer Manchester had another conversation with Johnson and a recording of this conversation was made and played in the courtroom at the trial. Johnson stated therein that his nickname was Terry; that he and Mary Talamantes went to the Foote residence on the night of July 31 and that appellant Curtis came there; that he, Curtis and Foote left together in the Mercury automobile and drove to Pacific Beach, where they stopped at a bar; that they went to Oscar's Drive-In; that thereafter they cruised around and, when they were pretty close to appellant Foote's residence, they passed a police car; that Foote, who was driving, got out of the car; that Curtis then put the car in gear and they drove off; that after they had driven around some, he and Curtis had an argument about going to the Foote residence, where Johnson wanted to go to meet Mary; that Curtis was against it because they were both on parole; that they went to the Foote residence and when he and Mary were leaving, Curtis shouted for them to "come on"; that he, Curtis and Mary then left in Curtis' car; that he did not know what Foote was doing when the shooting was taking place but that "according to his story, he was back there protecting us, ya know"; that he convinced Mary after the episode of the shooting "and everything * * * for them to be able to prove that Bill and I was together at the penitentiary sent me * * * I was dead"; that he, Curtis and Foote were out together about forty-five minutes from the time he left the Foote residence until the shooting; that he had not robbed anyone and would not be in any particular difficulty now if the police had not found a pistol near him when he was arrested; that neither Foote nor Curtis participated in anything because one or both of them was with him all the time during the night in question.

On August 31, 1955, Officers Walk and Manchester talked with Johnson at the city jail. The officers testified that no promise of reward or immunity or threats of violence were made and that Johnson's statements were freely and voluntarily given. This conversation was also recorded and the recording thereof played to the jury. Johnson stated, among many other things, that he had been intending to turn himself in because he was disgusted, he had no more money, and he did not like to have Mary "c*ou*ped up"; that he "stuck the guy up"; that he had seen the "guy" out there at the theatre one time carrying a tin box; that he observed how the place was crowded with automobiles and that it looked as if there would be a lot of money to be had; that Foote had access to some guns, that the purpose of the robbery was to finance another enterprise; that he knew practically every narcotic user in San Diego and consequently could get in on almost anything he wanted to know; that he and Foote had a perfect "in" with the Scripps Institute research boats and that every other trip on the boats one of them would go down to Mexico; that "it seemed reasonable that people I knew down there, that narcotics and various things could be purchased and turned up here for a lot of money and that was basically what the whole operation was behind;" that everyone seemed to be enthused but the initial buying money was lacking; that he and his associates checked on the theatre; that on the night of the robbery he and his associates argued about the advisability of robbing the place and that he finally got disgusted, grabbed a gun and went over to do the job himself; that Foote apparently got his nerve up and joined him; that there was no one in on the robbery with him except Foote and Curtis; that Curtis did not do anything with respect to the robbery but he knew what was going on and he was more or less part of the operation; that after the robbery, he let Curtis handle the proceeds; that he, Johnson, after the robbery, put the guns under the mattress in Foote's bedroom; that the stockings were thrown out of the car and that he remembered Curtis sitting out front at the Foote residence, gunning the motor and hollering to him to hurry up.

Appellant Foote testified, in effect, that he, Johnson and Curtis were all together the night of July 31, 1955, before and during the period the Midway Drive-In Theatre was robbed, but he denied that any of them participated in the robbery; that he, Johnson and Curtis were driving in the vicinity of the Midway Theatre about five minutes before they were stopped by the police.

Appellant Johnson testified that he had listened to the recordings which were played in the courtroom; that some of the stories on the records were true, in part; that the story about where he went after he left the Foote residence the second time was not correct and that his confession to the armed robbery was not correct; that he had obtained the coins found in the Mercury automobile from one John Zahar as part payment on a debt; that the reason he had "hid out" for thirty days was because he had violated his parole; that during the period he was in hiding, he had talked with appellant Foote and that they had agreed that they would not say who was in the automobile because of something which had happened previously to appellant Curtis. He also testified that the reason he made the confession was because he was afraid his mother and Mary would be charged with a crime.

[1-3] The contention of the appellants that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdicts and judgments is without merit. The evidence, without the statements of appellants, discloses that two men with stocking masks over their faces and resembling Foote and Johnson in height and build held up the Midway Drive-In Theatre on July 31, 1955, at about 10:00 p. m. The robbery victim, Mr. Thielges, noted that one of the robbers was wearing a blue suit and the other an orange or yellow shirt. Both were armed with guns similar to those found under the mattress in Foote's bedroom. Rolls of coins bearing the name "St. Brigids Church" were found in the Mercury car near Foote's residence, together with parts of silk stockings and a pair of gloves. In the late afternoon of that day all three of the appellants were at the Foote residence. Foote's mother heard an automobile drive up just before Curtis arrived, looked out the window and saw him either getting out of the automobile or standing near it. A short time before the police arrived, she heard a car door slam and a car start up and it sounded as if it was in the vicinity where Curtis had parked. As far as she knew, there was no other car in the area. She heard a man's voice, which seemed to come from this car, urging Terry to "hurry up". Around 10:18 p. m. police officers stopped a Mercury automobile in which there were three men. Appellant Foote got out of the car and walked back to the police car and Officer Desch identified Johnson as the man sitting on the passenger side of the car. Appellant Johnson was wearing a blue suit, Foote was wearing a shirt which could have been orange in color. The man in the center of the front seat of the Mercury slid under the wheel and he and Johnson sped away. The officers fired several shots at the speeding car and a few minutes later it was found abandoned, with bullet holes in it. Rolls of coins were found in the car bearing the name "St. Brigids Church". Later, guns similar to those used in the robbery were found under the mattress in Foote's bedroom. The foregoing facts are sufficient to establish a prima facie showing of a conspiracy to commit robbery and are sufficient to permit the introduction in evidence of the statements of the conspirators. The fact of the conspiracy must be proved before evidence of the declarations of the alleged conspirators is admissible against another. However, as is said in People v. Steccone, 36 Cal.2d 234, 238, 223 P.2d 17, 19:

> "* * * 'The issue, however, need be proved only to the extent of establishing prima facie evidence of the fact. It need not be established by a preponderance of the evidence in a civil action nor beyond a reasonable doubt in a criminal action; the latter doctrine applies only to the issue of guilt. Any evidence received by virtue of this rule necessarily is received conditionally, for in the final analysis, the jury must first pass judgment on the question as to whether the asserted conspiracy has been proved.'"

The circumstances shown justified the reception into evidence against all the appellants of Foote's statement to the officers, made within a few seconds after the firing of the shots at the speeding car, that the person who drove the Mercury car away was named Bill. This statement was admissible as a declaration of a conspirator while the conspiracy was in effect. In People v. Brown, 131 Cal.App.2d 643, 656–657, 281 P.2d 319, 328, the court said:

> "Moreover the conspiracy 'may, for various purposes, extend in point of time beyond the actual commission of the substantive crime, providing there is some evidence showing that subsequent activities of the conspirators were a part of their scheme or plan.' 11 Cal.Jur.2d 223 and cases there cited. Examples are division of the loot and payment for participation in the crime. People v. Ross, 46 Cal.App.2d 385, 396–398, 116 P.2d 81, and acts contemplating escaping punishment, People v. Tinnin, 136 Cal.App. 301, 306, 28 P.2d 951."

In the instant case the division of the loot taken in the robbery had not been made and the escape of the appellants had not been accomplished when the statement was made. Furthermore, appellant Foote, in his testimony at the trial, stated that he, Johnson and Curtis were all together the night of July 31, 1955, before and during the time of the robbery, thus definitely involving Curtis as one of the occupants of the Mercury automobile at the time of the robbery. The statement of Foote to the officers was also admissible under the doctrine of res gestae, People v. Costa, 40 Cal.2d 160, 168, 252 P.2d 1, and was admissible whether Curtis was present or not. People v. Jones, 160 Cal. 358, 363–364, 117 P. 176.

[4] It is contended that the trial court erred in permitting the prosecuting attorney to read certain grand jury testimony to Mrs. Foote to refresh her recollection; that the reading of such testimony was improper inasmuch as Mrs. Foote did not say that she did not remember. However, as was said in People v. Darby, 114 Cal.App.2d 412, 436, 250 P.2d 743, 759: "Refreshing the memory of a witness is not to impeach him. It is a common incident of trials to remind a witness of what he said on a former occasion, and this may be done by the party calling him." (Citations.) The witness was permitted to testify, after her recollection was refreshed by her grand jury testimony, that she took it for granted that a certain car was that of appellant Curtis. This statement was related to and explained by her other testimony and we find no error in the court's ruling in this connection.

[5] Appellant Curtis asserts that there was prejudicial misconduct on the part of the prosecuting attorney. He refers in this connection to the recorded conversation of appellant Johnson with the police and complains of statements made therein by appellant Johnson relating to his prior association with Curtis in prison, to the two of them being on parole, to appellant Curtis using narcotics and to other derogatory activity on the part of Curtis. The evidence of commission of other crimes or degrading acts falling short of crime is, as a rule, incompetent if not relevant for special purposes. However, such evidence is admissible if it tends logically, naturally and by reasonable inference to establish any fact material for the People or to overcome any material matters sought to be proved by the defense and where, as here, the evidence was relevant to show intimate connection between the appellants and their motives, no reversible error is shown. People v. Brown, supra, 131 Cal.App.2d 643, 661, 281 P.2d 319.

[6] It is contended that it was error not to allow defense counsel to hear the recordings of appellant Johnson's conversation with the police officers in advance of their being played to the jury. The record shows in this connection that in the absence of the jury, the prosecuting attorney explained that he had recordings to play; that he had been going through them for the first time and that he would try to have the transcript typed up during the week end. When court resumed on the following Monday, the prosecuting attorney stated that there had not been an opportunity to have all the recordings transcribed and that he was willing to let the defense counsel and the jury have copies of the transcripts he had. Defense counsel objected to this procedure and the court determined that inasmuch as counsel did not stipulate to it, the recordings would be played without copies thereof being furnished to counsel.

These lengthy recordings contain many statements by Johnson which related to immaterial matters and contained language which should not have been heard by the jury. Defense counsel should have been permitted to make timely objection to such matters and language. However, under the rules announced in the cases herein cited, the reference in the recordings to Johnson's prior association with Curtis in prison, to the two of them being on parole, and to appellant Curtis using narcotics was admissible, especially since Johnson stated to the officers that the purpose of the robbery was to finance another enterprise; that narcotics and other things could be purchased in Mexico and turned up here for a lot of money. We are of the opinion that it is not reasonably probable that a result more favorable to the appellants would have been reached in the absence of the error in playing the recordings without first exhibiting them to defense counsel and without deleting therefrom the immaterial matters and some of the language used. Therefore, in view of the provisions of Article VI, § 4½ of the Constitution, we conclude that no reversible error is shown in this connection. People v. Watson, 46 Cal.2d 818, 299 P.2d 243.

[7] Appellant Johnson contends that his recorded confession was not competent evidence in that it was not freely and voluntarily given. There was a conflict in the evidence as to this contention and this conflict was for the determination of the trier of fact. There was ample evidence that the confession was uncoerced. The officers refused to bargain with Johnson and told him that if he was going to confess, he would have to "lay it on the line" convincingly. In this connection Johnson testified that he confessed because he was afraid that his mother and Mary would be charged with a crime and in another part of his testimony he stated he confessed because of an agreement with Foote.

Johnson also contends that the court erred in not instructing the jurors that it was their duty to determine whether or not the alleged conspiracy had terminated prior to the time Foote made his statement to the police at the time the Mercury car was stopped by them. Johnson made no request for such an instruction and the court instructed the jury both at the beginning and at the close of the trial that no statement of an alleged conspirator is binding on any other alleged conspirator until a conspiracy shall be proved to be in existence. Other instructions given by the court fully covered the subject of conspiracy.

We conclude, after an examination of the entire record herein, that there was ample substantial evidence to support the verdicts and judgments and that the claimed errors of the trial court and the conduct of the deputy district attorney who prosecuted the case do not constitute reversible error.

The judgments and orders denying a new trial are affirmed.

July 30, 1956.

Proceeding wherein basic issue was whether gift in contemplation of death was made by decedent to his brother. From adverse orders of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Victor R. Hansen, J., the legal representative of the estate of the donee brother appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that evidence was sufficient to sustain a finding that the decedent had made a gift of $22,760.00 in money to his brother.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨996, 1012(1)

Weight to be accorded evidence is for trial judge to determine, and when different inferences reasonably can be deduced from facts, reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the trial court.

2. Evidence ⇨87

Gifts ⇨47(3)

There is a presumption in favor of competency of a donor, and the presumption constitutes evidence. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 1957.

3. Gifts ⇨82(1)

In proceeding involving issue whether gift in contemplation of death was made, evidence was ample to establish competency of donor.

4. Gifts ⇨82(2)

In proceeding involving issue whether gift in contemplation of death was made, evidence with respect to donor's intention to make gift and other evidence was sufficient to support a finding that gift was made, that there was delivery and complete divestment of title and control by donor and acceptance by donee.

5. Gifts ⇨80

In proceeding involving issue whether gift in contemplation of death was made, there was presumption that donee lawfully came by money which he exhibited and spent lavishly.

6. Evidence ⇨588

Trial judge in passing upon evidence may believe portion of testimony of a witness and disbelieve another portion.

7. Trial ⇨382

It is function of trial judge to resolve conflicts and inconsistencies in testimony of an individual witness and to determine weight to which it is entitled.

8. Appeal and Error ⇨1010(1)

Factual decision supported by substantial evidence was binding upon reviewing court.

9. Gifts ⇨82(2)

In proceeding involving issue whether gift in contemplation of death was made, evidence was sufficient to overcome statutory presumptions that money paid by one to another was due to the latter and that thing delivered by one to another belonged to the latter, and to sustain finding that transfer of money was without consideration. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1957, 1963, subds. 7, 8.

10. Gifts ⚷47(3)

Relation between brothers is not presumed to be confidential, as is relation between husband and wife or parent and child, and there is no presumption of undue influence in connection with making of gift merely because donor and donee are brothers.

11. Stipulations ⚷12

Where brother of decedent was not party to stipulation between executor and state controller whereby it was agreed that gift in sum of only $5,000 was made by decedent to brother in contemplation of death, it was within sound discretion of trial court to permit withdrawal of stipulation by mutual consent of executor and state controller who were acting in good faith belief that they had erred in making stipulation.

12. Taxation ⚷879(1)

Where gift of money was made by decedent to his brother in contemplation of death, estate tax was properly assessed and apportioned. West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 970.

FOX, Justice.

The basic issue in this case is whether James E. Miller made a gift in contemplation of death to his brother, Stewart S. Miller, of $22,760.

James passed away on August 3, 1950, and the Bank of America was appointed executor of his estate. Stewart died on March 14, 1951, and Cal. H. Olsen was appointed administrator with will annexed of his estate.

The bank, as executor of the estate of James, filed its return with the duly appointed inheritance tax appraiser and also its return with the Internal Revenue Department stating that Stewart had received a gift of $22,760 from James in contemplation of death. On the basis of these returns, the inheritance tax appraiser filed his reports and an inheritance tax was paid, and in the latter part of 1951 a federal estate tax was paid.

An amended report of the inheritance tax appraiser was filed, and thereafter, on February 5, 1954, he filed a second amended report which showed a transfer to Stewart from James of $5,000 only. The bank, as executor of James' estate, filed objection to the second amended report of the appraiser claiming there had been a transfer in contemplation of death by James to Stewart of $22,760 cash. The objections of the bank as executor were supported by the state controller and were sustained by the findings of the trial court. The court thereupon made an order that, among other taxable transfers, Stewart received from James a gift of $22,760 in contemplation of death and fixed the tax thereon. The administrator of Stewart's estate has appealed from this order.

Based on its determination in the inheritance tax matter, the court made an order apportioning the federal estate tax. The administrator of Stewart's estate has also appealed from the order of apportionment.

James had accumulated property valued in excess of $600,000, out of which he had established a trust of more than half a million dollars. His brother Stewart, who was his closest relative, was to receive the largest individual benefits therefrom, viz., $500 per month. James also provided a $200 monthly income for Stewart's son John. Stewart, on the other hand, was a man of modest means, retired on a small pension, and lived in a five-room house which he purchased after the first world war. His mode of living was "very conservative, very simple."

James was afflicted with cancer and after a previous hospitalization he returned to the Cedars of Lebanon Hospital in Los Angeles. On July 27, 1950, while he was in this hospital, Stewart presented to the Bank of America for redemption certain government bonds issued in the name of James. Stewart was given a cashier's check for $22,760 payable to James; Stewart returned to the bank with the check duly endorsed by James and received $22,760 in cash. He gave this money to James while the latter was in bed in the hospital. Seven days later, on August 3, 1950, James died without having left the hospital. No part of the money was found among the effects of James after his death.

A cousin, John Waters, who visited James in the hospital just before he died, testified his mind was clear at that time. Waters visited him frequently during the last few days of his life. These included visits after July 27th.

After James had passed on Stewart either lived in or had access to his brother's home. There he exhibited a large sum of money to his attorney and friend, Mr. Crowley. It was in a metal box approximately 18 to 20 inches long, 10 inches wide and 5 inches deep. It was "about three quarters full" of "packages * * * of fifty and one hundred dollar denominational bills—U. S. currency * * *. There were a great many packages of these bills and the bills had little paper circlets around them." Stewart took the box out of the closet and after exhibiting its contents to Crowley put it back in the closet and locked the door. When he showed the contents to Crowley he remarked, "There's $40,000.00 in there."

Stewart told his friend Crowley at a dinner that he had gotten some money from his brother James. He did not, however, state the amount. In response to an inquiry as to whether Stewart mentioned when he had gotten it, Crowley testified "he stated something generally about going to the hospital while Jimmy was there and getting some money from him."

After Stewart's death John Waters, his cousin, found $6,000 with a band around it in one hundred dollar bills in a metal box in the same closet in the James Miller home. Stewart had the key to this box. It was turned over to Waters by Stewart's widow, who has since passed away also. This money went into the estate of Stewart.

When a representative of the bank inquired of Stewart whether he knew what happened to the proceeds of the bonds, he stated on two or three occasions that he delivered them to his brother at the hospital but that he did not know what became of them after that. Later, however, Stewart told him that "Jimmy had given him $5,000.00 from the funds that he took down to Jimmy from the redemption of these bonds, but he didn't know what happened to the rest of the proceeds."

After the death of James, Stewart spent lavishly, particularly at the bars and on the races. His lawyer friend Crowley, who saw him frequently between September 1, 1950, and January 1, 1951, testified that one afternoon in September, at a restaurant, Stewart told him "he was betting one, two and three" on the horse races, which Stewart explained to him meant "it was one hundred dollars to win, two hundred dollars to place and three hundred dollars to show." He told Crowley he placed two such bets that afternoon. Crowley was with him on several other occasions in September, October, November and December, 1950, when Stewart told him he was betting on the races. Also, he told Crowley "he was not winning except occasionally, but it was about the only fun he had out of life at that time and he did not expect he was going to live very long." (He died on March 14, 1951.) Crowley had seen him spend as much as $100 in an evening at the bar. He had also seen him buy drinks for everybody at the bar as many as two or three times in an evening at an expense of twenty-five or thirty dollars each time. The bar he usually patronized had a special chair marked "Reserved for Stewart Miller." According to Crowley, he "always tipped rather heavily—five or ten dollars." About this time he bought a second car from his brother's estate. He also invested $3,500 in a corporation with which Crowley was identified.

The trial court found that "James E. Miller made a gift in contemplation of death to his said brother, Stewart S. Miller, of the sum of $22,760.00."

The administrator of the estate of Stewart attacks this finding as being without evidentiary support. His position, however, is not well taken.

[1] The decision in this case turns primarily upon the inferences to be drawn from the evidence and the weight to be given thereto. In such circumstances the rule is that when different inferences reasonably can be deduced from the facts a reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the trial court. Owens v. White Memorial Hospital, 138 Cal.App.2d 634, 292 P.2d 288. Therefore, in reviewing the evidence all legitimate and reasonable inferences must be indulged in support of the challenged finding. In re Estate of Bristol, 23 Cal.2d 221, 223, 143 P.2d 689. The weight to be accorded the evidence is, of course, for the trial judge to determine. In re Estate of Teel, 25 Cal.2d 520, 526, 154 P.2d 384. Our power begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence which will support the conclusion reached in the court below. Primm v. Primm, 46 Cal.2d 690, 299 P.2d 231.

Relying on Field v. Mollison, 50 Cal.App. 2d 585, 590, 123 P.2d 603, 606, appellant points out that the essentials of a valid gift, inter vivos, are: "(1) Competency of the donor to contract; (2) a voluntary intent on the part of the donor to make the gift; (3) delivery, either actual or symbolical, amounting to transfer of titles; (4) acceptance, actual or imputed; (5) complete divestment of all control by the donor; and (6) a lack of consideration in return for the gift." Appellant then argues that the evidence is insufficient to support an affirmative finding as to any of these elements. We shall therefore examine the evidence in the light of the principles stated above.

[2, 3] On the question of the competency of the donor, there is a presumption in its favor. In re Estate of Gordon, 142 Cal. 125, 131, 75 P. 672; Wilson v. Sampson, 91 Cal.App.2d 453, 459, 205 P.2d 753; In re Estate of Martin, 170 Cal. 657, 673, 151 P. 138. In the Gordon case, supra [142 Cal. 125, 75 P. 674], the court said: "Every person is presumed to be sane, and in the full possession of ordinary mental faculties." In the Wilson case, supra [91 Cal. App.2d 453, 205 P.2d 756], the court remarked that "as for competency, presumptions are in favor of it. [Citations.]" It is of course established that a presumption is evidence. Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1957; Smellie v. Southern Pacific Co., 212 Cal. 540, 549, 299 P. 529. There was also testimony that James' mind was clear by Mr. Waters, a cousin, who visited him frequently while he was in the hospital and saw him just before he died. It is thus apparent that there is ample evidence to establish the competency of James. In fact, there is no suggestion to the contrary in the record.

[4, 5] The intent on the part of James to make a gift to Stewart finds support in the latter's statement to the representative of the bank that James gave him $5,000. This was a declaration against interest by reason of the tax consequences that would flow from the receipt of such a gift in contemplation of death. Stewart also told his attorney and friend Crowley that he received some money from James and identified the occasion as being while James was in the hospital. On the question of James' intention, the trial judge was entitled to take into account that James was on his death bed, that he had disposed of the bulk of his estate through the trust he had created, that Stewart was his closest relative, and that the latter was a man of modest means. These circumstances lend support to the inference that James intended to make a gift to Stewart.

From the display to Crowley by Stewart of the packages of large bills in the metal box to which he had the key, the fact that none of the proceeds from the government bonds was found in James' effects in the hospital, the reckless and lavish character of Stewart's expenditures after his brother's death in comparison with his previous conservative and simple mode of living, and the presumption that Stewart lawfully came by the money he exhibited and spent, reasonably justify an inference that James gave Stewart the entire proceeds from the bonds, and not just a small portion thereof, and that there was delivery and complete divestment of title and control over the money by James and acceptance by Stewart.
